

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. COHEN V. ANDREW J. MULLER.

Mr. De Waal moved for provisional sentence for £28 5s. due on a promissory note, with interest from December 21, 1901, and costs of suit.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed.

LOUW V. CAREL TODT.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the final sequestration of insolvent's estate.

Final sequestration adjudicated.

VAN HUERDEN V. VAN HEERDEN

Mr. De Villiers asked that this matter be postponed until February 1, the summons not having been served.

Postponement granted.

ROWE V. GOTTHELF.

Sir Henry Juta, K.C., moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment of the Court, a return of nulla bona having been made.

The defendant appeared in person, and stated on oath that he had no money. He was a plumber by trade. He offered to pay the debt (over £100) by instalments of £2 per month. He was married to his wife by ante-nuptial contract, and his wife did not bring him any money. During the last four years his wife had kept a boarding-house. He had bought property for his wife. That was with her own money. Witness had had big contracts. At present he had two contracts, one for £290 and the other for £140. On his last contract, he had lost £80.

Sir Henry Juta said that the defendant had already made an offer to pay the debt by instalments of £10 per month, and that had not gone through, simply because the plaintiff's attorneys had insisted upon his making the first payment £20, to cover out-of-pocket expenses.

Decree of civil imprisonment was granted as prayed, but execution stayed pending payment of instalments of £10 per month, the first instalment to be paid on the 15th inst., and the subsequent instalments on the 15th of each succeeding month.

TOPPE V. BRUMM.

Mr. Gardiner moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment for £56 6s., a return of nulla bona having been made. The debt arose through an action brought by defendant for wrongful dismissal, in which he was unsuccessful, and the amount was for costs.

Defendant stated on oath that he had no money or effects. He was out of employment. He had tried to get employment at several places in Cape Town, but could not succeed. He offered to pay instalments of 10s. per month, commencing on March 1.

Decree of civil imprisonment granted, but execution stayed pending payment of the debt by instalments of 10s. per month, the first payment to be made on March 1.

LOUW V. RADZIWILL.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said that this was an application for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant, but an affidavit had just been served upon them by the defendant. The defendant was not in court, so that he would not have an opportunity of cross-examining her, and he therefore asked that the matter be postponed, so that it might be seen whether her affidavit required an answering affidavit.

Mr. Gardiner, who appeared for the defendant, consented to the postponement.

The matter was accordingly postponed until February 1.

MARKS V. S. PHILLIPS.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence for £28 14s. 9d., due on a promissory note, less certain payments made on account.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed.

HAZELL V. A. COHEN.

Mr. Russell asked that this matter be allowed to stand over until February 1.

Postponement allowed.

MARAIS V. H. MEIRING.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for provisional judgment upon a mortgage bond for £650, with 5 per cent. interest from January 1, 1900, and also for judgment for £2 4s. 2d., insurance premium; further, that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due by reason of the non-payment of the interest.

Provisional sentence and judgment as prayed, and the property specially hypothecated declared executable.

GOURLAY V. NEEZER.

Mr. Gardiner moved for provisional sentence on two promissory notes for £130 and £117 2s. respectively, with interest; further, for judgment for £61 3s. 9d., for goods sold and delivered, with costs of suit and interest a tempore morae.

Provisional sentence and judgment as prayed.

REID AND NEPHEW V. DE VILLIERS.

Mr. De Villiers moved for provisional sentence on a cheque for £8 15s. 1d.
Provisional sentence granted.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

SHAW V. FLETCHER.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment for £21 17s. in terms of a certain consent paper.

Judgment granted as prayed.

TENNANT V. FLETCHER.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment for £22 19s. 3d., being the costs in the above matter.

His Lordship pointed out that the previous judgment was in favour of the plaintiff, and not of his attorney, and the latter could not now sue for the costs. No judgment could therefore be given in this matter.

GOLDMAN V. JACK BENNETT.

Mr. Wilkinson moved for judgment in the above matter, the principal having been paid since the issue of summons.

Judgment granted as prayed.

DESFORGES V. BUD OF HOPE LODGE.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for judgment for costs in the above matter.

Judgment granted as prayed.

GINSBERG V. W. L. CHURCH.

Mr. De Villiers moved for judgment for sums of £8 15s., £11 13s. 9d., £16 15s., and £9 10s., moneys advanced on behalf of defendant, and goods sold and delivered.

Judgment granted as prayed.

Mr. Benjamin moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for the sum of £117 8s. 9d., for goods sold and delivered.

Judgment granted as prayed.

the balance of the purchase price of lots 59 and 60, Daniel's Kuil, Barkly West, purchased by the defendant on the 9th September, 1898. (b) An order declaring that if payment is not made within one month after judgment the sale of the said lots of ground shall be null and void, and the payments already made forfeited in terms of section 2 of Act 15 of 1887, as amended by section 4 of Act 40 of 1895. (c) Costs of suit.

Mr. Sheil, K.C., moved for judgment.

The Court granted judgment as prayed, with costs.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. DE KLERK.

This was a similar application to the last, the amounts sued for being £32 and £7 11s., £42 and £7 11s., with interest at 4 per cent. and costs.

Mr. Sheil, K.C., moved for judgment.

The Court granted judgment as prayed, with costs.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. GROBBELAAR.

This was a similar application to the two foregoing, the amounts sued for being £29 12s. and £7 11s., with interest and costs.

Mr. Sheil, K.C., moved for judgment.

The Court granted judgment as prayed, with costs.

ITALIAN MARBLE COMPANY V. C. D. WELLS.

Mr. Bisset moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £30, being balance of account, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Judgment granted as prayed.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. THE SOUTHERN LANDS CO. (LIMITED).

This was an application for judgment, under Rule 329d, for payment of the sum of £3,795 7s. 6d., being three years' quit-rent and stamp duty due in respect of certain farms in the district of Vryburg.

Service of process was effected on the company's manager, Mr. Percy Addison Hayward Gethin.

The Deputy-Sheriff made the following return: The within-named defendant, Percy Addison Hayward Gethin, having refused to accept service of the within summons, I have, on this the 7th of December, 1901, in my office at Vryburg, duly served the within summons upon him (the said defendant), by touching him on his arm with a copy thereof, at the same time informing him of the nature and exigency thereof, and dropping the said copy on the floor in front of him. The reason of the defendant for refusing to accept service is that he holds no instructions from the Southern Lands Co. (Limited) to accept service of process.

Mr. Sheil, K.C., moved for judgment.

The Court granted judgment as prayed, with costs.

} Jan. 13th.

Sentence—Irregularity.

Where an Assistant Resident Magistrate had convicted a prisoner and pronounced the following sentence "reprimanded and discharged."

Held that such sentence was irregular inasmuch as it deprived the prisoner of his right to appeal to a superior Court, and that as the Crown refused to consent to the whole finding being set aside the matter must be remitted to the Magistrate to pass a sentence from which an appeal could be heard.

This was a matter brought up, under Rule 190, for review of the proceedings of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch sitting at Somerset West.

The summons called upon the said Assistant Magistrate to appear before the Supreme Court on Monday, January 13, 1902, and also to return and certify to the said Court a true copy of the summons, records, and all proceedings in the case of R. v. Thomas Robert Norman, charged before the said A.R.M., at Somerset West, on November 14 and 18, with contravening sub-section 1 of section 73 of Act 28 of 1883. The summons further called upon the Attorney-General to appear and to show cause why the judgment and proceedings in the said case should not be reviewed, set aside, or corrected on the ground that the said proceedings were grossly irregular and contrary to law in that the finding or judgment thereon of the said A.R.M. as evidenced by the said records and proceedings, to wit, "guilty, reprimanded, and discharged," was a finding wholly bad in law.

The appellant had been charged under the Act aforesaid with wrongfully and unlawfully permitting drunkenness, violent, riotous, or quarrelsome conduct to take place upon his licensed premises, to wit, the Central Hotel at Somerset West. He had pleaded "not guilty." The judgment was "guilty," and the sentence "reprimanded and discharged." The facts held proved by the Court below were disputed by the applicant, but these were not brought forward in the present application.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicant): Norman is the lessee of certain licensed premises at Somerset West. His lease contains the clause that should he be convicted of any infringement of the Liquor Acts his lease is thereby forfeited ipso facto, and the landlord acquires thereby an immediate right of re-entry on the premises. On the King's birthday certain members of the defence forces called at applicant's premises and contrary to martial law regulations were served with liquor. The Magistrate found Norman guilty as charged, and instead of inflicting a penalty reprimanded and discharged him. In such a case there is no appeal. Q. v. Erfurt (5 Shiel, 432, and 12 S.C.R., 427). In virtue of this conviction Norman might be deprived of his licence. The case should be remitted to the Magistrate with liberty to find him guilty or not guilty, and if guilty to pronounce a sentence from which we may appeal. Q. v. Erfurt (12 S.C.R., 427). In Ohlsson v. Parsons (11 Shiel, 233), it was held that the lease granted under conditions similar to those of the present lease, was forfeited by any conviction under the Liquor Acts. The consequences of this conviction would be most serious to Norman.

Mr. Jones (for the Crown): I admit the force of the argument for applicant and admit that there may have been some irregularity in the case, but I contend it was not gross. I have no objection to the record being sent back to the Magistrate that he may pronounce a sentence, but there is no precedent for his reconsidering his judgment. The effect of this conviction on the licence is quite immaterial.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply) cited Q. v. Smith (Buch., 1869, p. 176). If it is held that the Court must pass some sentence sounding in imprisonment or fine, and the Court would not have found the man guilty had it adverted to the serious consequences of its finding, it should have an opportunity of revising its finding.

His Lordship, in giving judgment, said: The defendant was tried before the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch sitting at Somerset West for contravening the Liquor Licensing Act, and he was found guilty, reprimanded, and discharged. A sentence of that kind, it had been laid down by the Supreme Court in Regina v. Erfurt, (5 Sheil, 432) did not give the person so found guilty, reprimanded, and discharged a right of appeal, there being no sentence of fine or imprisonment, and in the case referred to it was pointed out that any person so convicted wishing to bring the matter under appeal might come into court, and apply that the Magistrate be required to pass some sentence to entitle him to appeal. The Court is, of course, entitled to set aside the whole proceedings where it finds gross irregularity, but in this case the only irregularity alleged in the summons is that the finding or judgment of the Magistrate was irregular, viz.: "Guilty, reprimanded, and discharged." Being found guilty or not guilty was not an irregularity in any way. The irregularity was in the part of the judgment "reprimanded and discharged." If the Crown had consented the Court might have set aside the whole finding, and allowed the Magistrate to go again into the matter. That, however, was objected to. The matter will be remitted to the Magistrate to pass a sentence, and when he has passed a sentence, from which an appeal can be heard the appeal will come on, and the Court will then decide whether the conviction was justified. The application will therefore be granted and the case remitted to the Magistrate to pass such a sentence as he may consider to be proper.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Petition of the Executrix of the Estate of the Late Gerhardus Johannes Pryra.

Mr. Benjamin moved that the rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act be made absolute.

Rule made absolute as prayed.

Ex parte ROOS. (1902. Jan. 13th.)

Mr. Benjamin said that this was an application for the making absolute of a rule nisi, granted under the Derelict Lands Act. Certain facts had been placed before the Court in a previous case (Hoogendoorn v. Roos), and this matter arose out of that case, it appearing that there was a certain piece of land not covered by applicant's title-deeds. This was the return day of the rule nisi which had been granted, and now the Town Council appeared to oppose its being made absolute. The facts of the case were very complicated, and his Lordship did not consider that they could be decided on motion.

Mr. Benjamin for applicant.

Sir Henry Juta, K.C., appeared on behalf of the Town Council to oppose the rule being made absolute.

His Lordship decided that the matter must be decided by way of action, to be instituted forthwith, the Town Council being the defendants, the notice in this application to stand as summons.

LINWOOD V. LINWOOD.

Mr. Wilkinson moved that the rule nisi granted, calling upon defendant to restore to plaintiff her conjugal rights, failing which, to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted, be made absolute. The defendant had failed to return to plaintiff.

MANN V. MANN.

Mr. Uppington moved that the rule nisi calling upon defendant to return to plaintiff, failing which, to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted, be made absolute.

DE JOND V. ADLER. { 1902.
{ Jan. 13th.

Trade Mark—Rival claimants—Registration—Duty of Registrar.

Where two trade-marks closely resembling each other are tendered for registration it is the duty of the registrar to determine which of the marks he will register, leaving it to the party aggrieved to apply to the court for relief if so advised.

This was an application for an order calling upon the respondent to show cause why an order should not issue from the Court directing the Registrar of Deeds to register the applicant as the proprietor of a certain trade mark, and to refuse the application submitted by respondent to the Registrar of Deeds for the registration in his name of a certain trade mark.

The affidavit of William Siegmund Schott stated:

(1) I am the agent in South Africa for Julien de Jond, of Antwerp, Belgium, merchant.

(2) In November, 1899, I was traveller for the firm of De Jond, Son and Co. (Limited), in which capacity I sold various goods, including cement. Among different kinds of cement sold by me was one known as the "Tiger Brand." It was sold in casks, the bottom of which were covered by a label similar to that annexed and marked A.

(3) The said label was registered in Belgium in August, 1898, in the name of De Jond, Son and Co. (Limited), and shortly thereafter the said brand was introduced into South Africa, and has remained on the South African market ever since, always under cover of the label marked A, by which label it has now become thoroughly known in South Africa, and through which considerable and extensive sales of the cement are and have been affected.

(4) In October, 1900, De Jond, Son and Co. (Limited) went into voluntary liquidation.

(5) All the valuable assets of the said firm were purchased by Julien de Jond. These assets included a large stock of Tiger Brand cement, and all right, title, and interest of the liquidated company in and to the trade mark under which it was sold. After the liquidation of the company I was appointed agent in South Africa for Julien de Jond, and continued selling Tiger Brand cement under the label marked A. The average sales of this cement in South Africa amount to 10,000 cases annually.

(6) The trade mark for the Tiger Brand cement has not been registered in the Cape Colony on account of the belief that the same protection was accorded to trade marks used here, and registered in Belgium, as is extended to trade marks used in England, and registered in Belgium by virtue of the International Convention for the protection of industrial property.

(7) The respondent, Paul Adler, was the buying agent for De Jond, Son and Co. (Limited) in Hamburg for goods manufactured in Germany from shortly after my connection with the company up to its liquidation.

(8) In January, 1901, Mr. Julien de Jond received a letter from respondent requesting to be furnished with quotations for Tiger Brand cement, and the label under which it was sold. At this time Mr. J. de Jond had not received a duly registered assignment of the trade mark. The quotations were duly sent to respondent, but no label was forwarded.

(9) In March, 1901, I called on respondent in Hamburg, when he informed me that our quotations were too high and that he would not buy the cement without seeing the label. I then showed him a label which he wished to keep. I demurred. I, however, allowed him to show the label to his manager. Still no order was placed with us.

(10) In May, 1901, on arriving here from Europe I observed from the newspaper that respondent was applying for the registration of a trade mark for goods in class 17, cement. The trade mark so sought to be registered resembled the one we have used since 1898, and I instructed my attorneys to object to the registration of the respondent's trade mark, and to apply for the registration of the applicant's mark.

(11) I verily believe that respondent's mark was expressly designed for the purpose of imitating the applicants' mark, and of reaping the benefit of the market created by the applicant by means of his mark.

(12) Respondent has only sold cement under the Tiger Brand since the beginning of this year. Our cement has been sold under our brand in South Africa since 1898.

(13) If respondent has a trade mark registered in Belgium, such registration has been effected since applicant objected to the registration of respondent's mark here.

(14) Applicant's Tiger Brand cement has gained a wide reputation in South Africa, of which respondent seeks to avail himself by reason of applicant's brand, not being registered here applicant omitted to register here owing to his misapprehension of the local law on the subject.

(15) If respondents mark be registered here applicant will be deprived of the reputation he has earned and of the benefits accruing therefrom.

(16) My attorneys objected to the registration of respondents trade mark on June 25, 1901, on the ground that it so closely resembled that of applicant as to be calculated to deceive.

(17) On July 31, 1901, the Registrar of Deeds called a meeting for the purpose of considering objections, and after hearing parties' attorneys, adjourned the meeting to enable applicant to produce proof of his title.

(18) Such proof arrived from Belgium on August 28, 1901, and consisted of a registered certificate of assignment from the liquidators of De Jond, Son and Co. (Limited) to the applicant, and the original certificate of registration in favour of De Jond, Son and Co. (Limited).

(19) On September 3 applicant's attorneys wrote to respondent's attorneys advising them that applicant's title had arrived, and requesting them to withdraw their application.

(20) Applicant advertised his intention to apply for registration of his trade mark in the "Government Gazette" of October 15 and 22, 1901.

(21) On October 30, 1901, respondent objected to the registration of applicant's trade mark.

(22) On November 18, 1901, the Registrar of Deeds issued a report on the applications of applicant and respondent, and refused to register either trade mark until the rights of the parties had been determined by the Court on the ground that the marks, though not identical, bore a resemblance to each other, which both parties contended, and he agreed, was calculated to deceive, and each party opposed the other's application.

(23) Applicant's attorneys wrote to the Registrar requesting him to reconsider his report, and decide on the rival applications. As he declined to do this, applicant has no alternative but to approach this Honourable Court on the subject.

(24) Deponent submitted that applicant was entitled to be registered as proprietor of the trade mark in respect of which he had filed his application, and craved an order directing the Registrar to so register him, with costs against respondent.

The affidavit of Henry Schultz, the representative in South Africa of the respondent, Paul Adler, a merchant in Hamburg, stated that he had taken steps to have certain trade marks used by Paul Adler in Europe (among them the Tiger) registered in the various colonies of South Africa. He had no knowledge of a number of allegations contained in Schott's affidavit, and denied paragraph 5. There were no sales of cement under applicant's brand in South Africa during the year 1901, with the exception of one parcel of about 1,000 casks which were delivered by applicant to a customer who had ordered a different brand and who objected to take applicant's when the goods were produced. With regard to paragraph 7. Respondent, Paul Adler, was the buying agent for De Jond and Co. for only a few months prior to its liquidation. Deponent had no knowledge of the allegations in paragraphs 8, 9, and 11. He had written to Germany for certified copies of the registration of their cement brand in Germany and Belgium, but had not yet received the same. Before leaving Europe, deponent had made arrangements with a number of houses and factories to sell large quantities of cement out here, and on his arrival arranged accordingly to sell the cement obtained from a certain German house under the Tiger label (exhibited), and in that manner to fulfil his contract with that house. He would be much inconvenienced and would suffer loss should he be now prevented from giving effect to the arrangements made by him whilst in Germany with regard to the sales of cement under this trade mark.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicant) moved for the aforesaid order.

Mr. Searle, K.C.: It is for the Registrar of Deeds to decide whether these trade marks are so similar as to lead to fraud, and the proper course would have been to ask the Court for a mandamus to compel him to decide this point. It is only when the trade marks are absolutely identical that the Registrar can refer to the Court for a decision. Louis v. Lazarus (6 Sheil, 429, and 13 S.C.R., 420). These trade marks are similar, but not identical. This case is not on precisely the same footing with Louis v. Lazarus, because here both parties claim to register. The Registrar wishes to refer the matter to the Court, but he has no right to do that. If the Court is against me on that point I would ask for a postponement till certain affidavits arrive from Belgium. In conclusion, I would refer to Koch and Dixie v. Arenarius and Another (15 S.C.R., 200).

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): In previous cases the Court referred the matter to the Registrar, but in each case a trade mark had been registered and infringed by somebody. Here two people claim similar trade marks, and each objects to the other being registered. To have come to the Court for a mandamus would have involved considerable expense, so we only come to the Court to ask for a direction to the Registrar. We are practically quite at one on that point. Until the Registrar has decided we cannot go into the merits before the Court. The whole question now is as to the costs of the present motion.

Buchanan, A.C.J.: In a case like the present the Registrar has to decide whether or not he will register one of the trade marks, leaving it to the person aggrieved to move the Court under Act 20 of 1877. Here the Registrar of Deeds has referred the matter to the Court without having come to a decision. The only dispute now really is as to costs, and while the matter will be referred back to the Registrar, the question of costs will stand over.

THOMAS BROS. V. PIENAAR.

Mr. Buchanan moved that the rule nisi authorising the attachment of certain property be made absolute.

Rule made absolute as prayed.

THOMSON V. PIENAAR.

This was practically a motion for the applicant to join as one of the applicants in the previous motion. It was stated that there were sufficient funds attached to meet both claims.

Church Register of Baptisms.

Applicant had been erroneously entered in the register of S. George's Church as the child of A. and B. She now applied for an order calling upon the authorities of the aforesaid church to rectify this error.

Held that as the authorities of the said church were not before the Court, and as the register preserved in the said church was a mere private document, the Court could not grant the order as prayed.

This was an application for an order authorising the amendment of a certain entry in the baptismal register of S. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, Cape Town.

The petition set forth that petitioner was baptised in the aforesaid church on June 1, 1864, and that in the register of baptisms there preserved Hendrick Heydenrych and Johanna Francina Heydenrych were stated to be petitioner's parents. At the time of petitioner's birth her mother, Sinah Cecilia Wiepner, was a spinster, and was living in the same house with the said Hendrick Heydenrych, and she arranged with them that they should stand as father and mother at petitioner's christening, which they agreed to do. Petitioner's mother, the said Sinah Cecilia Wiepner, was subsequently married to petitioner's father, Abraham Robert Palm, and consequently petitioner and the other children born before the marriage was legitimised. Petitioner was married in community of property to Alexander Michael Tyler at S. John's Church, Cape Town, on January 1, 1884, and it was subsequently discovered that her surname was incorrectly stated in the baptismal register of S. George's aforesaid to be Heydenrych instead of Palm. Petitioner now asked for an order authorising the amendment of the said register by substituting the name of Palm for Heydenrych.

Mr. Bisset (for petitioner): This register is a public document, and might be the only proof that Mrs. Tyler was the issue of Palm and not of Heydenrych. In Richards v. Nash (1 Juta, 312) the Court ordered an error in a deed of transfer to be amended—a public document—so in the present case this Court is the only place where the applicant can get relief. This register would be accepted as evidence in any court; so there can be no doubt as to its being a public document. Orders similar to that now applied for have been granted in England.

[Buchanan, J.: In England you have a church which is recognised by the State, here you have not. S. George's Church is not before the Court.]

I would respectfully suggest that the Court should grant a rule nisi calling upon any persons interested to show cause why this petition should not be granted. In Sowerby v. Colonial Secretary (11 Sheil 377) the Court ordered that an incomplete marriage registrars should be registered in the Colonial Secretary's Office.

His lordship said that this was an application to the Court to order an amendment of the register kept in S. George's Cathedral of baptisms solemnised in that church. The authorities of the church were not before the Court, and this register was simply a record kept by the church for its own information. There was in this colony a register of births kept under an Act of Parliament, and it was quite possible that the Court might deal with that registry in the same way as it dealt with the Registry of Deeds, but it was a most unprecedented application to call upon church authorities to amend records kept by them of what took place in their own church. His lordship also pointed out that it was not alleged that the register was wrong as to the representations made by the parties at the time of the baptism; what appeared in it being simply what was represented to the church authorities at the time. It might be inconvenient for the parties to have that register kept, but it was not a matter over which the Court could exercise any control. It was not a public register. He did not see that the Court should make any order, and the application would therefore be refused.

Robbery—Insolvency of Robber.

One Goldstein had been convicted of robbing one Glass of a watch, chain, &c., and of certain moneys. Meanwhile Goldstein's estate had been sequestrated as insolvent. Glass now claimed the property of which he had been robbed, and the Colonial Orphan Chamber, as trustee of the insolvent estate, also laid claim thereto. Glass asked for a postponement of the case in order that further affidavits might be filed.

Held that certain effects then in the hands of the gaoler, Cape Town, which had been stolen from Glass must be re-restored to him, and that the rest of the application must stand over for further affidavits.

This was an application for an order authorizing the Civil Commissioner of the Cape and others to deliver to the Applicant such assets of the Insolvent Estate of Lewis Goldstein as might be in their hands.

The affidavit of Edward Price Hughes, an attorney of the Court, stated that he was the duly authorised representative of Aaron Glass, of 6, Parkin Stret, Cape Town, claimant to a certain sum of money then in the hands of the Civil Commissioner of the Cape. That in or about April last the said Aaron Glass was robbed of £234 10s. by one Lewis Goldstein and another, and that the said insolvent (Goldstein) was arrested in May, 1901, and since convicted of the theft. Notice of the application was only served on deponent at 12.45 on January 10, 1902, and he alleged that time did not admit of the preparation of the necessary affidavits to oppose the said application to be made on January 12, 1902, or to make counter application in respect of the said moneys. In the interest of the said Aaron Glass, deponent asked for a postponement.

In reply to a letter received from Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, asking for information as to the names of all the persons who had laid claim to the money taken from Goldstein and then in the hands of the Chief of the Cape Town Police, Lieut.-Col. Robinson informed them that the Secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber had claimed the same as an asset belonging to the Insolvent Estate.

It appeared that Goldstein was convicted at the last Criminal Sessions, and his estate being then insolvent, the present applicant was appointed trustee. Glass was a man whom Goldstein had robbed of a sum of money, and his claim was that the money which the trustee now claimed was that which had been stolen from him. For the applicant, it was pointed out that Goldstein had had some lucrative Government contracts, and the money might be from that source. It was also pointed out that there were certain assets, such as a watch and chain, etc., which could not possibly be claimed by Glass.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., appeared for the applicant, and Mr. Benjamin for Aaron Glass.

Mr. Benjamin applied for a postponement of the case.

Sir H. Juta (for applicant) objected. Goldstein has been convicted of theft from Glass and is also an insolvent. There are other assets in his Estate in addition to the moneys stolen from Glass.

[Buchanan, A. C. J. The trustee can have no better claim to these moneys than the insolvent himself.]

No, and therefore we only ask for the assets other than the money stolen from Glass.

The application was granted so far as concerned the goods specially mentioned (watch and chain, etc.), which were in the hands of the Gaoler of the Cape Town gaol, and as regards the money claimed by Glass, the matter was allowed to stand over pending the filing of affidavits.

Ex parte PARTRIDGE AND OTHERS. { 1902.
{ Jan. 13th.

This was an application for an order authorising the Transfer of certain property. The Petitioners were Bessie Partridge, Marion O'Hare (born Partridge), married in community of property and assisted, as far as need be by James C. O'Hare, Astley Cooper Partridge, and George William Steytler in his capacity as Trustee under an order of Court dated June 14, 1899. The Petition set forth that the above named Bessie Partridge was married to Richard J. Partridge, and that in 1899 the Court had granted a decree of Judicial Separation in the following terms of a Consent Paper which has been filed.

The plaintiff and defendant to separate a mensu et thoro.

The landed property known as "The Heathers" registered in defendant's name to be transferred to G. W. Steytler or the Secretary for the time being of the Colonial Orphan Chamber in trust for the benefit of the three children of plaintiff and defendant, subject to an existing mortgage of £150 and a further mortgage to be raised of £125.

The Trustee was to let or lease the property as he should deem most advisable, and to apply the rent to the extinction of the debt of £175. Thereafter he was to pay to the plaintiff £2 10s. a month, should the funds permit, for the term of her natural life, and to apply the balance for the benefit of the children. At the death of plaintiff the said property was to become the absolute property of the said children so soon as the youngest child should attain his legal majority. The said youngest child was to be educated and supported at the mutual charge of the parties until he should have attained his majority, or earn his own living at an earlier date. The petition of the aforesaid petitioners proceeded to state that on November 12, 1899, transfer of the property aforesaid was passed in favour of the petitioner, G. W. Steytler, N.O. The petitioners, M. O'Hare, A. C. Partridge, and W. P. Partridge stated that they had all attained the age of majority, and that Bessie Partridge was desirous of relinquishing all right, title, and interest she had in and to the said property, to and in favour of her said three children jointly. Petitioners therefore craved an order authorising transfer of the said property to be passed by G. W. Steytler, aforesaid in favour of M. O'Hare, A. C. Partridge, and W. P. Partridge.

From a supplementary affidavit of Bessie Partridge it appeared that her husband died in Natal on July 1, 1899.

On the motion of Mr. Buchanan the Court granted an order as prayed.

In this case the Court granted an order as prayed.

Antenuptial Contract—Registration.

The Court granted an order authorizing the Registrar of Deeds to register a certain antenuptial contract into which the spouses had entered previous to their marriage, but which, owing to the default of the notary before whom they had contracted, had not been presented for registration within the time prescribed by Ord. 27 of 1846, Sec. 1 and Sec. 7 of Act 21 of 1875.

This was an application for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to register a certain antenuptial contract.

The Petition of Harold Conolly and Mabel Margaret Conolly (born Moxham) set forth that the said petitioners were married at Reuben, District of Mount Currie, E. Griqualand, on November 14, 1901, and that previous to the said marriage, viz.: on October 7, 1901, petitioners entered into an antenuptial contract before the Notary Public, William B. Lovemore, of Kokstad (copy whereof was annexed).

That petitioners had been informed by the said Notary that Registration of the said antenuptial contract by the Registrar of Deeds had been refused; on the grounds that the same was not presented for Registration within the time provided by law for that purpose. That petitioners were further informed by the said Notary that the omission on his part to register the said antenuptial contract in time arose entirely from an oversight and appeared from his affidavit annexed. Petitioners therefore prayed for an order directing the Registrar of Deeds to register the said antenuptial contract.

On the motion of Mr. Bisset the Court granted an order as prayed, subject to any rights which might have accrued to creditors prior to the registration of the said contract.

Provisional sentence—Signature denied.

Applicant had been summoned for provisional sentence on a promissory note, the summons being returnable on 13th October, 1901. The case was postponed till November 1, 1901, when defendant's signature was denied, and proof of the signature was fixed for February 1, 1902. The first defendant now asked for further postponement and for the appointment of a Commission to take evidence in England.

Held, that no reasons had been given for the above application, and no intimation made as to what these witnesses in England were to prove: and further, that as only provisional sentence could be granted against defendant on February 1, the application must be refused with costs.

This was an application for the postponement of the day for hearing proof of signature in the above provisional case. On the 12th October, 1901, defendant had been summoned to admit or deny his signature to a certain promissory note made in favour of plaintiff, and to show cause why provisional sentence should not be given against him for the amount of the said note. Defendant's representative had on the authority of defendant denied the signature. The case was postponed till November 1, 1902, and was then duly set down for trial and argument on February 1, 1902.

The affidavit of Lewis Loyd Michell stated that he was General Manager of the Standard Bank in South Africa, and held defendant's general power of attorney. That he had reported to defendant the proceedings in this Court and asked him to arrange to be in attendance on February 1, 1902, for the hearing of the suit. That he had received the following cablegram in reply from B. F. Hawksley, defendant's London solicitor: "Referring to your cable of January 6th, application must be made for postponement until Sittings after Easter, say 8th of April, and for open commission to examine Mr. Rhodes and other material witnesses in London in support of the contention that signature forged."

That both from this cablegram and from defendant's affidavit, already filed, it would appear that there is evidence in London which it is desirable to obtain on commission.

The answering affidavit of John F. E. Bernard, plaintiff's attorney, pointed out that neither the notice of motion nor the above affidavit stated that defendant was in bad or indifferent health, or that he did not intend to return to this Colony, or that his material witnesses, if any, are resident in London; and, furthermore, that the said notice of motion and affidavits did not show, disclose, or allege any cause or reason whatever why the evidence of the defendant, or any one of his witnesses, should not be taken on commission in London.

Deponent further stated that he was informed, and verily believed, that the defendant was and had been in good health since the early part of November, 1901. That the case had already been postponed from October 12, 1901, at defendant's instance, to November 1, 1901, and again till February 1, 1902, and that on the 30th December, 1901, one of defendant's attorneys informed deponent that defendant would be in Cape Town on the 1st February to defend the present suit.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for defendant—the present applicant): It is now impossible for defendant to be here by February 1. Besides, there are witnesses to be examined in England, and since plaintiff is a wealthy man, and there is no doubt about defendant's solvency, plaintiff cannot be prejudiced by a little delay.

[Buchanan, J.: When can you go to trial?]

Possibly by March 12.

[Buchanan, J.: It should be by then at the latest.]

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for plaintiff the present respondent): I am instructed to oppose the granting of a commission. The trial has been definitely fixed for February, and there is nothing on the record to show any need of a commission. Let the trial be postponed to the end of February, and Rhodes will be here by that time.

I submit it is a principal case. The defendant disputes his signature.

[Buchanan, J.: Well, if you oppose provisional sentence, and judgment is given against you, that is only a provisional judgment.]

In any case, the Court fixed a day and directed that Rhodes should make timely application if he wanted a commission.

The only defence is that he denies his signature. It would be curious if a man could set up some other defence months after his signature had been proved. My point, however, is this: Can the Court grant a commission unless some grounds for the application are shown? The applicant does not say that he is in bad health, or that he does not intend to return to South Africa. Nothing, again, is said as to who these witnesses are, or as to what they are to prove. Why did not applicant mention these other material witnesses in his affidavit of the 12th of last October? These commissions are not granted as a matter of course. Why cannot defendant consent to provisional sentence on February 1, pay under security de restituyendo, and afterwards go into the principal case?

Sir H. Juta (in reply): No reason has even been alleged why this application should not be granted. If provisional sentence were given to-morrow, we should still ask for a commission.

[Buchanan, J.: In a provisional case affidavits are quite sufficient; you can not go into the whole case on a motion for provisional sentence.]

That, of course, is so, but I can only submit that there is no suggestion of any prejudice which would arise to plaintiff from delay; and in such a case the Court surely will not give judgment against an absent defendant. I would ask that the matter may stand over till the 12th of March.

In giving judgment, his lordship said that the summons for provisional sentence was returnable on the 13th October, when the case was postponed until the 1st November. When the matter then came on, an affidavit was filed by the defendant denying his signature to the note. The usual procedure was then followed, and a day was fixed for the plaintiff to prove the signature, the date being February 1. This gave three months for the defendant to appear, but now, within a fortnight of the case coming on, an application was made on affidavit for the postponement of the action, and the appointment of a commission to take evidence of witnesses in England. The sole ground upon which that application was made was a cable from defendant's London solicitor, which was as follows: "Referring to your cable of the 6th of January, application must be made for postponement until sitting after Easter, say, 8th April, and for open commission to examine Mr. Rhodes and other material witnesses in London in support of contention that signature is a forgery." It was not stated that the defendant would not be able to be here in person on the date fixed, or any cause stated for his absence. No reason was given for the postponement, and there was no intimation as to what the witnesses who were to be examined on commission were to prove. After the delay which had already taken place, the application must be refused, but on February 1 it would be open to the defendant, if he could show good cause, to apply for a further postponement; or even if judgment was given against him, it would only be provisional sentence, and by paying the amount, and taking security from the plaintiff, he could go into the principal case. For the present, the application would have to be refused, especially seeing the defendant would not be without remedy, even if provisional sentence were given against him

Married woman—Husband—Absence from the Colony—Inheritance.

The Court ordered half the amount of an inheritance to be paid to a woman married in community whose husband had left the Colony for German West Africa, and as to the other half granted a rule nisi calling upon him to show cause why it should not be paid to his wife for her maintenance and that of the children of the marriage.

This was an application for an order authorising the Master to pay over certain moneys to the applicant.

The affidavit of Johanna M. Botha showed that she was at present residing in the Refugee Camp at Bethulie, O.R.C., with her six children. That her husband Gideon Daniel Botha was at present residing in German West Africa; that it was extremely difficult to communicate with him, and that he had no present intention of returning. That on October 12, 1900, several sums of money had been deposited to her credit, as inheritances due to her—in all, £102 9s. 9d. That she had applied to the Master for payment of the said inheritances, but had been informed that payment could not be made without the assistance of her husband. That she was entirely without means and dependent upon charity for the necessities of life. She therefore prayed for an order authorising the Master to pay over to her the amount due to her as inheritances aforesaid, or such portion thereof as to their lordships might seem meet.

On the motion of Mr. Buchanan, the Court ordered that half of the inheritances aforesaid be paid to applicant; that a rule nisi issue, calling on her husband to shewn cause on March 12, 1902, why the remaining half shall not be paid for the maintenance and support of the petitioner and the children of the marriage.

His lordship said there was no difficulty, the parties being married in community of property, in ordering half the amount to be paid over to applicant. An order would be made accordingly, and as for the remainder, a rule nisi would be granted, calling upon the husband to show cause why the remainder of the money should not be paid to applicant for the maintenance of herself and children; rule to be returnable March 12, and to be published once in the "Government Gazette" and once in a Colesberg paper.

On the return day the rule was made absolute.

This was an application for the direction of the Court with regard to a certain order granted November 30 last in a

When the order was made it was expected that personal service would be effected, the respondent being in prison at the Breakwater Convict-station; but he had been released therefrom on the day the order was made, and his whereabouts were now unknown.

The affidavit of plaintiff's attorney stated that inquiries had been made at the Breakwater Convict-station, and also of the police, but without avail, and that plaintiff therefore prayed that the Court would order service of the aforesaid order of November 30, 1901, to be effected by publication.

Upon the motion of Mr. Upington (counsel for plaintiff), the Court ordered service of the order aforesaid to be made by publication once in the "Gazette" and once in the "Cape Times."

TOWN COUNCIL V. THE HARBOUR BOARD AND ANOTHER.

This was an application by the Town Council of Cape Town for an order calling upon the Harbour Board and the General Manager of the Railways, as representing the Colonial Government, to show cause why they should not be restrained from trespassing upon or opening up the Dock-road, and from laying down any lines of railway in the Dock-road, excepting certain two lines of railway, or from running or working any such lines of railway except for the purposes of through traffic, from the Docks. The Town Council had made certain arrangements with the Tramway Company for the extension of the tramway to the Docks, and they contended that it was impossible to run the tramway to the Docks if the prospective lines were laid by the Harbour Board.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for applicants): The Government purported to come in at the last moment and gave notice of expropriation after notice of motion had been given, but even now they have not actually expropriated. The Harbour Board provide the greater part of the land and the Government control the Harbour Board.

They do not intend to expropriate. See Mr. MoEwen's affidavit.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are you prepared to question the powers of the Government to expropriate?]

No; it is hardly necessary; they say on affidavit that they do not intend to expropriate. Now they have served notice of expropriation, and they may under Act 19 of 1874 have a right to expropriate, but they must say that they intend to expropriate.

[Buchanan, J.: Does all the land belong to the Government, except the fish market?]

Yes, but both fish markets were given to us by Government. Now the Harbour Board want to take away the old fish market and to infringe on our rights as to the new market. Neither the Harbour Board nor the Government can take land for a temporary purpose without expropriating. We deny the right of the Harbour Board because there was an agreement between ourselves and the Government that things should go on in a certain way. I am not prepared to say that Government cannot expropriate, but as no notice of expropriation appears in the affidavits we are at all events entitled to costs.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you, then, abandon the claim to an interdict, and say it is merely a question of costs?]

Yes.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for respondents): I would suggest that each party should pay their own costs, and that the applicants should withdraw their application.

Mr. Searle: I could not consent to that without consulting my clients, and I would ask that the matter be allowed to stand over.

Antenuptial Contract—Trustees.

It being clear that the object of an ante nuptial contract in appointing trustees for the administration of the wife's property was to protect the wife from the husband's influence, and not to debar her from administering her own property after his death, the Court, on her application after her husband's death, allowed her to administer the property free from the trustee's control.

This was an application by Sarah Petronella Nel (born Tiran), upon notice calling upon Gert Cornelius Olivier and Advocate Buchanan (as curator ad litem of the applicant's minor children) to show cause why the trustee mentioned in the petition should not be authorised to make transfer and delivery to the applicant of all her property, and why the same should not be declared to be vested in the applicant as her own absolute property, free from the restrictions imposed by the ante-nuptial contract mentioned in the said petition, and why the said trustee should not be released from his office of trustee, and the trust imposed by the said contract declared to be null and void and of no effect.

The petition of the applicant was as follows:

1. That your petitioner was the daughter of the late Jean Pierre Tiran, who died on the 5th November, 1882, and Hermina Catherina Tiran (born Keyter), who died on the 2nd April, 1879.

2. That by the last will of the petitioner's parent the said late Jean Pierre Tiran, dated the 31st October, 1881, Camille Frederick Tiran and Christian Michael Lind were appointed guardians to your petitioner.

3. That during or about the month of July, 1888, your petitioner, being then under age, was desirous of contracting a marriage with one Louis Nel, of Oudtshoorn.

4. That the guardians, before giving their consent to the marriage, desired to be contracted by your petitioner, demanded that your said petitioner and her said intended husband should execute the annexed ante-nuptial contract.

5. That in order to obtain such requisite consent your petitioner, with the assistance of her said guardians, executed the said contract with her husband, whereby her said guardians were appointed trustees to her property possessed at the time or to be acquired in future, for the period of the natural life of your petitioner, and that provision was therein made for the devolution of such property after the death of your petitioner.

6. That thereupon, on or about the 7th August, 1888, the marriage was duly solemnised between your petitioner and the said Louis Nel.

7. That the said marriage was on the 6th October, 1898, dissolved by the death of the said Louis Nel.

8. That the liquidation account of the estate of the said Louis Nel, filed in the office of the Master of this Hon. Court, shows the assets were £257 11s. 1d. sterling, while the liabilities amounted to £601 2s. 1d. sterling, there being a deficiency of £343 11s. sterling after deducting costs of administration of the estate.

9. That there are five children, lawful issue of the said marriage between your petitioner and the said Louis Nel, viz., Eugene de Montys Pierre Tiran Nel, born 16th September, 1889; Hermine Tiran Nel, born 1st December, 1890; Josephine Mileta Tiran Nel, born 22nd December, 1892; Adele Tiran Nel, born 11th May, 1895, and Eileen Louise Tiran Nel, born 30th May, 1897, all minors, the eldest now twelve years of age.

10. That the said Camille Frederick Tiran and Christian Michael Lind were thereafter succeeded in the trusteeship by Gert Cornelius Olivier, of Oudtshoorn, who since then has been and is now the sole trustee.

11. That your petitioner being advised and believing that the restrictions upon the free disposition of her property imposed by the said ante-nuptial contract were not valid or binding, or that if valid and binding during the subsistence of the said marriage, are not valid and binding after its dissolution, demanded from the said trustee, Gert Cornelius Olivier, transfer and delivery to her in full ownership of all her property, so that the same hereafter be under her exclusive control and at her free disposition.

12. That the said Gert Cornelius Olivier expressed himself willing to comply with the said demand, provided he did not thereby prejudice any lawful rights that might be deemed to have been his duty as such trustee to protect.

Wherefore your petitioner prays (a) that your lordships may be pleased to appoint some fit and proper person as curator ad litem on behalf of the said minor children for the purposes of this application; (b) that your lordships may be pleased to authorise the said trustee to make delivery and transfer to your petitioner of all her property, and to declare that the same shall thereupon be and become vested in your petitioner, and free from the restrictions imposed by the said ante-nuptial contract; (c) that your lordships may be pleased to release the said Gert Cornelius Olivier from his office of trustee, and to declare the trust imposed by the said ante-nuptial contract to be void and of no effect; (d) that your lordships may be pleased to grant your petitioner such alternative relief as to your lordships may seem meet.

The matter was previously before the Court, on January 14, 1900, when Mr. Advocate Buchanan was appointed curator ad litem for the minor children, in accordance with prayer (a) of the petition.

In reply to the petition, there was the following affidavit by the respondent Olivier: "Gert Cornelius Olivier, the above-named respondent maketh oath and saith: (1) That the petition with verifying affidavit made by the applicant has been read and explained to deponent. (2) That in so far as deponent is concerned he has no desire to oppose the application, and submits to such decision as this Hon. Court may give. Deponent desires, however, to be relieved from any responsibility, and to be indemnified and discharged from any possible claims or the costs of this application."

The following were the restrictions imposed by the ante-nuptial contract referred to: "That the whole of the estate, property, goods, effects, and things of which the said Sarah Petronella Tiran is already possessed, or which may hereafter be or become possessed, of whatever nature or kind, and however acquired, shall be and remain vested in the hands of Camille Frederick Tiran and Christian Michael Lind, or the survivor of them, as the trustees under this contract, or the trustee or trustees to be appointed as hereinafter directed upon trust and to and for the intents and purposes hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, upon trust to keep, lay out, and invest the same upon good and approved security, and to pay over to the said Sarah Petronella Tiran all interests, rents, and profits derivable from the same half-yearly, as a provision for her during the term of her natural life, and for which her receipt alone shall be a sufficient discharge, and upon the death of the said Sarah Petronella Tiran, then upon further trust to pay out and divide the whole of the said trust property to and amongst the lawful issue of the said Sarah Petronella Tiran in equal shares and proportions, share and share alike, or failing such issue, to pay and hand over the same to such person or persons as the said Sarah Petronella Tiran may in her last will and testament direct, and in the absence of any such direction, then to pay and hand over the same to her next-of-kin." There were similar provisions in the ante-nuptial contract with regard to a policy for £200 on the life of Louis Nel.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., appeared for the applicant; Mr. Buchanan for the curator ad litem, and Mr. Benjamin for Cornelius Oliver.

Mr. Buchanan: This stipulation of the Antenuptial Contract was one with regard to future succession, and looks to the death of the parties. Such stipulations in Antenuptial Contracts are on the same footing as Wills, and like them may be revoked.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was not this a contract on behalf of the children?]

The children were not then born.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Court has always upheld these contracts.]

A cancellation of an Antenuptial Contract inter vivos would be equivalent to a gift between husband and wife.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But is it not binding as between parents and children?]

In this case the children were uncertain persons; a gift cannot be made to uncertain persons.

[Buchanan, J.: The property was transferred to trustees; surely such a trust can be formed?]

[De Villiers, C.J.: This is not a will but a contract which affects the property during the wife's lifetime.]

It was not intended to make a donation, the object of transferring the property to trustees was not so much to protect the children as to keep the property from the husband. There was no thought of protecting the children against their mother.

Mr. Schreiner (for applicant): Tiran and Lind had no power to make contracts on behalf of the grandchildren, the children of their ward.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But when the children are born may they not protect their interests?]

Only by a fidci commissum. The only case in which a joint will cannot be revoked is where the estate, or a part of it, has been massed and the survivor has adiated under the will. An Antenuptial Contract is on the same footing as a joint will. The guardians of the wife were at most mandatories, and the whole object of the contract was to protect the wife during the subsistence of the marriage. Had she survived her husband the guardians would have been bound to have handed over her property unless she had made a donation to the children, or joined in executing a will massing and had adiated thereunder. The guardians were right in protecting her against her husband, but they could not have kept her own property from her after his death. She got nothing from Louis Nel; he left nothing to her but all to the children. With his death the mandate given to the trustees expired.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Must not the father be looked upon as a trustee of the children to be born, and in such capacity as having transferred certain rights to the trustees appointed under the contract?]

The only way in which that could be done would be by a mutual will massing: else a testator's Will might be irrevocable. See Marshall v. Marshall's Trustees (5 Searle, 144). There the order was given during the subsistence of the marriage. See also Buissinné and Ander v. Mulder and Vor (1 Menz. 162). At page 166 it is stated that in that case relief was given: for the Court as upper guardian will not relieve a woman from an engagement she has entered into for her own protection against her husband. Our Courts, however, have never adopted the trust law of England. Our general rule is that a mutual will and a mutual Antenuptial Contract bind the parties: a separate will and a separate Antenuptial Contract are revocable.

He could have done what he liked with it after his wife's death.

[Buchanan, J.: Then anything agreed upon by an Antenuptial Contract binds only during the life of both parties?]

I would not say that of Antenuptial Contracts in general; I only speak of this particular contract; it gives the wife full liberty of testation, and what rights then could the children have? See Van Leeuwen (Vol. 2, pp. 204 and 205).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Suppose the husband had settled £2,000 on the wife on condition of her subscribing this Antenuptial Contract, would she not have been bound by it?]

She would have been put to her election. See also Van Leeuwen's "Censura Forensis" (1, 12, 16) as to the revocability of Antenuptial Contracts. Here the trustee was only the wife's mandatory for the wife, she could have revoked his mandate at any time. The Court no doubt would have refused to interfere, because had she done so she would not have been protected against her husband. See Van der Kessel (Th. 283). Voet (23, 4, 60 to 63). If it be contended that this is a mere contract it cannot stand, for you cannot give an inheritance by contract, Sande-Devis. Frisc. (2, 2, 7). Van Leeuwen (Vol. i, Bk. 3. Ch. 2, Sec. 18). Grotius (2, 15, 9), and Schröter's Note (No. 114).

Mr. Buchanan (in reply): All authorities treat a stipulation like this as a mutual Will and not as a real contract. Van der Kessel (Th., 233). I am not prepared to admit that the stipulations only hold during the marriage. Like the provisions of a Will they look forward to the time of death. After her husband's death, however, the wife could revoke the provisions of the Antenuptial Contract, Van der Kessel (Th., 235, 239, 240, 264, and 265); Van der Linden (1, 3, 5); Van Leeuwen (Vol. ii., p. 205, Sec. 12); Voet (23, 4, 62 to 64, specially 62); De Rosseboom Costum. Amsterdam (42, Ch. 7, Sec. 9); Loenius Decisiones (num. 137); Carpzovius (pars 2, 45, Def. 14, note 5); Voet (39, 5, 10, and 12).

Postea, January 23.

De Villiers, C.J., gave judgment in this case. His Lordship said that the Court had considered the application, and upon the whole came to the conclusion that the application ought to be granted. Under the fourth clause of the ante-nuptial contract it was provided that each of the spouses shall be at full liberty to dispose of property. Then came the fifth clause, by which certain limitations were placed upon the power of Mrs. Nel, one of the spouses. In the opinion of the Court it was not intended by these limitations that Mrs. Nel should be deprived of the right of testamentary disposition after the death of her husband. The fifth clause should be read by the light of the fourth clause, and, if so read, it was clear that it was not intended that she should be deprived of the right of disposing of her property after the death of her intended husband. Under these circumstances the Court thought the application should be granted. But at the same time the Court wished it clearly understood that if the applicant had, for valuable consideration, relinquished certain rights in favour of the children, she would not be allowed after her husband's death to enjoy the benefit of such considerations without a corresponding obligation to observe the stipulation in favour of the children.

NAESS V. WARD. } 1902.
 } Jan. 20th.

Civil imprisonment—No Funds.

Where an applicant who had been civilly imprisoned in consequence of her default in making payment of such instalments of a judgment debt as she was bound by order of Court to make, deposed on oath that she was destitute of means: the Court ordered that the said applicant should be released on her undertaking not to leave the country and that execution of the decree of imprisonment be suspended until further order.

This was an application upon notice of motion calling upon Florence Maud Ward, married in community of property to Reuben J. Ward, of Cape Town, and duly assisted by him as far as needs be, to show cause why applicant should not be discharged from Civil Imprisonment upon payment to respondent of £1, being the first instalment due on January 1st, 1902, in terms of an order of Court dated November 21st, 1901, together with £1 14s. 0d. costs incurred in connection with the arrest of applicant.

Or in the alternative, to show cause why applicant should not be forthwith released from custody upon the grounds that she is devoid of means and unable to pay the amount due by her to you.

The affidavit of Astrid Naess, the applicant stated that she was indebted to respondent in the sum of £37 1s. 0d., for which the Court had granted an order of Civil Imprisonment on November 21st, 1901, execution whereof was to be stayed pending payment of £1 per month from December 1st, 1901. Applicant made default in the said payment on January 1st, 1902, and on the 15th of the said month was arrested and detained in gaol under a writ of Court issued at the instance of Respondent. That she had tendered payment of the arrear instalment together with costs of arrest, but that Respondent refused to accept the tender and to grant an order for applicant's release from gaol. That applicant was devoid of means and totally unable to discharge the amount of the above debt either in whole or part.

The affidavit of Reuben John Ward stated that he was the husband of Respondent, and that on January 15th, 1902, he witnessed the arrest of Applicant on board the "Saxon" when she was about to leave for England. That he had ascertained that she had booked a second-class passage but that shortly before deponent arrived on board of the "Saxon" aforesaid applicant had transferred her second-class passage to first.

Mr. B. Upington (for applicant): There are two grounds on which applicant is entitled to her release. In the first place she tenders to pay instalments and the costs of her arrest. The Chief Justice granted the decree of civil imprisonment but suspended execution on payment of £1 a month.

[Buchanan, J.: Have you any affidavits, Mr. Benjamin, as to her means? She ought to be cross-examined as to means. What is her position?]

I believe she has been employed by the Government.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondent): She booked a second-class passage to England and then changed it for a first. The debt is only £15, and the difference between the two fares would have been fully sufficient to have paid it.

[Buchanan, J.: I do not see that any order can be made on the facts in evidence. Can you produce the prisoner. Mr. Upington by 12 noon?]

[Mr. Upington replied in the affirmative, and the prisoner was produced when the sitting was resumed at the said hour.]

Mr. Upington cited Sec. 6 of Act 8, 1879, and H. v. Bossi (4 Juta, 72). See also Forde's case (decided November 20th, 1885, not reported but cited by Van Zyl, p. 239, and Re Hartill (decided November 27th, 1885. Not reported but cited by Van Zyl, p. 239. In these cases an extensive interpretation was given to the above Section 6.

Mr. Benjamin: We do not object to the decree being suspended, if the applicant undertakes not to leave the Colony.

[The Court thereupon suspended execution of the Writ till further order, and ordered the release of applicant from Civil Imprisonment on her undertaking not to leave the country.]

MARTIN V. MARTIN.

Mr. Close appeared for the applicant, Mrs. Wilhelmina Hendrina Martin, who applied for a rule nisi calling upon her husband, Jno. Martin, blacksmith, of Mossel Bay, to show cause why an order should not be granted restraining him from dealing with the property of the joint estate of himself and the petitioner, pending the result of an action instituted by the latter for judicial separation. In her petition applicant alleged that her husband was a habitual drunkard, and had been guilty of acts of cruelty towards her. He had been three times convicted of and fined for drunkenness, and had once been found guilty of assaulting her.

An order was granted calling upon respondent to show cause why an order should not be granted in terms of the petition, the rule to operate as an interim interdict restraining him from dealing with the landed property of the estate,

OHLSSON'S BREWERIES V. WATSON.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the applicants.

This was an application to attach certain moneys in the Standard Bank, belonging to respondent, and a sum owed him by the Field Force Canteen. Applicants alleged that respondent was indebted to them in the sum of £844 on a promissory note and for goods sold and delivered, and summons had been issued in respect thereof. They said they had reason to believe that he intended to leave the Colony, and attached to the petition a letter written by him to the manager of the Field Force Canteen, in which he stated that he had been granted an indulgence passage to England, and had been warned that he might go at any time.

His Lordship said that the Court would not, as a rule, make an order for the attachment of any money before judgment was obtained, but where there was reason to believe that a person was about to leave the jurisdiction, the Court would make such an order. A rule nisi would be granted calling on respondent to show cause why the money should not be attached, the rule to operate as an interim interdict restraining the Standard Bank and the district manager of the Field Force Canteen from paying to respondent any money in their possession belonging to him.

SUPREME COURT IN CAMERA.

Ex parte WIESE. } 1892.
Jan. 28th.

This was an application upon notice given to the attorneys of the consignees of the cargo of the German barque Marga, now lying at Port Elizabeth, and also the Sub-Collector of Customs, calling on them to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted. The petition set forth that the petitioner is the master of the German barque Marga, and as such represents the owners. In terms of charter party (annexed and marked A) entered into at Hamburg, the vessel received on board a cargo of general merchandise for Port Elizabeth and Natal in accordance with the option exercised by the said charterer, for which cargo petitioners signed bills of lading in the form and upon the terms of the copy of the Bill of Lading annexed and marked B. Thereafter the said vessel arrived at the Port of Algoa Bay on October 3rd, 1901, and the day following petitioner gave notice to the firm of Edward Searle and Co., merchants of Port Elizabeth (to whom the said vessel was consigned by the charterer under the said Charter Party) that he was ready to discharge the Port Elizabeth portion of his said cargo. That thereafter the consignees of the said cargo did not commence to take delivery of their goods until on or about December 14th, 1901, and since that date have only taken delivery thereof on occasional days, but that the discharge of the said cargo has not been completed up to the present. That on December 5th, 1901, petitioner made and executed a Notarial Protest, copy of which was on December 7th, 1901, duly served upon the said firm of E. Searle and Co. That petitioner has at all times since the arrival of his vessel at this Port and up to January 7, 1902, been ready and willing to deliver the said cargo to the said consignees with all reasonable despatch. That petitioner has a claim against the consignees for demurrage by virtue of the terms of the said Bills of Lading, and is about to institute an action for the recovery of his said claim in this Honourable Court. That petitioner has a lien constituted by the express stipulation both of the Charter party and the Bills of Lading upon the cargo still remaining on board for demurrage and all charges and expenses connected therewith. That of the Port Elizabeth portion of the said cargo, there still remains on board the goods set forth in a schedule hereunto annexed for the several consignees whose names are set forth in the said list. That on January 7th, 1902, petitioner, through his attorneys, gave notice to the said firm of E. Searle and Co., for themselves and the other Port Elizabeth consignees of his intention to retain the Port Elizabeth cargo then remaining on board his said vessel in pursuance of his lien for demurrage, his claim for which on that day amounted to the sum of £677 6s. 8d., and has continued at the rate of £16 18s. 8d. per day (4d. per ton nett register), and that thereupon ensued the correspondence (copies annexed and marked E) between the respective attorneys of petitioner and the said consignees. That thereafter by virtue of such lien, petitioner refused to deliver the goods remaining on board to the consignees, but had endeavoured to discharge and store the same in his own name at the expense and risk of the owners, but the Sub-Collector of Customs, by reason of the consignees having already passed the Customs entries, refused to allow the Port Elizabeth Harbour Board to land and deliver the goods to petitioner. Wherefore petitioner now prays for an order for the attachment of the goods, and confirming their retention by petitioner by virtue of his lien, for his claim for demurrage and all charges and expenses, and authorising the Sub-Collector of Customs to allow the goods to be discharged and stored by petitioner in his own name, at the risk and expense of the consignees, pending the result of an action to be instituted by petitioner in this Honourable Court against the consignees for the recovery of the said claim.

The various provisions of the Charter Party bearing on this application were as follows: The ship being loaded shall proceed with her cargo to Cape Town and (or) Port Elizabeth, and (or) East London, and (or) Port Natal and (or) Delagoa Bay--Lorenzo Marques, one or two ports as ordered on signing B. Ldg. in rotation from South to North, but if ordered to East London this to be the last discharging port if desired by charterer, or so near thereunto as she may safely get and deliver her cargo in the usual and customary manner at such wharves or berths as Charterer or Consignee may appoint (if more than one wharf be used for discharging and loading, consignees to pay shifting expenses) agreeably to Bills of Lading, but not exceeding 35 working days to commence 48 hours after ship's arrival at the respective port, and so end the voyage. Days for loading and discharging to be reversible; 30 working days are to be allowed the Charterer for loading the said vessel (if not sooner despatched), the said days to commence 48 hours after receipt of customary written notice that the vessel is in her loading berth with a completely clear hold, etc. Should the vessel be detained beyond the aforesaid time by the said Charterer, demurrage to be paid by him at the rate of 2d. per ton nett register per day for the first 10 days, and 4d. for all further days (Sundays and holidays excepted), but causes beyond the control of the freighter which may prevent or delay the loading of the vessel are not to be computed as part of the aforesaid loading time. As much of the freight as is payable abroad according to Bills of Lading in cash at port of discharge on right and true delivery of the cargo, and the balance, but in no case less than one-half to be paid in Hamburg after final departure of the vessel from the Elbe, on receipt of which payment Charterer's responsibility concerning this charter to cease. The Captain to have a lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight and demurrage.

The ship has in all 67 days for loading and discharging, of these days, 22 have been used in Hamburg; thus 45 days are left for discharging to be counted as per this Charter Party. In the Bill of Lading, it was stated: all goods are subject to an absolute lien for freight until paid, and for all charges including dead freight, demurrage, forwarding charges, etc. Consignees are to be ready to receive their goods free from alongside when at hand, and to take delivery as quickly as the goods are delivered in ship's slings by the ship. Otherwise the Master or Agent may discharge and store them at the expense and risk of the owners of the goods, or in his option charge demurrage for the ship at the rate of 4d. per ton nett Register per day, the Captain to have a lien on the goods for all these charges and expenses.

The affidavit of William E. Clift, Marine Superintendent of Port Elizabeth Harbour Board, stated that the Marga arrived at that port on October 3rd, and that on the following day permission for her to come alongside the jetty was refused. That between October 4th and December 14th it was impossible, according to Harbour Board Regulations to have worked the vessel by any means. Her discharge was regulated strictly according to the custom of the Port. This last allegation was supported by the affidavit of William MacIntosh.

[Mr. Schreiner, K.C., appeared for the petitioner, and Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondents.]

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is this motion opposed?]

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for Respondent): Yes; we have offered security, but they want costs.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for Applicant): The real question is, are we entitled to demurrage as per Charter Party, or only according to the custom of the Port? I would suggest that the whole question should be gone into now so as to save further litigation. As to security, we have some hesitation in accepting that lest we should lose our lien.

In that case we should not object. If the case went to trial the Court could have nothing more before it than it has now.

Mr. Searle: The affidavits are conflicting. The lien given by the Charter Party is more extensive than that given by the Bill of Lading.

Mr. Schreiner: The central point of the case is in our favour since we have a lien on the goods a jus in rem, and we need not come upon the charterer by an action in personam. We hold that we have not lost our demurrage right.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Will you withdraw your statement as to the knowledge of the consignees?]

We cannot do that.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Then is there not a question of fact in dispute?]

[Buchanan, J.: If security is given it stands in the same position as goods?]

Yes; but the deed of security would have to express this very clearly.

Mr. Searle: They have already consented to accept security, and the only question now is as to costs.

[Mr. Schreiner put in the correspondence between parties' Attorneys.] The point seems to be that they offer security without prejudice to their rights. If the goods are parted with the lien dies.

Mr. Searle: They are foreigners, and should give security for costs before they begin their action. We are quite willing to give security to obey the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Schreiner: The whole question is, from when does demurrage run? From the expiry of the lay days, or according to the custom of the Port?

We consent to give security for costs.

After further argument the Chief Justice said that no order would be made, respondent undertaking forthwith to give security for any sum that might be awarded to the plaintiff by judgment of this Court, the delivery of the goods not to prejudice any right of the applicant in respect to the goods, which were to be judged as if no delivery had been made, the applicant to give security for costs in case of his proceeding further by action; all costs heretofore to be costs in the cause.

Rent—Beneficial occupation.

Defendants had hired certain hotel premises situate in the Orange Free State from plaintiff, subsequent to the outbreak of hostilities between that State and Great Britain. Defendant's tenant of said premises having been deported, without any fault of his own, by the British Military Authorities, defendants now denied that they were liable for the rent of the said premises under the lease aforesaid.

Held, that as defendants had leased the said premises with full knowledge of the risk they were running owing to military operations, the Roman Dutch authorities as to want of beneficial occupation did not apply.

This was a motion for provisional sentence in respect to a sum of £30, alleged to be due, as rent of certain premises for the month of December, 1901, in terms of a lease, executed on the 7th September, 1900, whereby plaintiff let to the defendants a property known as the Commercial Hotel in Boshof, Orange River Colony, at a monthly rental of £30.

The summons called upon Wilhelm H. Liebermann, Johan C. Bellstedt, and Dirk E. Vreede, trading as Liebermann, Bellstedt, and Co., to pay William Conrad Foulger, lately of Boschof, O.R.C., but at present of Cape Town, the sum of £30 8s. under and by virtue of a certain agreement of Lease bearing date the 7th of September, 1900, entered into between the above-named plaintiff as lessor, and defendant as lessees, together with the interest thereon from December 31st, 1901, to date of summons.

The affidavit of Wilhelm H. Liebermann stated that his firm had entered into the agreement of lease of September 7th, 1900, which was now sued on. The said lease was to continue to defendant's firm the tenancy of the land, building, and premises thereby let known as the "Commercial Hotel, Boschof," for a further period of five years from January 1st, 1901. Defendant's firm were, at the time the lease was executed, domiciled at Port Elizabeth, plaintiff was domiciled at Boschof in the O.R.C., where the premises were situate. At the end of November, 1901, the inhabitants of Boschof were by order of the British Military Authorities ordered to vacate their premises at a moment's notice, and to proceed thence to this Colony. Among such inhabitants one E. Prior, who held the said leased "Commercial Hotel" premises as sub-lessee under and as agent for deponent's firm was ordered to leave and did leave the said leased premises to which he has not since been allowed to return. He was not ordered to leave in consequence of any misconduct on his, or his firm's part. Since the events referred to the firm have not had the occupation of the said premises. Deponent believes that his agreement of lease is governed by the law of the O.R.C., and that under such law his firm is, under the circumstances, not liable for rent. In a replying affidavit plaintiff stated that at the date the aforesaid lease was entered into hostilities between the forces of the Orange Free State and those of His Britannic Majesty had been in progress for eleven months. He denied any knowledge of the expulsion of defendant's tenant by the British forces, and also that he was deprived of the right to recover rent under the lease either by Common Law or by special proclamation of the British Military Authorities.

Mr. Searle said that the defence was that there had been no beneficial occupation of the property, the military authorities having entered the place, and compelled the lessee to leave.

Mr. Schreiner contended that the defendants entered into the lease with full knowledge of the conditions existing in the country. At the date the lease was executed hostilities had been in progress for eleven months or thereabouts. Where knowledge of the circumstances existed, a person could not, he argued, claim exemption for want of beneficial occupation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There was knowledge of the country being in a state of war, but there was no knowledge that the lessee would be prevented from having beneficial occupation.]

The lessees took the risk. They must have known that the military exigencies might be such that they would be prevented from having occupation. Probably the conditions of the country and the risks to the lessee were taken into consideration in determining the amount of the rent. Voet (19-2-24), The United Mines of Bultfontein v. De Berra Consolidated Mines (10 Sheil 665), The Treasurer-General v. Lockstone (1 Juta, p. 304), Wheeler v. Van Renen (2 Juta, p. 269).

Mr. Searle in reply.

In giving judgment, the Chief Justice that he was of opinion that provisional sentence must be granted. It might be taken for certain that if the lease had been entered into before the commencement of hostilities the defence would be a good one. The affidavit of the defendants stated that at the end of November, 1901, the inhabitants of Boshof were ordered by the British military authorities to vacate at a month's notice and proceed to Cape Colony, as the town and houses were required for military purposes. Among such inhabitants was one E. Prior, who as sub-lessee held the Commercial Hotel. He was ordered to leave and did leave. The circumstances were such as to debar the lessee from having beneficial occupation. But it was admitted that the lease was entered into after the commencement of hostilities, and one might take it that the rent was estimated according to the risk. Both parties must have known that there was a considerable risk when the lease was entered into. Under such circumstances, Voet, in the passage quoted, was clearly of opinion that the general rule relieving the lessee from payment of rent where he has been unable owing to war to have beneficial occupation does not apply. The Court had not been able to verify the authorities cited by him, but there appeared to me to be sound sense in the distinction drawn by him. The Court considered that provisional sentence should be granted with costs.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

ALIWE V. ABDOL HADDIE. { 1902.
Feb. 1st.

Arrest—8th Rule of Court—Security.

This was an application for discharge of a writ of arrest under the 8th Rule of Court.

The writ of arrest issued January 16, 1902, called upon the Sheriff of the Colony to arrest Abdol Haddie, of 60, Hanover-street, Cape Town, and safely to keep him so that the said Sheriff might produce him before the Supreme Court on February 1, 1902, to answer Said Abdoola Aliwe, and show cause why he had not paid him £61 balance of account rendered and also £3,900 damages for slander. The former sum (of £61) was stated to be balance of an account for maintenance of defendant's wife while in Mecca. The damages were claimed in respect of certain defamatory expressions used by defendant against plaintiff which resulted in plaintiff's dismissal from an important post in Mecca.

Defendant was arrested and lodged in gaol on January 16, 1902.

The affidavit of the plaintiff stated that he was a priest from Mecca, presently residing in Cape Town. That the said defendant was indebted to deponent in the sum of £61 sterling, balance of account. That deponent had sustained damages to the sum of £3,000 owing to defendant's having falsely and maliciously uttered certain defamatory statements concerning deponent, thereby causing deponent to be removed from his office as a priest at Mecca. That he had heard and verily believed that the said defendant was about to quit the Colony to proceed to Mecca. That deponent had no mortgage, pledge, or security for the said amounts claimed by him, and that from inquiries instituted in the Deed Office he had ascertained that defendant's immovable property was so heavily mortgaged as to leave a balance of no consequence.

There were two affidavits in support of the allegation that defendant intended to leave the Colony on January 16. One of the said affidavits also stated that only a very small margin would remain after deducting defendant's liabilities from the value of his properties.

The affidavit of Hadje Abdol Haddie, the defendant, (now applicant,) admitted that he was indebted to Said A. Aliwe in the sum of £49, but stated that he (Haddie) had a counter claim against him for the sum of £100 on an acknowledgment of debt signed by him, and at present in the hands of deponent's agent at Mecca. He denied that plaintiff had sustained damage, and that he had any intention of proceeding to Mecca. Deponent also said that his Cape Town property was worth more than £3,100, and was bonded only to the extent of £1,950. He deposed that he had been grossly insulted by Aliwe and his friends, and that his arrest was due to malice.

In his answering affidavit, Said Abdoola Aliwe denied that he owed applicant £100, and said that the whole of the said sum which had been left in his custody by applicant's wife on her arrival in Mecca had been paid over to her for her maintenance there. This allegation was supported by her receipt and by her affidavit. Deponent denied that he had either assaulted applicant or induced any other person to do so, or that the arrest was malicious.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for applicant, and Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for respondent.

Mr. Schreiner said that the applicant alleged that the slander was contained in a letter written by defendant to the Governor of Mecca, in consequence of which he (applicant) was dismissed from his position as chief priest and pilgrim guide to the Temple of Mecca. Counsel said that the property referred to by defendant only represented a net amount of £750, after the amount of the bonds had been deducted.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the object was to secure the defendant's presence here. He thought £700 was sufficient for that.

Mr. Schreiner said that the costs would be heavy. There would probably have to be a commission to take evidence at Mecca.

The Court confirmed the writ, the amount of the security being reduced to £500, costs to be costs in the cause.

This was an application for provisional sentence for £955 due to plaintiff upon certain conditions of sale, with regard to land sold at Woodstock.

The summons called upon Antonio Cortis to render to Samuel Tonkin in his capacity as seller and receiver duly authorised by order of the Honourable the Supreme Court, dated October 14, 1901, to sell the undermentioned property of which Arthur E. Hunter (a minor), John T. Hunter, Charles H. Hunter, and James M. Hunter are the owners the sum of £955 with interest thereon at six per cent., from October 22, 1901, due and payable by the said Cortis to the said Tonkin upon certain conditions of sale signed by the said Cortis on October 22, 1901, for the purchase price of landed property situate at Woodstock aforesaid, and which purchase price the said Cortis agreed to pay in three equal instalments, namely, on January 22, 1902, April 22, and October 22, 1902, and which amount has become payable in full through non-payment of the first instalment.

The affidavit of defendant stated that on the 22nd October he attended a sale of ground and buildings thereon, situated in the Lower Main-road at Woodstock. He alleged that plaintiff informed him that the ground had a frontage of 64 feet and a depth of 100 feet, and that half of a certain yard was included in the ground sold.

On this understanding defendant bought the ground pointed out by plaintiff for £955, payable in instalments due at 3, 6, and 12 months from date of sale. On a survey of the aforesaid ground being made, the surveyor ascertained that no portion of the yard at the back of the house belonged to the principals for whom plaintiff is agent. At the back of the said yard there is a cottage which is on the ground bought by defendant, and as this cottage has its entrance through the said yard, it (the cottage aforesaid which brings in a rental of £2 per month) would be useless to him as there will be no entrance to it. As transfer was now tendered of much less ground than defendant bought, he refused to take such transfer. Defendant's affidavit was supported by those of Marks Cohen and Solomon Schach.

Plaintiff in his affidavit denied that he showed to defendant the exact boundary of the property. He represented the frontage as 40 feet, less an existing road, and the depth at 100 feet, less the portion deducted to one Lewis. Plaintiff never pointed out to defendant that half the yard aforesaid was included in the ground being sold. Plaintiff sold the ground according to the diagram produced, and defendant purchased for £955.

Plaintiff had tendered transfer to defendant of the property with a new diagram, giving him an additional small piece of land sufficient to give him a frontage of 64 feet, less the existing road. Defendant had taken possession of the property from the date of sale and was still in possession.

Mr. Close for Plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin for Defendant.

Provisional sentence was granted, execution being stayed in order to enable defendant to bring an action. The Chief Justice said that provisional sentence would, of course, be with costs, but defendant could reclaim the costs if he succeeded in his claim in reconvention or action for cancellation of the sale.

RICARDI V. FALKOW.

Mr. Gardiner applied for a writ of civil imprisonment. Defendant had failed to comply with a judgment of the Court for payment of costs amounting to £32 2s. 7d.

Defendant gave evidence, and said that he had no work. He offered to pay 10s. a month until he was in a position to pay more.

The Court granted a decree of civil imprisonment, with costs, but ordered execution to be stayed on payment of 10s. a month, leave being reserved to plaintiff to apply for increase.

ALEXANDER V. JONES.

Mr. Benjamin applied for a decree of civil imprisonment in respect to a debt of £686 and costs, for which judgment was given by the Supreme Court on the 15th August, 1900.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence for a sum of £36, being interest on a mortgage bond, with interest and costs.

RITSON V. SIERADZKI. { 1902.

Pactum de non petendo.

S. had signed a certain acknowledgment of debt in favour of R. The defence was that R. had by a contemporaneous document engaged not to press for payment until two months after a certain future event should have happened.

Held, that as the event in question had not yet happened plaintiff was bound by his pactum de non petendo, even though there was some evidence that defendant was not without funds and that provisional sentence must be refused.

This was an application for provisional sentence for money alleged to be due under a deed of dissolution of partnership, by which defendant in May, 1900, undertook to pay £263 17s. 1d. within three months.

The summons, dated January 22, 1902, called upon defendant to pay the above sum with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum reckoned from September 13, 1901, which defendant owed upon and by virtue of a certain agreement and acknowledgment of debt bearing date May 13, 1900. Also to pay the moneys disbursed by plaintiff in pursuance of the said agreement and acknowledgment of debt for the storage and care of certain goods scheduled and set forth in the said agreement, and pledged by defendant to plaintiff as security for the aforesaid debt, being at the rate of £1 10s. per month from September 1, 1900, i. e., £1 per month as rent and 10s. per month for care and attention. The summons further called upon defendant, should he deny the reasonableness of the said claim of £1 10s. per month, within two days after service of summons to cause appearance to be entered in the Supreme Court to answer to plaintiff in an action wherein he claimed to be entitled to be reimbursed all moneys already expended by him or which might hereafter be spent for the storage and preservation of the pledged goods, until such time as they should have been realized, and the proceeds thereof appropriated in payment of the said debt.

The affidavit of Koppel Sieradzki stated inter alia that prior to the aforesaid agreement and acknowledgment of debt being signed, it was agreed between the parties thereto to vary the terms thereof as to when payment was to be made of the balance due by defendant to plaintiff: and it was agreed by plaintiff that he would not claim or press for payment of the said balance till two clear months had elapsed after the opening of civilian traffic to Johannesburg, so as to enable defendant to proceed there and at the same time when the said agreement was signed plaintiff signed a letter (annexed) addressed to defendant embodying the said variation of terms. Defendant further said that civilian traffic to Johannesburg had not yet been opened, and that he had several times attempted, without success, to obtain a permit to proceed thither.

The aforesaid letter was as follows:

CAPE TOWN,

May 18, 1900.

Mr. K. Sieradzki.

SIR,—Referring to Deed of Dissolution of partnership executed by us this day, I agree to allow you two clear months after Johannesburg is open for civilians to enable you to proceed there, before pressing for payment of the balance due to me by you in regard of our late partnership.

I shall, of course, retain possession of the assets pledged until my claim in full with interest is paid.

(Signed) H. RITSON.

In an answering affidavit plaintiff stated that the goods pledged were of a perishable nature and were being depreciated in value, that some of them had been given up to defendant and sold by him at a good price, and that Johannesburg was now open to civilians, but that defendant was not anxious to go there as he was doing a good business in Cape Town.

Mr. Schreiner, K. C., for plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K. C., for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner argued that evidence of a contemporaneous agreement was not admissible, and quoted Orsmond v. Stym (10 Sheil, 763).

Mr. Searle was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J., the decision in the case cited by Mr. Schreiner was founded entirely upon the fact that a collateral agreement was relied upon, with no writing whatever to prove its existence. In the present case the agreement, which was not exactly collateral, being made subsequently, was in writing. Therein plaintiff agreed to allow defendant two clear months after Johannesburg was open for civilian traffic so as to enable him to proceed there before he pressed for payment. In my opinion, if the defendant could satisfy the Court that Johannesburg was not open for civilian traffic, and that he could not proceed there, the plaintiff could not sue for payment. Upon this point defendant's affidavit is clear. He says that though he has applied for a permit on several occasions he has not, as yet, succeeded in obtaining one. In my opinion the defence, at all events to a provisional claim, is a valid one, and provisional sentence must be refused with costs. This will not debar plaintiff from going into the principal case, and in such case he can claim the costs.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

BYWORTH V. STEVENSON. { 1902.
Feb. 1st

Donation—Charitable institution.

S. had undertaken to pay certain moneys to B. in consideration of B. foregoing an action for slander against S. S. had also on the same consideration promised to pay £10 towards the funds of a certain charitable institution. None of the above named moneys had been paid and B. now sued for payment.

Held, that final judgment must be entered against S. for the moneys due to B. but that with respect to the money promised to the said charitable institution no order could be made save on application by the trustees.

This was a motion under Rule 319 by which plaintiff claimed £65 4s. 9d. expenses unpaid in regard to an action for slander contemplated by said plaintiff against said respondent. Respondent had undertaken to pay the said costs and also £10 towards the funds of the Somerset Hospital, in consideration of plaintiff's contemplated action being withdrawn. Applicant now asked for judgment for £65 4s. 9d., and for an order on defendant to pay £10 to the hospital aforesaid.

The plaintiff's declaration set forth that on or about January 27, 1899, defendant at a meeting of ratepayers in Cape Town, spoke the following words concerning plaintiff: "Mr. Byworth (meaning plaintiff) was a vestry clerk in the town from which I (meaning defendant) hail, namely, Battersea, and Mr. Byworth was precious glad to get out of that town. The ratepayers' association drove him out of that town. If we formed an association here Mr. Byworth would not be so comfortable." Plaintiff by his attorney informed defendant of his intention to institute an action against him for defamation in respect of the words above set forth. On, or about February 1, 1901, defendant signed a written apology to plaintiff in respect of the said words, and agreed in consideration of plaintiff abandoning the said action to pay expenses incurred therein by plaintiff in respect of advocate's and attorney's fees and the cost of the insertion of the said apology in two issues of certain eight newspapers, and to pay the sum of £10 to the funds of the New Somerset Hospital. The legal expenses, etc., incurred amounted to £90 4s. 9. Of this defendant had paid only £25 on account, leaving a balance of £65 4s. 9d. together with the £10 aforesaid. Plaintiff now claimed judgment for the first named sum and an order compelling defendant to pay to the fund of the said hospital the sum of £10.

On December 16 defendant was barred.

The Court, without hearing any evidence, on the motion of Mr Gardiner, granted leave to plaintiff to enter final judgment for £65 4s. 9d. with costs. In respect of the £10 promised to the hospital the Court held that no order could be made save on application by party.

REHABILITATIONS.

On the motion of Mr. Benjamin, the Court made an order for the rehabilitation of Charles Augustine Wagner.

Mr. C. de Villiers moved for the rehabilitation of Adriaan Johannes Louw Versfeld.

Granted.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the rehalitation of George Oliver Moorhead. Counsel said that there were two joint trustees in the estate. They made separate reports, one favourable, the other adverse to the insolvent. One trustee alleged that there was a fictitious partnership between insolvent and another doctor; the other said the partnership was a real one. On other points the trustees differed, and the one said he was investigating matters, and subsequently proposed to ask for a resolution from the creditors as to taking proceedings. The estate was surrendered in November, 1896, and the trustee who reported unfavourably said that the favourable trustee had been acting for insolvent in his examination.

The Chief Justice said that applicant had been insolvent for six years, and no proceedings had been taken against him. No creditor came forward to support the one trustee, and under the circumstances the Court would order applicant's rehabilitation.

On the application of Mr. Gardiner, the Court granted an order for the rehabilitation of James Dold Morzin.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the rehabilitation of Edward John Wreyford.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

MASTER OF THE POLITICIAN AND MES- SINA BROS. AND OTHERS V. MASTER OF THE CROMARTYSHIRE.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., appeared for the master of the Politician; Mr. Benjamin for the second plaintiffs; and Mr. Searle, K.C., for the defendant.

Mr. Searle said that separate actions had been instituted against the defendant by the plaintiffs for salvage. One was set down for Tuesday next, and the other for the 26th. He asked that both should be set down for the latter date.

There was no opposition, and the cases were accordingly set down for the 26th inst. Leave was given to take the evidence of Captain Palmer on commission, Mr. Howel Jones being appointed commissioner. Costs were ordered to be costs in the cause.

Mr. Benjamin applied for the appointment of a commission to take evidence at Port Elizabeth.

Mr. Schreiner said that no notice had been given.

ENDLEY V. WARD AND CO.

This was an application for release from civil imprisonment.

The application was made on the ground that the arrest was wholly illegal. The affidavit of Christiana Endley, wife of George John Endley, the applicant, stated that in July, 1900, respondents obtained judgment against her husband, and subsequently obtained a decree of imprisonment. This decree was never executed. Before it could be executed applicant surrendered his estate, which was ordered to be sequestrated. On January 29, this year, deponent received a message from the Deputy Sheriff, stating that her husband had been lodged in gaol. The arrest was effected at the Paarl on a writ obtained by respondents.

Mr. Buchanan for applicant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for respondents.

Mr. Buchanan said that according to the Insolvent Ordinance, when once an order for sequestration was granted, all proceedings against the estate were stayed.

Mr. Schreiner said he did not oppose the application. The arrest was made in ignorance of the insolvency. He said this in order that his position should be understood in view of the proceedings applicant said he would institute for illegal imprisonment.

The Chief Justice said that the Court had nothing to do with future proceedings. It was quite clear that there was no right to arrest applicant. The arrest was wholly illegal, and must be discharged, with costs.

ROBERTSON V. ROBERTSON.

Mr. Close moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted for a decree of divorce. Granted.

PAY V. DAY.

Mr. Wilkinson moved to make absolute a rule for a decree of divorce. Granted.

ARMSTRONG V. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. Russell moved for a decree of divorce, with the custody of the minor child. Counsel said that a rule nisi had been attained, but there had been no service.

The Court granted leave for substituted service by publication once in the "Gazette" and once in the "Cape Times," defendant to return before the 28th February, the rule being returnable on the 12th March.

MABERLEY V. WOODSTOCK MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

This was an application to have a rule nisi, restraining respondent from paying the interest on certain debentures, made absolute.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondent Council.

Mr. Benjamin asked that the matter should stand over to the end of the roll. The brief had only just been handed to him.

Mr. Searle said he had no objection, and the matter was ordered to stand over.

TWIGG V. MEYER.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for applicant, and Mr. Benjamin for respondent.

The application was for removal of trial from the Supreme Court. Applicant (plaintiff) wanted it removed to the Circuit Court at George; respondent applied for removal to Mossel Bay.

After hearing the affidavits and argument, the Chief Justice said that the balance of convenience was in favour of George, to the Circuit Court, at which place the Court would order the trial to be removed. Costs of the application would be costs in the cause.

PROSSER V. PROSSER.

Mr. Solomon asked that this case should stand over until the first day of next term. Applicant had been called away, and was unable to give the further evidence necessary. Granted.

MASTER OF THE BEIRA V. SLEIGH.

Mr. Searle, K.C., who appeared for the plaintiff, said that the defendant had been barred. The action was for the sums of £929 and £82, money supplied to enable the vessel to go on from East London to this port. The coal on board the ship caught fire at East London and plaintiff supplied the amount stated to the vessel. The charterers were sued by edict, and service had been duly made upon them. The sum of £455 5s. 8d. was in the hands of Dunn and Co. on behalf of the ship, and this had been paid through the Sheriff to the plaintiff. Judgment was asked for the amount claimed, less this sum.

The Court gave judgment accordingly.

MASTER OF THE POLITICIAN AND MESSINA BROS. AND OTHERS V. MASTER OF THE CROMARTYSHIRE.

Mr. Benjamin, who appeared for the second plaintiffs, applied for a joint commission on behalf of Messina Brothers and the defendant to take evidence at Port Elizabeth, and for the appointment as commissioner of the Resident Magistrate of Port Elizabeth. The consent of the plaintiffs in the consolidated action had been obtained.

TOWN COUNCIL OF KIMBERLEY V. KIMBERLEY WATER WORKS CO. { 1912 Feb. 3rd.

Interdict—Application to Parliament—Construction of agreement.

By agreement between a Municipal Corporation and a Waterworks Company it was provided that the latter should construct certain waterworks to supply the inhabitants with water, that after the completion of the works the former should have the right to purchase them at a price to be mutually agreed upon and that should no such purchase be made, the company should have the sole right to supply the inhabitants with water from rivers for a period of twenty-five years and the Council "bind themselves and their successors in office during the subsistence of the contract and until the works shall be purchased and paid for by them, not to construct or promote or assist in the construction or promotion of waterworks, or permit any other waterworks having for its object the introduction or supply of water to the township." No purchase was effected, and four years before the expiration of the period of twenty-five years agreed upon, the Corporation being advised that the construction of new waterworks would require not less than four years, gave notice to the ratepayers of a meeting for taking steps to obtain authority by a private bill to construct such works; but not with the intention of supplying the township with water before the expiration of the twenty-five years.

Held, that it was not a case for an interdict to restrain the taking of such steps by the Council.

This was an appeal from the decision of the High Court of Kimberley.

The appellants were respondents in the Court below, where the proceedings were upon the following notice of motion addressed to the Mayor, Councillors, and Burgesses of the Borough of Kimberley: Please take notice that application will be made to the Hon. the High Court of Griqualand on Saturday, the 14th day of December, 1901, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, or so soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, for an order restraining the Borough Council from carrying out its declared intention of promoting and constructing waterworks having for its object the introduction or supply of water to the township of Kimberley and neighbourhood from the Vaal River, in breach of clause 6 of an agreement dated the 20th day of May, 1880, a copy whereof is annexed to the affidavit of Frank Stewart Lynch hereto attached, pending an action to be instituted in respect of such breach of agreement, or for such further and other relief in the premises as to the said Hon. Court shall seem meet, as also an order for the costs of this application.

The following affidavit was read in the Court below: Frank Stewart Lynch made oath and said:

1. I am the general manager of the Kimberley Waterworks Company (Ltd.).

2. By an agreement dated the 20th day of May, 1880, made and entered into by and between the Mayor, Councillors, and ratepayers of Kimberley (hereinafter called the Council), of the one part, and Thomas Lynch, acting for and on behalf of the Griqualand West Railway and Waterworks Company, Limited (hereinafter called the company), of the other part, a true copy of which agreement is hereunto annexed, the said company acquired the sole and exclusive right to supply the township of Kimberley with water from the Vaal or other rivers for a period of twenty-five years reckoned from the date of the said agreement, viz., the 20th day of May, 1880.

3. It is also in the said agreement by clause 4 thereof: Provided that the said Council shall be at liberty to purchase and take over the said works at any time after the completion of the same at a price to be mutually agreed upon, provided six clear months' notice in writing is given of their intention to so purchase the said works.

4. By the said agreement (clause 6) the said Council bound themselves and their successors in office during the subsistence of the said contract, and until the works shall be purchased and paid for under the provision of clause 4 thereof, not to construct or promote or assist in the construction or promotion of waterworks, or permit any other waterworks having for its object the introduction or supply of water to the township of Kimberley and neighbourhood from the Vaal River or other rivers in the province of Griqualand West.

5. The said agreement of the 20th May, 1880, contains other provisions, to which it is not necessary to refer for the purpose of this application, but I crave leave to refer this Hon. Court to the full text of the said agreement where necessary.

6. The Kimberley Waterworks Company (Limited) acquired the said agreement from the said Griqualand West Railway and Waterworks Company (Limited), together with all the benefits and privileges arising thereunder or thereby secured, and also took over all the burdens thereof with the knowledge and approval of the Council, and the said Kimberley Waterworks Company (Ltd.) thereupon proceeded to carry out, and did carry out, and fulfil all the obligations thereby imposed on the said Griqualand West Railway and Waterworks Company (Limited).

7. On or about the 11th day of April, 1883, the Kimberley Waterworks Company (Limited) notified the Kimberley Borough Council that the works were completed and in operation, and their undertaking is now, and has been since the year 1883, in full working order.

8. The said agreement of the 20th May, 1880, has not in any way been modified or amended, and is still in full force and effect.

9. It having been recently brought to my notice through a public advertisement in the "Diamond-fields Advertiser," a copy of which notice is hereunto annexed, that the Borough Council of Kimberley were taking steps forthwith to construct waterworks for the purpose of supplying the township of Kimberley and the inhabitants with water, in breach of clause 6 of the agreement aforesaid, I caused the letter, dated 27th November, 1901, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed, to be delivered to the Mayor, Councillors, and burgesses of the said borough, giving them notice that the action being taken by them constituted a breach of clause 6 of the agreement aforesaid, and that action would forthwith be taken by the Kimberley Waterworks Company (Limited) to restrain the Council from continuing any such breach, and, in reply, I received the letter dated the 4th day of December, 1901, also hereunto annexed, wherein the said Council declared their intention to proceed with the construction of the waterworks, and to continue the action complained of. I crave leave that the letter aforesaid be taken and read as part of this affidavit.

10. The Mayor of Kimberley has also publicly declared that it is the intention of the Council to take steps to arrange for obtaining a supply of water from the Vaal River for the inhabitants of the Municipality in order that a new waterworks scheme might be inaugurated, and to proceed with the construction of the necessary works therefor forthwith, and in a report of a committee of the Council it was also declared that with that object in view the Council had recently secured from Messrs. Dold and Childs, the owners of the farm Nooitgedacht, and also from one John Bisset, the owner of the farm Wildebeeste Kuil, both in the district of Kimberley, concessions which will enable the Council to obtain the requisite supply of water from the Vaal River to Kimberley.

11. Any rights the Council may have acquired from the said John Bisset were acquired with the knowledge that similar and exclusive rights had been granted by the said John Bisset and acquired by the applicants, who then held and now hold the same.

12. An action, in which judgment has not yet been delivered, was recently instituted in this Hon. Court by the applicants against the said John Bisset for specific performance of a certain paragraph in the instrument by which such rights were granted, and the said John Bisset gave evidence in such action to the effect that the same was being defended at the expense of the respondents. In case of necessity I crave leave to refer to the records of the said action.

13. The Borough Council of Kimberley has not purchased or taken over the aforesaid agreement or concession, dated the 20th day of May, 1880, now held by the Kimberley Waterworks Company (Limited), nor have they given any notice of their intention so to do, and they are therefore not entitled to promote or construct waterworks having for its object the introduction or supply of water to the township of Kimberley and neighbourhood from the Vaal or other rivers in the Province of Griqualand West.

14. Unless the Council is restrained by order of this Hon. Court from carrying out its declared intention of promoting and constructing such waterworks, the Kimberley Waterworks Company (Limited) will suffer irreparable damage.

The material clauses in the agreement referred to were the following:

Memorandum of an agreement made and entered into by and between the Mayor, Councillors, and Ratepayers of Kimberley, in the Province of Griqualand West, of the first part, and Thomas Lynch, of Kimberley, for and on behalf of the Griqualand West Railway and Waterworks Company (Limited), of No. 2, Suffolk-lane, Cannon-street, in the City of London, of the second part.

1. That the parties of the second part shall make and construct such works within the township as defined by clause 1 of the Ordinance No. 7, 1877, viz., within a radius of two miles from the District Magistrate's Court House in the cases hereinafter mentioned to supply a quantity of water from the Vaal or other rivers not less than 400,000,000 gallons per annum.

2. That the parties of the second part shall, for the purpose of conserving a necessary supply of water for the purposes in the preceding section mentioned, make, construct, and provide a suitable reservoir or reservoirs at or about the spot as pointed out on the township of Newton to Messrs. Cooke and Buchanan within the limits of the Municipality, one of such reservoirs to be fitted with filtering beds capable of filtering so as to supply a sufficient quantity of filtered water to the inhabitants of the township of Kimberley, according to their requirements, and all the necessary outlets for the distribution of the water from reservoirs, and for the purpose of supplying the township with the water, shall lay down good and sufficient pipes, valves, etc., in the roads and streets within the township of Kimberley, to the extent shown on the plan hereunto annexed marked A, it being agreed upon that after the requirements of the inhabitants of the township shall have been supplied, the parties hereto of the second part shall be empowered and allowed to dispose of the surplus water (if any) in any other way they may think fit

3. The parties of the second part shall provide, at their own cost, the necessary land for the reservoirs, filtering beds, engine-houses, dwellings, settling tanks, and for laying the pipes, valves, etc., either within or beyond the boundaries of the Municipality, and the parties hereto of the first part shall give the parties of the second part full and free rights for entering upon or using any such unoccupied lands, either belonging to or acquired by the parties of the first part, for the purpose of the works to be constructed by the parties of the second part, within the Municipal boundary or limits hereinbefore named, and they shall also, within the said limits, grant to the parties of the second part all such rights of breaking up roads for laying pipe valves, etc., in them, and for repairing the said pipe valves, etc., as they, the parties of the first part, possess or have the power to grant, provided that all breaking up of roads, as herein mentioned, and the repairs of the same by the parties hereto of the second part, shall be done and performed by the parties hereto of the second part, under the direction and supervision of the Town Surveyor, or such other officer as shall from time to time be appointed for that purpose by the parties hereto of the first part.

4. That the parties hereto of the first part shall be at liberty, and they are hereby empowered and authorised to purchase and take over the hereinbefore-mentioned works at any time after the completion of the same, at a price to be mutually agreed upon, provided they shall have first given to the parties of the second part six clear months' notice in writing of their intention to do so.

5. That up to the time of the purchase of the works (constructed under this agreement) by the parties hereto of the first part, should they purchase, the parties of the second part shall have power to sell and dispose of the water brought in by them to the inhabitants of the township of Kimberley and neighbourhood, either within or beyond the Municipal boundary, on such terms as they shall think fit (save and except that the maximum price or sum to be charged by them for the water supplied within the Municipal limits shall not in any case exceed the sum of 1s. 3d. sterling per 100 gallons), and generally to carry on the business of a waterworks company, and for that purpose the parties of the first part shall afford to the parties of the second part all the assistance in their power, and, in particular, shall give to the parties of the second part the full and free right of entering upon and using any lands of the Corporation, and breaking up roads and laying and maintaining pipes and other works in connection therewith, subject nevertheless to the conditions contained in clause 3 of this agreement with reference to the right of breaking up roads; it being agreed upon further that should no purchase be made of the works to be constructed under this agreement, as hereinbefore mentioned, they, the parties hereto of the second part, shall have the sole and exclusive right and privilege to supply the township of Kimberley with the water brought in by them from the Vaal River or any other rivers for a period of 25 years, reckoned from the date of these presents, provided, however, that no rights or privileges regarding the sale of water from wells or otherwise at present existing, or which may hereafter be created, save and except the right to supply water brought into the township from the Vaal River or other rivers, shall be prejudiced or interfered with by or under this contract.

6. The parties of the first part bind themselves and their successors in office, during the subsistence of this contract and until the works shall be purchased and paid for by them, under the provisions of clause 4, not to construct or promote or assist in the construction or promotion of waterworks, or permit any other waterworks having for its object the introduction or supply of water to the township of Kimberley and neighbourhood from the Vaal River or other rivers in this province.

7. The parties of the second part hereby undertake and bind themselves to commence the construction of the works not later than one year from the date of this agreement: Provided that they, the parties of the second part, shall previous to the expiration of that period be allowed to withdraw from this agreement, by giving notice thereof to the parties of the first part, failing which notice or on failure to commence the works as herein provided at the date above mentioned, this agreement shall be considered null and void.

The following affidavit was read in the Court below for the respondents:

1. I, Henry Alfred Oliver, of Kimberley, am the Mayor of the Borough of Kimberley.

2. I have perused the notice of motion herein dated the 11th instant, together with the affidavit and annexures thereto of Frank Stewart Lynch.

3. I admit paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 10, 12, and I deny paragraphs 8 and 14 of the affidavit of the said Frank Stewart Lynch.

4. In reply to paragraph 9, I admit the publication of the advertisement therein referred to, and I also admit that the letters therein mentioned were written and delivered.

5. I crave leave to refer to the said letters in support of the respondents' case.

6. As regards paragraph 11, I say that I have been informed and verily believe that when the said contract was entered into between the Council and the said Bisset that he informed the Deputy-Mayor and Councillors who signed the contract on behalf of the Council that the agreement he had previously entered into with one Thomas Lynch had lapsed, and was of no further effect.

7. As regards paragraph 13, I admit that the Council has not purchased or taken over the agreement of the 20th May, 1880.

8. Since January last correspondence has passed between the said applicants and the Council with reference to the price at which the applicants would be prepared to sell their waterworks undertaking to the Council.

9. The applicants first asked as the purchase price for their undertakings £450,000, but subsequently reduced the price to £360,000. The Council's expert advisers report that a new system of waterworks, complete in every respect and in accordance with the latest requirements of waterworks undertakings, could be constructed and laid down by the Council for £200,000.

10. The applicants also refuse to sell their undertakings in so far as the same are connected with the water supply of the Borough of Kimberley alone, but made it a condition of their offer that the Council should, in the event of purchase, take over certain contracts existing between the applicants and the De Beers Consolidated Mines (Limited) and the Beaconsfield Municipality, which were entered into without reference to the Borough Council, and do not fall within the scope of the Municipal administration of the Borough of Kimberley, which said contracts bind the applicants for a period of about 8½ years beyond the said period of 25 years referred to in the agreement of the 20th May, 1880.

11. In view of the position taken up by the applicants, and the excessive price required by them, negotiations between the applicants and the Council have fallen through.

12. On the 3rd October last the Council wrote to the applicants stating that it was the intention of the Council to arrange for the necessary supply of water to the inhabitants of the borough in order that the new waterworks may be completed and the Council be in a position to supply water immediately upon the expiry of the said period of 25 years.

13. The said period will expire on the 20th May, 1905, and the Council is advised that it is absolutely necessary that no time should be lost in proceeding with the construction of the new waterworks, otherwise the same will not be completed and in working order on that date.

14. I say that if the Council be restrained from proceeding with the construction of the new waterworks, and compelled to remain inactive and allow the full period of 25 years to expire before in any way proceeding with the carrying out of the said scheme, that instead of having the sole and exclusive right and privilege of supplying the township of Kimberley with the water for a period of 25 years, as provided for in the agreement of the 20th May, 1880, the applicants will enjoy an extended monopoly for at least four or five years after that date, and to which they are not entitled.

15. In a letter dated the 25th October, 1901, the applicants wrote to the Council stating that: "If the Municipality will grant an extension of the concession for 25 years from the 20th May, 1905, the Board will recommend to their shareholders a reduction in the price of water, thus admitting that the agreement of the 20th May, 1880, only extends up to the 20th May, 1905.

16. I further say that after the last day of the said period of 25 years the applicants might refuse to supply any more water to the inhabitants, or might increase their charges. The position of the burgesses would then be most serious, and the Council is desirous of taking timely steps to prevent any such evil and a perpetuation of the monopoly.

17. The Council has no intention of supplying water to any consumer prior to the expiry of the period of 25 years referred to in the agreement of the 20th May, 1880, nor to authorise or commit any company or person to in any way interfere or compete with the said applicants in supplying water during that period.

The following is a copy of the order of the Court below:

On the motion of Mr. Phear, of counsel for applicants, and upon reading the documents filed of record, Mr. Sampson, K.C., appearing for the respondents to oppose the application, the Court grants an order as prayed, with liberty to the respondents to bring an action to discharge the interdict or for a declaration of rights or such other form of action for such other relief as they may be advised, if such action be brought, costs to be costs in the cause, if not, to be paid by the respondents. On the application of Mr. Sampson, K.C., the Court grants the respondents leave to appeal.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Buchanan) for appellants: The rules of the House require that notice of application for powers to carry out a water scheme should be given to the House and to all parties concerned. As we see from page 15 of the record, notice was given of a public meeting of citizens to consider this question of water supply. It is true that it is not compulsory to call a public meeting, but the calling of such meeting is clearly in accordance with the spirit of Section 9 of Act 35 of 1885. We are now debarred by this judgment of the High Court from approaching Parliament. On May 20, 1880, an agreement was entered into between the Griqualand West Water Co. and the Town Council. Subsequently the Kimberley Water Works Co. took over the business of the Griqualand West Co. If this agreement be strictly interpreted the Water Works Co. are out of Court. However, the agreement is very badly worded. The company had a right to open roads, etc., and clause 4 gives them the right to dispose of the whole concern if they can agree with purchasers to do so. Water from wells might still be sold, but subject to that exception the company had a monopoly for twenty-five years dating from May 20, 1880. It is true that during that time we must not supply water, but we may take steps with a view to doing so after the expiration of the twenty-five years. I submit that Mr. Phear's construction of the act in the Court below was perfectly correct and not that of the Judge President. Allow me to illustrate the case by an example. Let us suppose that a Cape Town firm is supporting an up-country shopkeeper on condition that he is not to get goods from anybody else for three years. Near the end of that period he enters into arrangements with another firm to take goods from them when the three years shall have elapsed. Would he be interdicted from so doing? But our case is a much stronger one. We are a public body and the duty is cast on us to supply water to the community. How can we do this unless we can make arrangements before our contract with the Water Works Company has expired. They are not bound to furnish water a single day after the expiry of the twenty-five years.

In the case of the Green Point Municipality v. Metropolitan and Suburban Railway (8 Juta, 61) the company got its act in consequence of opposition having been withdrawn. Subsequently the company were sued for specific performance, and the plaintiffs were told that they should have sued for damages (Green Point Municipality v. Metropolitan Railway (8 Juta, 61). See also Van der Linden's Judicial Practice, pp. 285-286; Van Leeuwen Cens. Foren., 2, 21, 18, and 22, 40, 1 Eort C. 25.

Mr. Searle (with him Mr. Upington) for respondents: There is no allusion to Parliament in this agreement. In Breda's Executors v. Mills (2 Juta, 189), it was held that a private bill did not override a contract. There is nothing in the argument that Parliament can provide for something being done which a contract prohibits. In the first place we have to ask whether there is anything to prevent the Town Council from getting water from any source they like save the Vaal River. They must not go to it or to any other rivers within the province of Griqualand West. But there may be many other sources of supply in the district, e. g., from the Wesselson Mine. Kimberley is on the border of the Orange River Colony, and nothing would be easier than to get a water supply from sources outside the province of Griqualand West.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Unless the Water Works are purchased you cannot go on with a new scheme. You do not give a literal construction to the agreement.]

I cannot admit that we may not prosecute a new scheme unless we first purchase the company's plant. Such a construction would involve transposing the words of the agreement. We must also remember that in 1880 the founders of this company ran great risks. Nobody then had much faith in the stability of Kimberley, and it was a very venturesome undertaking to attempt to supply it with water.

[Buchanan, J.: There was a better demand for water then than there is now.]

The population may have been larger, but it was a floating population. Nobody expected to stay there.

[Buchanan, J.: At all events the Town Council bind themselves during the subsistence of this contract.]

It does not follow that because a restriction governs in point of time it governs also in point of object. The natural sense of this agreement is that we are not to promote waterworks with the object of introducing water into Kimberley during the subsistence of the present contract.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Should not the 5th and 6th clauses of the agreement be read in connection? According to your own contention you cannot supply water within the 25 years.]

We are debarred only from supplying water from the Vaal River.

[Maasdorp, J.: When this agreement was drawn up your object was to get a monopoly for 25 years?]

Yes.

[Buchanan, J.: Then at the end of 25 years you could stop supply?]

[De Villiers, C. J.: After the end of 25 years you have no right to construct waterworks?]

If the Municipality do not buy us out, a third party could come to the boundary of the Municipality with water, although he could not lay pipes in the streets during the 25 years. After the expiry of that term he could come in and do so. Section 6 of the regulations does not restrict section 5, but rather amplifies it. This is simply a matter of construction of a contract. As to the question of interdict, the Court has over and over again departed from the rule laid down by Van der Linden (Bk. 3, ch. 4, section 7) that applicant must be exposed to irreparable damage. The Court below granted an interdict pending an action to be tried before them. If this Court wishes to aid these people, let them order us to go on with the action. I submit that we were quite justified in applying for an interdict rather than to lie by and allow 5,000 or 6,000 pounds to be frittered away in law and other expenses.

Mr. Schreiner (who was not called upon in reply): See Fry (par. 387, 404, and 1.147).

De Villiers, C.J.: The learned judges in the Court below have expressed a very decided opinion as to the proper construction of the agreement now under consideration and it is therefore with great diffidence and after very careful consideration that I have arrived at a different conclusion. By the 6th clause of the agreement the appellants "bind themselves and their successors in office, during the subsistence of this contract, and until the work shall be purchased and paid for by them under the provisions of clause 4, not to construct or promote or assist in the construction or promotion of waterworks, or permit any other waterworks having for its object the introduction or supply of water to the township of Kimberley and neighbourhood from the Vaal River or other rivers in this province." The preamble of the agreement recites that under Ordinance No. 7 of 1877 the appellants are empowered to construct works for supplying the Municipality with water or to grant leave to any person or company to lay down pipes or execute such works, and that the appellants had made proposals for the construction of certain waterworks to the Griqualand Waterworks Company, who had acceded to such proposals. The 4th clause provides that the appellants shall be at liberty to purchase and take over the works at any time after the completion of the same at a price to be mutually agreed upon, and the 5th clause provides that, should no purchase be so made, the company should have the sole and exclusive right and privilege to supply Kimberley with the water brought in by them from the Vaal River or any other rivers for a period of twenty-five years, reckoned from the date of the agreement, viz., the 20th of May, 1880. The period of twenty-five years will therefore expire on the 20th of May, 1905, and, in anticipation of such expiry, the appellants on the 1st of November last called a meeting of burgesses to authorise them to adopt such measures as might be necessary in order to obtain authority by a private Bill, or otherwise, to construct waterworks, to obtain water by means of water pipes, sluits, cuttings, reservoirs or otherwise from the Vaal River, and to supply water to consumers within the Municipality of Kimberley. The respondents, who appear to have acquired the rights of the Griqualand Waterworks Company, thereupon applied to the High Court for an order restraining the appellants from carrying out its declared intention of promoting and constructing the waterworks, pending an action to be instituted in respect of such breach of agreement. The High Court granted the order as prayed, but instead of requiring an action to be brought by the present respondents, as proposed by their notice of motion, the Court reserved the right to the appellants to bring an action to discharge the interdict or for a declaration of rights or such other form of action as they may be advised. Against this order the appellants now appeal. The appellants state, and their statement is not denied, that they do not intend to supply the inhabitants of Kimberley with water until the expiration of the full period of twenty-five years fixed by the contract. Their object in giving the notice objected to was to secure ample time before the 20th of May, 1905, for the proper construction of the works in order that they may be in a position to supply the water to the inhabitants from the moment when the right and privilege of the respondents under the fifth clause shall cease and determine. The appellants were advised that it was absolutely necessary that no time should be lost in proceeding with the construction of the new waterworks, for that otherwise they could not be completed and in working order on the 20th of May, 1905. This statement is not denied, but the respondents deny the right of the appellants to take any steps whatever before the 20th of May, 1905, that may be necessary to enable them to supply water from any rivers of the Province to the inhabitants of the Province. Their counsel, Mr. Searle, has informed the Court that they even deny the right of the appellants, after that date, to take such steps unless they shall have purchased the existing waterworks and paid for the same. Mr. Searle, however, hesitates to accept this view, and admits that the more reasonable view to hold would be that the words in the 6th clause, "and until the works shall be purchased and paid for by them," should be controlled by the words "during the subsistence of this contract." But if his view be correct, it would be equally reasonable that the words "during the subsistence of this contract" should control the rest of the clause. Such a construction would do less violence to the 6th clause than to substitute the word "or" (until the works shall be purchased) for the word "and," which was actually used. What the parties intended to provide against was the infringement of the respondents' monopoly for a period of 25 years, but the reading given to the 6th clause by the Court below practically extends such monopoly beyond the 25 years. The Court suggested, indeed, that there was nothing to prevent anyone except the appellants from starting or promoting a new water scheme during the period referred to, but it was added "that would not cover anyone else, being merely a screen for the Council themselves." I confess that, when it is borne in mind that the appellants alone have the right to grant leave to execute waterworks within the Municipality, it is difficult to conceive how third parties could do what the appellants propose to do without exposing them to the charge of being merely a screen for the Council themselves. The practical effect of construing the 6th clause as the Court below has construed it, is to extend the monopoly considerably beyond the period of twenty-five years, fixed by the 5th clause. It is indeed not quite clear from the judgment whether even after the 20th May, 1905, the respondents would have no right to construct waterworks unless they first purchased and paid for the existing waterworks. From such a construction the Court below would probably recoil, but it appears to me to be not more unreasonable than the construction actually placed upon the sixth clause. That clause ought, in my opinion, to be construed in such a manner as not to lead to a practical conflict with the provisions of the 5th clause. By holding that the words "during the subsistence of the contract" in the 6th clause control the whole of that clause, and that consequently the intention of the parties was to prevent the construction or promotion of such works only as had for their object the supply of water to the inhabitants during the subsistence of the contract, the two clauses are rendered perfectly consistent with each other, whilst the respondents retain the full benefit of the monopoly secured to them by the 5th clause. In this view of the matter it becomes unnecessary for me to discuss the further question which has been raised whether, even if the true construction be such as the respondents contend for, the case is one in which an interdict is the proper remedy. No case has been cited in which any of our Courts has restrained an application to Parliament for powers which might conflict with contractual rights of individuals, and the question is of too much importance to be dealt with cursorily. I need only say that I fully concur with my brethren in the view that, quite independently of the construction of the agreement, the case is not one for summary interventions by interdict. Being unable, moreover, to agree with the construction placed by the Court below on the 6th clause, I am of opinion that this Court should allow the appeal and discharge the interdict with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Buchanan, J., said that the town of Kimberley having authority by statute to construct waterworks, entered into an agreement with the applicants to do the work for them, giving the applicants a monopoly for twenty-five years of supplying the inhabitants of Kimberley with water. When this period of 25 years was approaching termination, the Council gave public notice that it was their intention to take steps to obtain legislative sanction to enable them to construct waterworks, etc., but it was admitted on all sides that they did not intend to interfere at all with the water supply of Kimberley during the 25 years for which the applicants had the monopoly. On the notice referred to being given by the Town Council, the applicants applied to the High Court of Griqualand, and obtained an interdict restraining the Council from taking the steps contemplated. His lordship had no doubt in his own mind that the applicants were not entitled to the interdict, either on the principle on which interdicts were granted or on the construction of the contract. The principle on which interdicts were granted had been clearly laid down in this Court, the main requisite being that there was a clear right. On that ground alone his lordship thought the interdict should be set aside. It was admitted during the course of argument that if the Council had intended to supply the water during the 25 years the interdict would be properly granted, but here there was no such intention. When one came to look at the contract, it was difficult to see how it could possibly be construed to give rights to the applicants after the expiration of the 25 years. In the Court below more especially it was said that the 6th clause actually prevented the Council taking any steps to supply the inhabitants with water unless they first purchased the waterworks belonging to the applicants. That seemed to his lordship to be a most extraordinary construction to be put upon the contract. If sound, then the contract could be read in such a way that the Waterworks Company, who by the contract were not bound to supply a drop of water after the 25 years, could then withhold the supply altogether, and by depriving every person in the place of the use of the water, compel the Town Council to purchase the works at the applicants' own price. In conclusion, his lordship said that although it was enough to say that there was no such clear right on the part of the waterworks as to entitle them to an interdict, if he had to give judgment on the contract as it stood now he would say the Waterworks Company had no right at all to such an interdict. However, on the other ground, he had no doubt that the respondents were not entitled to an interdict, and accordingly his lordship concurred in the judgment that the interdict must be set aside with costs.

Maasdorp, J., said that in the Court below it was contended on behalf of the applicants that it was the intention of the parties to the contract to prevent the construction of any waterworks during the continuance of the period of twenty-five years, while on behalf of the respondents it was contended that the only intention was to prevent the introduction, not the construction of works, and on these contentions the parties came to the Court. It seemed to his lordship that on the primary and ordinary construction of the words of the 6th clause of the contract as they stood, the contention of the applicants would be correct, and the question would arise whether it would be necessary to go behind this primary meaning from any reasons that could be discovered in the remaining portions of the contract, for instance, whether it was inconsistent or in conflict with the objects in view. One of the objects in view was to secure for the respondents a monopoly of the supply of water for a period of twenty-five years, and if that was the only object the parties had in view then, it seemed to him, that it would be unnecessary and useless to prevent them constructing waterworks which had for their object the supply of water after the monopoly had ceased, and then it might be necessary to construe the 6th clause differently. But it seemed to him that there was also another object, and that was to effect between themselves the sale of this property, the option to the respondents to purchase being given by the 4th clause. It seemed to him that the idea of the two parties when they entered into that part of the agreement was that nothing should be done to affect the value of the property during the twenty-five years, and it seemed to him that the object of introducing the 6th clause into the agreement was to prevent the Town Council from constructing waterworks or putting up competitive works during the period the Council had the option of purchase. If they took that construction there would be nothing inconsistent with the object the parties had in view. It seemed to his lordship that the monopoly for the supply of water to the Municipality for twenty-five years was fully secured by the 5th clause, and that the 6th clause was put in to secure the sale. Therefore he thought that the 6th clause should be construed as an operating clause. Under all the circumstances of the case he thought the 6th section should receive that ordinary and primary meaning that the Council were now to be prevented from constructing works, and that they had now no power to construct works. At the same time the case stood in the position that if it was necessary for the parties wishing to obtain an interdict to have a clear right, it was necessary for them to prove that right. If he had sat in the Court below he would have taken the same view as that Court, and would have granted an interdict, but in a different form, viz., an interdict pending an action to be brought by the applicants. At present no clear right had been proved and the interdict would therefore be dismissed.

CALDER AND CO. v. { 1902.
MCKENZIE AND CO. { Feb. 3rd

Dock agent—Shortage—Costs.

Defendant, acting as a dock agent had received 2,474 bales of hay on behalf of plaintiff. Of these the Court found that plaintiff received delivery of 2,257 bales; though plaintiff contended that there was a shortage of 237 bales. Plaintiff left a considerable quantity of loose forage lying about. The Court found that 12 bales in all were unaccounted for. It was admitted that 12 bales fell into the sea, but there was no evidence to show how, or at what stage of landing this happened.

Held, that defendants were liable to plaintiffs for these 12 bales, valued at £6 12s.

Held further, that though plaintiffs had sued defendants for the value of 237 bales (£130 7s.) as no tender had been made; the judgment must carry costs and seeing that the case was not clearly one for a Magistrate's Court, that costs must be allowed on the Supreme Court scale.

This was an action brought by Alexander Calder, Sidney Nicholson, and Henry Hamilton Daniel, trading as Calder and Co., against Andrew Ritchie McKenzie, trading as A. R. McKenzie and Co., for the delivery of certain bales of oathay, or, in the alternative, for payment of the value of the same.

The plaintiffs' declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs carry on business at Wynberg as produce merchants under the style or firm of Calder and Co.

2. The defendant at the time of the transactions hereinafter set forth was a landing, forwarding, and shipping agent, and more particularly a dock agent, and carried on business at Cape Town under the licence as such dock agent issued by the Table Bay Harbour Board, under the style or firm of A. R. McKenzie and Co.

3. In or about the month of May last the steamship Orange Branch was discharging her cargo in the Table Bay Docks.

4. The owners of the said steamship, in terms of the 31st regulation of the Table Bay Dock Regulations, duly approved in terms of section 32 of Act 36 of 1896, appointed the defendant to be dock agent to land and receive all cargo out of the said ship, and to render delivery to the consignees thereof or their forwarding agents.

5. The defendant then and there, as such dock agent and forwarding agent, received and landed out of said ship certain 2,474 bales of oathay, consigned to the plaintiffs, and being part of the aforesaid cargo.

6. By reason and in terms of the aforesaid regulations, the defendant, while so receiving and landing the said bales, was and acted as the statutory agent of the plaintiffs, and it thereupon became and was the duty of the defendant to deliver the said bales to the plaintiffs or their forwarding agents.

7. The plaintiffs appointed Messrs. Tunnell, Duncan and Co. as their forwarding agents to take delivery of the said bales from the defendant, but the defendant only delivered 2,237 bales and has not delivered the remainder to wit 237 bales.

8. The value of the said 237 bales is the sum of £130 7s.

9. All things have happened, all times have elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled, necessary to entitle the plaintiffs to delivery of the said 237 bales or to payment of £130 7s., their value, but the defendant neglects and refuses to make such delivery or such payment, though called upon to do so.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim (a) delivery of the said 237 bales, or in the alternative, payment of £130 7s., their value, with interest a tempore morae; (b) costs of suit.

The defendant's declaration was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, and 3.

2. The defendant admits that the owners of the said steamship appointed him as dock agent, and says that it was his duty as such dock agent to receive the cargo at the ship's side, and thereupon to place the same within the Table Bay Docks, where directed by the Harbour Board or its representative. The defendant received certain oathay consigned to the plaintiffs at the ship's side, some of which was in a loose and broken condition, and thereupon placed the same where directed by the Harbour Board. He denies that he so received 2,474 bales of oathay, and says that the plaintiffs refused to take away from the said Docks a quantity of the said loose and broken oathay.

3. The defendant admits that the plaintiffs appointed Messrs. Tunnell, Duncan and Co. as their delivery agents, and says that it was the duty of the said agents to duly remove the said oathay where it had been placed as aforesaid; that after it had been so placed as aforesaid it was under the control and in the custody of the Harbour Board, and not of the defendant, and that the said agents, Messrs. Tunnell, Duncan and Co., neglected and failed to remove the said oathay with due and proper despatch.

4. The defendant says that all the oathay consigned to the plaintiffs and received by defendant at the ship's side was placed by him where directed, and that if the plaintiffs have not received the oathay delivered over the ship's side and consigned to the plaintiffs, which he does not admit, it is through no fault or neglect of the defendant, who has duly performed his duty and contract.

5. Save as above the defendant denies paragraphs 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

The replication was general.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Solomon) for plaintiffs; Mr. Buchanan (with him Mr. Wilford) for defendants.

Mr. Gardiner called

Alexander Calder, the plaintiff, who said that in May last he imported 2,474 bales of oathay per the steamship Orange Branch, and appointed Tunnell, Duncan and Co. as his delivery agents. The ship was berthed on May 5, and witness afterwards saw part of the consignment. It was removed from the South Arm as fast as it came out of the ship, and stacked at the East Quay. It was mixed with other bales of hay, and his must have been underneath, as it was the first to come out of the ship. On May 9 witness took delivery of the first lot, delivered on trucks. With the exception of the broken stuff delivery at witness's store was completed on May 29. He did not know when delivery was completed at the Docks. He claimed that 237 bales of the consignment were not delivered to him. In the correspondence witness first claimed 287 bales, but afterwards, so as not to prejudice his claim, he took delivery of all the loose and broken stuff. He could not say what became of the 237 bales. A bale of hay was worth 11s. Witness had done his best to get the stuff away from the Docks as speedily as possible.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: You have often imported hay, and know how things are managed down there?

Witness: Unfortunately I do.

Cross-examination continued: Witness had a warrant from the Chief Wharfinger guaranteeing that no more than 50 bales of loose stuff were delivered. Witness did not know all about the practice of the Docks, according to which, the goods were removed from the South Arm to the East Quay by order of the Harbour Board officials, because his delivery agents were not at the former place to receive the goods. The fifty bales of loose stuff witness took were all useable, and a lot had to be burned. About two Scotch cart loads were left at the Docks. That would represent about 500 lb. of hay, not more.

De Villiers, C.J.: Where has the remainder of the stuff gone then?

Witness: I cannot say; mysterious things happen at the Docks.

Mr. Buchanan: It is not a very uncommon thing to lose goods.

Witness: No; I lost 500 bags of bran once, and afterwards traced them.

Cross-examination continued: Witness was well aware that there had been a lot of trouble and difficulties at the Docks at the time this consignment was landed.

A. Zoutendyk, an examining officer of Customs, produced the Customs discrepancy list of the cargo of the steamship Orange Branch. A pro tem. order was given to enable consignees to take away goods landed from a ship. He produced the pro tem. order in this case, which showed 2,474 bales of hay delivered from the ship.

James West said he was an acting tide-waiter at the time this consignment was landed. He had seen the pro tem. order for 2,474 bales, and he was satisfied from his tally books that they were all delivered from the ship on to the quay.

Cross-examined: A large amount was landed loose, but he could not say how many bales.

Thomas Milton Duncan said he was a clerk employed by Tunnell, Duncan and Co., and had to do with the delivery of this consignment of hay. The ship commenced discharging on May 5, and as soon as they could get railway trucks witness's firm commenced taking the hay away. There was some delay in getting trucks. Witness could not say when they commenced and finished delivery. They took delivery from McKenzie and Co., the latter having a clerk at the quay to give a receipt. There were a number of bales short, and over 50 bales of loose stuff.

Cross-examined: Witness was at the East Quay three or four times a day. There was always someone at the trucks. They took delivery as soon as they could get railway trucks. They refused to take away the loose stuff until they had instructions from Mr. Calder. The loose stuff lay there a couple of months. It was covered with tarpaulins, but sometimes the wind would blow the tarpaulins off, and then it would be uncovered for a day or so. Witness did not know that the Harbour Board had to cart some hay away.

Washington Chase, wharfinger in charge of the East Quay, said he was working on the East Quay when the Orange Branch arrived, and saw the hay carted from the South Arm. Some of the stuff was loose, but it could still be recognised as being in bales. About three days after the stuff was placed on the East Quay, Tunnell and Duncan started taking delivery, and that occupied them three weeks. That was about the usual practice at the Docks.

By the Court: Witness had no idea where such a quantity as 237 bales of hay had gone; McKenzie and Co. had men continually there, and also had a man in charge of the quay. Rent was charged on the good bales while they were on the quay, but rent was not charged for the loose stuff.

Cross-examined: On July 6 witness wrote telling Calder and Co. to come and take away their stuff. He wrote again in August, and then they came and took away such of the loose stuff as could be used. He estimated that there were about 50 bales of the stuff. There was then a considerable quantity of sodden, loose stuff left behind. The Harbour Board took away two cartloads of that stuff and burned it.

Re-examined: Witness would say that about twenty bales of hay had been blown away.

William Frederick Harding gave evidence as to his having tallied some of the hay from the Orange Branch. None of the hay witness tallied was loose, but he had seen some loose.

Kenneth Hammond, an acting tide-waiter at the Docks, also deposed to having tallied 1,213 bales of oathay from the Orange Branch. Besides that he saw a quantity landed loose.

This closed the case for the plaintiff.

For the defence,

William Beatty deposed that at the time the Orange Branch discharged her cargo he was dock manager for Messrs. A. R. McKenzie and Co. The hay in question was taken from the ship at the South Arm, and deposited at the East Quay. The defendants were appointed landing agents, and according to custom, took the goods from the ship's slings, and then by direction of the Harbour Board's chief officer took them round to the East Quay. If Tunnell and Duncan had been at the South Arm when the goods were delivered from the ship's slings the goods would have been delivered to them there. In this particular consignment there was a large quantity of loose hay, and that was taken round and placed on the same spot as the bales. There were two stacks of loose hay. When the hay was placed on the East Quay the defendants had nothing more to do with it except to supply the labour when Tunnell and Duncan came and asked for delivery. Defendant's firm did not get any rent for the ground the hay was on. The Harbour Board got that. He had spoken to Tunnell and Duncan about delivering the hay, and they had said that they could not get trucks to take it away. That was during May. During five or six days at that period the weather was rough and windy, so that the hay became sodden and wasted and scattered all about the place. Defendants only acted as landing agents for Calder and Co., and not as delivery agents. The latter gave them receipts for the goods taken away.

By the Court: Witness would say that the hay depreciated 30 per cent. by lying on the quay. He himself had seen horses eating at these bales of hay, and then some was blown away. He was quite sure the missing hay was not delivered to anyone else. What was left the Harbour Board took away, saying it was a nuisance, and dumped into the sea.

Cross-examination continued: There was one other consignee. He got his exact quantity, having taken it away at once. Witness spoke to Mr. Duncan time after time about taking this stuff away. He would not take away the loose stuff. The bales would be about 90 lb. weight each.

By the Court: Witness did not see the bales in the ship, but if they had not been broken there the ship would not have accepted a receipt saying that some of the bales were broken.

Cross-examination continued: Defendant did the stevedoring as well as the landing, and in the course of the stevedoring twelve bales were lost overboard.

By the Court: If the tackle was at fault then the ship would be responsible for these twelve bales, but if not, then defendants would be responsible.

Cross-examination continued: Witness did not see any bales put down rather roughly from the slings. Witness would say from a former decision of the Court that between the time the goods were landed and placed on the East Quay until put on the wagons for delivery the Harbour Board was responsible for their custody.

Re-examined: They had just to put the goods in whatever store or at whatever place the Harbour Board official told them. As to the twelve bales lost overboard, that would be a matter between witness's firm and the ship. They only came in as landing agents after the goods were delivered from the slings.

Gustav Tollner, a clerk in the employ of defendant till 14th October, and from that date in the employ of the Harbour Board, deposed that he delivered 2,257 bales of oathay to Tunnell and Duncan. The consignment was mostly in bales, but a good many bales had been broken. Delivery was taken of these 2,257 bales in May, the final delivery of loose forage, part of this lot, taking place in August. There were two big heaps of loose forage after the unbroken bales had been removed, probably between ten and twenty bales, all in good condition.

Cross-examined: He could not say how much was taken away on the 14th August. It was contained in two trucks. They were not small trucks.

Percy Leibbrandt deposed that he assisted Mr. Beatty at the Docks. He saw the cargo of oathay landed. He saw a large quantity of loose and broken oathay. It would be hard to estimate, but there were considerably more than 50 bales loose. It was removed to the East Quay and covered over. There were from 150 to 200 loose bales lying about very much exposed to the wind. Some part was blown away, and the balance removed. Duncan removed some, leaving from 15 to 50 bales that was destroyed by the Board. What remained was sodden, and very much deteriorated. He saw Mr. Duncan on the matter; he saw the head wharfinger, and also the agent (who wrote to Mr. Duncan about the state of the forage). He drew their attention to this forage.

Cross-examined: He could estimate there were from 150 to 200 bales. He doubted if there were less than 150 bales. He had had five years' experience in Johannesburg in charge of produce and machinery, mostly produce, and he was able to form an estimate of the quantity.

Re-examined: He doubted if those bales weighed 100 lb. They would lose in transit at least 10 per cent. while in bales. If they were loose the loss would be ever so much more.

John Wm. Jackson, chief clerk at the Docks under the new regime, deposed that he had formerly worked at the Docks. The truck loads of forage for Messrs. Calder and Co. passed through his hands. He had the consignment note of May 25, 1901, before him. The average was 90 lb. per bale. He had not the consignment note of May 14. The document handed him was a copy of that consignment note. The average worked out at 73 1/3 lb. per bale. The consignment note of two trucks on 13th August was 7,352 lb., which was not in bales. He had the consignment note of 26th August, one truck load, the weight of which was 6,224 lb. loose.

James Rankin, sub-inspector of railway goods, C.G.R., at the Docks, deposed that on August 14 he weighed two trucks of hay consigned to Calder and Co. by Tunnell and Duncan. It was in bulk—loose. One truck weighed 4,012 lb., and the other 3,340 lb.

Cross-examined: That was the net weight after deducting the tare of the trucks. It was all loose forage. He could not say if it was damp. The weight of tarpaulins covering was allowed for.

ways, deposed that on the 26th August he weighed a truck of hay consigned to Calder and Co. by Tunnell and Duncan.

The weight was 6,224 lb. net. He did not check it himself.

Cross-examined: He would not see the condition it was in, whether wet or dry.

Andrew Richard McKenzie, the defendant in this action, deposed that bales of forage weighed as a general rule from 70 lb. to 100 lb. The whole of the oats on the outside of a bale were completely threshed out in transit, leaving only the straw. When a bale was broken the whole of the oats became ripe and dropped out. Under these circumstances about 30 lb. per bale would be lost in a bale originally weighing about 100 lb.

Cross-examined: He had often weighed in oathay to test his theory, and was satisfied of its correctness.

Alexander Calder, recalled, and examined by the Court, said they were not aware that there was a quantity of broken hay till they got instructions from the Harbour Board authorities requesting them to remove the stuff. His firm came on McKenzie for the number of bales short. They had not refused to accept delivery. They took possession of the hay directly they were advised by the Harbour Board that it was there at their risk. They were not aware that it was lying on the jetty before the notification. He did not dispute their liability to take the loose stuff, but they would not take 50 bales as representing 200 odd bales. They had never refused to take the bales that were there. There did not seem to be any proper check on the goods going away from the Docks.

Mr. Gardiner (for plaintiff): The first point is that they deny the receipt of 2,474 bales. The evidence shows that McKenzie received that quantity. It is therefore their duty to account for these parcels. See Lister v. McKenzie (17 Jut., 277) and Isaacs v. McKenzie (11 Sheil 568.) When a dock agent has received goods for a consignee he is bound to account to such consignee unless the consignee has been guilty of negligence. Isaacs v. McKenzie (11 Sheil, 568). The dock agent is bound to do his best to look after goods entrusted to him.

He must take all reasonable precautions to prevent loss. Here 64 bales were in dispute on one day and 16 on another. We have signed only for 2,257, minus 80 bales: we are said to have signed for 13,500. The weight may have been increased by damp. How then does this work out per bale? The bill of lading works out at 101 lb. per bale. There are 132 bales short on defendant's own computation. It has been said that the loss, if any, was due to undue delay in removing the goods, but Chase and Duncan both said there had been no undue delay. Then it was said that some of the bales were broken. McKenzie had landed rather heavily and without due care. Even if the Court were satisfied that the forage was delivered 12 bales were lost overboard. They were in McKenzie's custody. The sum in dispute is small but it may affect the question of costs. At the lowest estimate we are entitled to judgment for the value of these 12 bales.

Mr. Buchanan (for defendants): With out going into the question of law I submit that we have fulfilled our contract. As to the 12 bales, we have only the statement that 12 bales were lost overboard. There is nothing to show that they were plaintiffs' bales.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Oh yes, the other consignees got all their bales.]

They were satisfied, but we never got these 12 bales. We were acting as stevedores for the ship. As delivery agents we are not responsible till we get the things from the ship.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then were they still in the ship's custody?]

Yes; they were being landed with the ship's gear and tackle. We are not insurers and are under no obligation to make good losses of this kind.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is no evidence to show that these bales went overboard.]

The consignees never gave a clean receipt. McKenzie acted both as stevedore and as landing-agent. The landing-agent is functus officio when he has taken the goods from the ship and put them on the dumping-ground. Then we were absolved from further responsibility. Plaintiffs do not allege our want of diligence as stevedores. There is no evidence to show that defendants' negligence was so gross as to render him liable. The Harbour Board took a receipt from McKenzie, but that was not a clean receipt.

Defendants could have brought their action before but they have lain by, and therefore cannot make us liable, even for the 12 bales.

Mr. Gardiner (in reply) was not heard.

De Villiers, C.J.: It has been proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the defendant has received on behalf of the plaintiffs 2,474 bales of oathay, and the question is, what quantity has been delivered? According to the receipts put in on behalf of the defendant, plaintiffs got delivery of 2,257 bales. It seems that there are some 64 bales in dispute, but there has been no cross-examination as to the meaning of the entry as to certain bales, and I think therefore that the Court may take it as proved that the number of bales delivered, not including the broken and loose hay, is 2,257. Then, in addition to that, in the month of August there was delivered to the plaintiffs certain quantity of loose hay, estimated by the plaintiffs at 50 bales. In my opinion, the plaintiffs' evidence clearly shows that there must have been a good deal more than 50 bales. There were three consignments, and the total amount is 13,576 lb., which would certainly be nearer 180 bales than 50 bales. Taking it that there were 180 bales, there still remain 27 bales unaccounted for. Part of that may be accounted for by the fact that plaintiffs did not remove to their stores the loose forage lying about, but left a considerable quantity there. Taking this at 15 bales, there still remained 12 bales unaccounted for. Now the defendants explain their non-delivery of these twelve bales by saying that they fell into the sea, but there is no evidence as to how they fell into the sea, or at what stage of the landing. Now, as they had accepted this position of agent, and accepted the duty of obtaining delivery, the onus certainly lay upon the defendant to satisfy the Court as to how the twelve bales were lost. It is suggested now that the defendant lost these bales in his capacity as stevedore for the ship, but there has been no evidence to satisfy the Court as to the manner in which the bales were lost, and as to the particular point of time at which they were lost. For these reasons, in my opinion, the defendant cannot escape liability for the twelve bales. For the rest, the plaintiffs have themselves a great deal to thank for not being able to recover them. When they received notice to take the hay they refused because the quantities were not sufficient, but they did not try, and if they had tried to remove what there was they would possibly have found the requisite quantity there. Therefore, in my opinion, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed only in respect of the twelve bales, for the non-delivery of which the defendant has given no satisfactory explanation. The value of these twelve bales at 11s. per bale would be £6 12s., and for that amount judgment will be given for plaintiffs. Unfortunately there has been no tender, and therefore the judgment must be with costs.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

Mr. Buchanan submitted that Magistrate's Court costs only should be given, as the amount, £6 12s., would fall within the jurisdiction of the Resident Magistrate, and as the Court had pointed out, it was owing to the plaintiffs' own fault that they did not get the balance of the hay.

De Villiers, C.J., said it seemed hardly a case for the Magistrate's Court, as there were some very important points arising. Besides if it had been perfectly clear and there was no reasonable doubt that the £6 12s. only was owing, there might be something in the argument, but there were circumstances in the case which certainly justified the plaintiffs in claiming the larger amount. Therefore the case did not seem to be one so clear for the Magistrate's Court as to justify the Court in giving Magistrate's Court costs only.

SUPREME COURT

SMITH AND CO. V. SOLOMON. { 1902.
Feb. 4th.

Account—Action to debate—
Costs.

This was an action calling upon defendant to debate and settle an account.

Plaintiffs' declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are Charles Sonnenberg and George David Smith, carrying on business in Cape Town as G. D. Smith and Co.; the defendant resides in Cape Town.

2. In or about the month of December, 1899, the plaintiffs entered into a contract with the Imperial Government to supply the troops stationed in the Eastern Districts of this Colony with potatoes and onions. Thereafter, in or about the month of January, 1900, the plaintiffs entered into a contract with the defendant, by which it was agreed that, with regard to the supply of potatoes and onions to the troops stationed in the Eastern Districts, the Defendant should proceed to the Eastern Districts, to attend to the carrying out of the said contract with the Imperial Government, and to obtain other contracts from the Military, if possible; and that, as to the first named contract, after deducting cost of produce and all other expenses connected with the carriage, agency, etc., and in fine all and every item of expenditure incurred in the carrying out of that contract, the nett profit remaining should be divided as follows:—One-third to the defendant, and two-thirds to the plaintiffs; and that, with regard to all and every other military contract obtained by the defendant during the continuance of the present war, after deducting every expense connected with the carrying out of the contract, the nett profit remaining should be divided as follows:—The defendant to receive one-half thereof, and the plaintiffs one-half; the plaintiffs to find the capital for the carrying out of the contracts.

3. In pursuance of the said contract the defendant proceeded to the Eastern Districts to carry out the said contract for the supply of the said potatoes and onions aforesaid, and received large sums of money from the plaintiffs, and disbursed large sums, and bought and supplied to the Imperial Government large supplies of potatoes and onions; and the defendant also obtained permission to open a dry canteen business at the Military Camp at Sterkstroom, and, as the Imperial troops moved onwards, the said business was also moved, until it was closed at Bloemfontein. The defendant received and disbursed large sums of money, and bought and sold large quantities of goods in connection with the said canteen. The said contract as to the supply to the Imperial Government of onions and potatoes has terminated.

4. It was and became the duty of the defendant to keep due and proper accounts, duly supported by vouchers, of all his dealings in regard to the potato and onion contract and the canteen business, and to render to the plaintiffs true, full, and correct accounts thereof, duly supported by vouchers, but the defendant has failed in and neglected his duty in that behalf and to render the said accounts as aforesaid. The plaintiffs say that, if the defendant will render such accounts, there will be found on debate thereof a considerable balance in the plaintiffs' favour.

5. In or about the month of April the plaintiffs entered into a contract with the Imperial Government to supply the troops with potatoes in the Orange River Colony, and in or about the month of May, 1900, it was agreed between the plaintiffs and defendant that the profit arising from the supply by the defendant of potatoes to the Imperial troops under the aforesaid contract, that, provided the cost of a bag of such potatoes, including the sum of 2s. 6d. hereinafter mentioned, should not exceed 16s., the said sum of 2s. 6d. per bag should be divided between the parties, the defendant to receive one-third and the plaintiffs two thirds; and that, if the cost of the bag exceeded 16s., there should be a corresponding abatement in the sum of 2s. 6d.

6. The defendant did supply potatoes to the Imperial troops in the Orange River Colony, and it was and became the duty of the defendant to keep due and proper accounts, duly supported by vouchers, of all his dealings in regard to the supply of potatoes as aforesaid, and to render to the plaintiffs true, full, and correct accounts thereof, duly supported by vouchers; but the defendant has failed and neglected his duty in that behalf and to render the said accounts as aforesaid. If the defendant will render such accounts, there will be found on debate thereof a considerable balance in the plaintiffs' favour.

The plaintiffs claim:

(a) A true, full, and correct account, duly supported by vouchers, of all his dealings and disbursements in regard to the potato and onion contracts in the Eastern Districts;

(b) A true, full, and correct account, duly supported by vouchers, of all his dealings and disbursements in regard to the dry canteen business;

(c) A true, full, and correct account, duly supported by vouchers, of all his dealings and disbursements in regard to the potato contract in the Orange River Colony;

(d) A debate of the said three accounts, and payment of such sums as may be found due to the plaintiffs thereon;

(e) Alternative relief.

(f) Costs of suit.

To this declaration the defendant pleaded as follows:

1. He admits paragraph 1.

2. As to paragraph 2, the contract with the Imperial Government referred to is dated January 12, 1900, and is one between the said Government and C. Sonnenberg, one of the plaintiffs, for the purpose of supplying potatoes and onions to the depôts on the Eastern Line of communication, and the said Sonnenberg thereafter entered in a verbal agreement with defendant that the business under the said contract of January 12, 1900, and any renewals of the same from month to month or otherwise should be carried out as follows:

Sonnenberg to find the necessary capital—defendant to proceed to the headquarters of the depôts on the said Eastern Line to manage the business there—the nett profit after deducting the cost of goods purchased, carriage, agency, travelling expenses and necessary disbursements and expenses to be divided in the proportion of two-thirds to the said Sonnenberg, and one-third to the defendant; thereafter on February 1 the said agreement was confirmed in a letter written by plaintiffs to defendant, which further provided that all contracts with the Military subsequently obtained by defendant should be treated on the same basis as to share to profits, as in the same ment above set forth.

3. As to paragraph 3 the defendant admits that he proceeded to Sterkstroom for the purpose of carrying out the said agreement, he says that his son opened a "dry canteen business" and that the accounts relating to the said business have by mutual agreement been treated as though the said business was a military contract obtained by himself, though the plaintiffs did not provide all the capital for the said business as was agreed in the said letter of February 1 with regard to military contracts.

4. He admits that he did from time to time receive large sums of money from plaintiffs, and disburse large sums, and supply to the Imperial Government large quantities of potatoes and onions, and he says that the original agreement between himself and said Sonnenberg which had reference to the contract of January 12 was from time to time extended as the the area of military operations was shifted, and as renewals of the aforesaid contract of January 12 were from time to time entered into with the Imperial Government.

5. As to paragraph 4 he says that he has kept proper accounts, and has from time to time furnished the same to plaintiffs.

6. As to paragraph 5 he says that the contract entered into with the Imperial Government was an extension of the aforesaid contract of January 12, and that plaintiffs and defendant on or about April 8 entered into a further agreement whereunder they agreed that they should supply the said Government with potatoes and onions to be delivered at any railway-station on the Eastern Line of Railway as far as Bethulie for two months from April 10, and share of profits to be divided in the same proportion as before.

7. Thereafter, on April 14, 1900, plaintiffs obtained a further contract with the Imperial Military Authorities to supply potatoes and onions for delivery in the Orange Free State (now Orange River Colony) at any railway-station or siding as far north as Bloemfontein.

8. Thereafter in the said month of April defendant agreed with the said Sonnenberg acting for plaintiffs that this contract should also be dealt with by plaintiffs and defendant on the same basis as the previous ones, and that the profits thereon should be shared in the same proportion.

9. The defendant thereafter from time to time did furnish certain supplies to the Imperial Government as far as to Bloemfontein under the agreement entered into between himself and plaintiffs. He has kept account of his dealings in that behalf, and has from time to time rendered accounts to the plaintiffs.

10. He admits that the said contracts with the Imperial Government have been terminated, but save as above he denies the allegations in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the declaration.

11. The plaintiffs have not rendered to defendant proper accounts of their dealings and transactions in the matter of the aforesaid joint ventures, especially with regard to the contract referred to in paragraph 8 of the declaration, but upon a true and proper debate of all the accounts between the parties, there will be found a balance owing to the defendant by plaintiffs.

Wherefore he prays that plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for the alternative plea in case this Honourable Court should find that the defendant is not entitled to a one-third share of the profits in the contract entered into with the Imperial Government for supplies to the troops in the Orange River Colony as far as Bloemfontein referred to in paragraph 5 of the declaration, the defendant says:

1. He craves leave to refer to the matters pleaded above in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, and 11.

2. The defendant in April, 1900, and thereafter did furnish supplies to the Imperial Government for the troops in the Orange River Colony as far as to Bloemfontein, and should this Honourable Court find that plaintiffs are not liable to share with defendant in the profits of the contract entered into by plaintiffs with the Imperial Government for that purpose, the defendant submits that he is entitled to a reasonable remuneration for his services in carrying out the said contract—he says that the plaintiffs offered him a remuneration of 2s. 6d. a bag, for every bag of potatoes purchased by him for the said supply and that the above would be a reasonable remuneration in case the accounts are adjusted on that basis.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention the defendant, now plaintiff in reconvention, says:

1. He craves leave to refer to the matters above pleaded.

2. The plaintiffs, now defendants in reconvention, from time to time furnished certain supplies on behalf of the joint ventures above referred to, and disbursed certain monies, and it became and was their duty also to furnish to defendant, now plaintiff in reconvention, full and proper accounts supported by vouchers, especially with regard to the contract with the Imperial Government referred to in paragraph 5 of the declaration—but the defendants in reconvention have neglected and refused to supply such accounts.

3. Upon such accounts being furnished and debated there will be a balance due by defendants in reconvention to plaintiff in reconvention.

The plaintiff in reconvention claims:

(a) That the defendants in reconvention be ordered to furnish to plaintiff in reconvention full and proper accounts supported by vouchers of all their transactions in and about the aforesaid joint ventures, especially that relating to the furnishing of supplies in the Orange Free State (now Orange River Colony) as far as to Bloemfontein.

(b) A debate of such accounts.

(c) Payment of the balance due upon such debate to the plaintiff in reconvention.

(d) Alternative relief.

(e) Costs of suit.

Plaintiffs' replication was general.

Their plea to the claim in reconvention was as follows:

1. They beg to refer the Court to the pleadings in convention.

2. They say that all accounts the defendant is entitled to have been duly and properly rendered; but,

3. They say that they are not bound to render any account of their dealings under the contract in the 5th paragraph of the declaration mentioned.

4. Save as above they deny the allegations in the claim in reconvention contained.

Wherefore they pray, etc.

Defendant's rejoinder was a joinder of issue and his replication to the plea in reconvention was general.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Gardiner) for the plaintiffs; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for the defendant.

Charles Sonnenberg said he was one of the plaintiffs, and carried on business in partnership with Mr. Smith. A contract was entered into on January 11, 1900, between the firm and the Imperial Government. That contract was the one produced, and was for the supply of onions and potatoes in the Eastern Districts. They required someone to manage the business in the Eastern Districts, and witness approached defendant. He agreed to go if he got one-third of the profits on the contract, witness's firm to get two-thirds, and to pay all money. Defendant asked him to put the agreement into writing, and this was done. This agreement (produced) also specified that on all subsequent contracts obtained by defendant, the profits should be equally divided between plaintiffs and defendant. The plaintiffs supplied the capital; defendant was to have the management. Witness gave defendant a copy of the contract with the military. A day or two after the agreement was signed defendant left, and afterwards supplied the troops along the line with onions and potatoes. Afterwards defendant started a dry canteen at Sterkstroom, and this was continued until it got to Bloemfontein. Witness obtained an extension of the original contract from two months from the 10th April. The dry canteen started while the contract was running, in about March or April, and finished in about November. The Eastern Districts contract ended in June. The firm entered into a contract on the 14th April for the supply of potatoes and onions in the Orange River Colony, on stations as far north as Bloemfontein. Witness had the Western contract as well. Defendant supplied potatoes for the Western contract, but had made no claim in respect to this. On the 9th May, witness wrote to the defendant a letter, in which he stated that in order to avoid any unpleasantness, he wished to make the potato contract perfectly clear. He said that the defendant's contract for vegetables ran from East London to Pethulie, but that beyond Bethulie he had no interest, but he (witness) was prepared to allow his (defendant's) branch a commission of, say, 2s. 6d. a bag on goods supplied to Bloemfontein or beyond Bethulie, provided it did not bring the potatoes to more than 16s. per bag. There was a conversation previous to that. Defendant had nothing to do with the contract in May. After the conversation witness thought the defendant might consider he had an interest in the Bloemfontein contract, and so he wrote the letter. The commission was to diminish in proportion to the amount below 16s. Defendant replied to this letter, stating that he was surprised at witness repudiating his interest in the contract. He said that nothing of this sort had been hinted at before, that he could not grasp the arrangement as to the commission, and that something definite must be proposed before he could agree. Witness replied stating that the contract was as stated in his letter of the 9th May. Witness wired for defendant to come over, but he did not come. Defendant did no work in connection with the Bloemfontein contract, except to buy potatoes. Witness managed the contract. Defendant had charged him with 1,800 bags. There had been 1,500 supplied by defendant for Bloemfontein and 300 for places under the Western contract. Witness himself supplied 5,000 bags for Bloemfontein. In connection with the Eastern contract, on which he was given a share of the profits, defendant visited the different depots, collected accounts, and purchased potatoes. He did not perform any service in connection with the Bloemfontein contract, except buying the 1,500 bags of potatoes. The third of the half-crown was about 5 per cent. The usual commission for buying was from 2½ to 5 per cent. Defendant rendered an account (produced). He did not claim in that he had an interest in the Bloemfontein contract. He charged commission in that account for the whole 2s. per bag on potatoes. His commission was, according to the agreement, one third of this. In another account drawn up after the dispute, defendant charged half a crown a bag. He claimed no partnership in the Bloemfontein contract until he was pressed for the letter in which the agreement was stated, of which witness had no copy. This was the letter of the 9th May. Witness superintended the working of the canteen while at Bloemfontein. The practical working was performed by a young man named Ulyett, who could have worked the canteen without help. Defendant's son was there. It was unnecessary for him to be there with Ulyett. Defendant himself could have managed the canteen. If it was necessary to have a manager, it was defendant's duty to go and manage the canteen after the Eastern contract was finished in July. The canteen was kept open until November. Defendant's son Lawrence charged £30 a month for seven months, and his boarding expenses. Up to the 11th August there was nothing in the canteen account about defendant's son. About August defendant said to witness that he ought to allow his son something, as he had done so very well in Bloemfontein. Witness did not reply; he did not consider that the son was entitled to anything. Afterwards he was charged with the £210.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The contract with the Imperial Government was for a month, to be renewed by mutual consent. It was allowed tacitly to run on. Witness had not a chaff contract, but he thought that while in Bloemfontein he bought and sold some chaff. He advanced the money for the canteen also, and it was all in his name. They had both tried to settle the matter amicably. Before they had any dispute at all defendant rendered that account, showing the price 2s. per bag. Witness took up the position that defendant was entitled to a commission of 8d. or 10d. per bag, which was a very liberal commission, seeing that every possible expense was charged. Defendant's son went up, but it was to get new contracts from the military if he could. Witness in July told Mr. Solomon that he himself should go to Bloemfontein. Witness only took the trouble to send defendant's son up because his father wanted him to go, and the son himself was anxious to go. Witness made about £700 profit on the Bloemfontein contract; about 5s. a bag on an average.

Godfrey Cripps said he was an accountant, and was employed by Mr. Scannenbergh to go through the accounts in connection with this business. He and Mr. Cosnett met and came to an arrangement, subject to the decision of the Court. Apart from the questions of the Bloemfontein contract and the salary there were no difficulties. The son's salary of £210 was ultimately brought up in a ledger account.

Cross-examined: The salary was brought up when the accounts were gone into at Cape Town.

This closed the case for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Searle called

Sampson Solomon, the defendant, who said it was common cause that he entered into an agreement with Mr. Sonnenberg with regard to these contracts. Witness went up in February. He had to go up from East London and follow the troops as they moved forward. Witness's son came up at the end of January or beginning of February. He started the dry canteen, having secured the concession in Cape Town. Mr. Sonnenberg arranged that witness's son should come up. He bought what was required for the canteen at East London, and then came up and opened it. Before that witness's son was in employment in Cape Town. Witness had a number of depots to look after, working from Sterkstroom as a base. Witness's son managed the canteen himself for a month. Ulyett, who succeeded him, started at £8 per month, subsequently rising to £15 a month. There was a lot of work in starting the canteen. £25 was not an unreasonable salary. His son had that and expenses before he left Cape Town, and on returning got the same. As to the Bloemfontein contract, when witness went to Bloemfontein he saw Mr. Sonnenberg, and there was a conversation about the potatoes, the number wanted, the ways of getting them, how much Sonnenberg could get in the Colony, and how much witness could get in his part. Nothing was said until the letter of May 9 about this being a matter witness was not interested in. He went about buying potatoes under the impression that he was a partner in the transaction. He had supplied 1,600 bags for the Bloemfontein contract. With regard to the potatoes forwarded to Bloemfontein, they were consigned from the different places to the military. That was the only way witness could get them up there. Witness did all the work in connection with these potatoes. Witness did not arrange for his son Lawrence to go up to Bloemfontein. That was arranged by Mr. Sonnenberg and his son. Sonnenberg never suggested to witness that he should go up to take over the canteen from his son. £30 a month was, witness thought, a small salary taking into consideration the many inconveniences of the work.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness did not consider it his duty to go to Bloemfontein and manage the canteen after the Eastern Districts contract had ended. The charge of 2s. per bag in the account was put in at Mr. Sonnenberg's suggestion, in order to show how matters stood. Witness's son Charles, who was at Sterkstroom, was 23 years of age.

Charles Solomon said that before he went up to Sterkstroom he was employed by the Dominion Tobacco Co., and was paid £25 a month and expenses. A telegram came from Sterkstroom, and witness showed it to Mr. Sonnenberg, who suggested that witness should go up to look after the business. Mr. Sonnenberg paid witness's fare. Witness started the business, and put it on a good footing. Witness was then telegraphed for to come back to the Dominion Co., and he returned. Witness charged the same as he was receiving from the Dominion Co., viz., £25.

By the Court: Witness imagined he would receive the same as he was getting from the Dominion Co. He had not been paid the £25. He had never made a demand for it from Mr. Sonnenberg or his father.

Lawrence Solomon said he went to Bloemfontein in April by arrangement of Mr. Sonnenberg to work the canteen business. He worked the business until it was closed at the end of October or the beginning of November. Witness managed the business. He bought the goods himself. When he took it over, there was a deficiency of about £90. Witness had never been in his father's employ in this country, except in regard to this canteen business.

By the Court: Witness charged all his expenses against the business.

Mr. Searle said it was expressly provided in the contract that all expenses should be paid.

Examination continued: Witness only charged his living expenses. When he was employed by a Cape Town firm and went up-country, he always got his living expenses.

Cross-examined: Witness did not think £30 a month too much for salary. He only charged his living expenses while he was in the hotel during the last three months.

This closed the evidence.

After argument,

Buchanan, J., in giving judgment, said: In the month of January, 1900, the plaintiffs, Messrs. Smith and Co., entered into a contract with the military to supply the various depots on the Eastern lines of communication with vegetables. To carry this contract out, Mr. Sonnenberg, one of the plaintiffs, saw the defendant, Mr. Solomon, and entered into an agreement with him, the effect of which is stated in the letter of the 1st February. This letter was written to confirm a verbal agreement entered into, and it sets forth that after deduction of costs of produce and all other expenses connected with the managing, the agency, etc., to carry out the contract, they agreed, in consideration of Solomon giving his services to work the contract, to allow him to receive one-third share of the profits, the other two-thirds going to the plaintiffs. At the same time this agreement was entered into it was agreed between Sonnenberg and the defendant that any other contract that defendant might obtain should be carried on for their mutual account, but that on any such contracts obtained by Solomon the latter should receive half the profits and Smith and Co. the other half. All the funds, and the credit which was as good as funds, were supplied by Smith and Co., and the work by Solomon. At the time the agreement was entered into only this one contract was in existence, and Solomon went to the frontier and did the work necessary to purchase supplies. He had all his expenses paid, and he bought produce for which Smith and Co. advanced the money, and this produce he supplied to the military. The defendant made out accounts and obtained such moneys as he could from the military, portion of the money was paid over to him and portion to Smith and Co. Defendant also made remittances from time to time to Cape Town. A second contract was entered into on the expiration of this first contract for the same supplies on the Eastern lines of communication, but at a slightly advanced price, and as the second contract was considered by the parties as a continuation of the previous contract, there is no dispute as to these two contracts, the parties agreeing that Smith and Co. are entitled to two-thirds share of the profits arising from them, and that the defendant Solomon is entitled to one-third. After the second contract was entered into Smith and Co. made a further contract with the military authorities for the supply of potatoes in the Orange River Colony, not in the Eastern district at all, as far north as Bloemfontein. This contract was not within the contemplation of the parties to this suit when the agreement was made. It was not known that it was likely to come into existence. The defendant on his part obtained permission to establish a dry canteen business, and with reference to this some dispute has arisen as to credits to be allowed. There is no dispute between the parties that the profits of the canteen business are to be divided equally between plaintiffs and defendant. The disputes are, first, whether what was called the Bloemfontein contract is to be included in the original contract between the parties, so that it is to be considered as having been carried on on the mutual profit system, plaintiffs being entitled to two-thirds share of the profits and the defendant to one-third; or whether it was a contract entered into by plaintiffs solely on their own account. Then, secondly, as to the canteen contract, whether the defendant is entitled to charge as expenses against this contract certain salaries paid to his two sons. The plaintiffs claim, and the defendant cross-claims, accounts from each other, and it is these accounts which have now to be debated. The parties have rendered accounts to each other, and these are the items in dispute. It is agreed between the parties that if these disputes are settled, the accounts themselves shall be referred to accountants, who shall determine the amount due by one to the other respectively. As to the first matter in dispute, the Bloemfontein contract, at the time that contract was entered into the plaintiffs had numerous contracts with the military for different parts of the country, but, on the evidence led, I am forced to the conclusion that the only contracts that plaintiffs agreed with the defendant to share profits in, are those relating to supplies for the Eastern lines of communication. The renewal of the original was running when the Bloemfontein contract was entered into. As to the other contract, the defendant Solomon was sent up to the border to see that contract carried out. With reference to the Bloemfontein contract, Sonnenberg went up himself to see to its execution. When he was going up he telegraphed to the defendant to meet him on the way. Defendant, however, did not do so. Sonnenberg telegraphed to the defendant that he wanted potatoes for this Bloemfontein contract, and asked defendant to send him any surplus he might have without injury to the other contract. This contract was entered into on April 14, and towards the end of that month defendant met Sonnenberg in Bloemfontein. After the case got into the hands of the attorneys, the case as set up for the defendant that—I presume at this interview—he agreed with Sonnenberg that this contract should be dealt with on the same basis as the previous one. But the defendant has no evidence to support this allegation. When we look to the correspondence, which is really perhaps more reliable than the recollection of the parties, we find that on the 9th May Sonnenberg wrote to the defendant about this contract, and defendant replying in a letter on the 12th, said, "I know nothing about this second contract." He could not therefore possibly have agreed in April that it should be carried on on joint account. On May 9 Sonnenberg distinctly wrote the defendant stating that the latter had no interest in the second contract, and stating to him on what terms he proposed to pay him for any vegetables he (Solomon) had bought and might still buy and send up to Bloemfontein to plaintiffs. Defendant repudiates this offer, but without any further agreement between the parties he goes on supplying vegetables, and then afterwards, when he came down to town in connection with a proposed settlement, he sends an account in which he says, "Commission," not profits, "as agreed, or 1,665 bags of vegetables at 2s. sent to Bloemfontein." Now, in the face of these documents, it is impossible for the Court to find that there is any agreement putting this Bloemfontein contract on the same terms as the Eastern lines of communication contract. But it is common cause that work was done by the defendant for plaintiff in regard to this contract, and plaintiff says, "I offered him a commission on potatoes at a rate not exceeding 2s. 6d. per bag, provided the potatoes did not come to more than 16s. per bag, and that there should be a proportionate reduction if they came to more." Plaintiff said they did come to more, and that the price of 16s. only allowed 2s., instead of 2s. 6d. profit; but the plaintiff says this commission is to be paid to what he calls the branch business at Sterkstroom, which was the business under the Eastern lines of communication contract; in other words, that the commission so earned should be taken into account of the branch business, and should be considered as one of the profits of that business, and divided under the original agreement between the partners. I find very great difficulty in coming to such a conclusion. In the first place, there was no mutual agreement, and in the absence of any agreement one is forced to the conclusion that any recompense paid for work done must be paid to the defendant personally, and not to the branch business. Defendant in his plea claimed an alternative that he is entitled to reasonable remuneration for his services in connection with the purchase of these vegetables, and he says that the reasonable remuneration should be 2s. 6d. The real dispute, therefore, is, what is a reasonable remuneration to allow for these services? The amount which, in his account, the defendant claimed, and which Sonnenberg himself said was agreed upon, and which plaintiffs were willing to pay, provided it went into the branch business, is 2s. per bag, and looking at the circumstances in this case, I think the quantum meruit should be 2s., but it must go to the defendant personally, and not put into the account of the Sterkstroom business. As to the canteen contract, the only item in dispute is the amount claimed as salary due to defendant's sons. This contract was obtained either by the sons or by the agency of the defendant, and therefore he was entitled in this case to half the profits. He himself did not start the business, but one of his sons was sent up to do so, and to set the business going. This son had a month's leave of absence from his employers in Cape Town, but as at the expiration of the month they wanted him back, he engaged a young man named

Ulyett at £7 or £8 a month, to manage the canteen, which was afterwards increased to £12 or £15 a month. Now, as Ulyett was not employed until after this son left, we think the son's services for the month should be paid for on the same footing as Ulyett was paid. It seemed necessary that somebody should be there to conduct this business, and defendant could not be expected personally to go and serve in the canteen. As to the amount, the son says there was no agreement, and we think under the circumstances the utmost paid to Ulyett is a sufficient reward to him for starting this business, viz., £15. But there is a further claim for £210 as salary for a second son at the rate of £30 a month. Now, this charge seems to be wholly unwarrantable, and not a necessary charge against the business, seeing that Ulyett was there and carried on the business the whole time. Defendant himself was interested in this business as much as the plaintiff, and the other contract having terminated, he ought to have given as much supervision as he could to this business. There was no necessity to pay that son £30 a month with Ulyett at £12 to £15 a month, and with defendant's supervision. It seems a wholly unnecessary and excessive charge. The second son was at Bloemfontein when the canteen was moved there from Sterkstroom, but while he was there he was doing other work. It was proved in evidence that one month he was actually working for Sonnenberg and getting £30 a month from him, and how could he expect to get this other £30 a month? It was an unnecessary expense. If the defendant was unable to supervise this business and therefore got assistance from this son, he certainly could not expect Sonnenberg to pay for that. In August a statement of account of this canteen business was requested by Sonnenberg, and was framed and entered in the books on the 8th August. The assets, liabilities, and stock-in-trade in the business were all brought up, and up to that date no charge whatever was entered and no liability brought forward for salary for this son. Therefore, in referring this matter to the accountants agreed upon, Messrs. Cripps and Cosnett, for stating the accounts between the parties, it shall be a direction to them that the Bloemfontein contract should not be included as within the agreement between plaintiffs and defendant, but that defendant should be allowed commission of 2s. per bag on potatoes supplied, and that on the canteen contract a sum of £15 shall be allowed as necessary remuneration for the services of the one son, but that no sum shall be allowed for the services of the other son.

SUPREME COURT

[Before BUCHANAN, J. and a Jury.]

TERHOVEN V. COLONIAL	1902.
GOVERNMENT.
STEPHAN V. COLONIAL	Feb. 5th.
GOVERNMENT.	" 6th.

Contributory negligence.

Contributory negligence, to disentitle a plaintiff to recover damages for injuries sustained must be such as, but for such negligence the mischief would not have happened and where the defendant could not by the exercise of proper care have avoided the consequences of plaintiff's negligence.

These were consolidated actions brought against the Commissioner of Public Works. In the former the plaintiff claimed £500 damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by him on the 24th December, 1900; and in the latter, the plaintiff claimed £85 damages, sustained owing to the smashing of a cart and the killing of two horses on the same date.

The declaration of the firstnamed plaintiff alleged (1) that he was the manager of the Fresh and Cured Fish Co., and resided at Somerset West Strand.

2. That on the 24th December, 1900, the plaintiff was proceeding with a cart and horses from the village of Somerset West to Somerset West Strand, and while lawfully crossing at Somerset West Halt the railway line, which is the property of the Colonial Government and under the control and management of the defendant, an engine and train, the property of the Government and under the control and management of the servants of the Colonial Government, who in driving the said engine and train were acting within the scope of their employment, were so carelessly and negligently driven by the said servants that the engine and train ran into the said cart and horses.

3. By reason of the said negligent and careless conduct of the said servants of the Colonial Government in charge and control of the said engine and train, the plaintiff was seriously and dangerously injured, and was under medical treatment for three months, and suffered great pain and physical suffering, and was prevented from attending to his business and incurred medical and other expenses, and is still suffering from the effects of the said negligence and carelessness, and has sustained damage and loss to the extent of £500.

The second named plaintiff's declaration was in practically similar terms, and claimed £85 damages for the loss of the cart and two horses, which were his property, and which were being driven by Terhoven when he was injured.

The defendant, in his plea, denied that the collision was caused by negligence or carelessness on the part of the engine-driver or of any servant or agent of the Colonial Government.

He specially said with reference to paragraph 2 of the declaration that the engine-driver and other servants of the Colonial Government employed in connection with the said train exercised all due and proper caution and skill in driving the said train, that the whistle was sounded before the train approached Somerset West Halt, and that every care and endeavour were made to avoid the aforesaid accident.

The said accident was caused by the carelessness and negligence of the plaintiff, who, although he knew that the train was approaching Somerset West Halt, and had been duly warned of the train's approach by the whistle, attempted to cross the line in front of the approaching train, and in consequence received the injuries of which he now complains. He denied the other allegations in paragraph 2.

He said he had no knowledge of the facts alleged in paragraph 3, but he denied that the plaintiff had sustained any injury and incurred expense and damage in the sum of £500, or in any amount, by any act or omission on his part or on the part of any servant or agent of the Colonial Government.

The plea to Stephan's claim was in similar terms to the above.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with whom was Mr. Close), for both the plaintiffs.

Mr. Searle, K.C., and Mr. Sheil, K.C., for the Government.

Mr. Schreiner called

James Frederick Inglis Curlew, who said he was a Government land surveyor, and framed the plan of the ground in question by actual survey. It was essentially correct, and the distances marked were absolutely correct. Witness lived at Somerset West, and knew the road in question. On account of trees and foliage on the Government property it was very difficult for a person driving down to the Halt from Somerset West to see a train coming. Witness was on the platform at the time of the accident. He saw the train coming rather suddenly, as he thought, and after going to call Mrs. Curlew he turned round and saw a cloud of dust and the train coming in. One horse was then lying dead under the train. An iron standard had been broken, apparently by the cart being thrown against it. There were no gates at that crossing, and although witness had often been there, he had never seen a man placed at the crossing to warn drivers of vehicles that trains were approaching. Witness thought the train was coming in rather fast that day, faster than he thought it should. He never heard the engine whistle.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness knew nothing about signals. He did not know that the custom was for the stationmaster to go down the platform and signal the train in from the bend. He could not swear that the engine did not whistle. He had not measured the taaibosch, but he thought it would be about 5 feet high. He could not say whether the taaibosch and gum-trees had been pruned before or after the accident. The taaibosch was high enough to obstruct the view of the line, the road until the rise was reached being below their level. When witness drove down that road he never depended upon seeing the train through the trees. He would slow down before reaching the line, and then on the rise, about 5 or 6 feet from the line, he had a clear view of it.

Re-examined: A person had to turn his head considerably to see up the line. When the cart was on the rise the horses would be touching the rails.

Hermanus Terhoven, the plaintiff in the one action, said he had lived all his life at Somerset West Strand. Formerly he had a boat of his own, but at the time of the accident he was employed at Stephan's Fresh and Cured Fish Company. His salary was £12 a month and 5 per cent. commission. He also speculated in buying other produce, and his income would be about £400 or £500 a year. On December 24, 1900, witness was driving Mr. Stephan's horses to a farm near Somerset West Strand. There was a little boy with him. The harness was worth about £4, and the cart £15 or £16. The horses were a good pair, and were worth from £70 to £80. They were quiet horses, and perfectly under control. Witness was sitting on the usual driver's side of the cart. He first saw the train when it was right on him. The horses were then on the line. He could do nothing to get backward or forward in time to prevent the accident. Just as the train struck him witness heard the whistle. He did not know the train was coming, and did not whip up his horses to get across the line before the train passed. An approaching train could not be seen until a person got right on the line. Proceeding, witness detailed the nature of the injuries he received. He was in bed for five or six weeks, and it was four months before he could really get about again. The sight of witness's eye was impaired, and he could not hear as well as he could before the accident. He used to be a man of strong nerve, but now he had no nerve at all. Witness had a wife and nine children, and was 46 years of age. He would not like to have another such accident for £10,000.

Cross-examined: Witness knew the afternoon train was due about the time of the accident. It was the ordinary train, and witness had often travelled by it. Coming along the road it was possible to see the train from certain points. Witness was not in the habit of stopping at the spot mentioned by Mr. Curlewis and looking up the line to see if the train was coming. Witness's hearing was good before the accident, but he did not hear the engine whistle 100 yards from the station. The train was very seldom signalled by a flag from the bend. Witness had never heard the train whistle just as it came into the straight, but since the accident he had heard the train whistle there. It might whistle some days, but never while he was there. The top of the taai Bosch was cut after the accident. It would now be about 5 feet high, but at the time of the accident it was a very big taai Bosch. The train was about 12 yards from him when witness first saw it. Witness had a whip in his cart, but did not use it. The cart was still lying at the station. Both wheels and the disselboom were broken. It was a good cart. After four months witness went to Mr. Keytel and worked on commission. During a good season, such as last year, witness would make more than he did while in Mr. Stephan's employ. He still dealt with Mr. Stephan on commission, and collected rents for him.

Re-examined: Witness's work was now on shore, although he had a little pleasure boat he sometimes went out in.

Peter Keytel said in 1900 he was manager of Stephan's Fresh and Cured Fish Company, and Terhoven was the assistant manager at the Strand. Terhoven was a sober, steady man, and, to witness's own knowledge, a capable driver. Terhoven entered witness's service in April, 1900. Stephan was the owner of the cart and horses. Witness had bought the cart, and although he could not quite remember the price, he was sure that it was over £10. He was certain that at the time of the accident he could not have bought the cart and harness for £15. The horses were a good pair, and worth £70. Witness had had offers of £70 for them. Witness wrote to the Government on December 28, 1900, regarding the accident, made a claim, and received a reply on December 31 saying that inquiries would be made. Then in January he got a further communication from the General Manager of Railways repudiating liability for the damage caused by the accident. When Terhoven was able to come to Cape Town a solicitor was consulted, and ultimately these legal proceedings were commenced.

Cross-examined: Witness believed the horses cost about £50 eighteen months before the accident. The cart was bought about two years before that date. Witness could not explain why the summons in this case was delayed until August last.

Robert A. McIntyre, partner in the firm of Tredgold, McIntyre and Bisset, said the delay in the issuing of the summons was due to his being ill and having to leave Cape Town for a time.

Dr. Edmund William Scarborough said he practised at Somerset Strand. On the evening of December 24, 1900, Terhoven was brought to his surgery, and witness attended to him. He had a contused wound on the top of the head, 1 to 1½ inches long, a contused wound over the left eyebrow of about a couple of inches, fracturing a little portion of the frontal bone. There was also a wound on the left cheek 3 or 4 inches long. That was a deep wound. Then there was a fracture of the jaw. The left-hand side of his chest and his left arm and hand had also contused wounds. His body was more or less contused all over. Witness attended to Terhoven's needs, and bandaged him. It was a bad case, and the patient suffered severely from the shock. Terhoven had all his senses at that time. They were injuries which in the case of any but a very strong man would possibly have caused death. Witness treated him for a couple of days, but he knew that altogether Terhoven was under medical treatment for over three months. On April 30 Terhoven complained to witness about his jaw, and on witness making an examination he found that the jaw was still ununited. That was a very serious thing. There was also an abscess formed there.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: If a man had a weakness of heart, the shock might have proved fatal. Witness had not attended Terhoven since the 30th April. Witness had seen him going about, and he looked all right.

Dr. William Hewat, district surgeon and medical officer of the railway at Somerset West, said he saw Terhoven after the first two days. He was in bed about six weeks. For a time witness attended him daily. It was a bad case. Pieces of dead bone were coming out of the jaw. Now the jaw was satisfactorily united. Witness's account would be £15 or £20.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Terhoven was nervous, and was not the same man he used to be.

Petrus van Nierop, post contractor, said he drove up and down the road in question often. So far as he knew, Terhoven was a steady and experienced driver. There was a great deal of traffic there. There was no gate, and no man was stationed there to warn people of the approach of trains. He had not seen any flag or signal. He was at the station that day. He took the mails and passengers up, and reached the station at 3.30, fifteen minutes before the train arrived. The bags were on the platform waiting for the train. He did not hear the train whistle until it was within 8 or 9 yards of the cart. There was no chance for the cart to draw back or go forward. He had good hearing, and believed he would have heard the whistle if it had been blown before. A man driving down the road, with the trees as they then were, could not see a train coming. The gum-trees had since been cut away. He did not see the cart before it was on the line. This was when he heard the whistle. He considered the horses to be worth from £70 to £80.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness was on the platform nearly every afternoon. On the day in question he was standing between the station offices and the third-class shelter, in about the middle of the platform. When witness first saw them, the horses were on the line. The engine always whistled when coming round the bend, about 500 yards away—at the Bush. Sometimes, but not always, it whistled after it came into the straight. Witness did not hear it whistle on this afternoon in the straight. He would not say it did not whistle.

Charles Overtown, cab proprietor, Strand, said he also was on the platform. He gave evidence similar to that of the preceding witnesses. If a man was on a Scotch cart, which made a big rattle, he would not hear the train come down. It came down smoothly.

Witness saw the horses just as they got on the line. Witness did not see the driver whip up the horses. When the train whistled, there was no time for the driver to do anything. The taaibosch prevented anyone on the road from seeing an approaching train. The value of the horses was from £60 to £70. The value of a cart of that sort was, he thought, about £10 or £12.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The train usually whistled when within 100 or 200 yards of the station.

Petrus Johannes van Blerck gave similar evidence.

Cross-examined: He did not see a man come out with a flag. Witness would not say that a man did not wave a green flag.

Phillip W. A. Hope was called, and said he saw the cart just as the engine struck it. He heard no whistle before.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness did not see the stationmaster come out with a flag. The platform was crowded. If a driver took particular notice, he could see through the trees the train coming.

Henry Allen Fagin said he had formerly resided at Somerset Strand, but for more than a year now had lived at Somerset West. Until a couple of months ago he was Mayor of the Municipality. He confirmed what the other witnesses had said as to the traffic on the road, and the nature of the locality of the accident. Long before the accident the danger of the locality had been discussed by the Council, but they did not communicate with the Government on the matter until after the accident. Before the accident the trees were too thick, and after that the Government proceeded to have the trees chopped down. The trees had previously obscured the view, and one could hardly see the line unless he stood quiet for some time.

Cross-examined: The trees along the line obstructed the view, and not the trees along the road. Witness did not go into details, but just took the general effect, and the general effect was that the view was now better with the trees removed. Considering the immense amount of traffic on the road, with at times the wind blowing hard and the train coming stealing into the station, witness still thought a gate was necessary at the crossing. The Municipality had asked the Government to put a gate as well as cut down the trees.

Alfred Lipman said he had been at the Strand for the last two years. He was at the station at the time of the accident, having gone there on his bicycle to see some friends off. Before the collision, he had been on the platform a quarter of an hour, and he did not hear the whistle of the train until the accident happened. On hearing the whistle he immediately looked round, and saw a cloud of dust, and heard people saying an accident had happened. Witness afterwards assisted to remove Terhoven to the cloakroom. He saw the one horse under the train and the other horse was so injured that it had to be killed.

Cross-examined: Witness's attention was not directed to the train until the accident happened, but if the train had whistled before that he would have heard it.

John J. van Dyk said he had resided at Somerset West Strand for some time. On the day of the accident he was going to Stellenbosch, and was waiting on the platform for the train. He heard no whistle, but saw the train 200 or 300 yards away. He saw the cart and horses approaching the line, and the train was then just on them. The train whistled, but there was no time between that and the collision. Witness did not see the man on the cart whip the horses. The train was coming in at a good fast pace.

Cross-examined: When witness first saw the cart about two yards from the line, just rising out of the dip, it was going at an ordinary pace. Witness did not see the stationmaster coming out and waving a flag, his back being to the stationmaster's office. The engine did not always whistle when it came in.

Re-examined: If the engine did whistle and he did not hear it, the whistling must have taken place a long way off.

By a Jurymen: The train must have dragged the horse between forty and fifty yards.

Counsel said the distance on the plan was 56 yards.

This closed the case for the plaintiffs.

For the defence, Mr. Searle called

Arthur Edward Sanson, who said he had been stationmaster at the Strand Halt Station for 3½ years, and had been 12 years in the Government service. He remembered the accident on December 24, 1900. The train was due to arrive at the station at a quarter past four, and if it had not collided with the cart it would have arrived just up to time. Witness heard the rumbling of the train before it reached Mostert's Bush. He then heard it whistling at Mostert's Bush, and went out and waved the green flag, which was the signal for the train to come in, there being no fixed signals at the station. The engine whistled again coming into the straight.

By the Court: If the driver did not see the signal he should stop outside the station.

Examination continued: After waving the flag witness went into his office, and when he came out again the train was about 50 yards from the road. Then the engine commenced giving sharp whistles, which called witness's attention, and looking round, he saw a cart just about the corner of the fence. When the cart had got 3 or 7 yards away from the crossing Terhoven put round his hand, took up his whip, and started whipping the horses to get across the line in front of the train. He did not cross in time. He only got the horses on the line, and not the cart, and the engine caught the horses. The engine pulled up a few feet in front of the shelter. If the driver of the cart had pulled his horses round when the engine gave the sharp whistle he could have avoided the accident. Immediately the engine caught the horses witness jumped down off the platform and rushed up the line in front of the train. Witness was about 500 yards away from Terhoven when he fell. He picked him up, and, with assistance, brought him to the platform. There had been no recent alterations in the timetable. Before a person came to the crossing there were spaces between the trees on Mostert's ground where he could see a train coming down. The red gums did not obscure the view much. All the trees on Mostert's ground which obstructed the view had been cut down and sold for firewood. With ordinary care any man could avoid an accident at that crossing. The cart in question was a very old one, and witness thought that at the outside a £5 note would be paying too much for it, because the only good parts about it were the springs.

Cross-examined: On the afternoon of December 24 witness had two porters assisting him. Witness had to issue tickets and do all the signalling work, and had no foreman to assist him. On the day in question the platform was full of people, and witness's hands were full in selling tickets. The horses were not on the rails when the sharp whistle was given. The train never ran faster coming into that station than it did at other stations. Passenger trains never ran through without stopping, but goods trains did. It was not part of witness's duty to watch the road, but if he saw something coming on the line from the road he would give the driver the signal not to come in too close. It was after the second whistle that witness gave the train the signal with the flag. The engine whistled at Mostert's, and then when coming into the straight, and when it was coming into the straight witness gave the flag. Then it whistled for the crossing about 60 or 70 yards away, and then there were the sharp whistles before the accident. The taaibosch branches had not been cut down since the accident. The taaibosch was only about 3 feet in height. A person coming down the road would not be prevented by the taaibosch from seeing the line.

Re-examined: Before witness came out of the office, he heard the whistle from Morkel's Crossing. Then he went out, waved the flag, and took the flag back. When he again came out, he heard another whistle, and afterwards the engine blew a sharp whistle for the cart.

Albert Jones, engine-driver, said he had been in the service of the Colonial Government for sixteen years. He had been six years an engine-driver, and had been driving on the Sir Lowry Pass line close on two years, up to the time of the accident. He drove the train which ran into the cart. There were two crossings near the Bush, and witness whistled for each. Witness saw the stationmaster come out with the flag about 500 yards away, when he whistled for the station. He whistled about 100 yards from the crossing, at the foot of the platform. Witness saw the horses through the bush. He thought they were standing. He whistled, and saw that the horses were moving. He applied both brakes. They were powerful brakes. As far as he could recollect, they drew up an engine and a carriage beyond the crossing. Witness did all he could to avoid the accident. At the time witness whistled, he thought the horses could have been stopped. They could, he believed, have been pulled on one side. Witness could not stop. At the time of the whistle, the engine was about 40 yards away.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness was sure he gave all the whistles he had referred to. He was just as likely to forget to stop at the station as he was to forget to whistle. He could see the horses' legs, but not the driver.

Jasper Bardens, porter at Somerset West Halt, said he had been employed there for over five years. He was engaged at the station on the afternoon of the accident. He was standing waiting for the arrival of the train. When witness first saw the train it was on the straight, about 500 yards away. It then whistled. Witness heard the engine whistle at Morkel's Crossing. He saw the stationmaster with his flag. The engine whistled 100 yards from the crossing. Witness saw Terhoven driving down the road to the crossing. He saw him whipping his horses, trying to get over the crossing. Witness had often driven down the road towards the Halt. The train could be seen between the trees. Witness thought Terhoven could have pulled up in time to avoid the accident.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: By looking carefully and stopping, the train could be seen. When witness saw the cart, it was four or five yards from the crossing. The train was then about 40 yards away. After the whistle had blown, the driver whipped the horses up. The whistle blew sharply three times.

Re-examined by Mr. Sheil: Witness was standing close to the crossing.

David Smith Barrie, porter at the station, said he heard the engine whistle at Morkel's Crossing. It whistled on the straight, and again about 100 yards from the crossing. Afterwards, when about 40 yards away, it whistled for the cart, which was about 5 or 6 yards off the line. Witness saw the driver whip up the horses. Witness was standing by the shed, and had a full view. He considered the driver of the cart could have pulled up before the engine reached him.

Mr. Searle called

Joseph Yare, a guard in the employ of the C.G.R., who deposed that he was in charge of the train which drove into the cart at Somerset West Halt on December 24. They were approaching as usual round the curve from Morkel's Crossing at a speed of fourteen miles an hour, gradually reducing the speed. The driver whistled for the station at 500 yards distance, and then again whistled for the crossing about 100 yards from the crossing. His first attention to something unusual taking place was the application of the brake and the driver whistling, giving a repetition of short whistles, denoting danger. There was a screw brake in his van, and the train was fitted with a continuous brake. He did not apply the brake in his van. There were a great number of passengers waiting on the station platform to board the train. There was not a strong wind blowing at the time, which might have prevented the intending passengers hearing the whistle of the approaching train. There was merely the ordinary breeze. He was not aware that a passenger train had ever entered the station before being signalled in. That had never occurred within his experience.

Re-examined: There was a brake in the guard's van. There was also the automatic brake on the engine and in the guard's van. That automatic brake was applied before the whistling. He judged that from what he felt in his van. He had to run the length of seven vehicles—six carriages and his van—to get to the front after the train had stopped.

Iwin Frederick Ross, a fireman in the employ of the C.G.R., deposed that he was fireman on the train when the collision occurred on the 24th December. The train whistled from the bend, then from the straight, and then 100 yards from the crossing. It was signalled in to the station that day. He saw the flag on the platform. The train was then about 500 yards off. After whistling the three times, she gave another short whistle. That was given by the driver. He was looking out on the station side, and did not see the cart at all till the train was drawn up. The brake was put on, and the train was brought up quickly.

William Frederick Taylor, a clergyman in the Church of England, deposed that he resided at Somerset Strand at the time that the accident occurred. He was driving towards the station that day, and on the way passed the cart driven by Terhoven. He passed Terhoven. When near the crossing, he heard a train whistle about 500 yards away. He drove across the line. He then drove to the toll, about 100 yards further on. Just as he drew up at the toll, he heard the crash of the collision. He both saw the train and heard it whistle distinctly. The train was then in the straight. He had crossed the line at that point two or three times a week for six or seven years. He never had the slightest difficulty in getting over, as he could always distinctly see if the train was approaching or whether the line was clear.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: When he passed Terhoven, he (witness) was driving faster. Terhoven had a little boy with him. He could not say the exact distance Terhoven was behind him when he drove over the siding.

By Buchanan, J.: He had crossed the line at the point where the accident occurred often. From the point where a clear view of the line was to be had, there was plenty of time to draw up before reaching the crossing.

After counsel had addressed the jury, His Lordship, also addressing the jury, said that on the 24th December the plaintiff Terhoven was driving from Somerset West to the Strand in a cart with a pair of horses belonging to the plaintiff Stephan. On crossing the railway line at an open crossing an engine and train ran into the cart, with the result that the cart was smashed up, one of the horses was killed and the other was damaged, and unfortunately the plaintiff Terhoven was injured. Terhoven had told them that in consequence of that accident he had suffered great pain and incurred the expense of medical attendance, and on that account he brought on the present action against the Government for damages. In a case like that they had, of course, the greatest possible sympathy with a man who had suffered such injury. But the case had gone beyond the province of sympathy. They were now in a court of law, and they had to decide according to the law applying to the case. The declaration charged the Government with negligent and careless conduct on the part of their servants in the management and driving of the train. On the other hand, the defendants said that there had been such contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff that he caused the accident. They alleged that the plaintiff was warned of the train's approach by the whistle, and yet notwithstanding that he attempted to cross the line in front of the train, and in consequence of his own conduct he sustained his injuries. It was for the jury to find on the facts of the case as shown in the evidence. To assist them he would state the issues raised. The first question was whether there was any negligence on the part of the defendants. If they found there was no negligence on the part of the railway officials they were bound to find for the defendants; but if they found there was negligence on the part of the Government officials, they had then further to consider if there was negligence on the part of the plaintiff Terhoven directly contributing to the accident, and if they found there was that contributory negligence they would have still to find for the Government. If they found that the railway servants had been guilty of negligence, and that he plaintiff had not directly contributed to the accident, then they would have to consider the question of damages. In dealing with the question of damages, if they should find for the plaintiff, they must take into consideration the actual loss sustained; the expense incurred by reason of the accident, and the pain and suffering undergone by the plaintiff Terhoven. He would ask them not to put down a specific sum against any one or other of these items, but to find on the whole a reasonable sum. In the case of Stephan it depended altogether on the view they took of the conduct of Terhoven. If Terhoven failed then Stephan must also fail; if Terhoven was entitled to damages then Stephan was entitled to be paid for the damage done to his cart and horses. In the declaration the charge of negligence put forth was the negligent driving of the engine, but this depended on all the surrounding circumstances. Counsel had asked them to bear in mind the locality and the fact that the road upon which the accident occurred was in frequent use. Counsel had also asked them to remember the difficulty in seeing along the line, and that the train did not make much noise coming down the incline, and that the Government had not provided any warning either by means of a man stationed at the crossing or by a bar. There was no law which in terms required the Government to put a man at the place, and no law compelling the Government to put up a bar; but he would put it to them broadly that it was the duty of the Government to manage and carry on the railway with the same amount of care and skill as would be required of any private company working a railway, and he would give them a general principle on which they could go. Where the Government was authorised to work a railway it must work that railway in a proper manner, and in the usual way in which railways were worked. In crossing a footway or a level crossing the railway officials were bound as to the mode of working their line, as to the rate of speed, signaling, and whistling, to do everything that was reasonably necessary to secure the safety of persons who had to cross the line. They had to take reasonable precautions. If the Government were negligent, however, that did not justify a man in negligently putting himself in danger and then saying: "You have injured me through your negligence, and you must pay me compensation." Wherever an accident is brought about by a person's own carelessness or recklessness, he had no ground of action. But this carelessness or supineness must be the immediate and proximate cause of the injury. Where negligence on the part of the plaintiff is remotely connected with the cause of the accident, the jury must see whether the railway servants could, by the exercise of ordinary care and skill, have avoided the injury. Contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, to disentitle him to recover, must be such as, but for such negligence, the mischief would not have happened, and where the defendant could not, by the exercise of proper care on his part, have avoided the consequences of the neglect or carelessness on the part of the plaintiff. Those were, broadly speaking, the principles of law on which they must act in this case. The Government must work its railways with reasonable precautions. The plaintiff must, for his part, take reasonable precautions, too, and not do anything to contribute directly towards an accident. On the question of whistling, a great deal of evidence had been given on both sides whether the whistle of the engine had been sounded on approaching the crossing or not. Many said they did not hear it. Defendants' witnesses, on the contrary, said there was whistling, and gave details. They had the evidence of the Rev. Mr. Taylor, who distinctly heard the whistle, and took the precaution of ascertaining the distance of the approaching train before driving across the line himself. The evidence of one witness who positively heard the whistle was of more value in this case than that of several who said they did not hear the whistle, unless, of course it was apparent that a person deliberately went into the witness-box and perjured himself. The jury would not be disposed to treat the evidence of Mr. Taylor in that light way. Mr. Taylor was driving along the road, and passed Terhoven. He was driving faster than Terhoven. He heard the whistle, stopped, and looked up the line. He saw that he could easily pass before the train arrived, and he crossed in safety. It was said in evidence that there was a difficulty in seeing the line from the road approaching the crossing, but this should induce one to take extra precautions. The plaintiff knew the locality well, and knew the times when trains were due. He knew that the notice to the public that a train was approaching was given by whistling. That was apparently the only notice, and it was very essential in this case to find whether or not whistling took place. Plaintiff heard no whistle; why, that was difficult to say. He was not very far behind Taylor, who heard the whistle. But Terhoven said he did not hear the whistle. The jury had to consider if there was not such negligence on the part of the plaintiff directly contributing to the accident as to disentitle him to damages. Was there such negligence on the part of the Government as to lead the plaintiff to believe that in crossing the line he had nothing to fear? If the latter, then he might have a strong case against the Government. If the jury thought, on the contrary, that there was whistling and reasonable care taken by the Government, or if they thought that there was contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, then the latter was disentitled to damages. If the plaintiff knew the train was approaching, and chose still to cross the line in front of the train, that was careless and reckless conduct under the circumstances that should be taken into account by the jury as being contributory to the accident. His Lordship concluded his remarks by again instructing the jury on the point of awarding damages.

The jury retired to deliberate, and returning an hour later, the foreman juryman intimated that they were unable to arrive at an unanimous verdict, nor would they be able to agree after further deliberation.

His Lordship asked if there was a majority of six against three on a verdict. The foreman replied that there was.

His Lordship pointed out that the law provided that a verdict could be returned if, after deliberating for an hour, a majority of six to three of the jury agreed to such verdict, and asked what verdict had been arrived at.

The foreman replied that they found for the plaintiffs for the amount of damages claimed.

On the motion of Mr. Schreiner, a verdict was entered accordingly, with costs, the expenses of the plaintiff as a necessary witness being allowed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

Feb. 6th.

This was an application to have a rule nisi made absolute. The rule called on petitioner's children to show cause on February 6, 1902, why an interdict should not be granted restraining the Registrar of Deeds from passing transfer of certain property, pending an action to be immediately instituted by petitioner in the Supreme Court. The said rule nisi (to operate meanwhile as an interdict) was granted by the Chief Justice in Chambers on January 15, 1902.

The petition upon which the said rule nisi was granted set forth that on April 4, 1876, petitioner purchased a certain piece of ground, situate at Rondebosch, and paid the stipulated price to the vendor. Owing to his ignorance of business matters, he neglected to get transfer of the said ground, which was on May 11 transferred by the estate of the late vendor to Annie Engels, in her capacity of executrix of petitioner's deceased wife. The said transfer was fraudulently obtained, inasmuch as it was represented that petitioner was deceased at the time. On May 11, 1888, this property had been transferred to petitioner's children, issue of his marriage with his late wife. There are seven children; the land still stands registered in their joint names, and petitioner is informed and believes that the property has been sold by the said children to one Williams, who is now seeking to obtain transfer thereof, and has already begun to erect a building on the said property. Petitioner intends to institute an action against his children to have the transfer to them set aside, and now prays for an order restraining the Registrar of Deeds from passing transfer to Williams.

On the motion of Mr. Alexander, the Court made absolute the rule nisi which had been granted in Chambers, upon production to the satisfaction of the Registrar of the death notice of Abraham Marthinus Engels (one of the said children).

Foreign marriage—Community—Property of Wife—Transfer —Assistance of husband.

Where a wife married in Germany and afterwards became domiciled in this Colony together with her husband had been deserted by him, and had thereafter acquired with her own money certain immoveable property. The Court made an order allowing her to pass transfer of this property to a purchaser without her husband's assistance.

Petitioner, married in Germany, out of community of property, applied for authority to transfer certain property without the assistance of her husband. The petition set forth that petitioner and her husband arrived in Cape Town, and have since resided there. On June 12, 1899, petitioner purchased with her own money, obtained without assistance of and independently of her husband, a certain piece of ground, with buildings thereon, situate in Longmarket-street, Cape Town, transfer of which was duly passed to petitioner on August 12, 1899. In or about July, 1897, petitioner's husband deserted her, having informed her that he had no intention of returning to her. Petitioner has sold the said property, and is desirous of passing transfer to the purchaser, but she is unable to obtain the signature of her husband assisting her execution of the necessary documents. Petitioner's husband has no interest in the said property, and she is unaware of his whereabouts.

On the motion of Mr. Benjamin the Court granted an order as prayed.

STANFORD V. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

This was a motion to fix a day for trial by jury.

Mr. Upington appeared for applicant; Mr. Gardiner for respondents.

The respondents had given notice to apply on the 28th February to fix a day for trial, Mr. Gardiner saying that it was their intention to have the case heard in the May term. An affidavit was read to the effect that several of defendants' witnesses were on active service.

The Court fixed the 10th March for trial, the Chief Justice saying that if, meanwhile, the respondents found it impossible to get all their witnesses here, they could make another application before the jurors were summoned. Costs were ordered to be costs in the cause.

PATERSON V. PATERSON. { 1902.
Feb. 6th.

Mr. Benjamin made application for personal attachment of respondent for contempt of Court by failing to obey an order to contribute £5 per month for the maintenance of applicant and children. There had been a judicial separation, defendant having been ordered to pay the amount stated. He was £53 10s. in arrear, and costs were also due amounting to £26 2s. 6d. Defendant, it was stated on affidavit, was in the employ of the Cape Government Railways.

Defendant appeared, and said that he had refused to make payments until the applicant had given him certain papers which she had belonging to him. There were three Masonic certificates and a life policy.

Mr. Benjamin said the wife had the life policy. This had been kept in consequence of some proposal to cede it in payment of the arrears. He (counsel) was not instructed as to the other documents.

Defendant further said that he was not able to pay. He had not objected to the Court's order, because he had promised his wife not to appear in court to oppose her application.

The Chief Justice said that defendant would probably be able to raise money on the life policy. An order would be made for payment of the money on condition that applicant handed over to the respondent the life policy and Masonic papers belonging to him in her possession. Of course if applicant did not have the Masonic papers she could apply again.

DAVIS V. WOODSTOCK MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. De Villiers moved to fix a day for trial by jury.

The Registrar pointed out that there was no proof of service on the respondent, and the case was ordered to stand over for production of proof.

Executor and tutor—Purchase of property in the estate.

Where an executor in an estate who was also tutor dative to the minor children of deceased had purchased certain property in deceased's estate at a public auction and for a fair value, the Court confirmed the sale.

This was an application for an order confirming the sale of certain property. The petition of Petrus Jacobus Stephanus Roux, of Pheasant Kraal, Caledon, stated that towards the end of 1884 he bought certain properties in partnership with his brothers, Alexander Andreas Roux and Willem Adolph Roux. The three brothers held the said properties in undivided shares till the beginning of 1896, when petitioner and his brother Willem Adolph bought one-third share of their brother Andreas, and have since held the said pieces of ground in undivided half shares. Willem Adolph died in August, 1901, his wife having predeceased him in 1896. Petitioner was appointed executor dative in the estate of his deceased brother aforesaid and Tutor dative to his said brother's four minor children. As Executor dative petitioner instructed certain auctioneers to sell all the moveable and immoveable property in the said estate by public auction. The sale having been duly advertised, was held on April 24, 1901, and was largely attended. Petitioner bought the half undivided shares in the aforesaid farms belonging to the said estate publicly and in open competition for the highest bid offered, and at a fair and reasonable price. Petitioner paid £800, and the property had been valued (as appeared from appraiser's affidavit annexed) at £650.

On the motion of Mr. De Waal an order was granted as prayed.

HACKENBERG V. HACKENBERG. { 1902.
BERG. { Feb. 6th.

Removal of interdict.

Where a husband has been ordered by the Court to pay over to his wife £25 to enable her to sue him for divorce and had been interdicted from alienating certain of the common property: the Court after the lapse of more than two years removed the interdict as the wife had failed to bring her action within that time.

This was an application for an order removing a certain interdict. The said interdict had been obtained by Messrs. W. E. Moore and Son, at the instance of Thekla Hackenberg (the respondent), restraining her husband Vinzenz Hackenberg (the present applicant) from selling, mortgaging, or otherwise alienating certain landed property on the Cape Flats registered in the name of the applicant. The circumstances under which this interdict was granted, as disclosed in applicant's affidavit, were as follows: On March 14, 1899, on the application of the present respondent the Court granted a rule nisi, returnable on April 12, 1899, calling on petitioner to pay to respondent £25 to enable her to institute an action against him for divorce, and restraining him from alienating certain two properties on the Cape Flats, registered in his name. This rule was made absolute on May 1, 1899. Petitioner was at the time unable to pay the said £25, and by consent of attorneys on both sides a bond was passed on the property for £350 to pay off an existing bond and to provide funds for both parties to carry on the suit. The £25 aforesaid was paid to respondent, but since then she has taken no steps to proceed with her action for divorce. Wherefore petitioner prayed for an order removing the aforesaid interdict.

On the motion of Mr. Gardiner, the Court granted an order as prayed.

OTHERS. { Feb. 6th.

This was an application by an executrix testamentary for leave to transfer to herself certain property in the estate. The major heirs under the will joined in the petition. The petition of Hester Hendrina Catharina Botha (born Pretorius), in her capacity as executrix in the estate of the late Marthinus Johannes Botha, and also of the three major heirs of the said estate, stated that there was a fourth heir, still a minor. That the estate was indebted to the executrix in the sum of £2,450, the amount of a certain promissory note dated August 1, 1894, signed by deceased in her favour, and which in greater part represents the purchase price of certain erven in the town of Cradock. Deceased bequeathed to the executrix the life-usufruct of these erven, and she is now 53 years of age, and it has been agreed by the other petitioners that she should take over these erven from the estate in full satisfaction of her claim of £2,450. The said erven are valued for Divisional Council purposes at £1,440, for Municipal purposes at £1,400, and by a sworn appraiser at £1,850; thus it will greatly benefit the estate if the said debt of £2,450 can be discharged by executrix taking it over. Should this claim be enforced against the estate, it will be necessary to sell these erven by public auction subject to the aforesaid life interest, under which circumstances they will not realise as much as any of the aforesaid valuations.

Wherefore petitioners pray for an order authorising the said executrix to pass transfer to herself of the aforesaid even in full settlement of her said claim of £2,450. The Master reported favourably.

On the motion of Mr. Benjamin the Court granted an order as prayed.

GINSBURG V. CHURCH. { 1902.
Feb. 6th.

This was an application for leave to attach certain moneys. The petition of Samuel Joachim Ginsberg, a general dealer, of Barkly East, stated: Petitioner obtained judgment against William Louis Church, a watchmaker, of Barkly East, on January 13, 1902, in the Supreme Court, for a total sum of £49 10s., with interest and costs, since taxed at £6 8s. 10d. On May 15, 1901, a writ was issued against the goods and chattels of defendant from the Supreme Court in the matter of Meintjes v. the said defendant, to which the Sheriff made a return of nulla bona. Defendant has been awarded £148 12s. 8d. by the War Losses Compensation Commission, of which one-fourth was paid previous to June 12, 1901. On that date the Supreme Court, upon the application of Meintjes, granted an order declaring this money (then in the hands of the Civil Commissioner) executable for the said debt and costs. Thereafter a second instalment of one-fourth of the aforesaid award was deposited with the Civil Commissioner, and out of these moneys the exigencies of the said writ was satisfied, leaving a balance of about £10 to the credit of the said defendant with the said Civil Commissioner, and a balance of £74 6s. 4d. is still due to defendant upon the said award. In or about March, 1901, defendant left Barkly East; he has not returned, and petitioner has not been able to ascertain his present whereabouts. Petitioner therefore prays for an order declaring the moneys lying to the credit of defendant with the Civil Commissioner, and also the aforesaid balance due to him, executable for the said judgment debt, taxed costs, costs of this application, and for any other costs to be incurred thereon.

On the motion of Mr. C. W. de Villiers, the Court ordered that a rule nisi issue, calling upon respondent to show cause on February 27, 1902, why attachment should not be made as prayed. Rule to be served on respondent personally; failing which, one publication to be made in the "East London Dispatch."

Postea, Feb. 27.

On the motion of Mr. C. W. de Villiers, the rule was made absolute.

WATSON V. MAIN. { 1902.
Feb. 6th.

This was an application for release from curatorship of person and of property.

Applicant had been placed under the curatorship of John Alfred Henry Main by order of Court on December 11, 1900. (10 Sheil 747.)

The petitioner stated that since then the petitioner had wholly recovered from alcoholism, and was again capable of managing her own affairs. That her said curator, together with his family, had resided with her in her house since the date aforesaid, and had behaved in an overbearing and insulting manner towards her, so much so that she had been obliged to have her meals in her own room. An affidavit from Dr. Lessing stated that he knew the parties, and that applicant now appeared to have abandoned her addiction to alcohol, and was sufficiently under self-control not to relapse into the use of intoxicants. The affidavit of Dr. Key stated that the relations between applicant and her curator appeared to be very strained, and to be acting in a detrimental manner on her health, and that since December, 1900, applicant had conducted herself with propriety and decorum. The affidavit of Christiana Ellen Main, the wife of respondent, denied that applicant was capable of managing her own affairs, or that she had been in any way insulted or badly treated. Deponent asserted that applicant had frequently behaved in a violent and insulting manner towards her (deponent), and that if released from curatorship, she would again relapse into her intemperate habits.

In her answering affidavit petitioner denied these allegations, and repeated several statements set forth in her original affidavit.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for applicant, and Mr. Buchanan for respondent.

After counsel had been heard, the Court refused to make any order.

LOUW V. RHODES.

Plaintiff applied for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £2,000.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), for plaintiff.

Mr. V. Sampson, K.C. (with Mr. Benjamin) on behalf of defendant.

Mr. Gardiner said that in this matter the principal witness, the Princess Radziwill, had been duly subpoenaed, and he (counsel) had seen her the previous afternoon, but that morning they had received an intimation that she was unwell, and unable to attend. There had, of course, been no time in which to get a medical certificate, and he therefore asked that the case might be postponed. He asked for a postponement for a fortnight, but he understood that Mr. Sampson intended applying that it should be postponed only until that afternoon. There was no information as to how ill the Princess Radziwill was, so they could not say whether she would be able to attend in the afternoon.

Mr. Sampson said he objected strongly to any postponement. Mr. Rhodes had been brought out here for this case, and there was no affidavit before the Court as to the Princess being unable to come.

The Chief Justice: I do not think there is any reason for a postponement. We will go on with the case.

Mr. Gardiner said that the plaintiff sued for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £2,000, purporting to be signed by Mr. Rhodes in favour of the Princess Radziwill, and by her endorsed over to Mr. Louw. The signature was disputed by affidavit. The Princess Radziwill was the only witness the plaintiff had as to the signature, and the plaintiff could not proceed without her presence. If the Court did not see fit to grant a postponement, he could only go into the principal case, which would involve further delay.

Mr. Sampson: We would very much like to have the Princess here. Very much depends upon her.

The Chief Justice: The Court is prepared to hear the defendant if he wishes to deny his signature.

Mr. Sampson said that Mr. Rhodes would not be in court until eleven o'clock. Arrangements had been made that he should be there after the Princess Radziwill had given evidence.

The Chief Justice said the case would be heard later during the morning.

The Court then proceeded to take other cases, and at a subsequent stage of the morning's proceedings,

Mr. Sampson, K.C., intimated that Mr. Rhodes was present, and that he was prepared to go on with the case. I understand, added Mr. Sampson, that the plaintiff is going to call no witnesses, so that the onus is upon him to prove the genuineness of the signatures. But after Mr. Rhodes has given evidence, he will not be able to call rebutting evidence.

The Chief Justice: In the principal case I suppose they can?

Mr. Sampson: But not in the provisional.

Mr. Gardiner: In the provisional case I am not prepared to call any evidence. There are certain affidavits which I would pray leave to refer to on the matter of signatures.

Mr. Rhodes having been duly sworn, Mr. Sampson conducted the examination in chief.

What is your full name?—Cecil John Rhodes.

You are a member of the Privy Council and the defendant in this case of Louw v. yourself and Princess Radziwill?—Yes.

You are sued in this case as the maker of a promissory note, dated July 3, 1901, for £2,000, to the following effect: "On the 23rd day of September next I promise to pay the Princess Katarina Radziwill, or order, the sum of £2,000 for value received, payable at Kenilworth.—C. J. Rhodes"?—Yes.

Is that your signature or not?—No (after examining the note produced), it is a forgery.

Did you ever sign a promissory note in favour of the Princess?—No.

Or in favour of anybody?—I may have done, years ago.

The forgery you can swear to?—I swear that that is a forgery.

You discovered that there was a series of forgeries at that time of your name?—When I was away at Bulawayo Mr. Michell, of the Standard Bank, cabled to me, and said there was a note for £400 or £500, pretending to have my signature. Had I signed such a note? I replied no. And that was my first information as to the fact that my name had been used.

The Chief Justice: When was that?—In Bulawayo.

Mr. Sampson, K.C.: You went to Bulawayo in March, 1901, before you sailed for England? You sailed for England on July 3?—I came down from Bulawayo to Kimberley, and then I went to England.

The note you had been instructed about had then disappeared, had it not?—I arrived in Cape Town in the morning, and left the same day, but I was informed that the note had been withdrawn, and so I proceeded to England.

And in England another note came to you?—No, not in England. At Madeira I received a telegram from Mr. Hawksley, my attorney, to say that a note for £6,500 had been submitted. Had I signed such a thing? I replied by cable from Madeira, "Certainly not."

From your information and from documents before you forgeries to the amount of £23,100 were attempted to be discounted, being forged documents?—I don't know the exact amount. I know that large amounts were attempted.

Well, in Cape Town there was a note for £1,000 discounted, made by the Princess Katarina Radziwill in favour of one Friedjohn, made on June 8, 1901, and purporting to have your signature on the back as endorser. Would you tell me whether that is a forgery?—Yes, they are all forgeries.

Mr. Sampson (handing witness another document): Please look at this one; is that a forgery?—I have signed no promissory notes. They are absolute forgeries.

Now if you look at all these signatures and compare them from the tracing which has been made of them you will see them to be mathematically exact. All the signatures are exactly in the same place, every dot and every line?—Yes, I believe so.

The Chief Justice: That is your signature, Mr. Rhodes, is it not (handing witness a document)?

Mr. Rhodes (after examining the document): Well, it looks like it. Yes, that is a note expressing my desire to have the case postponed. That is my signature.

Mr. Sampson: On the forged signatures, which I put in, every single stroke and dot is put in the exact place on each signature?—I see.

Mr. Sampson observed that the forged signatures were evidently taken from one genuine signature from some document.

The Chief Justice (addressing the witness): It is a very good imitation of your signature, is it not, Mr. Rhodes?

Mr. Rhodes: Yes, I think it is. I may say for the information of the Court that I have not signed a promissory note for a very long time. I think not for many years.

Mr. Sampson: You would be prepared to swear that within the last two years you have not signed a promissory note?—Yes, I should be prepared to swear that; but I might say at once, my lord, that occasionally, some time ago, I have helped a friend, and I have endorsed a note for a friend, but I don't think I have done so during the last two years. Now, this here is my signature.

Mr. Sampson (addressing the Court): Now, if your lordship will put a tracing of the forged signature over that signature your lordship will see that it does not coincide at all exactly; that the distance between the lines are different. (To Mr. Rhodes) There must be certain variations in the distance in all your signatures?—I believe so.

But in these nine forged documents there is not the slightest variation?—So I believe.

Mr. Gardiner rose to cross-examine: You said that while at Bulawayo you heard about this first?—Yes.

Would that be long before you came down?—Not very long; it might be a month or two; it was a communication from Mr. Michell, of the Standard Bank.

Thank you. Now, Mr. Rhodes, you are well acquainted with the Princess Radziwill?—I met her, I may tell the Court, at a dinner at Mr. Moberley Bell's in London. He is a well-known man, sub-editor of the "Times" I believe, and I sat next to her at dinner. That was several years ago. Since then, the next time I had a communication from her was in connection with that letter you have got. She wrote and said she had £200,000, or a large sum, to invest, and asked me to invest it for her. I wrote to her in reply; you might read the letter.

Mr. Gardiner read the letter, which was dated from the Earlington Hotel, April 6, 1899, and ran as follows: "Dear Princess,—Excuse my delay. I have been very busy lately. It is always dangerous to advise a friend in money matters, and I make a rule not to do so, but I think anyone might subscribe with safety to the Mashonaland Railway Debentures, in order to get a safe 5½ per cent. But I dislike discussing business with friends."

Mr. Rhodes (proceeding): Well, then, when I was leaving Southampton on the ship, she suddenly turned up on the ship, and that was my second occasion of seeing her. She was alone, and she asked one to allow her to sit at one's table.

And you have often met her since then?—Yes, frequently.

You have discussed politics with her?

Mr. Rhodes: No, I have discussed politics with very few; certainly not with women.

Have you been in correspondence with her?—No; well, to the very slightest extent.

Mr. Gardiner here produced several typewritten letters, purporting to bear Mr. Rhodes's signature.

Mr. Gardiner: I do not wish to read them all.

Mr. Rhodes: Oh, but you had better read them, hadn't you?

Mr. Gardiner (handing the letters to Mr. Rhodes): Can you tell us whether any of these are your signatures, and, if so, which? There is a typewritten letter of August 10?

Mr. Rhodes: I cannot typewrite; so that must be a forgery.

Mr. Gardiner: They are all typewritten?—I have no one to write for me. It is one of those foolish things. I cannot unfortunately type. They are not my signatures. I have never signed any typewritten documents; not in connection with such matters. In the De Beers office or the Charter office I may sign a typewritten document, but on social matters or private matters of my own, my secretary writes it out and I sign.

You would not if you were in a hurry get someone to type a letter for you?—

No, because these are all political matters.

You would never get anyone to type political letters for you?—No, my secretary would do it.

When your secretary is not there?—Well, I have never typed political letters. The main point is that I have never typed these.

Now when the Princess arrived here you introduced her to Mrs. Scholtz?—No, I met Mrs. Scholtz, and she mentioned the Princess, and I said she was an interesting woman, and Mrs. Scholtz might call upon her.

Did you tell the Princess that if she wanted anything she was to refer to Mrs. Scholtz?—No, I did not say that. One moment. When was that?

Did you tell her that if she wanted anything she was to refer to Mrs. Scholtz?—Oh, certainly not.

Did you not make Mrs. Scholtz an intermediary?—Mrs. Scholtz informed me once that she thought the Princess was in difficulties pecuniarily, and I said, "You can mention it to me, and if it is so, let me know the circumstances." I was subsequently told that she could not pay her bills at the Mount Nelson, and that she was in a dire state of impecuniosity, and I then said, "I will instruct my attorney (Mr. Syfret), and if she will leave the country, I will pay her bills." I paid her bills, and she left the country, but she has come back again. To show the curious mixtures of the case, she brought a special letter of introduction from Lord Salisbury to the High Commissioner. I may also state this for this information of the Court, when I was at Home I saw Lord Rowton, who was Lord Beaconsfield's private secretary, and I asked, as I had heard she had been present at the Berlin Conference, if it were true. He said, "It is quite true. She is a clever woman with a big position here." I think I may add that she was one of the maids-of-honour to the Empress of Germany. I think I am correct in saying that. I say this merely for the information of the Court.

Now some time in 1901 did the Princess write to you and inform you that she had received certain bills from Mrs. Scholtz with your name?—No.

Now you knew that she was starting a paper called "Greater Britain"?—Yes.

And I think you favoured the idea?—No, she informed me she was going to start a paper. Did I object to it? I said I had nothing to do with it.

Did you not give her these bills in order that she might have assistance?—No, certainly not. I was never asked to give assistance. She said she was going to start a paper, and I said, "That is your business, and you will find that it will give you a lot of trouble."

You mentioned three other bills. Have you seen any of these bills?—No.

Have you any reason to suppose that there are such, not made out by the Princess?—There was the bill at Madeira, which her lawyer informed my lawyer, after my repudiation had been cabled for and sent back to South Africa. There was the bill of £400 or £500 that I was informed of by the manager of the Standard Bank; those two. Then I heard from time to time from Mr. Stevens, secretary to the Charter, that there were others being submitted in Cape Town, and it was owing to that that I said to Mr. Hawksley, my attorney, that we had better put some notice in the paper, otherwise some innocent person might be injured. A notice was then inserted in the London "Times," stating that I had heard that certain bills had been attempted to be negotiated in my name, and that they were forgeries, and the notice was sent here, but it was too late.

The Chief Justice: We know nothing of that repudiation of Mr. Rhodes's signature.

Mr. Rhodes: I heard that certain bills were being attempted to be negotiated in my name, and they were forgeries, so the notice was inserted in the "Times."

This concluded the cross-examination.

Mr. Sampson: Your lordship will find that all these signatures are taken from one copy.

Mr. Gardiner: I think my learned friend is wrong. The signatures all do vary on these letters.

Mr. Sampson: I am not sure that I am wrong. We have compared some of the signatures.

Mr. Gardiner (addressing the Court for the plaintiff) said the Court had the admitted signatures before it, and the Court had to deal with the case. He was not in a position to argue or prove any facts before the Court. If the Court refused provisional sentence he would consider whether to proceed with the evidence in the principal case.

De Villiers, C.J.: The plaintiff was very anxious to have the case set down for to-day, and when some weeks ago application was made on behalf of the defendant for the postponement, the postponement was strongly objected to. The case was accordingly allowed to be set down for to-day. To-day no witness appears on behalf of the plaintiff, and we have only the statement made by her counsel that the Princess Radziwil is ill. There is no affidavit in support of that statement, and, in the absence of that affidavit, the Court refused to postpone the case. The defendant has now been called, and positively denies the signatures. In my opinion they are not the signatures of the defendant, and are clearly forgeries. The application must, therefore, be refused. Of course, it is competent for the plaintiff to go into the principal case. I say it is competent for her to do so, but I think that after this expression of opinion about the case, the Court will not be called upon to go into the case, and we shall probably hear no more about it. The application must be refused with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before DE VILLIERS, C. J., and BUCHANAN and MAASDORP, J.J.]

SMITH V. SMITH. { 1902.
Feb. 7th.

This was an action for divorce, custody by plaintiff of the children of the marriage, and forfeiture by defendant of the benefits of marriage in community of property. The action was brought by the husband, Gerrit Johannes Smith, against his wife on the ground of her adultery with one Blackman.

Mr. Alexander appeared for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

Francis Henry le Sueur, clerk in charge of the Marriage Registers in the Colonial Office, produced the original marriage certificate of the parties to the suit.

Gerit Johannes Smith, the plaintiff, said that he was married to the defendant at St George's Cathedral on August 28, 1888. They were married in community of property. There were four children of the marriage alive. Up to 1900 witness and defendant lived happily together, and then disputes arose owing to defendant drinking, and a man named Blackman visiting her during witness's absence at work. Proceeding, witness deposed to going down to a house at Wynberg and finding his wife living there in adultery with Blackman.

Sarah Barnes corroborated as to defendant living with Blackman at Wynberg. Defendant had told her that she had had a child, of which Blackman was the father.

A decree of divorce, plaintiff to have the custody of the children of the marriage, was granted.

MDUNA V. MDUNA.

This was an action for divorce, brought by the plaintiff against his wife, on the ground of her adultery. Plaintiff also claimed the custody of the children of the marriage.

Mr. Wilkinson appeared for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

Francis Henry L. le Sueur, marriage register clerk in the Colonial Office, produced the register of the marriage of the plaintiff and defendant.

Sigani Mduna, the plaintiff, deposed that he married defendant in 1899, and they lived happily together until October last, when his wife left him. From what he heard, he went to a house in Boomstreet, and there found his wife in a locked bedroom with a man named Sabana.

Corroborative evidence having been given, a decree of divorce, with custody of the children, was granted as prayed.

BOYCE V. BOYCE.

This was an action for divorce, brought by the husband against his wife on the ground of her adultery. There was an alternative claim for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for divorce, with forfeiture by the defendant of the benefits of marriage in community of property.

Mr. Buchanan appeared for the plaintiff, and said that he would abandon the claim for decree of divorce on the ground of adultery.

Francis Henry le Sueur produced the original marriage register of the parties to the suit.

Joseph William Boyce, the plaintiff, deposed that he was formerly a cab proprietor in Cape Town, and on the 14th July, 1896, married the defendant, who was one of the Jubilee Singers. She left the same day for Kimberley, with witness's consent, for a month. She returned unexpectedly one day, and as she said she had business at Wynberg, witness gave her his horse and trap to drive there. When she came back in the evening she said that an accident had happened. She left in the cart to drive to the house, and witness had not seen her since. There had been no quarrel. He had warned her that if she left him without his consent she would have to stand the consequences.

The Court granted a rule nisi calling upon the defendant to return to plaintiff on or before April 15, failing which to show, on May 1, cause why a decree of divorce, with forfeiture of the benefits of marriage in community of property, should not be granted.

DUNCAN V. DUNCAN.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, brought by the husband against the wife.

Mr. Wilkinson appeared for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

Francis Henry le Sueur, clerk in charge of the marriage registers in the Colonial Office, produced the original marriage register of plaintiff and defendant.

Robert Duncan, the plaintiff, stated that he married defendant in Cape Town in December, 1891. There were three children of the marriage, aged nine, seven, and three years respectively. Witness and his wife lived together until eight or nine months ago. At the end of last year defendant was keeping a boarding-house, and witness lived there, but not with his wife. Defendant then left the boarding-house, and went to her parents, and refused to return to him. He tried to prevail upon her to live with him, but she had refused to do so. Witness had since lived in the Gardens.

The Court granted a rule nisi, calling upon defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before February 28, failing which, to show cause by March 12 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, plaintiff to have the custody of the children of the marriage.

VEALE V. VEALE.

In this case the husband, Westcott Harris Veale, sued his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for divorce. As a claim in reconvention, the wife asked a divorce a mensa et thoro.

Mr. Close appeared for the husband, and Mr. Searle, K.C., for the wife.

The defendant gave evidence first, and deposed as to her husband being intoxicated on a number of occasions, and also to his using abusive language towards her and shaking her by the arm. She had left him on account of his bringing a revolver home and saying that he was going to shoot himself and another man who had been gossiping about him.

The plaintiff denied the allegations of ill-treatment, and said he had not the slightest idea why his wife left him, nor had he had any warning of her intending to do so. He had made repeated efforts to get her to return, and he still wanted her to go back to him.

After argument, De Villiers, C.J.: I am of opinion that this application for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights should be refused. The conduct of the plaintiff has been such, in my opinion, as to justify the defendant in refusing, to return to him, but his conduct was not such as to justify the Court in granting a decree of separation a mensa et thoro, because for that purpose more than occasional instances of intemperance will be required. There would have to be proved habitual intemperance and habitual cruelty. Solitary instances of intemperance or solitary instances of cruelty would not be sufficient unless the Court was clearly satisfied that it was absolutely intolerable for the defendant to return to the plaintiff. In this case there have been occasional cases of intemperance, but in addition to that we have the inference of the correspondence. Every letter written by the defendant to the plaintiff is in affectionate terms, and his answers are callous, indifferent, and show absolute repulsion to the defendant. Clearly there was no bona fide intention on his part that she should return. His object was to get a divorce, and his desire was that she should not come back. I see no reason to disbelieve her statement that she met defendant, and he told her he would make her life unpleasant for her if she did come back. Under these circumstances, there must be absolution from the instance in the claim in convention, and also in the claim in reconvention. As to costs, I suppose there would have been no claim in reconvention if the plaintiff had not brought the action, and the plaintiff must therefore pay the costs.

Buchanan, J.: There is no allegation of misconduct in this case. The only allegation is that the wife left her husband without cause. The wife has all through shown the most affectionate regard for her husband, and the letter she wrote on his birthday is not only in the most affectionate terms, but in the most sincere terms she offered to return to him if he could provide for her. After that he comes into court and says, "I honestly want her back." If he wants her back let him first try to regain her affections, which he has tried his best to extinguish. Judgment must be for defendant with costs.

REX V. STEYNEVELDT. { 1902.
Feb. 7th.

Abusive Language—Sec. 10 of Act 27 of 1882.

Where accused, standing on his own ground, had used certain abusive language to complainant, who was seated at the door of her hut, a street but no barrier or wall being between the parties, and accused had thereupon been convicted and sentenced in a Magistrate's Court, and the High Court had on appeal sustained the conviction.

Held, on further appeal to the Supreme Court, that the abusive words were uttered in a public place, and that the decision of the Courts below must be affirmed. Q. v. Muller (9 Shiel, 569), distinguished.

This was an appeal against a decision of the High Court, dismissing an appeal which had been made against a judgment of the Acting Assistant Magistrate of Kimberley.

On the 25th September, in the court of the Resident Magistrate, Kimberley, Adriaan Steynveldt was charged with contravening section 10, Act 27 of 1882, in that upon or about September 18, 1901, and at (or near) Kimberley, in the said district, the said Adriaan Steynveldt did wrongfully and unlawfully make use of threatening, abusive, or insulting words or behaviour, to wit: "Bird whores with you." "You are unable to pay your house rent, so you whore with Bird, and he pays it for you," etc., towards Meta Galant, a native woman, with intent to provoke a breach of the peace, or whereby a breach of the peace may have been occasioned, at No. 2 Location, a public place in Kimberley. The prisoner pleaded "Not guilty." He was found "Guilty," and sentenced to pay a fine of £1 or to be imprisoned for seven days, with hard labour.

Mr. Lezard, attorney-at-law, who appeared for the defence, excepted to the summons, that it was not mentioned therein that the abusive language complained of was uttered in a public place.

Mr. Attorney Anders (for the prosecution) argued that No. 2 Location denoted a public place.

Exception overruled—the words "a public place" appearing on the original summons, and having been omitted from the copy apparently by a clerical error.

The evidence showed that there was a street between where the accused stood when he called first to complainant and the place where she was sitting. He was standing in front of his son-in-law's house, under the verandah. Complainant was sitting in front of her door, at a distance of about twenty yards from the accused. He seems afterwards to have crossed the road to speak to her. Two other persons heard the language complained of.

The Magistrate's reasons for his judgment were as follows: "I consider the language alleged to have been used by the accused towards the complainant to be abusive and insulting, and calculated to provoke a breach of the peace.

"It would appear that complainant and the accused were at the time in the open in front of certain houses, facing a street, in the location, and that the language complained of was shouted out by the accused to the complainant across the said street in the hearing of the bystanders. The language I therefore deemed to have been uttered in a public place."

The accused appealed from the decision of the Magistrate to the High Court, which disallowed the appeal and upheld the judgment of the Magistrate. The remarks of Lange, J. (who heard the appeal), are as follows:

"There were three grounds on which this appeal was argued:

"1. That the Magistrate was wrong in overruling the exception raised in the Court below to the summons.

"2. That the words alleged to have been used by the prisoner were not abusive.

"3. That they were not uttered in a public place.

"It will be seen that the original summons annexed to the record alleges that the words were spoken 'at No. 2 Location, a public place in Kimberley,' but in the copy served upon the accused the words 'a public place' were omitted. I decided that the Magistrate rightly held this omission not to be fatal to the summons, inasmuch as the term 'No. 2 Location' in the copy served, sufficiently indicated the public nature of the place.

"On the second point I held that the expressions clearly proved to have been used by the accused towards the complainant were undoubtedly abusive in character, and calculated to provoke a breach of the peace.

"As to the third point, the location appears to be a large collection of huts, with open spaces used as streets or thoroughfares, between them, and it was across one of them that the accused shouted the abusive language towards the complainant, who was sitting in front of her hut. In all the circumstances, I was of opinion that the words were uttered in a public place in terms of the 10th section of the Police Offences Act."

Mr. Benjamin (for appellant): A location is not necessarily a public place. There are private places in it, as well as public.

[Buchanan, J.: The abusive words could be heard in the road, and that is a public place.]

That does not constitute a breach of section 10 of Act 27 of 1882. See Queen v. Muller (9 Sheil, 569). It is necessary that the language used should be calculated to provoke a breach of the peace in a public place. See judgment of De Villiers, C.J., in Queen v. Brown (7 Juta, 101), Queen v. Steynson (2 H.C., 428), and Queen v. Perish (3 H.C., 369). In Queen v. Muller it was held that the principles governing the decision in Queen v. Brown must not be further extended. Here there was a street between the parties, but the appellant was standing on his own private property and the woman was on hers. In Queen v. Brown one person was standing in a public place.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There there was no abuse in the street; but in this case there was a good deal of abuse across the street.]

That is not a contravention of the section; besides it is by no means clear that appellant was not on the woman's property when he used the abusive language. Then, again, nothing was said in the summons about the language complained of having been used in a public place. The Magistrate seemed to attach importance to the fact that people in the street heard what was said: that was quite immaterial. Queen v. Brown and Queen v. Muller. A location is not necessarily a public place. Queen v. Mosler (4 Juta, 500). The summons framed as it is discloses no offence.

Mr. H. Jones (for the Crown) was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think it can admit of no doubt that the street at all events was a public place; it belonged to the location. The huts of the complainant and the defendant were on both sides of that street. Outside the house on the one side stood the complainant, and outside the house on the other side stood the defendant, and the defendant then uttered the abusive words across the street. There does not appear to have been any barrier or wall separating the parties. It is only the complainant's statement which throws a doubt upon the matter, because she says there was no street, but it so happens that the ground on which she stood is open, and there is nothing to separate that ground from the street. A breach of the peace would ensue quite as easily from words used in this way where the parties stood on their own ground, as it would if they stood actually in the street. It was not like a person using abusive words in his own house and the words being accidentally heard outside. The defendant's words were intentionally used across the street. Any person passing could hear those words. To all intent and purposes those words were uttered in the street, and under these circumstances the appeal must be dismissed.

BIDDULPH V. ADCOCK AND { 1902.
ANOTHER. { Feb. 7th.

Broker—Commission.

Where a broker had told his client that it was hopeless to attempt to sell certain property of the client to a man who subsequently purchased it direct from the client.

Held, that as in order to entitle a broker to commission there must be a contractual relation between the broker and the vendor, and as the sale must be completed through the agency of the broker, plaintiff was debarred from recovering brokerage by reason of the absence of these conditions.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Southern Rhodesia pronounced on May 23, 1901, in an appeal from the Resident Magistrate's Court of Bulawayo, in which the present respondents, Charles Christopher Adcock and Thomas George Norton, carrying on business in co-partnership, were the appellants, and the present appellant, Walter Ernest Biddulph, the respondent.

The summons in the Magistrate's Court called upon

Walter Ernest Biddulph, of Bulawayo (hereinafter styled the defendant), to appear before the Court of the Magistrate of this district, to be holden at Bulawayo on Friday, the 3rd day of May, 1901, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, with his witnesses, if he has any, to answer Charles Christopher Adcock and Thomas George Norton, carrying on business in co-partnership at Bulawayo, under the style or firm of Adcock and Norton, brokers and commission agents (hereinafter styled the plaintiffs), in an action wherein the plaintiffs claim payment of the sum of £9, and thereupon the plaintiffs complain and say:

1. On or about the 1st day of February, 1901, the defendant placed certain northern half of Stand 267, Bulawayo, in plaintiffs' hands for sale on commission, at a minimum price of £200.

2. The plaintiffs thereupon interviewed one Hankin and certain other persons in Bulawayo, and offered them the said portion of stand for sale.

3. Subsequently, on or about the 18th day of February, 1901, as a result of the negotiations entered into by plaintiffs, the defendant sold the said portion of stand to the said Hankin for the sum of £180, and thereupon plaintiffs became entitled to their commission on such sale.

4. The usual and ordinary rate of commission payable to a broker on the sale of landed property is 5 per centum of the purchase price, which charge is fair and reasonable.

5. All times have elapsed and all things have been done to entitle plaintiffs to the payment of their commission on the said sale.

Wherefore the plaintiffs claim payment of the sum of £9, with costs of suit, which sum the defendant refuses to pay.

Wherefore the plaintiffs pray he may be adjudged to pay the same, with interest and costs of suit.

To this summons defendant pleaded as follows:

For a plea to the plaintiffs' claim:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 4 of the summons, and denies paragraph 5.

2. With reference to paragraph 1, the defendant admits that he placed the said half stand in the plaintiffs' hands for sale with a reserve price of £200, but says that this was in or about the month of November, 1900, and not in February, 1901. The defendant instructed the plaintiffs to submit any offer received for the said stand to him.

3. With reference to paragraph 2, the defendant admits that the plaintiffs interviewed Hankin and others with a view to selling the said stand, but says that, when he placed the said stand in the plaintiffs' hands for sale, he specially instructed them to see Hankin in the first instance, and that it was owing to his instructions that Hankin was interviewed.

4. The defendant admits that he sold the said stand for £180 to Hankin on or about the 18th February, 1901, but denies that such sale was the result of the negotiations entered into by the plaintiffs with Hankin, and denies further that upon such sale the plaintiffs became entitled to commission.

5. The defendant says further that, at the request of the plaintiffs, he reduced the reserve price of the stand from £200 to £190 in December, 1900, and to £175 in January, 1901, but the plaintiffs failed to find a purchaser therefor.

6. That the only offer submitted by the plaintiffs was £150, which offer was submitted subsequent to the sale of the stand.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

And for a claim in reconvention, the defendant (now plaintiff) craves leave to refer to the foregoing plea, and says further:

1. That when he placed the said stand in the plaintiffs' (now defendants') hands for sale he specially instructed them to offer the stand for £200 to the said Hankin, and, if that amount was not obtainable, to submit any other offer to him for consideration.

2. That the plaintiffs (now defendants) offered the stand to Hankin for £250, and, when it was refused at that price, they failed and neglected to offer the same at £200, in terms of their instructions.

3. That if the plaintiffs (now defendants) had offered the stand for £200, as instructed, the said Hankin would have purchased, and defendant (now plaintiff) would have received the sum of £190, after deduction of commission.

4. That in consequence of the neglect of the plaintiffs (now defendants), the defendant (now plaintiff) has suffered damage in the sum of £10, being the difference between the sum of £190 abovementioned and £180, the price received for the said stand.

Wherefore the defendant (now plaintiff) prays for judgment for the sum of £10 with costs.

Mr. A. Welsh joins issue on 2, 4, 6, admits paragraph 3, denies 5.

The plea in reconvention.

Denied that if £200 not obtainable, plaintiffs were to submit other offer; and joined issue on all other points.

Judgment was given for the defendant. The following were the Magistrate's reasons:

In this case I may say at once that where there is any conflict of evidence I accepted Biddulph's as being correct, as against Norton. The latter was a most unsatisfactory, vague, irresponsible kind of witness. He was utterly wrong about dates, and as he himself says (page 5): "I had entirely forgotten the whole thing until I heard the stand was sold."

I found as facts (1) that the matter had been placed in plaintiffs' hands in November, and not at the end of January or the beginning of February; (2) that Norton had told defendant "that it was hopeless." Although Norton denies this, he states (page 6) "that Hankin had told him he could not go in for it."

It is admitted that plaintiffs did not introduce the parties (vide paragraph 3 of plea), but for some reason defendant thought it better that Hankin, the owner of the other half stand, should be approached by a broker. It is true that defendant did not know Hankin's name, but this he could easily have ascertained, as indeed he offered to do, when he put the matter in plaintiffs' hands. It was only after plaintiffs had quite failed to do anything that defendant directly approached Hankin, and even then without avail, as Norton said the matter was hopeless, and it rested there until another set of circumstances arose. Hankin thought cottages for prostitutes were going to be put up next door to him, and then, and only then, decided to buy.

He would have done the same if he had never seen Norton. He knew defendant was the owner, and could have approached him in any case.

The authorities were fully argued, and will, no doubt, be more fully argued again, so I will merely say that, in my judgment, the sale was not the result of any introduction or negotiations of the plaintiffs, but resulted from a new set of circumstances (the parties being known to one another), and consequently the plaintiffs are not entitled to commission.

It must be remembered, too, that plaintiffs had had the matter in hand for nearly three months, and defendant was justified in assuming that they had given it up when Norton told him it (Hankin) was hopeless.

From this judgment the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court of Rhodesia.

In the High Court, Mr. Justice Vintcent reversed the Magistrate's decision, allowing the appeal with costs, and Biddulph now appealed to the Supreme Court.

Mr. Justice Vintcent gave his reasons for his judgment as follows: In this case I was of opinion that the parties in the first instance were brought together through the introduction of Adcock and Norton, and that the subsequent transaction was attributable to this introduction. The purchaser, in my opinion, became aware of the desire on the part of the defendant to sell through Adcock and Norton. The fact that the purchaser had given up all idea of dealing until he saw the two men examining the premises did not affect the question. The case of Macronchie's Executrix v. Bidwell-Bardwards (2 Shail 155), in my opinion, had no application to this case, for it is clear that in the case quoted it was the advertisement which caused the sale. The Magistrate, I think, erred in saying that the two men who viewed the property were the causa causans; he, I think, confused motus with causa causans. If the purchaser had not been requested by the respondent to approach him personally he would have gone to the appellants, and the deal would have been carried through by them. The parties having then come together through the introduction of appellants, and the sale having been effected while the mandate was still running, I was of opinion that the commission was due.

Mr. Schreiner (for appellant): In this case there was neither an introduction by a broker nor business done though the instrumentality of a broker. Norton had told Biddulph that it was "a hopeless business," and Biddulph then went to Hankin direct. Norton had said that Hankin found it impossible to do business with him. If a broker finds it impossible to do business, his principal is quite justified in doing business direct. Hankin knew that Biddulph was the owner of the property (see p. 6 of the Record). McKendrick suggested that Hankin should go straight to Biddulph. Though the sale was not withdrawn Hankin had ceased to be the broker. I cannot understand how the judge in the Court below distinguished this case from Macnochie's Executors v. Edwards (9 Juta, 204). That case is quite in point. There the sale was concluded in consequence of an advertisement. Here it was in consequence of seeing two men looking at the property. They were on exactly the same footing as the advertisement in the other case. The original introduction of Norton to Hankin had nothing to do with the sale. The judge in the Court below drew a distinction between motive and causa causans. I must confess that I cannot follow this distinction. The point is "does the sale result in any sense from the action of the broker?"

[Buchanan, J.: There does not seem to be much difference on the facts, but rather on the interpretation of those facts.]

The broker's efforts did not tend to effect the sale. Hankin was off and Norton's introduction had nothing to do with the sale of the property. This was the finding of the Magistrate, and a Magistrate's finding on facts cannot be revised.

Mr. Searle (for respondents): There are several fallacies in my learned friend's argument. The fact that the principal told the broker that he was going to do business directly terminated the agency. The case is not at all like Macnochie's Executors v. Edwards. Here the broker introduced the parties.

For doing business, but here the broker complains that he could do no business, and surely, in that case, the vendor might have taken the business out of his hands. In Macnochie's case the broker got his decree on the ground that he had worked hard and had been successful. It was not so in this case. (See top of p. 8 of the Record, and the cross-examination near the bottom; also the negotiations on p. 5.) As long as property is in a broker's hands it must be sold through him. In this case the broker brought the parties together, and when this is done and a sale is effected between them thereafter, the broker must be paid. Hankin did not object to the transaction going through a broker; he wished that it should do so. If a broker tells A that B wants to sell, that is an introduction. Roux v. Brittain (2 Sheil, 169). In this case the matter had never been taken out of the broker's hands. If at a certain stage of the negotiations a broker tells his principal that the person introduced will not buy and ultimately this same person does buy, the broker is entitled to his commission. Mansell and Another v. Clements (9 L.R.C.P., 139). Some of the Magistrate's reasons are not quite correct, as the evidence does not bear them out. It is not admitted that respondent did not introduce parties, and Hankin's motive for purchasing is quite immaterial. The question is, would he have purchased without Norton's intervention? The plaintiff got information from Norton that Biddulph wanted to sell. See Kynaston v. Nicholson (8 L.T.R.N.S., 671), Wilkinson v. Alston (41 L.T.N.S., 394). This latter case is very much in point, as the broker had actually been told to take no further steps, yet, as a sale followed, he was held to be entitled to his commission. See also the judgment of Watson, L.J., in Toulmin v. Millar (58 L.T.N.S., 96); also Green v. Barlett (14 C.B.N.S., 681). Norton could and would have sold the property at the price at which it was finally sold, but he was instructed to ask £200 for it, whereas it was afterwards sold for £175. Although in this case the broker did not actually effect the sale, he certainly brought the parties together. In addition to cases already cited see Moir v. Watts (5 H.C., 109), Goldschmidt v. Adler (3 Juta, 117), Woolley v. Hunt and Another (7 H.C., 99), O'Brien v. Simpson (12 E.D.C., 77). This is one of the most recent cases in point.

Mr Schreiner (in reply) was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: When a question of fact is at issue between the parties, the Court must be guided by the view taken of the case by the Court which tried it originally, and here the Magistrate, in his reasons for judgment, says that "where there is any conflict of evidence, I accepted Biddulph's as being correct, as against Norton. The latter was a most unsatisfactory, vague, irresponsible kind of witness. He was utterly wrong about dates, and as he himself says, 'I had entirely forgotten the whole thing, until I heard the stand was sold.'" Continuing, the Magistrate says: "I found as facts

(1) that the matter had been placed in the plaintiffs' hands in November, and not at the end of January or the beginning of February; (2) that Norton had told defendant that it was hopeless. Although Norton denies this, his own evidence goes to show that it was so; for he states that Hawkins had told him he could not go in for it." The test of the case last mentioned by Mr. Searle was that there must be a contractual relation between the original introducer and the ultimate purchaser. Here, as far as the introduction in the first place is concerned, it is not so clear that it was the plaintiffs who introduced the parties, but that it was the defendant's own suggestion that the plaintiffs should communicate with Hankin, who was part owner of the stand. The plaintiffs communicated with Hankin, but they found themselves unable to come to a sale, and thereupon they told the defendant that a sale to Hankin was hopeless, and it was only after this statement to defendant that the latter communicated with Hankin direct. Now it is quite impossible, under such circumstances, to say that there is a contractual relation between the original introducer and the actual vendor to Hankin. That relation was put an end to by the statement made by the plaintiffs to defendant that a sale to Hankin was hopeless, and quite justified the defendant in there-after communicating direct with Hankin. The matter was put somewhat differently in some of the cases cited. In the case of Maconochie's Executrix v. Bidewell Edwards, the question put was: Was a sale completed through the agency of the broker? That always must be the test, and if they applied it in this case, how could it possibly be said that this particular sale was completed through the agency of the broker, when in the interval the broker had himself informed the seller that there was no chance of completing the sale. For this simple reason, I am of opinion that the High Court ought not to have interfered with the decision of the Magistrate. The case was mainly a question of fact, and upon every question of fact the Magistrate found in favour of the defendant. The appeal will be allowed, with costs in this court and the court below, and judgment entered in the Magistrate's Court for defendant, with costs.

Their lordships concurred.

BOUSFIELD V. THE DIVISIONAL COUNCIL OF STUTTERHEIM. { 1902.
Feb. 7th.
" 13th.

Payment of Debt by Stranger—
Arrear Rates—Tender—Act
28 of 1881.

Where a person, not being the owner of property in respect of which arrear rates are due to a Divisional Council, tenders payment of such arrear rates, the Council is not entitled to claim the attachment and sale of the property under Act 28 of 1881, if the person making the tender makes it in the name and on behalf of the owner or, if having a bona fide claim to transfer, he makes the tender on his own behalf.

This was an appeal against a judgment of the Hon. the Acting Judge-President of the Eastern Districts Court in Chambers on September 18, 1901, in an application between the Divisional Council of Stutterheim and - Frederic Henry Bousfield.

In the Court below the petition of the Divisional Council of Stutterheim stated:

1. That your petitioners are a Divisional Council constituted under and governed by the Divisional Councils' Act, No. 40 of 1889, and as such are lawfully empowered and authorised to assess and levy upon all immovable property situated in the Division of Stutterheim (except that which by law is exempt from the payment thereof such rates as to them shall seem necessary for their purposes, and that they have every year since their existence assessed and levied according to law a rate upon all such immovable property, and duly and publicly notified the amount of such rate and the date upon which it became due and payable.

2. That your petitioners annex hereto a schedule of immovable properties in the said division of Stutterheim, upon all of which rates duly assessed and levied as aforesaid by your petitioners have remained unpaid to your petitioners for the space of five years and upwards, and setting forth the registered owners of the said properties and the amount of rates due and owing in respect of such properties.

3. That the immovable properties appearing in the said schedule have all been abandoned, deserted, and left derelict, and the whereabouts of the owners thereof are unknown to your petitioners, although diligent search and inquiry have been made by them to ascertain the same.

4. That everything in your petitioners' power has been done to trace the owners of said immovable properties and to obtain payment of the rates due and owing in respect thereof but without success.

5. That your petitioners are unable to recover the rates in respect of the said immovable properties, and in all probability will not be able to recover any future rates levied and assessed thereon owing to the circumstances aforesaid.

6. That your petitioners are therefore desirous of having the said immovable properties declared derelict and attached and sold in terms of the Derelict Lands Act, No. 28 of 1881.

Therefore your petitioners pray that your lordships will be pleased to declare the said immovable properties set forth in the schedule hereto annexed as aforesaid derelict, and to order them to be attached and sold in terms of the said Derelict Lands Act, No. 28 of 1881, or to make such other order or to grant such relief as to your lordships shall seem fit.

Dated at Stutterheim, on this 10th day of June, 1901.

For the Divisional Council of Stutterheim.

F. E. PHILPOTT, Chairman.

I, Frederick Edward Philpott, Civil Commissioner and Resident Magistrate of Stutterheim and chairman of the Divisional Council of Stutterheim, make oath and say as follows: That all and singular the allegations contained in the foregoing petition are true in substance and in fact to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief.

F. E. PHILPOTT.

Sworn at Stutterheim this 10th day of June, 1901, before me,

M. W. R. RUSHTON, J.P.

The affidavit of Frederick William Kekewich Wyld, of Stutterheim, was as follows:

1. I am the secretary and treasurer of the Divisional Council of Stutterheim, and have held such position for the last twenty years.

2. I have read the petition of the Divisional Council of Stutterheim in the above matter, dated 10th June, 1901, and have examined the schedule attached thereto.

3. To the best of my knowledge and belief all the properties mentioned in the said schedule have been abandoned, deserted, and left derelict, and the whereabouts of the owners thereof are unknown.

4. Rates have remained unpaid to the Divisional Council of Stutterheim for the space of five years and upwards in respect of all the said properties, and that the amounts set forth in the said schedule as due and owing to the said Divisional Council for the rates in respect of the said properties are correct.

The affidavit of Alphonso Allen de Beer, of Stutterheim, was as follows:

1. I am a member of the Divisional Council of Stutterheim, and have been such for the last twelve years.

2. I have resided in Stutterheim for the last eighteen years, and am well acquainted with all the immovable property in the division of Stutterheim.

3. I have read the petition of the Divisional Council of Stutterheim in the above matter, dated 10th June, 1901, and have examined the schedule annexed thereto.

4. All the properties mentioned in the said schedule have been abandoned, deserted, and left derelict, and the whereabouts of the owners thereof are unknown to the best of my knowledge and belief, and rates have remained unpaid to the Divisional Council of Stutterheim for the space of five years and upwards in respect of all the said properties.

Upon this petition and affidavits a rule nisi was issued, and on the return day the present appellant filed the following affidavit:

1. I am a law agent practising at Stutterheim and also the Town Clerk of the Municipality.

2. I have read the applicants' petition and other papers filed of record.

3. In regard to lots 1 and 2, block I., mentioned in the schedule attached to the petition I deny the allegations contained in the petition with the exception that the rates were unpaid.

4. The said lots 1 and 2, block I., were originally granted unto one Louis Keifer, as will appear in the two deeds of grant hereunto annexed marked A and B and dated respectively 5th May, 1865

5. Thereafter the said Louis Keifer became insolvent, and one Wilhelm Emmerich, then residing at Stutterheim, bought the said two lots, but omitted to take transfer

6. From the year 1889 to 1892 I acted as the agent of the said Wilhelm Emmerich, and in 1895 I purchased four other lots of ground from him, and he then requested me to sell his remaining property, namely lots 1 and 2, block I.

7. I had offers for the said two lots, but when it became known that transfer had never been taken by the said Emmerich from the said Keifer's insolvent estate, intending purchasers withdrew, knowing that the cost of transfer would exceed the value of the said lots.

8. Later on the said Emmerich died, leaving a joint will with his wife Katherine Elizabeth Emmerich, of which copy is attached, marked "C."

9. In January, 1899, I received an offer of purchase of the said two lots from one Inspector Wilson, and by letter dated 13th January, 1899, annexed marked D, communicated it to the widow Emmerich, and received a reply, dated January 18, 1899, annexed marked E enclosing the titles to the said two lots.

10. Thereafter in June, 1899, I received a further letter from the widow (letter mislaid), and on the 21st of that month wrote letter annexed marked F, saying that if Wilson did not take the said two lots I would take them myself at £20, and my purchase was subsequently concluded, and later on I received letter annexed marked G, dated 5th July, 1899, giving information as to means of obtaining transfer, but shortly afterwards the present war broke out and made transfer impossible for the time.

11. On the 11th April, 1900, Mr. A. A. de Beer, member of the applicant Council, came to me about the said lots, and told me that he was anxious to buy them. He has since purchased four lots adjoining these. I then told him that I had already bought them myself, so that he (De Beer, a Councillor) knew that the lots belonged to me. About the same time I often had conversations with the secretary of the Council, F. W. Wyldé, about my purchase of the said two lots, and he also knew that the lots belonged to me.

12. Afterwards, on the 5th July, 1901, I heard that applicants intended to apply to have the said two lots, with others, declared derelict, and I at once wrote them letter annexed marked H, and in reply received letter annexed marked I.

13. On the 30th July, 1901, I again wrote to applicants, letter annexed marked J, pointing out that they were not acting in good faith, as they or their legal advisers had previously shown me a list of properties to be declared derelict which did not include lots 1 and 2, Block I, which had been added to the list at the last moment.

14. On the 1st August I again wrote to the applicants, copy annexed marked K, tendering payment of any rates due in respect of the two lots, and received their reply, dated 2nd August, annexed marked L.

15. I say that it was within the knowledge of the Council that the said two lots belonged to me, and that I have never declined to pay the rates, but tendered them immediately I knew what were in arrears, and further that the said lots were not left derelict.

After argument by counsel, the Acting Judge-President (Hon. W. P. Schreiner, K.C.) made the rule absolute, the following being his reasons: I have a communication from the Registrar of the Eastern Districts Court intimating that an appeal to the Court of Appeal has been noted against a decision of the Eastern Districts Court sitting in Chambers, delivered on the 18th September, 1901 in the above matter, and I am asked to furnish a statement of reasons for the decision. I have before me a printed copy of the record. The Divisional Council of Stutterheim had obtained on petition a rule nisi under the Derelict Lands Act No. 28 of 1881 and Act No. 24 of 1887, calling upon persons having or pretending to have any right or title to certain properties situated in the village of Stutterheim, to show cause why these properties should not be declared to be abandoned and left derelict, and why they should not be ordered to be attached and sold to satisfy rates due and unpaid for the space of five years.

Amongst the properties affected were lots 1 and 2 Block I. in that village, which were registered in the name of Louis Keifer.

Mr. Bousfield, now the appellant, appeared by counsel to show cause against the rule as affecting these two lots. He filed affidavits to which the Divisional Council replied. After a postponement the matter came before me finally on the 18th September at a sitting in Chambers of the Eastern Districts Court. It was proved to my satisfaction that the lots were abandoned, deserted, and left derelict, and Mr. Bousfield's claim to be regarded as the owner of the lots, in my opinion wholly failed. He alleged a purchase from one Mrs. Emmerich whose deceased husband had purchased the lots in the insolvent estate of Keifer. In support of his claim he attached certain letters and relied on annexures D, E, F, G, as proving his allegation. He had in 1899 entered into negotiations on behalf of Inspector Wilson for the purchase from Mrs. Emmerich of the lots in question. I could not find in the correspondence any proof of an actual concluded sale to Mr. Bousfield personally. But he alleged in paragraph 10 of his affidavit, after referring to that correspondence "my purchase was subsequently concluded." This allegation I did not find to be at all credible seeing that there was no suggestion of any later correspondence or that he and Mrs. Emmerich or her son had met and concluded the bargain. It appeared to me that, until after the Council took steps under the Act, Mr. Bousfield never took up the position that he was the buyer of the lots, and the affidavits filed for the Council appeared to me to afford more satisfactory evidence of his attitude than the affidavit of Mr. Bousfield. It was not possible to conclude from those affidavits that Mr. Bousfield had established his claim to be regarded as owner of the lots in question, as he had failed in establishing that claim I held his offer to pay arrears rates to be a voluntary offer which the Council was not legally bound to entertain. The Council I thought could not be forced to permit the uncertainty of the title to continue indefinitely. The lots were of small value and it is right to mention that in reply to an inquiry by me, counsel for Mr. Bousfield did not wish to press for an opportunity to file pleadings under section 9 of the Act for the trial of the client's claim. Holding, therefore, that the claim had failed, the Court ordered that the rule nisi should be made absolute and that the present appellant should pay the costs occasioned by the opposition.

Mr. Searle (for appellant): I rely chiefly upon the statements made in appellant's affidavit. In their answering affidavits the Council impeached the purchase by De Beer, and said that he had not objected to the valuation. The Court will never declare lands derelict when there is an owner who wants to sell.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The person who wishes to sell is not the owner, but a purchaser from a purchaser who bought from the owner.]

The lands are not derelict; they are being looked after. The Council has made no attempt to trace the owners, though there are affidavits from persons who stand registered as owners in the Divisional Council books. The Council could have recovered the rates from De Beer, since the owner and the occupier are both liable for rates (Act 40 of 1889, section 269).

Bousfield. He cannot get out of paying the rates. There are people in Johannesburg who are now arranging to send down the title deed to him. Bousfield made a tender of the rates.

[Buchanan, J.: If he had done so on behalf of Emmerich there might be something in it.]

There may be a doubt as to who is the owner of the property, but it certainly is not derelict. De Beer himself wanted to buy it, and now he cannot come and say that he does not know that there is any owner, and that the land is derelict. In 1900 De Beer tried to purchase the property through Bousfield. Bousfield refers in his affidavit to this transaction. The correspondence between Emmerich and Bousfield shows that the land is not derelict. See The Bank of Africa v. Daniel (3 Sheil, 103). In that case the Court allowed a very distant relative of a former owner to put in a claim. Bousfield has a clear locus standi to object, if only as representing the Emmerichs, and the Council could have recovered their rates under section 269 of Act 40 of 1889.

Mr. Buchanan (for respondents): Bousfield is claiming this property as his own. He is not coming in as one of the outside public. But he is not the owner, for there is no evidence of any sale from the Emmerichs to him having been concluded. In 1886 Bousfield was only acting as agent for Wilson, and in his letter of June 21 he only offered to take the lots in the event of Wilson refusing to take them. Then again he has not paid for this property and does not say that he has done so. If he bought the property why was no declaration of purchaser and seller drawn up in terms of Act 5 of 1884? He had only six months in which to get transfer unless he wished to incur the fine (section 5, Act 5 of 1884). Why again did not he, a Town Clerk, who is presumed to know something of these matters, not ask the Council to register the property in his name instead of Emmerich's? De Beers account of the conversation does not at all agree with Bousfield's. Bousfield clearly not being the owner of this land, he has no right under the Derelict Lands Act to show cause. No one can show a title to the land; it is vacant, unfenced, and, in short, derelict. Bousfield had been agent for the Emmerichs, and yet in 1900 he stated that he did not know where they were; he does not even say that he knows where they are now. Surely nobody can be allowed to make himself owner of a piece of land by the simple process of paying rates thereon as owner. Bousfield has previously refused to pay rates on behalf of Emmerich (see Wyld's affidavit, p. 10 of the record, paragraph 3).

Mr. Searle (in reply): Bousfield's tender of rates was quite unconditional; he did not tender as owner (see Bousfield's letter of July 5, 1901, record page 16).

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea (February 13).

De Villiers, C.J., in giving judgment, said: This is an appeal against an order of the Eastern Districts Court making absolute a rule nisi previously granted under Act 28 of 1881 for the attachment and sale of certain two lots of land in the village of Stutterheim to enforce the payment of certain arrear rates, which, however, the appellant has tendered to pay. The rule was granted upon the affidavit of the secretary of the respondent Council to the effect that the lots had been abandoned, deserted, and left derelict, that the owner thereof could not be found, and that the Divisional Council rates had remained unpaid for the space of five years and upwards. On the return of the rule the appellant objected to its being made absolute in regard to the two lots in question on the ground that they were not derelict lands, he having purchased them from the executors of one Emmerich, who had purchased them from one Keifer. From the appellant's affidavit it appears that the lots are still registered in the name of Keifer, that in 1895 the appellant, as agent of Emmerich, endeavoured to sell the lots, but failed; that after the death of Emmerich he again communicated with the executors, mentioning one Wilson as a probable purchaser, and that the answer was that the executors were prepared to sell provided the appellant handed to them £20 clear of all expenses. So far there is no dispute between the parties, but the appellant further alleges that, failing a purchase by Wilson, he himself purchased the lots, and this purchase is not admitted by the Council. In support of his statement that he had purchased the lots, the appellant produced the copy of a letter to the executors, in which he asked for certain particulars as to the property, and stated that if Wilson did not take the erven he would himself take them for £20. On behalf of the respondent Council it is objected that the appellant has produced no proof that his conditional offer was accepted, but the reply written on behalf of the executors on the 5th of July, 1899, raised no objection to the conditional nature of the offer, but proceeded to give some of the particulars asked for. In fact, Wilson did not buy the lots, and the condition upon which the appellant had offered to buy was fulfilled. I am satisfied from the terms of the executors' reply that they did not object to the appellant having the lots for the same price for which they had offered it to Wilson, and that, if the Transvaal war had not intervened, the sale to the appellant would in all probability have been completed. He appears to me, at all events, to have a bona fide claim against the executors for the transfer of the lots. The facts that he did not claim to be placed upon the valuation roll, and that he did not tender to pay the arrear rates until after the rule nisi had been published, do not prove that his claim against the estate of Emmerich was a dishonest one, for he may well have believed that until he had received transfer, he was not legally liable to pay the rates. In fact, he did, before the order appealed against was made, tender to pay to the Council all the arrear rates on the two lots and his share of the costs already incurred by the Council, and the question to be determined is whether the Court below was justified in ordering the attachment and sale of the lots for the purpose of enforcing a payment, which the appellant was ready and willing to make without such attachment and sale. There can be no doubt that by our law a payment made by a third person to a creditor on behalf of a debtor, even if the debtor is ignorant of the payment or objects to it, constitutes a valid discharge of the debt. Voet (46, 3, 1) says that this doctrine would not apply to the discharge of an obligation which is in its nature such that it can only be properly performed by the debtor in person, but the obligation to pay rates is clearly not of such a nature. It does not, of course, follow that the creditor is bound to accept the payment, and upon this point Pothier (on Obligations, sec. 464) has made the following pertinent observations: "The question whether a stranger who has no authority for the purpose, either specially or by reason of his situation, nor any interest in discharging the debt, can oblige the creditor to receive the payment, is attended with difficulty. . . We must look for the decision of this question to the law—Digest (46, 3, 72)—which decides that the offers made to the creditor by any person whatever, in the name and without the knowledge of the debtor, for the payment of his debt, places the creditor en demeure," so as to put an end to any action which the creditor may have commenced. It is necessary, however, that the tender made by a perfect stranger should be made in the name of the debtor, and, if the appellant in the present case had not shown that he had a bona fide claim to obtain transfer, his tender made in his own name and on his own behalf, and not on behalf of Emmerich, might have been properly ignored by the Council. The fact, however, that the appellant had such a bona fide claim imposed the duty on the Council to accept the tender, leaving it to the appellant to make good his claim against Emmerich. It certainly was not the duty of the Council, after the appellant had tendered the rates and his share of the costs, to enter into an inquiry as to the validity of the appellant's claim against Emmerich, unless perhaps the claim was on the face of it palpably dishonest. The object of the Act, as stated in the preamble, is to provide for the speedy and inexpensive recovery of arrear rents, rates, and assessments, and if a tender for the payment thereof is made by a bona fide claimant, whether he be the owner or not, the public body should accept the money, and, if it refuses, the Court should not, after such refusal, order the attachment and sale of the property. The learned judge, in his reasons, says: "It was not possible to conclude from the affidavits that Mr. Bousfield had established his claim to be regarded as owner of the lots in question. As he had failed in establishing that claim, I held his offer to pay arrear rates to be a voluntary offer which the Council was not legally bound to entertain. The Council, I thought, could not be forced to permit the uncertainty of the title to continue indefinitely." I do not, however, find anything in the Act to justify the view that only a person having a valid claim to be regarded as owner has a locus standi to object to the attachment and sale of land under the Act. Nor do the sections relating to the recovery of arrear rates confer on the public body any right to insist upon certainty of title. The person from whom the appellant says he bought the property was never the owner of the property, and yet the respondent Council placed his name on the valuation roll, and for several years received rates from him. The appellant does not claim to be the owner, but he alleges that he has a claim against the executors of Emmerich to compel them to do what is necessary to transfer the ownership to him. If his claim is a valid one, the executors will first have to obtain transfer from Keifer, and then gave transfer to the appellant, and until then he will have no claim to be regarded as the owner. But his interest in the property was surely such as to justify the Court in staying its hand and refusing to order the sale and attachment of the lots for the purpose of enforcing a payment which he was perfectly ready and willing to make. Of course if there was such an apparent want of bona fides on the appellant's part as to make it reasonably certain that he will not succeed in obtaining transfer from Emmerich, the Court would have been justified in refusing him any assistance, but I do not gather from the reasons given by the Court below that it took this extreme view of the appellant's conduct. That Court had no better opportunity than this Court has for judging of the appellant's conduct, and as the affidavits satisfy me that the appellant's claim for transfer is an honest one, I am of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, and the order for the attachment and sale of the two lots in question should be discharged with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Buchanan, J., said: I concur, and I have only one remark I would like to add to those of his lordship. I think the learned Judge in the court below mistook two different procedures under the Derelict Lands Act. There is a procedure for the recovery of rates, and there is also a procedure for enabling a person to establish his title to land of which he claims transfer. This is not a case in which Bousfield claimed transfer or registration of the land in his name, but a claim by the Divisional Council for the payment of rates on property in which he (Bousfield) claimed an interest. If the Court had to decide with the information before it as to whether Bousfield was the owner, he had not established such a claim as would have entitled him to apply for an order under the Derelict Lands Act to have the property transferred into his name. That is a totally different procedure from one to recover rates.

Maasdorp, J., also concurred.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

MACDONALD V. MACDONALD. { 1902.
Feb. 10th.

Mr. Benjamin, who appeared for the plaintiff, said that originally this was an action for a declaration of nullity, or in the alternative, for an order for restitution of conjugal rights. At the time the action was instituted, the plaintiff had certain information that his wife had been previously married. Consequently it was thought advisable to draw the declaration in the alternative. They had not been able to get evidence that the first husband was living at the time of the second marriage, and so they had abandoned that portion of the case.

After formal evidence as to the marriage had been given by Francis Henry le Sueur, clerk in charge of the marriage register, Alexander Macdonald, the plaintiff, was called. He said he was married to the defendant on the 22nd December, 1899, at Cape Town. After the marriage, information came to witness that the defendant's first husband was living. He taxed the defendant with this, and defendant said that she had a letter from a friend stating that her first husband had died since the marriage. In April, 1900, defendant sailed by the S.S. Warri-gal for Sydney. Witness did not object to her going. He thought at the time that her first husband was alive. He had since made inquiries as to the first husband, but had not been able to obtain information. He therefore abandoned his petition for declaration of nullity.

An order was granted for restitution of conjugal rights as prayed, defendant to return on or before the 15th May next, or to show cause on the last day of the May term. Personal service was ordered to be made, if possible, otherwise publication in an Australian paper, and in the "Government Gazette."

VAN DER SPUY V. KETS. { 1902.
Feb. 10th.

This was an action to recover the sum of £250, together with interest thereon and costs of suit.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff was a farmer residing at Oakdale, D'Urban-road, in the Cape Division; the defendant is a hotelkeeper and storekeeper, residing at Kuil's River, in the division of Stellenbosch.

2. In or about the month of October, 1900, the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in the sum of £100. The defendant, at the said date, was in want of funds, and thereupon requested the plaintiff to give him a promissory note for £400, payable at the Stellenbosch District Bank.

3. The plaintiff agreed to the above, and on or about the 24th October, 1900, the plaintiff gave to the defendant a promissory note for £400, payable four months after date.

4. On the maturity of the said note it was reduced by the sum of £150, plaintiff paying £100, and thus discharging his indebtedness to the defendant, and defendant paying £50 in to plaintiff's account in the Stellenbosch District Bank. where the said note had been discounted by the defendant. The plaintiff thereupon, at the request and for the further accommodation of the defendant, agreed to renew the said promissory note for the balance, viz., £250, and on February 23, 1901, the plaintiff signed a promissory note for the sum of £250 in favour of the defendant, due four months after date, and payable at the said bank.

5. The said note for £250 was discounted by the defendant at the said bank, and thereafter the defendant, having failed to take up the said note at maturity, the plaintiff paid the same to the said bank.

6. The plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the amount of the said note, to wit, £250, with interest from June 23, 1901, the date of the maturity of the said note, and he has called on the defendant to pay him the said amount, but defendant has neglected and refused so to do.

The plaintiff claims: (a) the sum of £250, with interest from the 23rd June, 1901; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The following plea and claim in re-convention was filed by the defendant.

1. Defendant admits paragraph 1 of the declaration.

2. In the year 1900 the parties entered into a joint venture of purchasing horses and mules, for the purpose of sale to the military authorities, and certain horses and mules were so bought and sold. Upon notice from the said authorities ending the said buying by them, the parties met and discussed the accounts between them, and an account was mutually stated and settled between them, showing the plaintiff indebted to the defendant in the sum of £350.

3. The plaintiff was further indebted to the defendant in the sums of £148 and £61, due respectively for money paid by defendant for and on behalf of the plaintiff, and for commission due on the sale of certain bullocks, sold for and on behalf of the plaintiff, through Messrs. Woodhead, Plant and Co., and paid by defendant.

4. Thereafter, in payment of the said debt, the plaintiff signed a promissory note for £100 in favour of Wilson, Son and Co., the proceeds of which the defendant received, and which, at maturity, was paid by the plaintiff.

5. Thereafter the plaintiff in part payment of the balance on the said debt, and by mutual arrangement, signed a promissory note for £400 in favour of the defendant, and made payable in the Stellenbosch District Bank, of which defendant received £300 and the plaintiff received £100, he being in want of money at the time.

6. At the due date thereof the plaintiff was unable to meet the said note, and it was agreed at the instance of the plaintiff, who was not able to pay more than £100, that the defendant should advance the plaintiff £50 to assist him in making part payment and renewing the said note, such being the terms as stated by the plaintiff upon which the bank would renew the note. The defendant advanced £50, and the plaintiff paid in addition £100, leaving a balance due on the note of £250, for which the plaintiff renewed the said note, and which is the note referred to in the declaration. Save as aforesaid, the defendant denies the allegations in paragraphs 2; 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the declaration.

7. The plaintiff is indebted to the defendant in the sums of £350, £148, £61, £50, and £10 17s. 4d., advanced by defendant for discount, and stamps on the said £400 note, or £619 17s. 4d. in all, less the sums of £300 and £100 paid by plaintiff, leaving a balance due by plaintiff to defendant of £219 17s. 4d.

Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed.

For a claim in reconvention, defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) claimed £219 17s. 4d., with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

In his replication and plea to the claim in reconvention, plaintiff (defendant in reconvention) admitted that there was a joint venture as alleged, but denied that the accounts between them were ever stated and settled as alleged, or that he owed defendant £350 as alleged. He said that defendant made the purchases of the horses according to agreement, and brought them to him, and that he (Van der Spuy) paid for all. He said he sold certain bullocks to Messrs. Combrinck and Co., but defendant had nothing to do with that. He admitted signing a promissory note for £100 in favour of Wilson, Son and Co., but denied that this was in payment of the debt alleged, and said that the amount was for defendant's share of profits realised from the sale of the horses and mules. He said the £400 note was an accommodation note. He denied being unable to meet the note. He denied the claim in reconvention.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Wilkin-son), appeared for the plaintiff.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), for the defendant.

Mr. Searle called

Sybrant Johannes van der Spuy, the plaintiff, who said that after the commencement of the war he had transactions with defendant in connection with a military contract for the supply of horses and mules. The transactions commenced about February. Kets did the buying, and witness paid for all the animals. Kets brought the bulk to witness's farm, and part to the Remount Depot at Stellenbosch. Witness kept the rejected animals. In about May, 1900, the business was closed. There were then 22 rejected mules on witness's farm. Witness had advanced all the money for the buying of the animals. There was a "squaring up," and in settlement of the account witness gave defendant a note for £100, made in favour of R. Wilson, Son and Co., to whom defendant said he was indebted. Afterwards defendant took away half the rejected animals. That closed off everything. Kets afterwards bought a hotel property. He came to witness in October and said he wanted money. He asked witness to give him a bill for £300, which he said would carry him through. Witness said he would give a bill for £400, and defendant could give him £100 cash. Defendant discounted the bill at the bank, and a couple of days later brought him £100 in notes. The bill was for four months. It was for their mutual accommodation, not on account of any transaction. Afterwards, in February, witness saw defendant, and told him the bill would be due in a few days. Defendant said he could only pay £50, and witness said that if he paid £50 and witness paid off his £100 the bill could be renewed for £250. Witness gave his cheque, and the bill was renewed for £250. Kets paid the charges on the bill on renewal. The bill was renewed for four months. Kets took the cheque and went to the bank. About a fortnight before the bill became due witness saw Kets, and reminded him that the bill would shortly be due. Afterwards witness got a notice from the bank. Witness wired to defendant, and also wrote to him twice asking for an explanation as to why he did not meet the bill. The telegram was sent after the bill was due. Subsequently witness met defendant and asked him why he had not met the bill. Defendant said he had no money to meet the bill, and witness asked him why he did not come to him and arrange about it. Afterwards witness's attorneys sent a letter of demand for £250. In reply to this defendant's attorneys wrote back on the 12th August stating that witness was indebted to defendant. Until the plea was filed witness never had any statement from defendant about the £148 or £61. Witness kept a book about the military transaction up to the time of the settlement. Witness's clerk, Somerville, who left in November, 1900, kept the book. There was no record in the book about the transaction with regard to the note. Somerville made out a receipt for £400, which was signed by defendant. This was not stamped. It was dated 14th October.

Cross-examined: Plaintiff advanced altogether £4,254. Defendant alleged that some money was due in respect of another matter. The first cheque was dated April 17, 1900. All the mules and horses purchased by Kets were handed over to plaintiff; the average price per head was about £28. Plaintiff also bought mules for the military, but he could not remember whether he bought one or one hundred. Before being in this venture with Kets plaintiff was in a similar venture with Mr. John Faure. On one occasion plaintiff asked Kets not to press him for money as there was a large sum due to him from Faure. When Somerville left plaintiff's employ plaintiff only got back from him the wages book. The promissory note fell due in December. The £100 was in payment of plaintiff's account up to date. Somerville was present when this statement was made, and the balance due to Kets was £350. P. J. Hofmeyr and Kets had been buying mules before plaintiff joined the latter in similar transactions. In April plaintiff had an interest in 200 oxen, which were at Kuil's River, but he denied that he asked Kets to find a purchaser for them. At a subsequent sale of the cattle Mr. Graaff bought 177 oxen at an average of £10 a head, but plaintiff admitted no liability in respect of commission on their sale to Woodhead, Plant and Co. Kets might have introduced the Cold Storage people to the sellers of the cattle. Plaintiff did not suggest to Kets that he should have the bill discounted either by the A.B.C. or the Stellenbosch District Banks.

Re-examined: Neither Muller nor Woodhead, Plant and Co. claimed commission on the sale of the cattle.

Advocate Wilkinson then read evidence taken on commission of Richard Somerville, lately a clerk in plaintiff's employ, and now on active service, who deposed that he wrote out one promissory note for £400. He saw Kets subsequently, and he appeared quite satisfied with the settlement. No proper entries were made of the transactions regarding the horses and mules in the books kept by witness. Several hundred horses and mules were sold to the military. Witness owed plaintiff money when he left his employ. On one occasion defendant offered him £10 if he would not come into town to see plaintiff's attorney in regard to this action.

For the defence, Mr. Schreiner called Johannes Andrew Kets, landed proprietor and hotelkeeper at Kuil's River, who deposed that in company with plaintiff he came to Cape Town, and saw the military authorities, as the result of which he and plaintiff agreed to purchase mules for the military for joint account. Witness kept a small pass-book of the transactions. Witness received £4,254 from Van der Spuy, and he spent all that money on purchasing mules, with the exception of nearly £300. Van der Spuy drew all the money from the military. Somerville went into the books, having been sent by plaintiff to witness for that purpose. The statement produced was in his handwriting, and was made in witness's presence. This statement was not discovered at the time the evidence was taken on commission. This statement showed that witness had purchased mules and a few horses in five trips to Piquetberg to the value of £3,298 10s., and in the Cape Division to the value of £663 10s.; a total of £3,962. On the statement Mr. Van der Spuy owed witness £350. He paid witness nothing on that day, saying something about there being between £3,000 and £4,000 to come from Mr. Faure. One day witness again asked Van der Spuy for money, and the latter said that he had not yet received money from Mr. Faure, and further said: "I will give you a promissory note, but don't make it too much." Then Van der Spuy made the promissory note for £100. Since then he had made no payment on account. Van der Spuy had never lent witness money in connection with the building of a house. Afterwards witness had given a receipt for £400. That came about through witness asking him for money. Van der Spuy asked how much witness wanted, and the latter said: "If I get £300 that will do so long." Van der Spuy then said: "Make it £400, and give me £100." Witness did so, and gave Van der Spuy a £100 by cheque, payable to Van der Spuy. That cheque was given to Somerville, and passed through witness's bank-book. Witness did not charge a share of the discount because it was said that that could be settled afterwards. A few days before the bill fell due Van der Spuy came to witness's house at Kuil's River, where witness was sick in bed, and said: "Here's my £100; you have got your money already." Witness questioned that, and Van der Spuy replied that he had been finding out from his books that he did not owe witness any money. Van der Spuy said they would have to make some arrangement about the bill, and that he had no money. Witness was sick, and did not want a bad name at the bank, and therefore gave Van der Spuy

£50 to get a renewal of the bill. He did not give that £50 as any obligation, and only did it because he was sick, and did not want a bad name at the bank. The note purported to be for value received, but witness had never in any way received from Van der Spuy any consideration for that note of £400. Witness took steps to see that Van der Spuy took up the bill. Witness purchased mules with Mr. Hofmeyr on May 11, and sold them to Mr. Van der Spuy. Van der Spuy paid all the money for these mules with the exception of £148. Witness had often mentioned that transaction to Mr. Van der Spuy, and he had never repudiated the debt or said that he had paid the money. On the day of the settlement he said that as soon as he got the money it would be all right, and he would pay that amount. Witness, at Van der Spuy's request, had tried to get a purchaser for some bullocks. He saw Mr. Woodhead, who got a purchaser in Graaff, and witness had paid Mr. Woodhead 2½ per cent commission, amounting to £43 5s. Witness had no personal interest in that business at all. Witness paid the commission because Van der Spuy said he had no money. Van der Spuy said he would see that witness got the money. Witness never tried to prevent Somerville giving evidence for the plaintiff. Somerville came to him and spoke about his expenses, saying that they would be £10. Witness said that he would see that Somerville got his expenses. As a matter of fact, Somerville was called and gave evidence for the plaintiff.

Cross-examined: Witness had not now the cheque for £100 payable to Van der Spuy, which he had given to Somerville. He had his cheque-book with Van der Spuy's name on the counterfoil.

Peter Johannes Hofmeyr said he was a farmer residing at Kuil's River, and knew defendant and plaintiff. Witness and defendant used to buy mules and sell them to plaintiff. The last transaction was settled in May, after plaintiff and defendant had gone in for the joint venture.

Cross-examined: Kets settled with witness for the £148 account before the end of May.

Re-examined: Kets always settled with Van der Spuy, and witness had nothing to do with the latter.

William Thomas Wilson, of the firm of R. Wilson, Son and Co., said that on July 14 his firm received the bill for £100, which was afterwards retired by Mr. Van der Spuy.

Laurence Woodhead, of the firm of Woodhead, Plant and Co., said that he knew defendant, who came to him and asked him to find a purchaser for 300 oxen which were coming from Caledon. Witness said that he would undertake the business for 2½ per cent. commission. That was agreed to, and witness offered the oxen to several people, including the military, his firm being contractors to the military for other lines. Witness then communicated by telephone with the South African Cold Storage Company, who were the meat contractors for the military, on the matter of buying the oxen, and afterwards confirmed his telephone message by writing. They replied, and a meeting was arranged for a certain day at Kuil's River, but then the oxen did not turn up. On the second day they turned up, and Mr. Muller, who was in the employ of witness's firm, went to Kuil's River as their representative, and arranged the matter with Mr. Graaff, a certain number of the oxen being purchased. After that witness sent in the account for commission. Witness only knew Kets in this matter, and did not know Van der Spuy at all.

Cross-examined: Kets paid the commission on November 27, 1900. The commission was for introducing the purchaser.

By the Court: Witness's firm were contractors to the military for general hardware. His firm often sold cattle, wool, buchu, etc., for customers up-country.

Hendrik J. Muller deposed to being present, as the representative of Woodhead, Plant and Co., at the sale of the cattle. He took Mr. Graaff from D'Urban-road to Kuil's River in Mr. Van der Spuy's cart.

This concluded the evidence.

After argument on the facts,

Buchanan, J., in giving judgment, said: There have been considerable business transactions between the parties, and the evidence led before the Court has left the questions in dispute in a very great uncertainty. The parties are not even in accord as to when these transactions commenced. It is vaguely stated in the plea that they commenced in the year 1900. The plaintiff says they commenced somewhere about January or February, and the defendant says they did not commence until April or May. These transactions were connected with a joint venture in purchasing mules for the military. Plaintiff supplied the money, and defendant supplied the labour, and the parties were to divide the profits. The sum of £4,254 was advanced in cash by plaintiff to the defendant, and the latter bought some 136 mules for £3,290 odd. He also afterwards bought more horses and mules for another £600 odd, leaving a balance in his hands of £292. At the termination of the venture there were twenty-two mules left, and these were divided between the parties. The mules bought by the defendant were paid for at prices ranging from £22 odd to £26 2s. 6d., roughly speaking, an average of something over £24 each, and sold to the military at prices ranging from £26 to £31. The only evidence as to the price is the plaintiff's statement that they averaged £28. On the transaction, therefore, as far as the mules were concerned, there was something like £450 or £460 profit to be divided between the parties. But there are other transactions between them. The parties kept the merest memoranda of the different transactions, and one Somerville, who was a clerk in the plaintiff's employ, was understood to keep accounts between the parties. This Somerville has now left, but both parties agree that they met with Somerville, went over the accounts, and came to a settlement. This was some time in May or June, when a balance was struck, and according to the defendant, there was an amount in his favour of £350, but according to plaintiff's evidence, £100 only was due by him to defendant. It is admitted that a £100 bill was given by plaintiff in favour of Wilson, Son and Co. in July. This both parties admitted was equivalent to a payment by plaintiff to defendant. Then in October there was a promissory note for £400, signed by plaintiff in favour of defendant. This note prima facie is an acknowledged liability by plaintiff to defendant, but both parties admit that it was to some extent at least, if not altogether, an accommodation bill. Plaintiff alleges that it was altogether an accommodation bill, while defendant says it was only part's accommodation, in so far as it concerned plaintiff. Defendant contended that the bill was intended as payment to him of £300, and that the additional £100 was to be repaid to the plaintiff, as the latter was in need of money. Plaintiff, on the other hand, says that he got £100, and that the £300 was an accommodation to the defendant. Admitted that there was a settlement of accounts between the parties, it is very difficult now, in the absence of books and the absence of Somerville, to arrive at a clear understanding how that statement was arrived at. It would seem, however, to be a fact that Somerville, the clerk, met the parties, that they went over the accounts, and that afterwards Somerville kept the memoranda and papers connected with the accounts. Some balance seems to have been struck between the parties. When the bill for £400 was given, a very curious kind of receipt was taken from Kets, in which he simply acknowledged receiving £400 from plaintiff. Now this receipt is in no way corroborative of the allegation that it was an accommodation bill for the £300, nor on the other hand of Ket's statement that it was to the extent of £100 for the accommodation to the plaintiff. When the £400 bill matured, plaintiff paid £100 towards taking up the bill, while defendant paid £50, and the bill was renewed for £250. When this £250 bill matured, defendant repudiated any liability for the amount, and the plaintiff was obliged to retire the note, and now bases his case upon it being an accommodation note. Now, as Mr. Schreiner has very fairly pointed out, in the conflict of testimony, in the absence of documents, and in the absence of any clear statement of account, we must to some extent be guided by the document itself. Now the form of the note does not assist the plaintiff in any way in his claim for £250. I think that it is quite possible that this £250 is really the balance of the amount which was arrived at when the statement of account took place between the parties. Under these circumstances, as far as the claim in convention is concerned, the least we can do is to give absolution from the instance; we might almost give judgment for the defendant. Then as to the claim in reconvention. On this claim the defendant says that when he and plaintiff settled the account, there was a balance struck showing £350 due by plaintiff to him. After this balance was struck he admits getting the £100 on Wilson's bill, and he admits getting the benefit of £250 out of the £400 bill, making £350. So that according to his own evidence the balance struck between the parties has been paid to defendant by plaintiff. Defendant also says there are some other items still open, more especially two, one for £148 and the other for £61, reduced now to £43, as commission defendant paid to Woodhead, Plant and Co. Now both these payments had been made by defendant before the statement of accounts between the parties. As to the £148, it was for mules which defendant said he and one Hofmeyr sold to plaintiff before the joint transaction took place, and his share of amount Hofmeyr says was actually paid to him by defendant, while he admittedly had funds of plaintiff's in his hands. In my opinion, at the time of the settlement this amount was brought up in the settlement. As to the discount paid to Woodhead, Plant & Co., if this had been the sole claim, on the evidence, I should have very great difficulty in saying that there was any authority for paying this amount to Woodhead, Plant and Co. at all, but as at that time also defendant had moneys in hand belonging to the plaintiff, I think that this also was brought up in account at the time of the settlement. Then there is a balance of £50 further claimed as the amount paid by defendant on the £400 note. If my view of the figures is correct, then this also was included in the balance struck after these payments were made in May, 1900, and that no demand was made at any time upon the plaintiff until an action was brought. When an action was intimated and a demand in August, 1900, defendant replied that the plaintiff owed him a large sum of money, and that he will furnish a statement of claim. Immediately a statement of claim was requested, but it was not supplied to the plaintiff, who then proceeded with the action and filed a declaration, and it was only when the plea was filed for the first time was there any allegation as to what was the amount outstanding. I am convinced from the evidence that had plaintiff not instituted any action at all, we would never have heard anything of the counter-claims made in this case. I think on the evidence, in the absence of the accounts and in the absence of corroboration of the statements of defendant, that these amounts were brought up and settled between the parties, and that there is no further liability. Taking defendant's own statement that there was a balance of £350, that has been paid; and taking the plaintiff's statement that this was partly an accommodation bill for his own benefit, in the absence of figures it is impossible for the Court to say that it was altogether an accommodation bill for the benefit of the defendant. If the statement showed £800 profits, the defendant got the benefit of at least £400, and he therefore received a very handsome profit. I think, therefore, that absolution from the instance must also be given in the claim in reconvention. There is a small amount for £10 discount on this bill. If it was for the mutual accommodation of the parties, at the utmost it is a matter of a couple of pounds or so, and therefore a small amount not worth discussing. On the main items in dispute I am inclined to the opinion that the plaintiff has failed to prove that this was a note for defendant's accommodation, and that the defendant has failed to show any claim against plaintiff after the settlement in May between the parties, when a balance was struck of £350, which amount has been paid. Judgment will therefore be absolution from the instance in the claim in convention, with costs, and absolution from the instance in the claim in reconvention, without any order as to costs.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Right Hon Sir J H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G. (Chief Justice), the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN, and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

In re THE BARQUE } 1902.
"MARGA." } Feb. 11th.

Ship—Attachment—Delivery of Goods—Delay—Damages.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved as a matter of urgency for an order attaching the German barque Marga as security for the claim and costs in an action about to be brought. The petitioners were the con-signees of cargo by the Marga, which arrived in Algoa Bay with a cargo from Hamburg. On the 28th January an application was made by the master of the vessel for the attachment of the cargo, pending an action to be brought against the consignees for moneys alleged to be due for demurrage. No order was then made, the applicants (then respondents) undertaking forthwith to give security for any sum that might be awarded to the plaintiff by judgment of this Court, the delivery of the goods not to prejudice any right of the applicant in respect to the goods, which were to be judged as if no delivery had been made, the applicant to give security for costs in case of his proceeding further by action; all costs heretofore incurred to be costs in the cause. Petitioners stated that they had complied with that undertaking. Proceeding, petitioners said that they had claims against the Marga to the amount of £250, and costs, including the costs of the previous application. They had now been applied to, as agents of the ship, by the master of the Marga to clear the ship, in order that she might proceed to Natal, but there had been no offer to find security for petitioner's counter-claim, in the action to be brought by the master. It was therefore asked that the ship be attached.

Mr. Schreiner appeared for the respondent, and said that the amount of the claim was excessive, as it was impossible that £250 damages could have been incurred, even if through the captain's action, as alleged, the cargo had been delayed in delivery for a few days. There was nothing to show that the goods would have been delivered immediately, even if there had been no delay by the ship, in the congested state of the port of Algoa Bay. He suggested that the amount for which security was asked should be reduced.

De Villiers, C.J., said that £250 was rather excessive, and the Court would therefore grant an order attaching the vessel, unless security was forthwith given for £200 to cover the claim and costs, costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

MALCOMNESS AND CO. V. A. } 1902.
R. MCKENZIE AND CO. } Feb. 11th.

This was a case set down on the roll for the previous day, and not reached.

The matter was one in which the plaintiffs claimed from the defendants certain cases entrusted to them by the plaintiffs for delivery to the Colonial Government, or their value, £397 15s. 6d. It now appeared that the goods had been delivered, and consequently the matter, since the pleadings were filed, had been reduced to a question as to who should pay the costs of the action. It appeared that Messrs. A. R. McKenzie and Co. had agreed with the plaintiffs to deliver on their behalf certain 500 cases of sheep dip to the Colonial Government, the defendants undertaking to store, look after, forward, and take receipts for these cases. From what could at first be ascertained, it appeared that receipts had been obtained for 414 cases delivered, but there were none for the other 86 cases, although, as previously mentioned, it had since been discovered that these cases also had been delivered.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for plaintiffs; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Buchanan), for defendants.

Mr. Searle asked to be allowed to take the evidence of a witness from East London, who was anxious to return as soon as possible. Mr. Schreiner raised no objection.

Mr. Searle then called

Walter Gustav Alven Kadow, who said that he was in Messrs. Malcomess's employment, and arrived in Cape Town from Europe early in March last. When he arrived here, he found out that this sheep dip had arrived, and was in the hands of defendants. Witness was instructed by Malcomess to go and see McKenzie about it, and on three occasions in March he went down to McKenzie's, where he saw three clerks. He would recognise them if he saw them, but he did not know their names. He asked about the receipts for the sheep dip, and whether they had received and delivered everything, and they told him distinctly that they had. After he had called three or four times he got receipts for 414 cases out of the 500. They said they would send the other receipts over to witness's firm as soon as they could get them. Witness could not swear to it, but he believed they said they had mislaid the receipts. The 414 receipts witness posted to East London and followed the next day by steamer.

Cross-examined: Malcomess did not go with witness to McKenzie's. He was distinctly told by McKenzie's people that all the goods had been delivered.

Re-examined: Witness asked what number of cases there was, as he did not know himself. They could not give him that. They could not trace it in their books at all.

The Chief Justice: If you knew all the cases were delivered, why was the action brought?

Witness: I did not know how many cases there were, nor did Mr. Malcomess.

And you supposed because they did not give you the receipts for the 500 cases that the rest had not been delivered?—I told Mr. Malcomess that all the 500 cases had been delivered to the Government.

Mr. Searle said the position was that they could not get payment from the Government until they got these receipts. They never got these receipts, but they ultimately got a document, and settled the matter all right with the Government later on.

The further hearing of the action was postponed till next term.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

TURREIN V. TURREIN. { 1902.
{ Feb. 12th.

This was an action by Louise Turrein against her husband for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which for divorce.

The parties were married in New York in December, 1895. The wife had handed her marriage certificate over to a person connected with the case. In the latter's office a fire occurred, and up to the present the certificate had not been found.

Mr. Wilkinson for the plaintiff.

Louise Turrein, the plaintiff, said she was married in New York in December, 1895. She resided with her husband in New York for a year, and then they came to Cape Town, where they lived for four or five years. During that time defendant treated her badly, and as saulted her on more than one occasion. On the 7th January last year defendant left her, first breaking open a drawer and taking some money. Witness earned the money by working as a dressmaker. It amounted to $80 or £100. Defendant did not tell her he was going. Witness heard her husband was in Paris or London. She had not been able to find him.

By the Court: Since he left, her husband had sent her a letter from London. She gave this letter to a Mr. Lynch. In the letter he said he had to go to Paris. He said nothing about coming back. He gave an address, to which witness sent a letter for him.

Mr Wilkinson said that he had no instructions as to the letter. Lynch was the person into whose custody the marriage certificate was given.

A decree of restitution was granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff by the 15th May, failing which, a rule nisi for divorce would be issued, returnable on the 31st May. The Court directed efforts to be made to effect personal service; otherwise publication as before.

BARON V. MCKENZIE. { 1902.
Feb. 12th.

This was an action for damages for loss of personal luggage.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Buchanan for the defendant.

M. Searle said that there was an application on the roll for the 1st February for a postponement of the case, and for a commission. This had not yet been reached. The plaintiff asked for a commission to take the evidence of Captain Webb, a material witness, who had gone to Australia.

Mr. Buchanan objected to the postponement.

Mr. Searle said it was now only a question of costs, the goods having been recovered. They did not now know the exact whereabouts of Captain Webb. If the Court did not think that a commission should issue, he was prepared to go on with the case on the correspondence.

Buchanan, J.: I think it is better to go on with the case. It is only a question of costs, and you will be incurring further costs.

Mr. Buchanan said that unfortunately his witnesses were not here at present. The matter might be allowed to stand until the end of the roll for the day.

The case was ordered to stand over until the first day of next term, Mr. Searle saying that a commission would be applied for if it were found possible to take the evidence of Captain Webb.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. { 1902.
TOWN COUNCIL OF CAPE { Feb. 11th.
TOWN. " 18th.

The sea-shore—Lands reclaimed from the sea—Alluvion—Act 26 of 1893.

Land reclaimed from the sea intentionally and by artificial means belongs to the Crown, and cannot be claimed as an accession by alluvion by the owner of land adjoining that portion of the sea which has been so reclaimed.

Where the Town Council of Cape Town has so reclaimed land it is not entitled to the ownership unless it has obtained the consent of the Colonial Government and of the Table Bay Harbour Board to such reclamation, for the purpose of acquiring the ownership under the 154th Section of Act 26 of 1893.

This was an action for a declaration of rights.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is the Hon. Dr. Thos. William Smartt, in his capacity as Commissioner of Public Works, and as such representing the Government; the defendant is a corporate body elected under the provisions of Act No. 26 of 1893.

2. For some time past builders and others have deposited clay, stones, and other material upon the foreshore of Table Bay, and upon land formerly covered by the sea, immediately adjoining thereto, at a spot near the Central Jetty, at the foot of Adderley-street.

3. In consequence of the deposits aforesaid, the said foreshore and land have become suitable for building and other purposes.

4. The defendants claim this land as their property, and have commenced the erection of certain buildings thereon.

5. The plaintiff contends that as regards the foreshore it is vested in the Government by section 5 of Act No. 20 of 1858, and as regards the land formerly covered by the sea, it is the property of the Colonial Government by common law.

6. The said foreshore and land is required by the Colonial Government for the purpose of railway extension, and the erection of the said buildings would cause great damage to the said Government.

7. The plaintiff has obtained a temporary interdict restraining the defendants from proceeding with the said buildings, pending the decision of an action to be brought by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff prays for a declaration (a) that the said foreshore and land is the property of the Colonial Government; (b) that the said interdict may be made perpetual; (c) alternative relief, and (d) costs of suit.

Defendants excepted to the declaration as follows: Before pleading to the declaration the defendant Council excepts thereto on the ground that the same is vague and embarrassing in that it is not clear therefrom whether the whole of the foreshore of Table Bay or only portion thereof, and if so, what portion thereof, is claimed as the property of the Government, whilst under and by virtue of section 110 of Act No. 26 of 1893 the foreshore within the Municipal limits is expressly vested in the defendant Council, excepting in so far as the same is situated between the north side of the Breakwater and the mouth of the Castle moat or ditch. Wherefore they pray that the declaration may be quashed or amended with costs.

For a plea to the declaration, the defendant Council said:

1. It admits the capacity of the plaintiff, but says that the defendant Council is a body incorporated under Act No. 26 of 1893.

2. As to paragraphs 2 and 3, it says that the said clay, stones, and material have from time to time, both prior to and subsequent to the year 1893, been deposited by builders and others, inhabitants of the Municipality, by and with the consent of and under arrangements with the defendant Council as a matter of Municipal improvement, and in consequence thereof by gradual accretion the position of the shore has from time to time advanced, and land has been reclaimed from the sea, and has become suitable for building and other purposes, the consent of the said Government and of the Harbour Board has been given to the said operations, in so far as the same is necessary and required by law, and the said land reclaimed as aforesaid being within Municipal limits, is now the property of and vested in the said Council under Act No. 26, 1893, sections 110 and 111.

3. It admits paragraph 4, but denies paragraph 5, and says that the foreshore within the Municipal limits is by virtue of section 110 of Act No. 26 of 1893 expressly vested in the said Council, excepting in so far as the same is situate between the north side of the Breakwater and the mouth of the Castle moat or ditch.

4. It does not admit paragraph 6, nor that the plaintiff has a right to expropriate any portion of the said land for railway purposes, and says specially that no notice of expropriation as required by the Railway Acts has been served upon it, relating to the land now claimed.

5. As to paragraph 7, it craves leave to refer to the order of Court and the documents filed of record.

6. And in case this Hon. Court should find that the formal consent required by law was not given by the said Government to the reclamation of land as aforesaid, the defendant Council says that the land referred to in paragraph 2 of the declaration and now claimed by the Government has been reclaimed from the sea after and in consequence of an arrangement arrived at with the Government in or about the year 1896, whereunder the Government agree not to make any claim in respect of the said ground, and the Government is now and by its action and conduct estopped from raising any claim thereto.

Wherefore the defendant Council prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs, and for a claim in reconvention the defendant Council, now plaintiffs in reconvention, says:

1. It craves leave, in so far as necessary, to refer to the matters above pleaded, and says that the foreshore of Table Bay within Municipal limits is by virtue of section 110 of Act No. 26 of 1893 vested in the plaintiffs in reconvention, save in so far as the same is situate between the north side of the Breakwater and the mouth of the Castle moat or ditch.

2. For many years past portions of land within Municipal limits have been from time to time reclaimed from the sea partly by plaintiffs or by the inhabitants of Cape Town, and partly by natural causes, and the plaintiffs have expended large sums of money for the said purposes, and have rendered portions of the said ground suitable for building purposes and for Municipal improvements; the said reclamation and expenditure, in so far as the same has been made or defrayed by the plaintiffs in reconvention, has been so made or defrayed with the consent, knowledge, and approval of the defendant in reconvention, and in so far as is necessary, of the Table Bay Harbour Board.

3. The plaintiffs in reconvention further submit that the inhabitants of the Municipality have by law a right of access to the foreshore within Municipal limits, and say that from time immemorial the said inhabitants have exercised the said right and used the foreshore for purposes of health and exercise, and the plaintiffs in reconvention claim on their behalf that they are entitled to enjoy the said right.

4. The defendant in reconvention now asserts the right of the Colonial Government to the whole of the foreshore and the said reclaimed land, and claims the right to exclude the inhabitants of the Municipality from access thereto.

5. In or about September, 1896, the Colonial Government now represented by defendant in reconvention served a notice on the plaintiffs claiming to expropriate the whole of the ground reclaimed as aforesaid or such portion thereof as the said Government might require. The plaintiffs deny the right of the Government to expropriate as claimed, and submit that the said notice is illegal.

6. On or about 22nd May, 1900, the defendant in reconvention obtained a temporary interdict, restraining the plaintiffs from proceeding with buildings upon portion of the land reclaimed as aforesaid, in consequence whereof plaintiffs were compelled to cancel a contract which they had entered into for the erection of the said buildings, and have sustained damages in the sum of £1,162 1s. 2d. Wherefore the plaintiffs in reconvention claim: (a) A declaration of rights as to the property in and control over the foreshore of Table Bay within Municipal limits; (b) a declaration that the said foreshore is vested in them, excepting in so far as the same is situate between the Harbour Board enclosure on the north side of the Breakwater and the mouth of the Castle moat or ditch; (c) a declaration that the inhabitants of the Municipality are entitled to free access to the said portion; (d) a declaration that the land reclaimed as aforesaid is now vested in them; (e) a declaration that the notice served on them by Government in September, 1896, as to expropriation of the land reclaimed as aforesaid is illegal, and of no force and effect; (f) an order discharging the said interdict; (g) £1,162 1s. 2d., damage sustained by reason of the said interdict; (h) alternative relief; (i) costs of suit.

For an answer to the exception, the plaintiff said the same is bad in law, and prays that it may be quashed, with costs.

For a replication, the plaintiff said:

1. Save as to the depositing of clay, stones, and material, the plaintiff denies the allegations in paragraph 2 of the plea, and as to paragraph 4, the plaintiff begs to refer to the terms of the said section 110.

2. The plaintiff denies paragraph 4, and says that notice of expropriation was served on the defendant in September, 1896.

3. Save for admissions, the plaintiff denies the allegations in paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6, and joins issue thereon.

For a plea to the claim in reconvention, the plaintiff begs to refer to the pleadings in convention, and says:

1. That he admits paragraph 1, save that he says the words "Harbour Board enclosure on" should be inserted between the words "between" and "the" in the 5th line of the said paragraph.

2. The plaintiff admits that portions of land have from time to time for years past been reclaimed by the defendant and others, but he denies the other allegations in the said paragraph. He has no knowledge of any sums spent as alleged, and does not admit. He denies the alleged consent, knowledge, and approval of the Government, and he says that no approval or consent of Parliament has ever been given.

3. The plaintiff admits the right of the public to the foreshore situated within Municipal limits, as it originally existed, and claims the right to exclude the public and the defendant from such portions of the foreshore and the reclaimed land situated between the Breakwater and the Castle, as may be required for public purposes. Save as above, the plaintiff denies paragraphs 3 and 4.

4. As to paragraph 5, the plaintiff admits the allegations of fact, but denies the defendant's legal contention, and says the said notice referred to the land situated between the said Breakwater and the Castle moat.

5. The plaintiff admits that he obtained an interdict in May, 1900, and begs to refer to the terms thereof, but denies all the other allegations in paragraph 6.

Wherefore he prays that the defendant's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

For a rejoinder to the plaintiff's replication, the defendant says that he joins issue with the plaintiff upon the said replication, and denies the allegations of fact and conclusions of law therein, and prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

And for a replication in reconvention, the defendant (now plaintiff in reconvention) says that, save in so far as the plea in reconvention admits any of the allegations in the claim in reconvention, he denies all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the said plea contained, and joins issue thereupon, and again prays for judgment upon the said claim, with costs of suit.

Mr. Ward (with him Mr. H. Jones and Mr. Benjamin), for the Government; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), for the Town Council.

Mr. Ward said that perhaps the exception to the declaration would be disposed of first.

Mr. Searle: In view of the replication I would suggest that it is better that the whole matter should be settled at once. It was not quite clear from the declaration what plaintiffs claimed, but the replication was clearer.

Mr. Ward: I am quite willing it should be so. We do not claim any of the foreshore, save what has been reclaimed by Government. By Act 20 of 1858, as well as by common law, the foreshore is vested in the Colonial Government.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the foreshore?]

The usual definition is the space between high and low water mark. English and Roman authorities do not quite agree as to the definition, but the difference is not material to this action.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are the parties agreed as to the meaning of "foreshore" ?]

Mr. Searle: Yes, I think so; but a portion of the foreshore is by statute vested in the Town Council.

Mr. Ward: We do not claim to exclude the public from the foreshore, save in so far as it may be required for public purposes.

Mr. Searle: We think there is more in dispute than the land marked red on the plan (see paragraph 5 of the replication). If this land is expropriated there will be no access to the foreshore.

[De Villiers, C.J.: People can go to Woodstock and get on the beach there.]

The Government are bound to give us reasonable access.

[Buchanan, J.: You can get to it from the foot of Adderley-street.]

The point is that in September, 1896, the Government served notice of expropriation of this reclaimed land. They took up the position that we might reclaim it, and that then they could step in and take it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The question is: whether this land is the property of the town or of the Government?]

[Buchanan, J.: The Government cannot expropriate their own property.]

Mr. Ward then called

Charles H. Hepp, who said he was a pensioner of the Table Bay Harbour Board. He had been in the employment of the Board from 1860 until 1900. From 1872 he was foreman of the excavations, and had direction of the tipping in connection with the reclamation of land in Table Bay. At that time, as far as he could remember, the water came up to the back of the shambles, where the railway is now. The reclamation work commenced about the latter end of 1872. That was the ground between Adderley-street and what was called the watering jetty. A tramline was laid down from the Docks, and this was used to bring the soil excavated from the Docks to the back of the shambles. In addition, rubbish was occasionally deposited there by building contractors in the town. These builders required to have a proper permit from the Harbour Board before they could deposit rubbish there. Witness had to see that that was carried out. A retaining wall was built, so as to secure stuff from washing into the Bay. That would be nearly opposite where the present road joined Adderley-street. It cut across where the Sea Point Railway-station now stands. That wall was constructed by the Harbour Board, and they filled in the whole space between the old shambles and the wall. When the wall was finished, the water was continually up to it. There was always water up to the wall. The reclamation was completed about 1876. From the time witness stopped until the Town Council began, no reclamation was carried on. At low water there were 4 feet of water at the wall. When the wall was finished, witness's duty at that spot ended, and he could not swear as to what was afterwards done.

Cross-examined: Some of the debris used in the reclamation came from Cape Town; not a great quantity. There were not persons depositing rubbish there every day. Witness was on this particular work about three years, and in that time they reclaimed the land from the shambles to the stone bank. Behind the wall it was pretty well levelled.

The Chief Justice pointed out that the Council would have admitted everything the witness had said, and that therefore the evidence was no help to them.

Frank Robb, assistant general manager of the Table Bay Harbour Board, said that he knew the ground which had been reclaimed by the Corporation at the foot of Adderley-street. Before they started the reclamation, there was a rubble bank at that particular spot, and the tide was always up to that spot, so that the Town Council really began by depositing rubbish, etc., into the sea.

Cross-examined: Witness was speaking about the time of the agreement between the Harbour Board and the Council, at the end of 1893 and beginning of 1894. Previous to that, persons wishing to tip rubbish there had to obtain a permit from the Harbour Board.

Mr. Ward said he had more evidence as to the reclamation work by the Board, etc., but in view of the expression of opinion of the Court, he would not call it, but would now close his case.

Mr. Searle called

Francis Frederick Gooderham, who said he had been superintendent of roads under the Town Council since 1896, and knew the portion of land reclaimed at the foot of the Central Jetty, where the Electric Lighting Station was started. In 1896 the coast line was 20 feet at the back of Fillie's Circus. Some 250 feet had been reclaimed by the Council, who had tipped waste material there. They had been continuously engaged there, and that morning there were an overseer and four men employed at the place. Tipping had been done by the Town Council and by other people under permission of the Town Council. Nothing offensive was tipped there.

Cross-examined by Mr. Ward: The stuff was still being tipped, notwithstanding the action.

Joseph Fock said he was born in 1849, and was a member of the Town Council for eleven or twelve years. The Town Council first began to reclaim in about 1893, and had been going on ever since. As to the work by Mr. Teague, he had to make a wall coming out from the Central Jetty. The work shown on the plan was done. This was covered up, land all round having been reclaimed. The portion shown dark on the plan was done, and was afterwards covered in. Witness was well acquainted with the foreshore from the Central Jetty on towards Fort Knokke. When the wall was built they intended to make a pier and also to carry out the drainage pipe further into the sea. There used to be a road leading from Tennant-street down to the beach some years ago. This was now blocked up. There was no way now to the foreshore except at the Central Jetty.

John Thompson said he was chief draughtsman in the Town Council office. He entered the office in April, 1894. He had prepared a plan (produced) showing the work of reclamation done during particular years. There was not now a road as shown on the plan. This road was sketched from an old map. The plan showed the extent of the reclamation in different years. The plan was made from records in the Town Council office, and was correct.

Cross-examined by Mr. Ward: Witness had made no survey.

Alfred M. Thorpe said he was in the treasury department of the Town Council. The records in the office showed that in 1894 £636 4s. 6d. was spent in the reclamation of land, in 1895 £122 10s. 6d., in 1896 £73 17s. 3d., in 1897 £128 10s., in 1898 £319 11s. 11d., in 1899 £685 14s. 8d., in 1900 £1,928 6s. 9d., and in 1901 £534 13s. 3d., the total being £4,429 8s. 10d. This included cost of cartage. It represented the actual costs.

Cross-examined by Mr. Ward: The amounts were made up of costs of cartage and supervision. It included the amount for the foundation of the station. The ground was occupied by the merry-go-round and circus. He could not tell the revenue from these.

By Sir John Buchanan: The place was a convenience to the Town Council.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: The ground at present was good; £1,128 was paid to cancel the contract, and for work done in connection with the building of the Electric Lighting Station, which was interdicted. This was included in the £4,000. Witness would prepare a statement showing what amount had been paid to Teague, and what rents had been received from the property.

Thomas Ball said he was a member of the Town Council, and was Mayor when the Electric Lighting Station contract was entered into with Small and Morgan. The amount of the contract was £7,000. After some of the work had been done the Council was interdicted at the instances of the Government from proceeding further. The cost of the work done was something over £700, and 7½ per cent. on the remaining portion was paid as compensation to the contractors, this amounting to £450. Witness was a builder and contractor, and looked into the matter in the interests of the Council. He thought this was a very fair settlement with the contractors.

Mr. Searle put in correspondence and plans, and closed his case. Among the correspondence was a letter from the Harbour Board written in 1893, setting forth the conditions upon which the Council could reclaim and retain the land in question.

Mr. Ward (for the Government): As to the ownership of the land reclaimed, a portion of it was the property of the Colonial Government. Voet (1, 8, 9). That applies directly to building on the sea shore, but a reference to passages there cited shows that the principles there laid down apply no less to reclamations from the sea.

[De Villiers, C.J.: To whom did the land beneath the sea belong?]

To the Crown.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How far out?]

We need not go into that, for this is a port. Voet (49, 14, 3).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Has the Government merely the supervision of these places, or has it dominium?]

The passage referred to gives much more than supervision. Under the Roman Law it was considered advisable to get the sanction of the Government before building on the sea-shore, but what was merely a matter of prudence under Roman Law was a matter of necessity under the Law of Holland. In Anderson and Murison v. Colonial Government (1 Sheil, 259) it was laid down that that the public have a right to use the sea-shore from the sea but it does not follow that they have a right of access from the land. Grotius (2, 1, 25, and 2, 9, 9), Censura Forensis (1, 2, 17), Gronevigen ad Instit. (2, 1, 2), Voet (49, 14, 3). Grotius (3, 3, 2.).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have you any authority to show that the Crown is the owner of land reclaimed from the sea? That is on a different footing from the bed of a Harbour.]

It is all the same as land which has been built upon. Voet (41, 1, 17), Grotius De Jure Belli ac Pacis (2, 3, 2). Roman Dutch authorities are not very explicit on this particular point, as these questions did not often arise 300 or 400 years ago; but, according to modern English Law this land certainly belongs to the Crown. Stephen's Blackstone (2, 1, 13, near the end of the chapter.) The bottom of the sea adjoining the coast belongs to the Crown. Benett v. Pipon (1 Knapp, p. 60). See judgment of Winford L.J. (p. 68).

Hence below low watermark the bottom of the sea belongs to the King. Blundell v. Catterall (5 Barn and Ald, 268), but I refer more particularly to p. 298, where it is stated that the sea-shore belongs to the King and that subjects have no right to appropriate it without licence. The King can seize any structure erected on the foreshore. See also Johnson v. Barret and Others (Alyn's Rep. of 22 Car. p. 6). See also Chitty on the Prerogative (p. 206) and Addison on Torts (7th edition, p. 438). Clearly in Roman Dutch Law the sea coast and the land contiguous thereto belong to the Crown, and this is also the case in the law of England. See Gronewegen ad Institut. (2, 1, 22 and 23) as to land rising in a river. But this particular is claimed also upon other grounds and not merely on the ground that it is reclaimed from the sea. The Town Council seem to claim this land as alluvium, but alluvium is not the result of any artificial process, and, moreover, the land increased by alluvium belongs to the owner of the adjoining land and not to anybody who may have carried on the work of reclamation. Attorney-General v. Chambers and Attorney-General v. Rees (4 De Gex and Jones, 55). But the adjoining owner is not entitled to the increase, if he have increased his land by artificial means. Again, this ground is not waste ground within the limits of the Municipality. The limits of the Municipality are determined by Sec. 2 of Act 26 of 1893. If the Town Council has artificially driven back the low water mark they are not entitled to the increment thereby obtained. If there is a natural boundary which is destroyed by artificial means, the boundary-line remains the same. On no ground can the land be called alluvium, and even if it were so, it would not belong to the Town Council, as it is outside Municipal boundaries.

Mr. Searle (for the Town Council): Counsel for the Government has quoted authorities as to the right of the Sovereign with regard to the sea. But this is a question of land, not of sea. Counsel for the Crown holds that this land is outside the limits of the Municipality. If this be the case the Municipality has no jurisdiction and could not prosecute for offences committed on the land in question. The Roman Dutch authorities all say that one may help alluvium by artificial means. A large portion of this land abuts—not on Government land—but on Adderley-street.

The rest of the land we are claiming abuts on our own property. These lands are waste lands. Attorney-General v. Hanmer (67 W.R., 804); where see judgment of Watson, B. We say, "we made the land and the foreshore receded. We do not claim the foreshore, but land which we have reclaimed. That land, may it is true, belong to the Crown in English Law, though not in Roman Dutch Law. See Foot on Alluvium (41, 1, 15). The only question is whether the land in question is ager limitatus."

[De Villiers, C.J.: The Municipality are not the owners of the land adjoining the shore.]

They are the owners of the streets.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Who are the owners of the land opposite the Goods' Shed?]

The Railway Department; but we have a better title than the Government for we made the land. The land having been made is treated as waste land within the Municipality.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is another point.]

The authorities on alluvium say that if you add to your property you can claim the addition. Van Leeuwen and Grotius.

[Buchanan, J.: Yes, if you add to your own land by alluvium you can claim the addition, but not if you add to somebody else's.]

All vacant land within the Municipal limits is vested in us. We have a statutory right to this land.

[Buchanan, J.: If the foreshore is not waste land the Act which gives you waste land excludes the foreshore.]

The foreshore is not waste land. By statute the foreshore is vested in the Crown, and waste land in the Municipality. See Secs. 140 and 148, Act 26 of 1891. Sec. 2 defines what are Crown lands. The term "waste Crown lands" is used in certain private Railway Acts, e.g., in the Green Point Railway Act. Waste lands are also dealt with in Sec. 3 of Act 11 of 1857, and Sec. 4 of Act 20 of 1858. See also Ord. 1 of 1848. Subsequent Acts vested waste lands in His Majesty, and Act 44 of 1882 vested all waste lands within the Municipality in the Municipality. Sec. 55 of Act 36 of 1896 vested lands contiguous to the Docks in the Harbour Board. Sec. 65 of the Harbour Board Act vests land reclaimed from the sea by the Board in the said Board. Demonstratio unius est exclusio alterius, so that if other people reclaim land such land reclaimed will not vest in the Harbour Board. If it be held that Act 36 of 1896 repeals Sec. 110 as to reclaimed lands, a fortiori, it repeals it as to the foreshore between the Castle Ditch and Fort Knokke.

[Buchanan, J.: If you had reclaimed land adjoining your own land there might be something in it, but you have reclaimed land adjoining Government property.]

If the Court is against me on that, I say that we have Sec. 154 of the Statute on our side. The Harbour Board consented to our reclaiming the land. Government officials knew what was going on, and there was a long correspondence as to the expropriation of Strand-street and the reclamation of land. The Town Council wished to form a promenade on this reclaimed land and the Harbour Board consented to this being done. By such consent they are now estopped from objecting to our going on with these works. The Town Clerk's letter of November 26, 1892, shows that a promenade was contemplated and his letters of October 29, 1894, show that the Council sanctioned and approved of the project. They knew we were doing this work and were consulted about it.

We did not get an actual consent in writing, but Elliott's letter of October 12, 1895, and a prior letter show that Government agreed to the principle at the time, and that we were practically led to go on and do the work. So far did the Government regard this as our property that in 1896 they gave us an ordinary notice of expropriation. Subsequently they sent one worded in a very peculiar manner. If they ever had a right to this property they have waived their rights and cannot dispute our title. Elliott, in his affidavit, says that this land was reclaimed by the Town Council with the consent of the Government. In the face of that statement and of the notices given by the Government they cannot now contend that they have any right to the property. Another point is, the public right of access to the foreshore. We do not claim the foreshore but we do claim a right of access, and from this we are now cut off, since Government claim to take for railway purposes down to low-water mark. If this foreshore is vested in the Government, they have no right to exclude the public, and we cannot get access to it even below the Castle moat. There will be absolutely no access to it whatever if the Government take the land they now claim. We furthermore object to their notice stating that they mean to expropriate hereafter, and then to pay us only what the land is worth now. We say that such notice is bad, under Act 19 of 1874.

[Buchanan, J.: They can prevent you from reclaiming ?]

No. See Scrutton v. Brown (4 Barnard and Cresswell, 485), particularly the judgment at p. 498.

[Buchanan, J.: You say that the present foreshore is vested in Government. If so, they can prevent you from going out any further seawards.]

I submit not, if the increase is by alluvium. In Roman-Dutch law alluvium may be increased by artificial means. Voet (41, 1, 15); Censura Forensis (2, 4, 13); Grotius (2, 9, 23).

As to damages, if the land is vested in us, we are entitled to damages.

Mr. Ward, in reply: We are willing to repay the Town Council what they have expended.

In English law "waste" has a very special signification, which it does not bear in our law. If this land was "waste" in the ordinary sense, it would be absurd to suppose that the proprietorship thereof would have been granted to the Municipality (as alleged). The land is admittedly valuable, and the Act could not have referred to this land, as it was not in existence at the time the Act was passed. On the question of consent, see Collector of Customs v. Cape Central Railway (6 Juta, 402).

Cur. adv. vult.

Postea, February 18.

Judgment was delivered of rights as to land covered by the sea.

[De Villiers, C. J.]: The question to be determined in this case relates to the ownership of certain land reclaimed from the sea along the shore of Table Bay. The reclamation was undoubtedly effected by the defendant Council, which from the year 1893 to the present time has allowed contractors to shoot rubbish into the sea to the south-east of the Central Jetty, and has itself gone to considerable expense in carting materials and constructing works towards reclaiming the land. The work was done with the knowledge of the Government, but no formal consent was ever given by the Government. For a long time a correspondence on the subject was carried on between the Government and the Council, and at times the parties seemed about to come to some agreement as to the terms upon which the Council should be allowed to own part of the reclaimed land, but no definite arrangement was ever arrived at. The Council treated the land as its own, and proceeded to construct a building upon it, whereupon the Government obtained from this Court a temporary interdict to restrain the further carrying out of the work. The object of the present action is to have it declared that the Government is the owner, and to have the interdict made perpetual. The first ground upon which the Council claims the ownership of the reclaimed land is that, as it has itself done the work of reclamation, no one else can claim the title to the ownership. It is a well-known doctrine, however, that title to land cannot be acquired merely by constructing works thereon. There may be a right of retention until compensation has been tendered, but unless there has been adverse occupation for the period of prescription, the owner does not lose his rights of ownership. The same doctrine, in my opinion, applies to land adjoining the coast and covered by the sea. The Crown is not the owner of the land in the same sense that it owns Crown lands above high-water mark, but it enjoys the supreme right of control, which carries with it the right of claiming the ownership of the land itself whenever the land ceases to be covered by water. Whatever the ancient rule may have been, it is now well established that this supreme right of control extends to a distance of at least a marine league from the shore. As to harbours like Table Bay, it was undoubted law, as far back as the time of Groenewegen (see De Leg., Abrog. ad Inst., (2, 1, 2) that they formed part of the regalia or state domains, and that, consequently, the ruler of the adjoining land had full control over the rights of fishing in such harbours. There are authorities in the Dutch law to the effect that an island rising in the sea belongs to the first occupier, but they obviously refer to the case in which such islands are situated beyond the territorial jurisdiction legally claimable by any State. If an island were to rise within Table Bay, there would be no doubt whatever as to the right of the Crown to claim the ownership. If such an island were raised by artificial means, the right of the Crown would be equally clear. The land now in question has been added to the mainland, but, on principle, the Crown appears to me to be equally entitled to the ownership, subject, of course, to the obligation, which the plaintiff does not deny, of paying to the defendant, at whose expense the addition has been made, reasonable compensation for his expenditure. The second ground upon which the Council claims the land is that, as owner or occupier of the adjoining land above high-water mark, it is entitled to any accession by what is known in the Roman law as alluvion. There is nothing, however, to show that the Council is the owner or occupier of the adjoining land. It has indeed the control over Adderley-street, but as that street runs down at right angles to the sea, and does not form part of the land running parallel to the reclaimed seashore, its occupation of Adderley-street can give it no right in respect of the land in question. But even if the Council had been the owner of the adjoining land, it could not, in my opinion, claim any right by virtue of alluvion. According to Justinian's Institutes (2, 1, 20), "whatever addition is made by a river to your land becomes yours by the law of nations. Alluvion is an imperceptible increase, and that is added by alluvion, which is added so gradually that no one can perceive how much is added at any one moment of time." In the case of Attorney-General v. Rees (4 De Gex and Jones 71) the Lord Chancellor quotes with approval a passage from Lord Hale in the following terms: "The jus alluvionis is de jure communi, by the law of England, the King's, if by any marks or measures it can be known what is so gained, for if the gain be so insensible and indiscernible by any limits or marks that it cannot be known, idem est non esse et non apparere." This doctrine was obviously derived from the Roman Law.

The Lord Chancellor added: "Of course an exception must always be made of cases where the operations upon the party's own land are not only calculated, but can be shown to have been intended, to produce this general acquisition of the seashore, however difficult such proof of intention may be." In the present case no such difficulty arises, for the operations of the Town Council were conducted with the avowed purpose of reclaiming a portion of the sea. The addition to the land, moreover, was not so gradual as to be imperceptible to the senses. The claim to title by means of alluvion therefore fails. As a third ground the Council relies upon the 111th section of Act 26 of 1893, which vests in the Council, among other things, "all the waste ground or land situate within the Municipality." The reclaimed land, it is said, forms such waste ground or land, which the Council may now claim as its property. It is by no means clear that the section was intended to apply to land becoming waste after the passing of the Act, but this point need not now be decided, because I am of opinion that the land in question was not waste in terms of the Act. The word "waste" has different meanings, according to the context in which it is employed. As employed in the 111th section, the term "waste land" appears to me to mean land which is not registered in anyone's name, and to the occupation of which no one has a bona fide claim. It could not have been intended to apply to land reclaimed by the Council from the sea for the purpose of carrying out some work of public utility, for such land is specially dealt with in the 154th section of the Act. Under that section the Council may, "in order to make embankments, promenades, or buildings, or carry out any other work of public utility, upon obtaining the consent of the Government and of the Table Bay Harbour Board, reclaim land from the sea in Table Bay, and all such reclaimed land shall be vested in the Council." It is clear, therefore, that in regard to such reclaimed land it was not intended to be vested in the Council without the consent of the Government, and the Harbour Board, and that the Council has no claim to it merely on the ground of its being in one sense of the term waste land. The last ground upon which the Council claims the ownership is that the consent of the Government and of the Table Bay Harbour Board was given in terms of the 154th section. I have carefully read the voluminous correspondence which the Council relies upon to prove such a consent, but I am unable to find that any definite consent was ever given. The Harbour Board seems to have consented so far as its own interests were concerned, but its consent was always subject to an approval by the Government. As to the Government, the matter was dealt with by several successive Commissioners of public works, but not one of them would commit his Government to a definite line of action. At one time the Commissioner was very near coming to an agreement, but even then the agreement was to be subject to the approval of Parliament. At no time was such an unconditional consent given to the operations of the Council as to entitle it to the benefit of the 154th section of the Act. The fact that the work was done in the belief that the formal consent would be forthcoming certainly entitles the Council to be regarded as a bona fide occupier who has made improvements on the land, and to be compensated accordingly, but it does not dispense with the necessity of a consent in terms of the Act to enable the Council to claim the land as its own. For these reasons the judgment of the Court must be for the plaintiff with costs, the Court declaring that the land marked pink in the diagram D is the property of the Colonial Government, and making the interdict perpetual as prayed.

Buchanan, J. fully concurred.

Maasdorp, J. said that the sections of the Act which vested the foreshore either in the Municipality or in the Government were of great importance in this case, and their effect must be considered. It seemed that under section 110 of the Municipal Act the foreshore within the Municipal limits was vested in the Council with the exception of a certain portion, and this excepted portion was vested under Act 20 of 1858 (section 5) in Her Majesty the Queen in her Colonial Government. Under Act 36 of 1896 (section 55) this excepted portion was placed under the control of the Harbour Board. Now the question arose as to whether the works constructed by the Municipality upon this foreshore become the property of the Municipality, and several grounds had been set forth to show that it does so become Municipal property. There was some contention that power was granted to the Municipality to reclaim land, and they say that they constructed this land with the acquiescence of the Government, and that it, therefore, became the property of the Municipality, but the Act was very clear upon that point, for it provided that the land reclaimed must be reclaimed with the consent of the Government and with the consent of the Harbour Board. Now in this case, after going through the whole of the correspondence, he could find no evidence that such consent had been obtained, and mere acquiescence, even if knowledge was proved on the part of the Government, was not sufficient. Consequently upon the action of the Municipality in constructing the works, which reclaimed this land, without the consent of the Government, it was clear that they had no right in such land. It was further contended that in this case there was a kind of alluvion, the result of which was that this land becomes the land of the Municipality. Now after considering the question carefully, he had come to the conclusion that almost all the grounds, all the properties of alluvion, were wanting in this case. No portion of this land had been produced by the action of the sea; the whole of it had been artificially constructed, and the very definition of alluvion excluded any right of the Municipality to the land on this ground. As to the question of a claim under the section which vested waste land or ground in the Municipality, this land was clearly reclaimed land, and when they referred to section 154 it appeared that reclaimed land was dealt with in a different manner to waste land. He had, therefore, come to the conclusion that on this ground also the claim of the defendant must be disallowed.

Mr. Searle said that the Court had not dealt with the claim in reconvention with regard to the right of access to the foreshore from Adderley-street.

The Chief Justice said that at present there was nothing to show that the Government intended to bar access. On the claim in reconvention absolution from the instance would be granted.

KELLY AND WIFE V. MAC- { 1902.
KENZIE AND CO. { Feb. 12th.

Delivery Agent—Limitation of Liability.

Plaintiffs were passengers by steamer from England to Cape Town, and when they landed they delivered certain baggage to the defendants, who were landing and delivery agents. Defendants admitted the loss of a portion of this baggage, but contended that they had contracted themselves out of any liability in excess of £5 per package lost.

Held, that as the attention of plaintiff had not been called to the notice at the head of the document he had signed, and that as defendants' servant's attention had been called to the fact that the package subsequently lost was specially valuable, defendants were fully liable to plaintiffs for the amount claimed.

This was an action to recover a certain trunk, with the contents thereof, and failing delivery of the said trunk, judgment for £43 7s. 6d., being value of trunk aforesaid and of contents.

The declaration set forth:

1. That plaintiff resides at Kimberley, and that defendant carries on business as a landing and delivery agent in Cape Town.

2. On or about December 2, 1901, the plaintiff arrived at Cape Town on board S.S. Mohawk, having with him certain baggage, his property, including a certain black leather trunk, hereinafter more particularly referred to.

3. Plaintiff, on or about the said day, entered into an agreement with defendant, through the latter's agent, whereby defendant undertook and agreed for valuable consideration to land, clear, and deliver to him at the White House, the said black leather trunk, with other baggage.

4. The said black leather trunk contained jewellery of the value of £30 7s. 6d., and clothing of the value of £10, and plaintiff specially declared to defendants' agent that the said black leather trunk contained the said jewellery and clothing, and told him that he desired to take the jewellery and clothing out of the said trunk, but defendant, by his said agent, thereupon specially undertook and agreed that the said jewellery and clothing would be "all right," that he would take care of them, and they would be quite safe; upon which plaintiff agreed to leave the said jewellery and clothing in the said trunk.

5. Defendant took and had possession of all plaintiff's said baggage, including the said leather trunk, containing the said jewellery and clothing, and thereafter delivered to the plaintiff his said baggage, save and except the said leather trunk and the contents thereof.

6. Defendant has wrongfully, unlawfully, and negligently failed and neglected to deliver to plaintiff the said black leather trunk and the contents thereof, and upon demand has tendered to the plaintiff, in lieu of such delivery, to pay the sum of £5, which tender is wholly insufficient.

Wherefore plaintiff prays for an order compelling defendant forthwith to deliver to him the said leather trunk and the contents thereof, and failing compliance with such order, judgment for the amount of £43 7s. 6d., being the value of the said leather trunk and the contents thereof, or that he may have, etc.

To this declaration defendant pleaded as follows:

1. Defendant admits paragraphs 1 and 3.

2. Defendant says that on September 2, 1901, he entered into a written contract with plaintiff, copy of which is annexed.

3. By the terms of the said contract defendant was not, and did not, become liable for any baggage beyond £5 per package, unless specially declared.

4. Plaintiff did not, in terms of the contract, declare the value of the said leather trunk or its contents. Defendant admits that he has not delivered the said leather trunk to the plaintiff, but save as aforesaid, he denies the allegations in paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the declaration.

5. Defendant, before action was brought, tendered to the plaintiff the sum of £5, and hereby again tenders it. Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The replication was general.

Contract referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the plea:

A. R. MCKENZIE AND CO.

No responsibility is assumed for Baggage beyond £5 per package, unless specially declared, nor for packages landed from steamers discharging in the Bay, or hold baggage of any steamer, until same has been taken delivery of by A. R. McKenzie & Co. from Table Bay Harbour Board at Baggage Warehouse.

I hereby authorize the undermentioned Packages to be cleared ex "Mohawk" by A. R. McKenzie & Co., and delivered to White House.

2/9, 1901.

[A list follows which is signed "L. Kelly."]

The facts appear from the judgments.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Buchanan), for plaintiff: McKenzie received our goods. He got them from us under a contract to deliver. He could not differentiate the contract by getting us to sign a list of goods. That acknowledgment was signed in the upper space of the paper. See the judgment of Ashbourne, L.C.J., in Richardson and Others v. Rowntree (1894 Ap., 217). Defendants' whole case is that we have signed a contract, and are bound by it, but they never drew attention to the fact that no agreement was required. Their driver had not only been shown to have been suspected of negligence, but had been convicted of intemperance.

Mr. Benjamin (for defendants): Plaintiff's counsel has mixed up two things, viz., the passport system of the railway and the ticket system. If a man has once signed a receipt, he must be held to have known what he was signing. Watkins v. Rymill (10 Q.B.D., p. 178). All we had to do was to hand over this document and ask him to sign it. Palmer v. Grand Junction Railway Co. (4 M. and W., 749), Wylde v. Pickford (8 W. and P., 462). The plaintiff knew very well what he was about, and cannot now go back on his own signature. Harris v. G.W. Railway Co. (1 Q.B.D., 515). Then, as to the value of the property. Kelly is supposed to have said, "I have a watch, which I value very highly." We cannot accept any mere sentimental valuation. See Marsh v. Horne (5 B. and C., 322). If plaintiff knew that defendants had only a limited liability he would have no case. There was no declaration of value of this watch and chain, and therefore plaintiff cannot recover more than their original value. As to the tickets, there is a very considerable conflict of evidence.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply) quoted Bagally, L.J., in Parker v. S.E. Railway Co. (2 C.P.D., 424). We never signed any conditions. See Naylor v. Munnik (3 Searle, 187).

Buchanan, J. : The plaintiffs in this case are Mr. and Mrs. Kelly, who arrived in Cape Town by the Mohawk in September last, having with them a certain amount of luggage. This luggage was brought ashore and placed on the quay, and while there it was taken charge of by a representative of the defendant McKenzie. Part of this luggage was certain two trunks. McKenzie's representative, after receiving charge of the luggage, cleared the same and delivered it at the plaintiffs' residence, with the exception of these two trunks. This case differs from some others which have come before us with reference to the delivery of luggage, in that here defendants admit that they received the goods; they admit that they did not deliver them, and they admit liability for the missing goods, and the only question left for decision is the amount of the defendants' liability. The defendants have tendered £5, while the plaintiffs claim £43 7s. 6d. The value of the goods not delivered has been very fairly stated, and I think the claim made is quite within the value. There has been no cross-examination as to the value, and the list put in, with supporting evidence, shows that the plaintiffs have given a very moderate estimate of the value of the goods. The tender is founded upon a paragraph placed at the head of a printed document which was used on the occasion. After McKenzie's representative had received the goods he made a list upon a certain form, which McKenzie kept. This form seems to me to be in two portions. The upper portion contains the paragraph, printed in small type, saying that no responsibility would be assumed for any package to the value of over £5, unless specially declared. Then follow some other exceptions as to exemption from liability when the goods are being brought ashore in the tug, etc., but these do not apply to this case. This first part of the document is not signed by either of the plaintiffs. Then the document contains a second part, the object of which is to facilitate the identification of the packages and to specify any of the goods in a package which may be liable to pay duty. On this second portion of the document McKenzie's representative wrote a list of the packages which he had to take over, and got the plaintiff to put his signature at the bottom. The document was thereupon immediately given back to McKenzie's representative, and not left in plaintiffs' custody at all. Plaintiffs' attention was not called directly to the clause on the upper part of the document. What is required in all these cases where there is a special provision like this, limiting the liability or introducing special clauses into a contract, is that the party to be bound should be aware, either directly or presumptively, that he was entering into a conditional contract. Sitting as a juror in this case, I should have to regard all the circumstances, and say whether in regard to this condition at the head of the contract there was mutuality between the parties. It is admitted in this case that no special attention was called to the condition, and it is not denied that the plaintiffs did not see it. The plaintiffs also state that they had no idea there was any special condition. This is not a ticket or receipt given to the plaintiff, which the latter would keep in his custody, and so have ample opportunity of becoming acquainted with any conditions on it. As far as the plaintiff was concerned, I think he might be taken to have considered he was only signing a list of the luggage he was handing over to defendants' representative. I would therefore say that the circumstances surrounding the case are not sufficient to make the contract subject to this special condition. But it is not necessary to rely upon that, because, even assuming that this was part of the contract, the evidence is all in favour of the plaintiffs. The condition is that no responsibility would be assumed for packages over £5 value, unless specially declared. It does not appear that it is necessary that the amount should be stated, but just that the attention of the person receiving the package should be called to the fact that it was a valuable package, requiring special care. There was no extra charge made for packages above £5 in value, and the utmost the condition seems to be inserted for is that the attention of the person who receives the package should be directed to the fact that it is a valuable package. In this case there were two packages missing, one belonging to Mr. Kelly and the other to Mrs. Kelly. We have it that McKenzie's representative asked for the keys of the boxes, explaining that it might be necessary to have the boxes opened for examination by the Customs officials. Thereupon Kelly took out some money he had in his box, and Mrs. Kelly said: "In my box I have my gold watch and chain and my jewellery." She wanted to do as Mr. Kelly had done, and take these things out of her trunk, but McKenzie's representative said that this was unnecessary, that the things were perfectly safe, and that he would see that she got them all right. So that, even if there was this condition binding upon plaintiffs, there was a special declaration and a special undertaking on the part of the agent that he knew there were valuables in the box, and that they would be perfectly safe in his custody. Under these circumstances, I cannot see on what grounds it can be held that McKenzie and Co. are not liable for this property. It has been argued that this undertaking was a verbal one, and entered into before the document was signed. There is a great deal of force in this argument, but having the written document between the parties before us, one would rather look to that. Even looking at the document, I am not prepared to hold that there was a condition binding upon the plaintiffs; but I am further of opinion that even if there was a condition, it was met, and in this case the defendant cannot be relieved of his liability by a payment of £5. I am therefore of opinion that judgment should be given for the plaintiff for the full amount claimed, with costs.

Maasdorp, J., said he took the view that this was one document containing the conditions under which the parties entered into a contract which was binding upon both parties. It had been argued that the condition should not be binding upon the plaintiff, because of the nature of the print, and the way in which he signed the document; but it seemed to his lordship that it was very legible and very easily understood, and on all the authorities that had been cited, he had come to the conclusion that the clause must be deemed as binding upon the plaintiffs. Then the further question arose as to what effect it had upon the contract. McKenzie undertook to carry and deliver the goods to the plaintiffs, and thus undertook certain responsibility in regard to the goods, but by the condition he limited his liability to £5, unless the package was specially declared to be over that value. Under these circumstances, the question arose as to whether he could take advantage of that exception. No authorities had been quoted to show what special meaning should be put upon the words "unless specially declared," and it seemed to his lordship that they meant nothing more than that the particular parcel should be pointed out as not coming under the exception limiting the responsibility to £5. Here the evidence of both Mr. and Mrs. Kelly was to the effect that they specially pointed out this parcel to McKenzie's agent as containing valuables, and they further had the special undertaking by McKenzie's agent to see the goods safely delivered. Under all the circumstances, his lordship was of opinion that the box had been sufficiently declared, and that therefore McKenzie was liable for its value, seeing that it had been lost while in his custody.

HART V. JOHN. { 1902.
Feb. 12th.

This was an action for the recovery of money advanced on certain furniture. The declaration of Barney Hart and Alfred Hart, trading as B. and A. Hart, of Cape Town, set forth that defendant was a fruiterer, carrying on business in Cape Town. On March 30, 1901, plaintiffs bought from defendant certain furniture, which defendant stated was his property, and for which plaintiffs paid to defendant the sum of £60. Plaintiffs took possession of the said furniture, and sold a portion thereof by public auction. The value of the unsold portion was £32 13s. 3d. In October last, one Jean Roising (or Roisin) was convicted at the Criminal Sessions of the Supreme Court of the theft of the said furniture from one Willy Petersen, the true owner thereof, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment. Thereupon the said Willy Petersen claimed from plaintiffs, and again took possession of the said unsold portion of the said furniture. Plaintiffs incurred damage and expense in and about the removal and storage of the said furniture, and in costs and charges in reference thereto to the amount of £5. Plaintiffs claimed: (a) The sum of £32 13s. 3d.; (b) the aforesaid sum of £5; (c) alternative relief; (d) costs of suit. Defendant had been barred for default of plea.

Mr. Wilkinson (for plaintiff) called

A. Hart, the plaintiff in the action, who said that in March last year he purchased some furniture from Mr. Johns for £60, paying him by cheque and receiving from him the receipt produced. About three weeks afterwards they sold a portion of the furniture, and afterwards it came to witness's knowledge that a man had been convicted of stealing this furniture. He had to return the balance of the furniture to the rightful owner, Petersen. Afterwards, acting under Petersen's power of attorney, he sold that portion of the furniture, and it realised £28. Witness had been put to £5 or £6 expense in connection with this furniture, in carting, storing, etc.

By the Court: Witness did not know defendant as the agent of one Lennie. He did not know Lennie. Before witness bought the furniture a gentleman came and asked witness to buy the furniture. Witness did not know the gentleman. Defendant was not with him. Witness went to the place mentioned in Long-street, and made the agreement with Johns. He did not know Lennie at all in the matter.

Frederick Perle, a clerk in Messrs. Friedlander and Du Toit's office, said he served the declaration on defendant. The latter said he was not responsible for all the furniture, but would have to pay for it. He said he only got £5 out of the business, and Lennie got the remainder of the profit. Defendant afterwards came to the office, admitted the debt, and offered to pay the amount by instalments.

The Court gave judgment for the plaintiff for £28, the value of the furniture returned, and £5 expenses connected with the removal and storing of the furniture, and costs of suit.

COOK AND SONS V. MAC- } 1902.
KENZIE AND CO. } Feb. 12th.

Landing Agent—Responsibility for goods.

When a landing agent has placed the goods entrusted to his custody in the warehouse of the Harbour Board he is functus officio, and is therefore no longer responsible for such goods.

This was an action for the recovery of the value of certain goods.

The plaintiffs' declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are Frank Henry Cook, Ernest Edward Cook, and Thomas Albert Cook, carrying on business in Cape Town as Thomas Cook and Sons; the defendant is Andrew Richard McKenzie, carrying on business as a landing agent under the style or firm of A. R. McKenzie and Co.

2. The defendant was a landing agent duly appointed by the Board, and in accordance with the Harbour Board regulations was by the master or agent of the steamship Umzinto appointed as agent for the consignees of all cargo from the said vessel at Cape Town docks.

3. In or about the month of May, 1900, a certain case containing one double-barrelled shotgun and one double-barrelled rifle, was consigned to the plaintiffs by the said vessel.

4. The defendant received and landed from the said vessel the said case, but although he had been called upon to make delivery thereof he has failed or neglected to do so.

5. The value of the said case, with its contents, is the sum of £70.

The plaintiff claimed: (a) delivery of the said case with its contents or the value thereof, payment of the sum of £70; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows: The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, and 3, save that he denies that the guns were consigned to the plaintiffs by the vessel, and says that as landing agent he received from the said vessel at the ship's side two guns.

2 He says that it was not part of his contract to deliver the said guns to the plaintiffs; after receipt as aforesaid of the guns from the vessel he duly placed the guns in the Harbour Board's warehouse, which was, and is, under the sole control and jurisdiction of the Table Bay Harbour Board; the defendant never contracted to become, nor was he appointed the delivery agent to the plaintiffs, and he says that upon his placing the said guns in the said warehouse his contract and duty terminated; the said guns have never been delivered to him from the said warehouse, nor were they ever again in his possession after he had placed them in the said warehouse.

3. Save as above he denies paragraphs 4 and 5; wherefore he prays that the plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

The replication was general.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. C. W. de Villiers), for plaintiff; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Buchanan), for defendant.

Mr. Searle called

John Patrick McIlvenner, who said he was manager of the Cape Town branch of Messrs. Cook and Son. The firm received some advices from the branch in Calcutta, showing that a certain case was consigned to Cape Town. Messrs. Yule and Co. acted as the firm's correspondents for clearing goods. A letter was sent direct from Calcutta to Messrs. Yule. The vessel came in about August, 1900. The case belonged to Lieutenant Riddell, 16th Lancers, and was marked T.C.S. 1985.

The affidavit of Lieutenant Riddell, as to the contents of the case, was read. He said the case contained two guns, for which he paid £70.

Witness, continuing, said he communicated with Messrs. Yule and Co. several times with reference to the non-delivery. He sent in a claim to McKenzie's, and also went to see the manager. The latter said that probably the case was at the Docks, in the dumping shed, and that he would make inquiries. Afterwards witness put the matter in the hands of solicitors. Witness's firm was responsible to the owner for these goods.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness received a receipt from the Calcutta office marked "duplicate." This stated: "Said to contain personal effects." The special receipt was lost by Messrs. Yule. Attwell and Co. were agents for the ship. Inquiries were made of them, and they stated that they had a clean receipt. Witness had had a letter from the Calcutta office referring to the case of guns lost. There was only one parcel by that vessel for Cook and Sons. Witness was not aware that Yule and Co. cleared the case (referred to as containing personal effects) as containing clothing. There was a letter written from Calcutta, stating that a telegram, supplemented by a letter, had been sent to Messrs. Yule from Calcutta, informing them that the case had been wrongly stated as being for Hutton Hall, and that this should be Hutton Riddell.

Robert Wm. Small, clerk to Messrs. Attwell and Co., ships' agents, produced a receipt for the delivery from the ship of a case marked TCS, 1985.

Arthur Hy. Brays, clerk in the employ of Messrs. Wm. Watson and Co., said that when the vessel arrived, he was in the employ of Messrs. Yule and Co. This case marked TCS 1985, was the only package witness had by that ship for Cook and Sons. Efforts were made to find the case, but they had not been able to find out anything about it. A pro tem. order was given.

By the Court: The order described the case as marked TCS, no number. It gave no description of the goods, so far as witness knew.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Witness had no knowledge as to how the entry was made. Witness looked for a case marked TCS.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Mr. Schreiner said that it had now been discovered that the case had been delivered to the Army Service Corps. The reason why the case could not be traced was due to the error in name which the letter referred to by the first witness disclosed. It was clear from the Customs documents that the case had been delivered to the Army Service Corps. Mr. Schreiner called Warren Sexton, manager of the baggage department of Messrs. McKenzie and Co., who said that he had tried to trace the case reported as lost. He looked for the case in the name of Hutton Riddell. To-day witness found a record of a case being cleared in the name of Hutton Hall. He only discovered this since the case commenced. Witness produced documents, including the ship's manifest and pro tem. orders. He said he could only see the pro tem. orders, and on the pro tem. order the name appeared as that of Hutton Hall. There was only one case by that vessel, either in the name of Hutton Hall or Hutton Riddell. There was nothing else for Cook and Son. The Army Service Corps passed the entry.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: All the other ship's goods were accounted for, so that this package cleared by the Army Service Corps was the only one for Lieutenant Riddell. That was to say, the Customs books showed all the other goods as having been delivered.

Asked by Mr. Justice Maasdorp how he accounted for a parcel addressed to Yule and Co., and marked TSC, being taken by the Army Service Corps, witness said that for the last year the Army Service Corps had been taking parcels without any authority whatever. This had been the subject of correspondence between McKenzie and the Harbour Board.

Merville Backwell, examining officer in the Customs Department, produced certain Customs documents, showing a parcel from the Umzinto received by the Army Service Corps. Witness would not see the case. A document was brought to witness asking for delivery of a case ex Umzinto for Lieutenant Riddell. The paper stated that the case was a present from a friend, and contained clothing.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The document was signed by Captain Edmondson. This was given to the Customs authorities, and signed. This was produced before a pro tem. order was given; it was usually produced before the ship arrived. Yule and Co. might have brought that order.

Re-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The examining officer before whom a party appeared, gave the pro tem. order. On the pro tem. order produced there was an entry of one case of effects for Lieutenant Hutton Hall, ex Umzinto.

By the Court: Witness could not say that the package delivered to the Army Service Corps was the one marked on the ship's manifest.

James John Kelly, a Customs official, said he was in charge of the portion of the Docks where the Umzinto was berthed. From the ship, goods came to the pro tem. warehouse, over which witness had charge, and they were removed from there when somebody came with a pro tem. order. With regard to the pro tem. order produced, the package for which it was issued had actually been received from the ship, and at the back of the order, when checking the books, witness had put down "delivered."

Cross-examined: The writing "delivered" meant that the ship had actually delivered the package. Witness could only say of his own knowledge that that package figured in the Customs books. After detailing the system of working in connection with such goods, witness said he had just been called that afternoon to go into this matter, and his remembrance of things was only now coming back to him. He now believed that the Umzinto was removed from the one berth to the other, and that he had personally seen this package. As far as he could remember, it was a wooden case about 2 feet long and 12 or 15 inches deep, and as to colour it was a dirty-looking case.

Mr. Searle: Unfortunately it was not a case at all, but a canvas package.

Mr. Searle then called

Edward L. Kitch, who said he was a clerk with Yule and Co. when the Umzinto arrived. The pro tem. order produced was made out by the chief clerk. The goods were never delivered to witness's knowledge. Yule and Co. used to get entries for goods for military officers signed in the same way as the entry produced, by Captain Edmondson. He was unable to say which of these two documents was made out first. Yule and Co. never received any parcel from the Umzinto for Riddell.

By the Court: Witness did not know of any entry having been passed other than that by the Army Service Corps.

After argument,

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiffs in this case carried on business in Calcutta, and also have an agency in Cape Town. Their Calcutta house received a case which they sent by the ship Umzimto to Cape Town, consigned to order. From the ship the plaintiffs received a parcel receipt—not an invoice—for it. This ticket was an acknowledgment by the ship that they had received this case, and that the ship was bound to deliver to the proper persons at the port mentioned. The Table Bay Harbour Board regulate the manner in which goods are to be delivered from vessels arriving at this port. We know from previous cases in which the Harbour Board regulations have been before the Court, that under the Harbour Board regulations the agent of the ship must appoint one landing agent for the purpose of receiving the goods from the ship on behalf of the consignees, and they require that the receipt of this agent shall be a sufficient discharge of the ship. McKenzie accepted the office of landing agent from this vessel, and under the Harbour Board regulations he undertook to receive goods from the ship's slings and put them in such place as the Harbour Board might direct. There was no liability upon McKenzie on his receiving goods in this way to keep the goods in his custody until delivered to the owners. He was acting simply under the Harbour Board's regulations, and he discharged his liability as soon as he handed these goods over to the Harbour Board or placed them in such place as the Harbour Board might direct. The missing case, which was shipped from Calcutta, according to the parcel receipt, was stated to contain personal effects. The plaintiffs now say that they contained two guns, which they received for one Lieutenant Hutton Riddell. When this action was commenced the first question was raised as to the right of the plaintiffs to sue, the defendants denying the fact that the goods were consigned to Messrs. Cook and Son in Cape Town. Since the parcel receipt has been produced it is shown that the plaintiffs were the persons to whom the goods were consigned, and McKenzie and Co. being the agents of the consignees, cannot now deny liability to them. Assuming, therefore, that McKenzie was answerable to these persons, the onus is upon him of showing that he has put these goods where he is bound to put them. In previous cases where McKenzie could not satisfactorily show that he placed goods in the warehouse it has been held that he is liable for the goods. But in this case I think it is beyond all dispute that these goods have been placed in the warehouse of the Harbour Board in accordance with their regulations. We have the evidence of the Customs officials, which is very clear and distinct on this point. Kelly said that from the records in his office and from the records supplied by his subordinate officials he was perfectly satisfied that the goods were received in his warehouse. I do not wish to say anything now as to the liability of the Harbour Board. As Mr. Searle says it is very hard on the consignees that the consignees should not know against whom to go, and that hardship has been acknowledged in previous cases, but if they go against the proper persons and show liability of these persons, the Court will give judgment against such persons. We have given judgment against McKenzie in many previous cases, but we have never had a case against the Harbour Board before us, and we cannot say what their liability is. Supposing the goods found their way into the warehouse, McKenzie was no longer the custodian of the goods. He had charge of them only from the time of taking from the ship's slings and putting into the warehouse. I consider McKenzie has discharged the onus upon him of showing that he has performed his duty. In addition to this, we have singular facts in this case. It is alleged in the pleadings that this case contained guns. It is a most singular thing that they were shipped as personal effects, and more singular still, that when they arrived here, Yule and Co. went and made a pro tem. entry that this case contained personal effects. There was not a word about guns. Of course, guns are effects, but that is not the usual way of describing guns. There are two documents required by the Customs. One is a pro tem. order, and the other a Customs entry, upon which the pro tem. order is granted. The practice at the Docks is to put together all documents relating to the cargo of each vessel. Here we have all Customs entries and pro tem. orders filed in one set of papers attached to the manifests. The Customs officials have produced the documents filed with the manifest of this ship, and say that every item in the manifest is accounted for except this one case marked TOS in a diamond, and the two documents which they produce they say refer to this particular case, and can refer to no other. On one document, the pro tem. order, Yule and Co. says that the importer is Lieutenant Hutton Hall. This pro tem. order, filed by Yule and Co., is not dated, but must have been passed some time in the early part of August. We cannot fix the actual date. The correspondence shows that Yule and Co. made a mistake in stating the owner to be Lieutenant Hutton Hall; it was Lieutenant Hutton Riddell. About the same time this pro tem. order was made out, a bill of entry was made out by Yule and Co. in the name of the Army Service Corps. No other entry had been filed by Yule and Co. in connection with this package except this bill of entry on behalf of the Army Service Corps. This document specified Lieutenant Hutton Riddell as the importer. On these two documents the Customs authorities have marked the case as having been delivered. I will not say this is proof positive that the case has been delivered to any particular person, but it is very strong corroborative evidence to show that McKenzie deposited the case as he was required to do, and therefore discharged his liability. As the case now stands, the only persons entitled to this case were Cook and Sons, as consignees; but the bills of entry show that there was delivery by the Customs to persons who were not consignees, and who had no right to receive the goods. The only use of these documents in this case is to corroborate the defence set up by McKenzie that he discharged his liability. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, I think it is impossible to hold McKenzie and Co. liable for these goods, which they did not have the custody of after delivery to the warehouse. It may be that when the consignee came for delivery of the goods, McKenzie were bound to load them on to the consignee's wagon, but the custody did not remain with McKenzie after the goods were placed in the warehouse. Under the circumstances disclosed, we hold that McKenzie and Co. have discharged the onus which lay upon them of showing that they deposited the goods in the proper place, and performed the duties imposed upon them by the Harbour Board. Judgment will be given for defendant, with costs.

SUPREME COURT

GABRIEL V. HOFFMAN. { 1902.
Feb. 13th.

Civil imprisonment—Decree refused—Act 8 of 1879, sec. 6.

Mr. Benjamin moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment for £25, together with costs. A certified copy of the judgment and the return of nulla bona were put in.

Defendant appeared in person, and said that he had made the promissory note upon which judgment had been given against him, but he had not made it in favour of the plaintiff, but in favour of the latter's son. When the note was presented he had no means to meet it. He was out of employment at the present time, but hoped to get employment shortly. He had lately returned from England, whither he had gone after being eighteen months at the front. At the present time he had actually no means, and was living upon what he could get advanced to him by friends. His ordinary occupation was that of a miner, and he had been employed as such for some years in Rhodesia. The debt was due for some dentistry work done for him by plaintiff's son, who would never have sued him, but he was away at present.

Witness then went into the witness-box, and repeated on oath that he had no means, except some personal clothing and the sword and belt he had had at the front.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin, defendant said he was formerly in Driscoll's Scouts. At one time he thought he had a gratuity of £37 10s. coming to him from the military, but on making further inquiries, he found that he had not, he having resigned his commission of his own free will. Defendant was living at the Waverley Hotel, Three Anchor Bay, and his board was £10 a month, but he was not paying it, but owing it at present. He had been living there previously, and the proprietor knew him. The debt on which the decree of civil imprisonment was asked had been owing for two years. He had gone to England after being at the front, but he got a free passage, and coming out, he was given an indulgence passage. He had instructed his attorneys to make an offer of £5 per month in payment of the debt, but he could not make that offer now, as the case coming into court spoiled his chance of getting the money.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the defendant had stated on oath that he had no means to satisfy the debt in whole or in part, and that statement had not been contradicted. The application would therefore have to be refused, but the plaintiff would have leave to apply again if he could show that the defendant had means to satisfy the judgment in whole or in part.

ANDREWS V. CHARLEY.

Mr. Bisset moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £150, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed.

Two similar applications were also granted.

CLARK V. JOSEPH JACOBSON. { 1902.
Feb. 13th.
Civil Imprisonment—Act 8 of 1879, sec. 6—Decree granted.

Mr. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment of the Court for £118 9s. 3d, together with £57 costs. Mr. Buchanan recapitulated the facts of the case in which judgment was given against the defendant. The plaintiff Miss Clark, had been in partnership with the defendant, and some difference arising it was resolved that the partnership should be dissolved. A day or two before that could be carried into effect, the defendant reported that his shop where he slept had been broken into and the jewellery in the partnership, to the value of several hundred pounds, stolen. Afterwards, plaintiff brought an action against defendant for the recovery of half the value of the goods remaining in the partnership, and got judgment for the amount stated, with costs.

Defendant appeared in person to oppose the application, and said that he had nothing. The remainder of the stock had been attached and sold to pay a judgment for the rent, and the sheriff's return showed that there was not sufficient to do that. The property had realised £103. He had not disposed of any property after the judgment.

Defendant went into the witness-box and stated on oath that he had no property.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan, defendant said that after the partnership was dissolved he went on trading, but he made no money at all. He could not tell what he had been living upon. He had no money put away in the bank or elsewhere. He had no house, but lived casually among his friends, often getting a shake-down for the night. Before the partnership he had lived with plaintiff's parents, and they took care of the jewellery which he afterwards put into the partnership.

De Villiers, C.J.: What has become of that jewellery?

Defendant said that, as he told the Court at the time the case came on, there had been a burglary, and all the jewellery was stolen. It appeared to him, as far as he could see, that there had been a great mistake. The burglary looked for all the world like a fake, coming on the eve of the dissolution of the partnership. He wished it was a fake. The case in which the jewellery had been kept was afterwards found in an alleyway about 100 yards from defendant's place, smashed to pieces. At a low estimate, the jewellery was worth £475, but he would not have taken £900 for it. He was offered £700 for it long before he went into partnership.

Mr. Buchanan: And your partner put in £300 actual cash, and now she gets nothing?

Defendant: That is just what I have got. Continuing, defendant said he occasionally got a job collecting a few accounts, and wrote letters for other people and sometimes he got a commission for selling something for other people.

In answer to the Court, defendant said he could make no offer. He would pay if he could but get a chance to earn anything.

Buchanan, J.: At the trial of the case it was shown that you had had a large lot of jewellery, and I was not satisfied then that you had not still got it; however, the judgment was for half the amount of the property still remaining.

Defendant: I also saw that your honour had the idea that I still had the jewellery. The same idea promulgated through the town, and even the police had the idea that it was a fake. I wish it had been.

Buchanan, J.: The circumstances are that a large case of jewellery was taken from the room in which you were sleeping, and you knew nothing about it.

Defendant said that he was not at all sure but that by a diligent search he would yet find the jewellery in some second-hand shop.

De Villiers, C.J.: The 6th section of the Act Provides that no writ of civil imprisonment shall be granted if the party against whom the writ is sought shall prove to the satisfaction of the Court to which such application is made that such party has not property or means sufficient to satisfy in whole or in part the judgment. My learned brethren, before whom the previous case was heard, are satisfied that at that time the defendant was in possession of property, and defendant can give no satisfactory explanation as to how he lost that property. He gives some account as to that property being stolen from him, but not in a way which perfectly satisfies us. He has not satisfied the Court that he has no means sufficient to pay the debt, and under the circumstances a decree of civil imprisonment will be made, but an opportunity will be given him of paying the debt by monthly instalments. A decree will therefore be granted as prayed, but execution stayed pending payment of the debt at the rate of £10 per month until the whole debt is satisfied, the first payment to be made on March 1.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

SAWKINS V. H. WHITE.

Mr. Buchanan moved under Rule 319, for judgment in default of plea on a declaration, which claimed £63 16s. 6d., being balance of amount due for work and labour done, with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit.

Judgment as prayed.

KERBYL V. A. BONICCI.

Mr. B. Upington moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £82 5s. 3d., being balance of account for goods sold and delivered, with interests and costs.

Judgment as prayed.

JACKSON V. H. ISAACS.

Mr. Bisset moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £750, with interest and costs of suit. The amount was the purchase price of certain land, of which transfer was duly tendered.

Judgment granted as prayed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

GETHIN (IN HIS CAPACITY OF MANAGER OF THE SOUTH-EASTERN LANDS COMPANY, LTD.) V. COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. 1902. Feb. 13th.

Company's Agent — Service of Summons.

Where, after certain correspondence as to quitrent between the attorneys of the Colonial Government and the Manager of a certain Company, the Government issued summons against the Manager N.O. and had it served upon him.

Held, that although a member of a certain firm of attorneys held a general power as the Company's representative, the aforesaid service was good, as the General Agents had, with full knowledge that summons would be issued, lain by and not informed the Government of the position in which he stood towards the Company.

This was an application on notice to set aside the judgment obtained under Rule 329 (d) by the Government on the 13th January last, as also the subsequent proceedings therein.

The applicant alleged in his affidavit that he was the defendant mentioned and referred to in the above suit, that he was the manager of the company's properties in Vryburg and Kuruman; that the company was an English company, duly incorporated with limited liability under the English Companies Acts of 1882 and 1886, having its registered office at No. 19, St. Swithin's-lane, London; that the company had no registered office in this colony; that Daniel Johannes Haarhoff, solicitor of Kimberley, is the general agent and attorney in this colony of the company, and he (Gethin) did not hold any power or other authority from the company; that in November last he received a demand for payment of the amounts claimed in the action which he forwarded to Haarhoff; that on the 7th December, the Deputy-Sheriff of Vryburg attempted to serve him with the summons, but he refused to accept service and informed the Sheriff that he had no power or authority from the company, and that on the 21st January the Deputy-Sheriff of Vryburg served him with notice of seizure in the suit of cattle and moveables of the company, valued at £1,224 1s.

Mr. Haarhoff, in his affidavit, corroborated the statements made by the applicant, and referred to a letter which his firm had addressed to the Government attorneys on the 23rd November, in which they informed them that they were acting for the company, and that they would have availed themselves of the sitting of the Commission appointed to investigate the question of the reduction of quitrents, but owing to the war the Commission did not sit as regards the Vryburg farms, but that when it did, they hoped to obtain a substantial reduction on the farms in the Mashowing and Kuruman districts. They concluded their letter by trusting that the Government would see their way to allow the matter to stand over for the present, if not, they would require time to communicate with the company in London. Mr. Haarhoff went on to allege that the Commission referred to in his firm's letter had not yet sat. That on the 2nd January his firm addressed a letter to their Cape Town correspondents requesting them to ascertain whether any further steps had been taken in the above suit, and pointing out the irregularities above referred to, and at the same time informing them that on receipt of a telegram a power to defend would be forwarded, to which a reply was received that no further steps had been taken in the matter. The next intimation he received was a telegram from Gethin, on the 21st January, that the Deputy-Sheriff of Vryburg had attached movable property of the company at Vryburg. He finally alleged that the company disputed the correctness of the amount claimed in the summons issued in the above suit.

Mr. Marais, a clerk in the employment of the company's local attorneys, alleged that on the 7th January he interviewed Mr. Allan Reid, one of the Government attorneys, who informed him that nothing further had been done in the matter, and deponent explained to him that the summons had been served on the wrong party; that from the conversation he inferred that the company's local attorneys would be informed before further proceedings were taken in the matter.

In reply to this Mr. A. Reid alleged that he had no recollection whatever of ever having seen Marais with reference to the case.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for applicant): The service of this rule was bad. It is admitted that the money was tendered under protest, but the Sheriff would not accept it. The real question is, has there been proper service?

[De Villiers, C.J.: What authority have you to make this application?]

That of Mr. Haarhoff, applicant's attorney. Gethin is only the manager of the property, therefore service on him cannot be good service. It should have been on Haarhoff, who is the general agent of the company—Paterson v. Pearson (Buch., 1875, 45)—in which it was held that the Standard Bank, being a public company, was entitled to be sued in its corporate name. The Court will always set aside a judgment if service is bad. Marais certainly went to Reid's office, and was there told that the Government did not intend to take any further steps. See Bank of Africa v. Rose-Innes Diamond-mining Company (1 H.C., 425), and African Diamond-mining Company v. Eden Bros. (1 Ap., 379). Service may be at an office of the company registered in this colony, but that is quite a different thing from serving on a manager. The case of the African Diamond-mining Company is not on all fours with this. Here Government never attempted to serve Haarhoff, our accredited agent.

[Buchanan, J.: But the manager communicated to Haarhoff the fact that he had been served.]

Haarhoff ought to have been served, more especially as the Government knew from his letter of November 23, that he was the accredited agent. The summons was not taken out till November 28, and was served much later. Gethin told the Sheriff that he had no power to accept service of summons. He also told Haarhoff what was being done. Haarhoff told Van Zyl and Buissinne, and they told Reid. Reid does not deny this.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Haarhoff had no right to lie by when he knew that summons had been issued.]

He did all he could; he sent Marais down.

[Maasdorp, J.: What would Haarhoff have done if the summons had been served on him?]

He would have defended.

[Maasdorp, J.: How would it have been if a summons in Gethin's name had been served on Haarhoff?]

That would have been bad service, unless the summons were amended.

Mr. Sheil, K.C. (for Colonial Government): The Government were never told that Haarhoff held the general power of attorney of the company. They knew that Haarhoff and Hertzog were the company's attorneys, but the only representative we knew was Gethin. He was therefore served, and I submit that service was good. Westlake, Priv. Internat. Law (section 310). The only officer of the company whom we had knowledge of was Gethin. No doubt it would have been better if the summons had been directed against the company, but it was nevertheless good against Gethin in his capacity as manager. The only objects of a summons are to bring a defendant into court, and to tell him what is alleged against him. These ends were served by service on Gethin, who communicated with Haarhoff. Reid denies the alleged interview with Marais, and if the alleged communications between them ever took place they ought to have been in writing, and to have been placed on the record. The point raised by the applicants is of a highly technical character. Haarhoff knew that summons had been issued, and yet he lies by and does nothing. The only benefit the applicants can derive from the granting of this application will be to retard the action of the Government; as it would seem from the correspondence that they have no defence on the merits.

Mr. Searle (in reply): It was the duty of the Government to have found out who were the agents of the company. They could easily have got the information at the Deeds Office. The company was not really before the Court, and therefore were not bound to enter appearance.

De Villiers, C.J.: Before the summons in this case was issued there was a correspondence between the parties, which, in my opinion, has an important bearing on the case. On November 12 the Government's attorney wrote to Gethin demanding on behalf of the Assistant Treasurer payment of quitrent, and informing him that unless payment was made legal proceedings would be instituted against him. This letter was sent to Haarhoff, who on November 23 wrote to the Government's attorneys stating that his firm was acting for the company, and that they would have availed themselves of the sitting of the Commission appointed to investigate the question of the reduction of quitrents, but owing to the war the Commission did not sit as regards the Vryburg farms, but that when it did they hoped to obtain a substantial reduction on the farms in the Mashowing and Kuruman districts. The writers trusted that the Government would see their way to allow the matter to stand over for the present; if not, they would require time to communicate with the company in London. Haarhoff did not say that Gethin was not the man to sue; he said: "We are acting for the company." The Government's attorneys replied that the quitrent was considerably in arrear, and that they were issuing a summons. A summons against whom? Clearly against Gethin. Then one would have expected that Haarhoff, if Gethin was not the man to be served, would have replied: "In case you issue a summons, issue it against me," but he did nothing of the kind, whereupon summons was issued against Gethin, who communicated the fact to Haarhoff. Haarhoff lies by and does nothing, and there was no clear written proof that any objection was made. Now, however, after judgment is given, and the money paid—it is true the money was paid under protest—it is sought to set aside the judgment. No sufficient ground has been shown for setting aside this judgment. In my opinion the summons was not invalidated in its present form, seeing that Haarhoff allowed the Government's attorneys to believe that no objection would be made to the service of the summons on Gethin. Of course, if defendants can show proof upon the merits that the money was not due, they can still file an affidavit upon the merits. The refusal of the present application will not prevent any further application being made on the merits to have the judgment set aside.

The present application must be refused with costs.

Their lordships concurred.

MUSGROVE V. MUSGROVE.

Mr. Buchanan moved for a decree of divorce. The defendant had not obeyed an order of Court to return to her husband by the stated time. The affidavits showed that the petitioner had offered to provide funds to enable respondent, who was in England, to return to him in South Africa.

DAVIES V. WOODSTOCK MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. De Villiers moved to fix a day for trial by jury.

The Chief Justice said it was at present impossible for the Court to fix a date. The Court would consider the arrangement of the work, and would try to fix some day in term. If they could not fix some day in March, it would have to go to the next term.

KANNEYMEYER V. HAVINGA AND OTHERS.

On the motion of Mr. Searle, K.C., Mr. Maasdorp, land surveyor, was appointed arbitrator between the parties.

Mr. Benjamin moved for authority for the Master to pay out certain moneys, to

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF RICHARD W. WRIGHT.

Mr. Buchanan moved for confirmation of the sale of certain property.

Ex parte BRINKMAN, N.O. { 1902.
Feb. 13th.

Municipality—Derelict land—Sale

—Arrear rates—Transfer.

This was a motion for an order: (1) Declaring the Municipality of Victoria West entitled to take possession of lots 140 and 145 of land within the limits of the said municipality, and to receive transfer thereof; (2) ordering the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of the said lots, and to make such alterations and amendments in the records of the Deeds Office as might be necessary for the registration of such transfer; (3) confirming the sale by the Municipality of the said lots to certain parties—to wit, Charl Andries Cilliers and Gerhardus Petrus Kempen.

The petition of Lambert Hendrik Brinkman, in his capacity as the chairman for the time being of the Municipality of Victoria West, showed that by Act 45 of 1882, the said village was constituted a municipality, having been previously vested in and under the control of the Dutch Reformed Church of Victoria West. In 1880 the churchwardens of the Dutch Reformed Church, who were the commissioners at that time of the Municipality of Victoria West, were empowered to sell as building allotments any part of the waste and hitherto unsurveyed land belonging to the churchwardens, and situated either in the village of Victoria West or at Kapokfontein, with the exception of such part of such ground as lies to the south of the public watercourse of the said village of Victoria West. When giving instructions to the auctioneer, in 1900, as to the sale of certain plots, the Town Clerk (now deceased) included (at the request of the Council) the two plots (140 and 146) now in question. These lots were accordingly sold—140 to C. A. Cilliers, and 146 to P. Kempen. The lots have been greatly improved, 140 more particularly.

When the conveyancers proceeded to transfer they found that both these properties were still registered in the respective names of their former proprietors. No records could be found in the books of the Municipality of the sale of these lots to the registered proprietors above referred to, and it was only after considerable delay and much trouble that the exact amount of rates due in respect of these properties could be ascertained. The two lots in question have been devalued for the last thirty years and more, and the owners cannot be found. In respect of lot 140 the rents due and unpaid amount to £6 5s., and in respect to lot 146 to £8 2s. 6d., in both cases exclusive of interest. The Municipality is willing to deposit the balance of the amounts realised as aforesaid, after deduction of arrear rates and expenses, with the Master of the Supreme Court, for account of the registered owners aforesaid, or their representatives. Wherefore petitioner prays ut supra.

Mr. Benjamin moved.

The Court granted a rule nisi, calling on all concerned to show cause, on April 12, 1902, why an order should not be granted confirming the sale of lot 140 to C. A. Celliers, and of lot 146 to G. B. Kempen, and authorising the payment of the proceeds to the Master of the Supreme Court for the benefit of those concerned. Rule to be served on D. P. Blaine and P. J. H. Liettig or their respective executors, and to be published twice in the "Government Gazette" and the "Victoria West Messenger" in the Dutch and English languages.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is a very unusual application, but at the same time a mistake seems to have been made, and something will have to be done to assist the Commissioners. An order will be granted calling on all interested to show cause why the sale shall not be confirmed, and payment of the balance lodged with the Master of the Supreme Court for the benefit of those concerned. The Court will direct that the order be served on the registered owners or their executors, and that it be published twice in the "Government Gazette" and in the "Victoria West Messenger" in the English and Dutch languages. If no executors can be found, the applicant will have to apply again for some other persons to be served, because it is essential that the registered owner should have notice, and then the Court can consider what form of substituted service is necessary.

On the return day (April 12) the rule was made absolute.

[Applicant's Attorney, C. H. Herold.]

IN THE MATTER OF THE MINORS TARDUGNO.

Mr. Wilford moved for the confirmation of the sale of certain property in which the above minors were equally interested, and in which their mother had a life interest. It was desired to sell the property, which was situated in Cape Town, for £2,500, and to purchase instead property in Port Elizabeth, where the minors and their parents now reside. Sworn appraisers had valued the property at £1,800. The rents were £175 4s. per annum, and after deducting rates, insurance, and repairs, the net income from it was from £100 to £110 per annum. The Master's report was favourable.

An order was granted in terms of the Master's report.

IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE CAREL P. SNYMAN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order for the completion of a certain mortgage bond. The late Carel P. Snyman had been arranging a mortgage bond for £2,900, to consolidate other bonds and to cover certain debts. Owing to complications and unavoidable circumstances, the passing of the bond was delayed, and before it was completed Snyman died. The executor testamentary now petitioned for leave to complete the bond, and pointed out that if the property had to be sold to strangers, he and the other children interested would be left without a home. The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed.

TOWN COUNCIL OF CAPE { 1902.
TOWN V. SHENKER. { Feb. 13th.
" " 18th.

Municipal Building Regulations.

The provisions of the 4th clause of the Municipal Building Regulations of Cape Town requiring streets to be of a width of 40 feet cannot be made to apply to a street laid out before the regulations came into force.

This was an application upon notice given to the respondent to show cause, if he had any, why an order should not be granted restraining him from erecting certain buildings on a piece of land at the corner of De Villiers and an unnamed street in Cape Town beyond the building line fixed by the City Engineer, and also until the consent of the Town Council shall have been obtained under Building Regulation No. 112, and why he should not pay the costs of the application.

The affidavit of the City Engineer (Mr. Wynne Roberts) was as follows:

1. Certain plans for buildings proposed to be erected on a certain piece of ground situate at the corner of De Villiers and an unnamed street, Cape Town, were submitted to me for my approval on the 13th December, 1901, under Building Regulations Nos. 110, 111, and 112, of the Town Council of the City of Cape Town.

2. Thereafter certain communications (both written and verbal) took place between myself and the respondent regarding the building line, and on January 7, 1902, I addressed a letter (marked A) to the respondent's architect, asking for certain information, which I required for the purpose of dealing with the application.

3. I did not receive the required information about the streets, but the diagram of the property was sent to me, and I ascertained from it and the dimensions of the buildings proposed to be erected, that the said buildings would project beyond the building line laid down by me in terms of Regulation No. 159, to an extent of about 7 feet.

4. For the above reasons I am unable to pass the plans; the buildings in question would have the effect of narrowing the street on the one side to an extent of about 7 feet, in contravention of Building Regulation No. 4.

5. The respondent called at my office on January 30 last, when he stated that he intended proceeding with the erection of the said buildings, and a notice was served upon him calling upon him to desist in the erection of the said buildings until the plans had been approved and passed.

6. I have ascertained that the respondent is proceeding with the erection of the said buildings, and owing to the fact that the matter is an urgent one, longer notice of this application cannot be given.

The letter to respondent's architect, referred to in the above affidavit, stated: "In reference to Mr. Shenker's plans, I should be obliged if you could submit the diagrams of Mr. Shenker's property for inspection. I informed the owner some ten days ago verbally that I require some evidence of the Council having approved the sub-division of this land before I can approve of the plans, but this information has not been forthcoming, and I therefore return the plans for the present."

There were affidavits by building surveyors of the Council to the effect that the buildings were being proceeded with, and that notice calling upon respondent to desist had been duly served.

To this the respondent, Herman Maurice Shenker, made the following affidavit, stating:

1. That I have perused the notice of motion and affidavit of the City Engineer and the two building surveyors.

2. That the plans for my proposed buildings at the corner of De Villiers-street and an unnamed street were submitted to the Town Council on December 13, 1901, and in terms of Regulation 112, the City Engineer should have signified within fourteen days his approval or disapproval of the plans.

3. That I received no communication from him on the subject, so, together with my architect, I called on him on January 3, 1902, to inquire about the plans. We had an interview with the City Engineer and the Assistant Building Surveyor. The only information asked for was a proof that the original sub-division which was made in or about the year 1875, of the land on which my proposed building was to be erected, had been approved by the Town Council at that time. We informed them that we were not in a position to furnish such proof, but that, as the plan of sub-division was in the possession of the Town Council, and they had already recognised it by allowing other proprietors to build on the land dealt with under the plan, we did not see how they could question it.

4. Thereafter, on the succeeding day and again on Monday, January 6, we called at the Town-house, and on the latter day were informed by the Chief Building Surveyor that he intended returning the plans under Regulation 11. We pointed out that he was not entitled to do so, and subsequently he admitted that the regulation did not apply.

5. Thereafter on January 7 my attorneys addressed a letter to the City Engineer. After receipt of this letter the plans were returned with a letter from the City Engineer, addressed to my architect. In reply thereto my architect wrote on the same date.

6. That I received no further communication from the City Engineer or the Town Council until January 29, when I received a letter of that day's date, and I beg to point out that the objections therein recorded were entirely different to those which had been the subject of our previous interviews.

7. That as to paragraph 4 of the City Engineer's affidavit, I wish merely to point out that the street in question was laid out in 1875; that buildings have within the last four or five years been erected on the opposite side to that on which my property is, and that these buildings have been erected right up to the boundary of the said street. There are no buildings at present on the side of the street on which my property is situated.

8. That as to paragraph 5 of the City Engineer's affidavit, I have to point out that the notice referred to therein was given on January 29, and that I merely called at the Town-house to obtain my diagrams, and not for the purposes stated. The diagrams had been lent to the City Engineer during the week, after receipt of same from the Deeds Office, as previously promised in the correspondence.

9. I say further that the buildings as set forth in my plans fall entirely on my own property, and that the street in question has been in existence, and has been used as a street for many years, and that my plans comply in all respects with section 100 of the regulations of the Town Council of Cape Town.

The City Engineer, in a replying affidavit, said:

1. I have perused the affidavits of the respondent and Henry Rowe Rowe.

2. There is a plan of sub-division showing the street in dispute, which is now in the City Engineer's Office, but there is nothing to show when it came there or when the sub-division was made, but it is apparently many years old. I was unaware of the existence of this sub-division. I considered it to be my duty before passing the plans to require proof that the sub-division had been approved of by the Council. I required this information within the fourteen days to which the respondent refers, and I say that it was a proper and reasonable request, and that under the special circumstances it was not possible for me to deal with the matter within the said fourteen days.

3. My principal and actual objection to passing the plan is that the building will project beyond the building line which has been laid down by me and approved of by the Council.

4. In laying down the building line in question, I proceeded upon the following principle: When the buildings were about to be erected on the side opposite to respondent's property, I took a line down the centre of the street, and placed the building line 20 feet from this. When, in consequence of the respondent proceeding to build, it became necessary to lay down the building line on his side, I placed this also at 20 feet from the centre of the street.

5. There are at the present time no other houses on the respondent's side of the unnamed street in question from which a building line can be taken, and therefore a line has to be placed down on the ground.

6. The 7th paragraph of the respondent's affidavit, which states that the buildings on the opposite side of the street have been erected up to the boundary of the said street, does not explain the matter properly. Those houses are not erected up to the private boundary of the lots. There is a space of about 8 feet in width between the front of the houses and the edge of the street by which extent the owners have not been allowed to set forward their properties.

7. With reference to the 9th paragraph of the said affidavit, I say that the street in question has been used as an approach to Hope Cottage, which is not in the same street.

8. I do not object to the plans in question as being building plans, apart from the other objection that I have raised.

With regard to the regulations mentioned in the affidavits, No. 110 provides for every person intending to erect a building giving notice to the Corporation in writing, upon a form supplied by the Corporation; regulation 112 provides that no building shall be erected until the sanction in writing of the Corporation shall have been obtained, but the City Engineer shall, within fourteen days after the receipt of notice in writing and plans, and all necessary particulars in respect of a proposed new building, signify to the person giving or sending the same his approval or disapproval, and in the event of disapproval, he shall give to the person intending to defray the costs of erection, or his duly authorised agent, notice in writing of the alterations in the plans, sections, or schedules, or specifications which he requires to be made. Regulation 159 provides that no building, structure, or erection shall, without the consent, in writing, of the Corporation, be erected beyond the general line of buildings in any road, street, place, or row of houses in which the same is situate, in case the distance of such line of buildings from the back line of the footway does not exceed 50 feet, etc. Regulation 4 provides that every new street intended for vehicular traffic shall be laid out and formed so that the width thereof shall be 40 feet at least. The carriage way of such street shall be 24 feet in width at the least, and the footway on each side of the street shall be 8 feet in width at the least. The 100th regulation, referred to by the respondent, states that every person who shall erect a new building shall provide in front of such building an open space, which, measured to the boundary of any lands or premises immediately opposite, or to the opposite side of any street, which may not be less than 24 feet in width at the point where such building may front thereon, shall, throughout the whole line of frontage of such building, extend to a distance of 24 feet at the least.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the Town Council): Quia a new point of law is raised in this case. A new street has been formed and the City Engineer, looking to regulation 4, laid down the line of building at 20 feet from the edge of the street. Now respondent (who is the first to build on his side of the street) puts forward his building to the verge of his property, and thus deprives the people opposite of 7 feet. It is ordered that all new streets should be 40 feet wide. Respondent wishes to ignore this regulation. He may place a stoep on his own land in front of his house, but must not advance his building line. The case of Short v. Town Council of Cape Town (15 S.C.R., 130), shows that the Court never laid it down that in case of new streets the City Engineer cannot lay down a building line. If roads on subdivision plans are not shown to be 40 feet wide, I admit that the Town Council cannot insist on their being widened, but it is a reasonable contention that if no buildings have been erected in a new street, or on one side of the new street, the City Engineer can settle the line of building.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for respondent): Under Section 175 the Town Council have power to take land for widening streets, but they now insist on people giving up 7 or 8 feet of their own ground. This they cannot do. Regulation 100 has been followed by us, and the only question is whether it does not conflict with Section 175. The street in question is not a new street, but a very old one. Short's case is in favour of respondent. Respondent should have had an opportunity of objecting before it was attempted to deprive him of a part of his property. Even in the case of a new street there is no power under the Act to take away a man's property. If the Town Council want a wide street, they should proceed under section 175.

In Short's case the question was discussed as to whether this rule of the Town Council was not ultra vires. They have raised no objection to our building plans, as such. It is now admitted that we might even put a stoep in front of the property, but that would interfere with the guttering, etc., quite as much as if we were to advance the line of our house. Section 112 must be read as a whole. The City Engineer has not complied with the regulations, as he did not serve us with the legal notice required. Under the regulations the rule as to streets being 40 feet wide cannot be put in force in the case of streets marked on a subdivision plan. We are quite prepared to go into the matter more fully in an action.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): I do not question the bona fides of respondents, but I cannot admit that if the City Engineer lies by for 14 days parties may do as they please.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does Mr. Searle hold that these regulations are ultra vires?]

I understood him to do so but I contend that not only must the open space regulation (as to the 24 feet) be observed, but that the Town Council has power to insist on 40 feet. See Regulation 11.

[Maasdorp, J.: This is not a new street.]

They say it is, but even if it is the road can be widened under section 11; and if it is not under section 4, respondent has no right to say, "We are going to build because you have not put your objections in writing." Regulation 159 is also in our favour.

Cur. ad vult.

Postea.

De Villiers, C.J., in giving judgment, said it was clear upon the affidavit filed by the City Engineer that the ground upon which the whole proceedings before the action were founded, and the ground upon which the action was brought was that the street was a new street. The fourth clause in the Building Regulations provided that every new street intended for vehicular traffic shall be laid out and formed so that the width thereof shall be 40 feet at least. The carriage way of such street shall be 24 feet in width at the least, and the footway on each side of the street shall be 8 feet in width at least. Now if the street now in question had been a new street, the Town Council would have been within their rights in insisting upon the provisions of the fourth clause being complied with. But in his affidavit, the respondent said that a sub-division of the property was made as far back as 1875, and according to that sub-division, a street of different width entirely was laid out. That plan seemed to have been in the City Engineer's office all the time, and apparently the present City Engineer was not aware of it when he made his first affidavit. In making his second affidavit he did not deny that this was an old sub-division, but he still claimed that he was entitled to treat this as though it were an entirely new street. In his lordship's opinion that contention could not be upheld. If in regard to existing streets laid out many years ago the Town Council said that such streets must be 40 feet wide, they must compensate the owner whose land was taken. The respondent had not bought on the supposition that a road 40 feet wide would be required. Therefore he (the Chief Justice) thought the City Engineer had no right to insist upon this property going back 8 feet. In strictness, perhaps, the respondent ought to have stayed his hand, and ought not to have gone on after he received notice from the City Engineer, but he said that fourteen days had elapsed, without further proceedings having been taken by the City Engineer, and he, therefore, thought he was justified in proceeding with the work. Under ordinary circumstances, his lordship thought that the fact of respondent proceeding might be a reason in giving costs against him, but he thought that the respondent honestly believed that he had a right to proceed after fourteen days, not having received an objection within that period. The application would, therefore, be refused with costs.

Their Lordships concurred.

THE LAW SOCIETY V { 1902.
BADENHORST. { Feb. 13th.

Attorney—High Treason—Suspension.

An attorney who had been convicted of high treason was suspended from practice pending the further order of the Court.

The summons in this case called upon Evert Nicholas Badenhorst (an attorney of the Supreme Court and a notary public) to show cause, if any, why he should not be struck off the roll of attorneys and notaries by reason of having been found guilty of professional misconduct, in that he was tried at Colesberg by the Special Court during November, 1901, for high treason, and being found guilty, was sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment.

The affidavit of Gideon B. van Zyl stated that he was the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society; that E. N. Badenhorst is an attorney and notary, duly sworn and admitted to practice in this Honourable Court, and still entitled so to practice; that the said Badenhorst is a British subject, and that when admitted he took the oath of allegiance; that at the Criminal Sessions held at Colesberg in November last he was indicted for high treason, was found guilty on November 30, and sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment.

The affidavit of Evert Nicolas Badenhorst admitted the conviction aforesaid. It however, set forth the following facts:

"Colesberg was occupied by the Federal forces on November 14, 1899, and on the 15th the Hoofd Kommandant issued a proclamation placing the district under martial law. The Kommandant further intimated that British subjects who remained would not be interfered with, provided they did not interfere with the military operations of the Federal forces. Respondent thereupon remained in Colesberg, but the aforesaid proclamation notwithstanding was on November 13 commandeered to be in the Hoofd Laager properly equipped on November 21, 1899. Respondent went there to explain matters, and having done so, he returned to his house and remained there. On November 25, 1899, respondent received a second commander brief to be in the laager the same day, whereupon the respondent wrote to the Field-cornet that he could not obey, as his duties did not allow him, whereupon he received a reply from the Field-cornet that no notice would be taken of his (respondent's) excuses, and if he did not obey steps will be taken against him according to law. Respondent did not obey, and remained in his house. Respondent craved leave to refer to the two commander briefs and letters referred to in paragraphs 3 and 5. The Special Court were good enough to accept the two commander briefs and two letters as genuine documents. On November 26, 1899, a patrol of some 15 burghers of the Free State and of the S. A. Republic came to respondent's house in town and took him to laager. Respondent there saw General Schoeman, and again told him (Schoeman) that he (Badenhorst) was a British subject and a J.P., and that he could not join them, whereupon General Schoeman told respondent that he (respondent) was not required to fight, but to do the writing work for the Colesberg laager, and that if he (respondent) refused to do so all his property would be confiscated, and himself be sent to Pretoria as a prisoner. As respondent was helpless, and had a wife and four children for whom to provide, as also an aged father and mother, and not knowing how long he might be kept prisoner by the Federal forces, he submitted to their threats. As to the charge of treason, respondent craves leave to refer to the records of the Special Court, where it was fully proved that respondent was fetched by the patrol of the Federal forces and compelled by them to do clerical work. This plea was accepted by the Special Court. Respondent admits that he carried a "Mauser" rifle and some cartridges between the laager and the town, but he was made to do so by the officers of the Federal forces. He did not carry the rifle aforesaid with any hostile intent towards the British. He was never in any fight, nor did he ever go out on patrol. As to the charge of taking up arms in defence of the S.A. Republic and of the Free State, the Special Court found respondent guilty of having carried arms and of having assisted the free and independent republics aforesaid. The Court, however, found that he did not take a leading part in the rebellion, and that his behaviour was not such that a heavy sentence could be passed on him; but as he was a J.P., the Court felt compelled to pass a satisfactory sentence on him. The Court found that respondent had assisted the enemy by arresting one Thomas Jackson, a British subject, and taking him in custody. On the remaining four counts of the indictment respondent was found "not guilty." On January 2, 1900, respondent placed the Mauser and cartridges on one of the wagons in the laager of the enemy and went home, where he remained. Respondent prays (1) that applicant's application be dismissed; (2) for alternative relief.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved.

The Court suspended the respondent from practice pending its further order, and ordered him to hand his certificates to the Registrar.

Ex parte UNION-CASTLE CO., s. 1902.
LTD. } Feb. 13th.

Company—Title Deeds—Amendment.

This was an application on the part of the above company (until lately known as the Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited) for leave to amend certain title deeds or deeds of transfer of property in this Colony belonging to it, by altering the name therein from the "Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited," to the "Union-Castle Mail Steamship Company, Limited."

The petition of Duncan Campbell Andrew, one of the managers in South Africa of the Union-Castle Mail Steamship Company, Limited, showed that on February 28, 1900, the said Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited, having previously acquired by purchase the whole of the assets of the Union Steamship Company, Limited, changed its name to that of the Union-Castle Mail Steamship Company, Limited. That there was no formation of any new company, but merely a change of name to denote, in all probability, the absorption by the Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited, of the Union Company, Limited. That such change of name was duly entered in the books, and allowed by the Board of Trade in London on March 8 last. That the Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited, is the registered holder of certain property at present occupied by them in Cape Town, and also of certain other properties situate in Cape Town, in Port Elizabeth, and in East London. That as all the business of the Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited, is now carried on under the name of the Union-Castle Mail Steamship Company, Limited, and all their assets have been transferred into that name, it is desirable that the properties aforesaid should be conveyed out of the name of the Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited, into the name of the Union-Castle Mail Steamship Company, Limited. That no monetary consideration has passed, or will pass, in respect of such conveyance, necessitated by the said change of name. That an application was made to the Treasurer-General of this Colony, requesting that the Registrar of Deeds might be instructed to allow such conveyance to pass without the payment of transfer duty. In reply to this application the Treasurer-General has written to petitioners' solicitors to the following effect: "That as the Transfer Duty Act does not provide for the passing of transfer under the circumstances mentioned, it will be necessary to approach the Supreme Court for an order authorising the amendment of the name in the existing deeds," wherefore petitioner prays for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to effect a conveyance of from the Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited, to the Union-Castle Mail Steamship Company, Limited, of the aforesaid properties, free of transfer duty, or may authorise the name of the Union-Castle Mail Steamship being substituted in the deeds of transfer thereof in lieu of that of the Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited, or for alternative relief.

The Registrar of Deeds, in his report, after setting out the facts above detailed, stated "that under the circumstances he did not consider it clear that there had been no change of ownership in regard to the properties in question. He continued: "In order to have brought that about, the Castle Company would, I take it, also have had to be dissolved and an entirely new company formed. That course was not adopted. I have therefore no objection to the proposed alterations, but cannot effect them unless I am authorised by the Court to do so."

In a further report the Registrar of Deeds states: "The fact that applicants' petition included a prayer for an order authorising a conveyance free of duty escaped my notice. To effect a conveyance there must have been a change of ownership, and as no provision for exemption exists, transfer could not in that case be effected free of duty. The agreement between the two companies, however, appears to me to show that the business and property of the Union Company were acquired by the Castle Company, and that as the latter company was not dissolved, no change of ownership in the property took place. A change of name and increase of capital only were effected and although a large number of persons became in a body shareholders under the agreement, yet it seemed to me that the company itself remained identically the same.

For these reasons I did not consider, as will be seen from my report, that I would be justified in opposing the application. I may add that there is no question as to the payment of duty by the Castle Company on the property acquired from the Union Company.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved.

The Court ordered that the title deeds or deeds of transfer of the properties referred to in the petition should be amended by having the insertion after the name of "The Castle Mail Packets Company, Limited," of the words "now known and registered in London as the Union-Castle Mail Steamship Company, Limited,"

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G. (Chief Justice), and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

BLAKE V. ESTATE OF BLAKE. } 1902.
Feb. 14th.

This was an action for a declaration of rights in respect of the estate of plaintiff's husband, deceased.

The parties were Anna Susanna Blake (born Van der Westhuysen), plaintiff, and (1) Johannes Henoch Neethling Roos, in his capacity as secretary of the Board of Executors of Cape Town, and as such curator ad litem of the minors Robert da Costa Blake and Aurora Elizabeth Blake, (2) Jan Hendrik Hofmeyr, in his capacity as secretary of the Paarl African Trust Company (Limited) and Anna Susanna Blake (born Van der Westhuysen), in their capacity as executors datave of the estate of the late Robert Blake, jun., defendants.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is the widow of Robert Blake, jun., who before his death was domiciled at the Paarl, in this colony, and there died intestate on the 15th day of October, 1900.

2. There are two minor children in being, born of the marriage of the late Robert Blake, jun., and the plaintiff, which was duly solemnised at Moria, in Weenen county, Natal, on or about the 22nd day of June, 1893, and the first named defendant, in his capacity as secretary of the Board of Executors of Cape Town, has been appointed by this Hon. Court, by order dated the 12th day of January, 1901, to be the curator ad litem of the said minors for the purposes of this suit.

3. The defendant Jan Hendrik Hofmeyr, in his capacity as secretary of the Paarl

African Trust Company (Limited), and the plaintiff have been duly appointed executors dative of the estate of the late Robert Blake, jun., and are joined in that capacity as parties to this suit.

4. Before the marriage aforesaid, and upon the 14th day of June, 1893, the said Robert Blake, jun., and the plaintiff duly entered into and executed before the notary, Ryno Johannes Louw, of Johannesburg, an ante-nuptial contract, whereof a true translation is hereunto annexed and marked A, and to which the plaintiff craves leave to refer as though here inserted.

5. By clause 5 of the said contract the said Robert Blake, jun., declared that, in consequence of the love which he cherished for the plaintiff, and in consideration of their intended marriage, he thereby gave, ceded, and assigned over to her as her free, lawful, and exclusive property, the various claims, shares, and interests in the said clause detailed under the numbers 1 to 8 inclusive.

6. One John James George van der Byl, of Boksburg, was instituted and appointed by the parties to the said contract as curator and trustee for the protection of the plaintiff of the aforesaid claims, shares, and interests, but, although the said Van der Byl appeared before the said notary and declared to accept the said trust, he at no time acted therein, and has no interest in this suit.

7. After the celebration of the marriage and upon the 1st day of October, 1893, the plaintiff signed and executed the general power of attorney, a true translation whereof is hereunto annexed, and marked B, by which she constituted her husband, the late Robert Blake, jun., her general agent, and then and thereafter until his death her said husband, acting under the powers by the said power of attorney conferred upon him, as well as in the exercise of the jus mariti, represented the plaintiff in all matters concerning her estate, including the claims, shares, and interests so given, ceded, and assigned over to her by him as aforesaid by the said contract.

8. Save and except the interest numbered 8 in the aforesaid clause 5 of the said contract, which proved to be of no value, her said husband, on her behalf, sold or otherwise realised all the claims, shares, and interests aforesaid, receiving on her behalf large sums of money, amounting to £55,000 and upwards, besides shares and interests of great value, also subsequently realised on her behalf.

9. From time to time her said husband made further most profitable investments of, and speculations with, the money by him so received on her behalf, and he remained until his death in full possession on her behalf of all her property from time to time so invested.

10. The plaintiff annexes hereunto marked C, a list or inventory of cash, shares, claims, and other property found after his death in the possession of her late husband, which she believes to constitute property received and held by him for her and on her behalf acquired for her in manner aforesaid, and now representing the sums of money and interests received by him as aforesaid upon realisation of the claims, shares, and interests given, ceded, and assigned over to her by the said contract, which is of the value of £200,000 and upwards, and to which the plaintiff is lawfully entitled.

11. The plaintiff is entitled to a declaration of her rights in the premises, and claims that she should be declared entitled to (a) all amounts of money and all properties, shares, claims, or other interests received by her late husband upon the realisation by him of the several claims, shares, and interests mentioned in clause 5 of the said contract; and (b) all profits, whether in cash, shares, claims, or other property, derived from her husband's administration of her estate and affairs on her behalf; and she therefore claims (c) an account of her husband's administration of her estate and affairs, and (d) judgment for the amount found due to her at foot of such account when duly debated, including judgment for such claims, shares, or other property as may be found due to her.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for: (a) An order declaring her to be entitled to all amounts of money and all properties, shares, claims, or other interests received by her late husband upon the realisation by him of the several claims, shares, and interests mentioned in clause 5 of the said ante-nuptial contract, dated the 14th day of June, 1893; (b) an order declaring her to be entitled to all profits, whether in cash, shares, claims, or other property, derived from his administration of her estate and affairs on her behalf; (c) an account of her husband's said administration of her estate and effects, and debate of such account; (d) judgment for the amount found to be due to her at foot of such account when duly debated, including judgment for such claims, shares, or other property, as may be so found; or that she may have such further or other relief in the premises as to this Hon. Court may seem meet, together with costs of suit.

The claims, etc., referred to in the ante-nuptial contract were as follows:

1. Certain block of Deep Level (Main Reef) claims, known as the South Glencairn Block, situate on the farm Driefontein, Witwatersrand Gold-fields, at present under option to Mr. J. S. Curtis, of Johannesburg, for £130 sterling in cash per claim, which option expires on the 31st August, 1893.

2. Certain 63 claims known as the Emerald Block (Deep Level), situate at Elandsfontein, No. 1, of the Simmer and Jack Gold-mining Company.

3. Certain claims A Block on the farm Driefontein (Deep Level).

4. A lot of shares to bearer in the Golden Fleece Gold-mining and Exploration Company (Limited).

5. Five thousand shares in the Main Reef Developing Company (£1 fully paid up), as per agreement with Messrs. Barratt and Brayshaw, Johannesburg. These shares are to be delivered as soon as the Blake Leeuwoort Block claims are floated by the abovenamed firm.

6. A (3-5th) three-fifths share in the Blake Deep Level Block claims, more or less on the farm Driefontein, as per agreement with the Salmon Prospecting Company.

7. Twenty claims in F. A. English's large block on Elandsfontein, No. 1, Simmer and Jack Gold-mining Company.

8. A claim or interest to one-third (1-3rd) share in the Blake Block, 150 claims, on the farm Elandsfontein (portion Geldenhuis Estate).

The following was the plea of the defendant, Johannes Henoch Neethling Roos, in his said capacity:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6 of plaintiff's declaration.

2. As to paragraph 5, the defendant does not admit it, and refers this Hon. Court to the terms of the ante-nuptial contract.

3. As to paragraph 7, the defendant admits the execution of the said power of attorney, and that the jus mariti was not excluded by the ante-nuptial contract, but denies the rest of the paragraph.

4. The defendant has no knowledge of the allegations in paragraphs 8, 9, and 10, and does not admit them, and puts the plaintiff to the proof thereof, and he specially denies that the plaintiff is entitled to the £200,000 and upwards in paragraph 10 mentioned, and he denies that the plaintiff is entitled to the claims set up by her in paragraph 11.

5. The defendant says that the claims, shares, and interests mentioned in paragraph 5 of the ante-nuptial contract were never legally delivered, ceded, assigned, or accepted, and never became or were at any time the property of the plaintiff.

In the alternative, in case this Hon. Court should hold that the said claims, shares, and interests did become the property of the said plaintiff:

1. The defendant says he denies that the property contained in schedule C represents the shares, claims, and interests in the ante-nuptial contract mentioned, or that they are the result of investments and speculations by the plaintiff's late husband on her behalf, or with her money, and puts the plaintiff to the proof thereof.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was as under:

For a replication to the pleas of the defendants, the plaintiff says that, save in so far as any of the allegations in the declaration are admitted in the said pleas, she denies all allegations of fact and conclusions of law therein contained, joins issue thereon with the defendants, and again, as before, prays for judgment, with costs.

Mr. Schreiner (with him Mr. C. W. de Villiers) for the plaintiff; Mr. Currey for the executors in the estate; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) for the curator ad litem of the minor children.

Mr. Schreiner said that at the death of the late Robert Blake the estate was valued at £200,000, but it had since, in certain respects, increased in value. The husband dealt with the whole of the claims, shares, etc., and it was found from letters left that he had realised a very great profit in respect to seven of the eight interests he settled on the plaintiff. These seven could be traced with approximate exactness. Mr. Kearns, who acted as the deceased's business man after he had realised some of these interests, and who held his power of attorney, had gone into the matter fully, and he would be called. Mr. Nash was also appointed to frame an account and report, and had done so. Mr. Kearns very largely agreed with the views Mr. Nash arrived at in his report.

The Chief Justice asked if there was no prospect of a settlement being arrived at.

Mr. Schreiner said that Mrs. Blake was quite prepared, rather than have enormous involved inquiries, to take one-half of the estate, as though she had been married in community. The matter had now been hanging over for two years, and there were no creditors interested.

Mr. Searle said there was no delivery to Mrs. Blake of the interests, claims, etc., in question, but she could claim for breach of contract.

The Chief Justice: As her husband was agent, surely under all principles of the law of agency, he was bound to pay her the amount of profit made with these interests?

Mr. Searle: Yes, the profits perhaps. I don't know whether damages would not include that.

The Chief Justice: The point is this. Is it not exceedingly likely that if you take these profits, they will amount to more than half of the estate? Supposing there had been no marriage at all, wouldn't she get from her general agent the full amount of everything he has realised, not only what he realised from these claims, but what he realised from the proceeds?

Mr. Searle: He has always dealt with these as his own property. There is no transfer, and here is a power of attorney signed months afterwards. The point is whether, under this contract, anything vested in her at all, except the right to enforce this contract. Is it not necessary that at the time of the contract there should be some delivery?

The Chief Justice said that the non-delivery would have an important bearing if it were a question of creditors. But here there were no creditors. The Court would hear Mrs. Blake's evidence, and in the meantime Mr. Searle could consider the matter.

Mr. Schreiner called

Anna Blake, who said she was married on the 22nd June, 1893. Before the marriage, an ante-nuptial contract was executed in the Transvaal. They were going to live in the Transvaal after marriage. Witness signed a power of attorney in October, 1893. Witness's late husband told her that he was going to settle everything on her. After signing the power of attorney, witness left the matter entirely in her husband's hands. She knew nothing of the business aspect of the affair. There were two children, a boy and a girl, aged seven and five, who were now living with witness at the Paarl. Witness wanted her legal rights determined. She wished to do nothing that would take away from the children any of their rights.

By Mr. Searle: Witness was not consulted about business by her deceased husband.

The Chief Justice: Are you prepared to take one-half of the estate and let the children have the other half?

Witness: Yes, my lord.

Mr. Searle said he confessed that the suggested settlement did not seem to him to be an unreasonable one under the whole circumstances of the case.

The Chief Justice: I think it is a very fair settlement that this lady should have the one-half of the estate and the children the other. It is quite possible that if we went into the accounts it would be shown that she is entitled to more than a half. I think therefore it is very fair on her part to be willing to take one-half, and the Court will make an order in terms of this suggestion that the plaintiff is entitled to one-half and the children to the other. Costs will come out of the estate.

JOOSTE V. VAN DER MERWE. { 1902.
Feb. 14th.
Marriage—Breach of promise.

This was an action for breach of promise. The parties resided at Colesberg, and the defendant's wife was alleged, before marriage, to have made a promise of marriage to the plaintiff. The promise was alleged to have been made in 1896, and plaintiff said that he had agreed, in consideration of the intended marriage, to give up a farm leased by him in the late Orange Free State, and to go and reside at Colesberg. He stated that he had cancelled the lease on payment of £60, and he claimed £400 damages. Defendant said that before the action was brought she tendered £5, and taxed costs to date of tender.

Mr. Benjamin for plaintiff; Mr. Searle (with him Mr. Buchanan) for defendant.

Andries Jacobus Christian Jooste said he was a farmer, and resided at Colesberg. He had been living at Colesberg for three years. Previously he lived in the late Orange Free State. Witness met the lady, who is now Mrs. Van der Merwe, in 1895. They became engaged in August, 1896. She was a minor at the time. She was between 15 and 16 years of age. Witness saw her mother, who consented to the engagement on condition that witness gave up his ground and business and went to live with them on the farm. The ground was leased by witness, and was in the Free State. Witness gave up his farm in the Free State at the end of 1896. Mrs. Van der Merwe asked him frequently to give up the farm in order to come and live in Cape Colony. He paid £63 to cancel the lease. He came to Cape Colony at the end of 1897. She did not break off the engagement before she married her present husband.

By the Court: She was married in 1901, when she was 20 years of age. A number of letters from Mrs. Van der Merwe written in 1900 were put in at the commission. It was not true that she broke the engagement in 1897.

Mr. Benjamin referred to letters addressed by Mrs. Van der Merwe to the witness in June and July, 1900, in one of which she addressed the plaintiff as "Very dear and never-forgotten Andries," and concluded: "Now with best love to you all, again I send my best love and kisses." Other letters were in similar terms.

Witness said that the first intimation he received of the breach of the engagement was in a letter in which Mrs. Van der Merwe wrote, on the 15th April, 1901: "Further, I must answer your letter. I wrote you last that you must put everything out of your head, and to that I hold, for my heart is with another, and all has become clear to me." The defendant had stock.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Mrs. Van der Merwe was not related to witness by marriage. It was not true, as Mrs. Van der Merwe said at the commission, that her mother did not give her consent; that she became engaged in 1896, when between 14 and 15 years of age; that she broke the engagement in 1897; or that witness knew about her engagement to defendant in 1897. He did not know the defendant until after the marriage.

Nicholas J. van der Walt, Colesberg, said that plaintiff had lived at Colesberg since the end of 1896. Witness heard plaintiff speak to Mrs. Van der Merwe's mother, who said she could not consent to an engagement unless plaintiff gave up his ground and came to live in Colesberg. The mother said that the present Mrs. Van der Merwe was her youngest child, and she meant to keep her at home. Plaintiff said it would cost him £60 or £70 in damages, but that he would give up the ground if it was a certain engagement.

Cross-examined: The conversation referred to between the plaintiff and defendant's mother took place about the end of 1896. Before plaintiff went to Quaggasgat he went speculating.

This closed the case for the plaintiff.

The evidence for the defence had been taken on commission.

At this commission, Johanna van Vuuren said that she was married to the defendant in May, 1901, and was now 19 years of age. Her father died when she was six years old, and since then she had lived with her mother. She knew the plaintiff very well. He was a relation. They became engaged in the year 1896, when she was fourteen or fifteen years of age. Her mother did not give her consent to the engagement, nor did she know about it. She broke off the engagement in 1897, and returned to plaintiff his ring and letters. Plaintiff sent them back by post, and subsequently told her she could keep the ring as a present. She then became engaged to the defendant. Plaintiff never told her that he had the lease of a farm in the Free State, and she never promised to marry him if he would give up the lease of that farm. She never knew he had a farm there. She had had two letters from plaintiff, which he wrote her after her marriage. All the letters she had received from plaintiff had been lost, her box having been broken open while she was away from the farm, and all their money was also taken out. In one letter he had asked her to break off her engagement to defendant and re-engage herself to him. He wrote later on in the same terms. In cross-examination, witness said that she did not remember plaintiff speaking to her about the farm in the Free State and plaintiff telling her that he would have to pay £50 if he cancelled the lease. She did not remember his saying that he would do it if she would give him no cause to regret it. The engagement was broken off in 1897. After that she wrote to plaintiff in affectionate terms, but they were not engaged. She only wrote to plaintiff and not to other gentleman friends in these terms. When she wrote the letter of April 15, 1901, she was not engaged to plaintiff. She was not engaged to him shortly before the war broke out, and she did not say in November, 1900, that he must marry her then.

Petrus van der Merwe stated before the commission that he became engaged to his wife in 1897, and after that he saw plaintiff once or twice at her place. On one occasion he told plaintiff that he was engaged to Miss Van Vuuren, and plaintiff said that he also was engaged to her. Witness took a letter from plaintiff to the lady, and asked her to break off the engagement with him (defendant), but she would not do so. Witness saw the letter which plaintiff sent her (Miss Van Vuuren). In this letter plaintiff asked her to break off her engagement to witness and re-engage herself to him. Witness and his wife were now living with Mrs. Van Vuuren (his wife's mother), and they were not well off. He had not other property except a few sheep. They had just sufficient money to pay the expenses of coming to Cape Town to give evidence. Before the war witness just made sufficient to pay the rent of the farm he and his father had. He hoped to make something in the future. He married his wife because she would not give him up.

Mr. Benjamin, in the course of his argument, referred to letters which defendant's wife had written to plaintiff before her marriage. A letter dated June 8, 1900, commenced "Very dear, never-forgotten Andries," and wound up with "Now with best love to you all; again I send you my love and kisses."

[The Chief Justice: In the body of the letter she says: "I love you, but in this matter I am in the hands of the Lord; we must just trust in the Lord." That looks as if there was some hesitation about the matter.]

Mr. Benjamin said that was a different letter to the one he was referring to, which was written later. Proceeding, Mr. Benjamin said that then there was the letter of July 24, 1900, which began "My dear Andries," and concluded "With ten kisses." In another letter dated July, 1900, she addressed plaintiff as "Very dear Andries," and concluded in the same affectionate terms, "Best love and kisses. Good-bye, again with kisses." In a letter dated August 17, 1900, she addressed plaintiff as "Very dear and never-forgotten Andries." In the body of that letter she wrote, "You ask me about love; I love you, and I cannot give you up. I leave this in God's hands," and concluded, "Good-bye; ten love kisses; give Annie two kisses; I cannot think of breaking it off; it would be too hard for me."

The first hint that plaintiff received that the lady did not feel the same towards him was in a letter of November, 1900. In that letter she also addressed him affectionately at the beginning, saying, "Very dear, ever-remembered Andries," but in the body of the letter she said that she wanted to write him something which she hoped would not make him angry when he answered that letter, but she did not exactly say what she meant. On April 15, 1901, however, she wrote to plaintiff saying, with regard to the engagement, "You must put everything out of your head, for my heart is with another, and all has now become clear to me." Upon these letters Mr. Benjamin contended that it was clear that the engagement was not broken off in 1897, as defendant's wife had said.

[The Chief Justice: Here is a minor and we will say that she engages herself with the consent of her mother or guardian; if during her minority she breaks the engagement, can you bring an action against her?]

I submit that I could if it was a valid engagement entered into with consent of the parent or guardian. If she broke off the engagement during her minority they might have to sue her mother as guardian, but now that she was married, they were entitled to sue her husband. If she had broken off the engagement before the marriage I think they would have had an action against her, assisted by her mother as guardian.

[The Chief Justice: If you sue a minor for breach of contract, have you not to prove that that contract was for the benefit of the minor?]

We would not have to do so if the contract was entered into with the consent of the minor's guardian. One might have to show that it was for the benefit of the minor if the contract was entered into without the consent of the minor's guardian. I am, however, not prepared to quote any authorities on that point, as the question of minority has never been raised in the pleadings. Therefore the defendant is estopped from setting up the defence that the contract was not for the benefit of the minor. If that had been pleaded, we might have brought witnesses to prove that the contract was for the benefit of the minor.

Mr. Searle: I submit that the £5 tendered were ample damages, as from the evidence produced it has not been proved that the plaintiff has sustained any damages in this matter. As for the defendant's wife being a minor, that was a fact well within the knowledge of the plaintiff, and it was for him to come prepared to prove that the contract was for the benefit of the minor. I also submit that it is clear that the mother's consent to the engagement was never given. It is most unfortunate that the evidence of the defendant's witnesses when they came down here before could not be taken by the Court, but had to be taken on commission. That, however, was not their fault, but arose through the plaintiff not being able to go on with his case, and it was accordingly agreed to take the evidence on commission.

Mr. Benjamin: The case was not proceeded with when defendant's witnesses were in Cape Town, because the plaintiff could not get a permit to come down here.

Mr. Searle: I submit that the letters did not prove that the engagement continued up to 1901. They were certainly addressed in affectionate terms, but then the plaintiff and the defendant were very old friends, and related to one another. Moreover, the girl was very young, and even after her marriage in her letters she sent her love to plaintiff. They were not the letters of a girl who was engaged to a man, and regarding the near prospects of marriage. Then there were clauses in the letters which showed that to understand them they should have the plaintiff's letters, which were not available, to which they were written in answer, and then they could put two and two together.

Mr. Benjamin, in reply, submitted that plaintiff had sustained material damages in canceling the lease of the farm, and in such a case, some sentimental damages should also be allowed.

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case no exception was taken in the pleadings on the ground that the defendant's wife was a minor at the time of the engagement, it is said to have been entered into, and therefore I shall say no more upon this point than this: that any decision given in this case will not affect any future case in which the defendant may except to the action on the ground of the minority of the defendant. But although the minority of the defendant does not go to the root of the action in this case, it may fairly be considered by the Court in estimating the amount of damages which the plaintiff is entitled to claim. The evidence shows that this lady was only about 15 years of age when she entered into this engagement, and that she broke it off before she was 19 years of age. Under such circumstances, I think that no Court would be eager to give very heavy damages against the defendant. She could hardly have known her own mind at the age of 15, and when she came to a maturer age she changed her mind, because she found that she could not have that affection for the plaintiff which a wife ought to have for her husband. She thereupon broke off the engagement. There is also the circumstance that the lady seems to have met another man whom she loved, and considering her tender age at the time, it is clearly not a case in which heavy damages should be given. Then there are additional circumstances in the case which the Court cannot lose sight of. The defendant himself and the lady whom he married are impecunious, and since the war have lived entirely with the lady's mother. The lady herself is entirely without means, and it has been stated in the evidence that whatever money they had had been stolen from a box while they were away from the farm. Whether that be the case or not, the evidence clearly shows that they are poor people, and not able to pay heavy damages, and I think this young man ought to have been satisfied with the £5 tendered. He is quite a young man, able to earn his own living, and I don't think that an action, such as this, is exactly the way a man should seek to solace his wounded feelings. The Court will therefore give judgment for the amount tendered, £5, with costs to April 19, 1901, the date of the tender, and subsequent costs must be paid by the plaintiff.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

DE BEERS CONSOLIDATED } 1902.
MINES V. THE MASTER OF } Feb. 17th.
THE "ROUSSILLON."

Mr. Searle said that this case was down for Friday next; it was fourth on the roll, and it was unlikely that it would be reached. There were witnesses from Natal, and a telegram had been received stating that it was impossible for these witnesses to come. He asked that the case might be postponed.

Mr. Schreiner consented to a postponement.

Buchanan, J., said that application could be made next week to fix a day.

CAMP V. CAMP. } 1902.
} Feb. 17th.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights instituted by the wife. The case was before the Court on the 25th

November, when evidence was led in proof of the marriage, and the evidence taken on commission was read. The plaintiff's evidence was taken on commission in England. At the previous hearing the defendant wrote a letter to the Registrar of the Court asking for a postponement, which was granted until to day. Now a telegram had been received stating that he was taken ill with dysentery, and had to go to hospital. The defendant raised a question as to certain payments made by him prior to 1897, when the last payment was admittedly made. An affidavit had been prepared showing the total payments made from 1890 to 1897 to be about £400.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) for plaintiff.

Since the matter was last before the Court defendant had written to plaintiff in a very unpleasant way, threatening her that the case would end in a criminal prosecution.

Defendant was ordered to return to or receive plaintiff by the 1st May, failing which, a rule nisi would be issued, returnable on the last day of May, calling on him to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

FRISCH V. FRISCH. } 1902.
} Feb. 17th.

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, divorce.

Mr. Benjamin, for the plaintiff: Defendant has been barred. The plaintiff is the husband, and resides at Cape Town, the defendant being resident at Rondebosch. The parties were married in community of property at Johannesburg on the 19th April, 1892. There are no children.

Charles Haywood Frisch said he was married to defendant on the 19th April, 1892. They lived together for about twelve months at Johannesburg. During the latter part of that period there was unhappiness, the respondent exhibiting bad temper. There were quarrels, and his wife left him. Two or three months before the war witness came to Cape Town. He intended staying here. Witness had asked his wife to come back, but she had refused. Witness was prepared to provide a home for her.

An order was made calling on respondent to return on or before the 23th February, or to show cause on the 12th March why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

DREYER AND CO. V. RED- LINGER. } 1902.
 } Feb. 17th.

Mr. Gardiner for plaintiff: A plea has been filed, but I am informed by defendant's attorney that there will be no appearance. The action is one for brokerage. The declaration alleged that on the 17th September, 1900, defendant employed plaintiffs, in their capacity as brokers and estate agents, to sell a farm at Wynberg known as the Forty Acres Farm. If the sale was effected within three months plaintiffs were to receive the usual brokerage, which was 2½ per cent. Plaintiffs procured a purchaser for the sum of £2,500, and claimed £62 10s. as brokerage. The plea alleged that the defendant employed plaintiffs in or about the month of August, and that it was specially agreed that plaintiffs would be entitled to receive commission on any portion of the purchase price in excess of the sum of £2,000.

George Gasper Dreyer said that on the 17th September defendant employed him to sell the farm. He gave witness a document (produced) by which he gave plaintiffs authority to sell the farm for £2,500, or any less sum which might be agreed upon, and agreed to pay the usual brokerage. It was provided that any sum above that should be taken as commission.

Judgment was given as prayed, with costs.

MABERLEY V. WOODSTOCK } 1902.
 MUNICIPALITY. } Feb. 17th.

Mr. Benjamin moved to make absolute a rule nisi granted against the Woodstock Municipality in December last, interdicting them from paying interest on certain debentures issued in connection with the Oliphant's Hoek water scheme.

Mr. Searle, K.C., who appeared for the Woodstock Municipality, read an affidavit by Mr. W. E. Moore, Mayor of Woodstock, who annexed resolutions passed at meetings of ratepayers endorsing the action of the Council in regard to the scheme. Also annexed were copies of correspondence between the attorneys. Costs of obtaining the rule had been tendered to the applicant.

Mr. Searle (for respondent): Everything required by Act 45 of 1882, sections 144 to 151, has now been done since the rule nisi was granted. Sections 71 and 72 and 18 of Act 23 of 1897 are not limiting clauses referring to all public works.

[Buchanan, J.: What are your powers under the Municipal Act?]

They are stated in section 156 of Act 45, 1882; but after they have borrowed the money they can prosecute their works outside the municipality. There is no specific section in the Municipal Act which applies to our case. We have not constructed anything; we have only purchased a farm, and that we can do under section 156, sub-section 3.

[Buchanan, J.: Is your only point, Mr. Benjamin, that the consent of the Governor has not been obtained?]

Mr. Benjamin (for applicant): No; they require the consent of the Governor and also of the Government. See section 70 of the Public Health Act. We say that it is not competent for the municipality to spend £300,000 on this property, as that is more than ten times the amount of the annual rates. If they may carry out a scheme piece-meal, they could defeat the whole object of the Act.

Mr. Searle: I would suggest that the matter be allowed to stand over for one month.

The Court ordered the matter to stand over for one month, and that the interdict be extended till some further order is made.

In making the order, Buchanan, J., said that applicant was justified in coming into court. As was stated on the last occasion, the Municipality had no right to incur this liability without first getting the consent of the ratepayers. The ratepayers' consent had now been obtained, but all the consents required by the different Acts had not been obtained. The interdict would be extended until these consents had been obtained, and thereafter the Municipality could apply to the Court to have it discharged. Applicant was justified in coming into court, and would have his costs.

THE TOWN COUNCIL OF CAPE } 1902.
TOWN V. THE CAMP'S BAY }
TRAMWAY COMPANY, LTD. } Feb. 17th.

Tramway Company—Non-compliance with the terms of their private Act—Waiver by Town Council—Interdict.

The C B. Tramway Company were bound (inter alia) by their private Act to give 14 days notice to the Town Council of their intention to enter upon and break up any of the Council's roads in pursuance of the powers conferred upon them by the said Act, for the purpose of constructing their line. They gave such notice, but without specifying, as they were bound to do, the day on which they proposed to make entry. The Town Council, however, accepted this notice, and approved of the plans thereunto annexed. The Town Council now applied for an interdict restraining the respondent company from proceeding with their works until they should have supplied such further information as by their Act they were bound to give, and until they should also have again sent into the Council their original specifications.

Held, that as affidavits filed on behalf of the Tramway Company showed that they were not proceeding with their works and were having plans and specifications prepared, the Council could not demand to be again furnished with the original plans and specifications, and that the application for an interdict must be refused with costs.

Semble, (1) the Company might have been interdicted had they attempted to continue their works before supplying the Council with the information which it was under the Act aforesaid entitled to demand. (2) Had the Council not waived their rights they might have objected that the aforesaid notice of entry was void by reason of non-compliance with the terms of the said Company's Act.

This was an application upon notice given to the respondents requiring them to show cause, if any, why they should not be restrained from entering upon or breaking up the Kloof-road in Cape Town, between the property of Mr. Bygott and Burnside-road, until specifications shall have been submitted to and approved of by the applicants, under section 13 of Act 34 of 1899, showing the work to be done in and about the said road and the laying of the tramline thereon, and also until they shall have given due notice to the applicants, under section 12 of the said Act, specifying in terms thereof the time at which they intend to begin such work, and why they should not be ordered to pay the costs of the application.

The affidavit of Josiah Robert Finch, Town Clerk of Cape Town, was as follows:

1. The respondents are a tramway company, formed under the provisions of Act No. 34 of 1899 for the purpose of taking over the rights and exercising the powers in relation to the construction of the tramways referred to in the said Act.

2. The said company has constructed portion of its tramlines, but amongst other works not yet carried out by it is the construction of the tramline in the Kloof-road, within the Municipality, between the property of Mr. Bygott and Burnside-road, being a road under the control of the Town Council.

3. In terms of section 12 of the aforesaid Act, before the company in question shall enter upon or break up any public road, it shall give to the road authority notice at least fourteen days before the commencement of the work, and by section 13 of the Act it is provided that, prior to the giving of such notice, the company shall submit a specification to be approved by the local authority of any intended work connected with the permanent way of the tramway, or any work in or about the street or road.

4. The aforesaid Act was submitted to and approved of by the Town Council before it passed. Before the passing of the said Act, namely, on the 6th and 8th September, 1899, an agreement was entered into between the Mills Syndicate (Limited), whose successors under the said Act are the respondents, of the one part, and the Town Council of the other part, which agreement, with the plan referred to therein, is marked A. The said agreement is covered by the terms of section 65 of the said Act.

5. By the first clause of the said agreement it was provided that the Kloof-road aforesaid was to be widened, as indicated upon the plan annexed to the said agreement, and that any differences that might arise in the interpretation of such widening should be determined by the Town Council.

6. The plan annexed to the said agreement showed that the Kloof-road, between Burnside-road and until near Mr. Bygott's property, was to be not less than 60 feet in width, including gutters; and on approaching Mr. Bygott's property, was to be reduced from 60 feet to not less than 40 feet in width, including gutter.

7. In April, 1900, the respondent company had not yet begun the work of construction in the Kloof-road, but on the 27th April the Town Clerk received a letter written by Mr. Alfred Dickinson, the consulting engineer and representative of the company, stating that he was returning to England, and although the company would not be able to commence work within the next fourteen days, he purported to give formal notice, in terms of section 12 of the said Act, of its intention to enter upon the Kloof-road for the purpose of constructing the tramway along the Kloof-road. The letter concluded by stating that, although formal notice had been given by the letter, the resident engineer of the company would, of course, not think of breaking up the roadway without further acquainting the Council of the fact.

8. The letter referred to the obligation to widen the road in terms of the aforesaid agreement, and stated that the company would endeavour to carry out the work, not only in the letter, but in the spirit, and for that purpose the company forwarded plans in duplicate, showing the proposed widening of the Kloof-road, which, the letter stated, complied with the arrangement already entered into with the Council.

9. This lastmentioned plan shows how it was proposed to widen the Kloof-road to the aforesaid width of 60 feet and 40 feet respectively, as had been provided in the agreement and plan previously referred to, and the Town Council was satisfied that it was the intention of the company, as stated by it, to carry out its agreement.

10. On the 11th day of May, 1900, the then Town Clerk addressed a letter to the secretary of the respondent company acknowledging receipt of the letter of the 27th April, stating that the Council approved of the plans submitted, and had given the necessary consent for the construction of the tramways, but notifying that the sanction of the Council with regard to these matters was given under and subject to the provisions of the aforesaid Act.

11. The Town Council did not at any time agree to waive or abandon its right to require notice to be given under section 12 of the aforesaid Act, or to require specifications to be submitted under section 13 of the aforesaid Act.

12. Inasmuch, however, as it was stated in the letter of the 27th April, 1900, that tramway material had already been shipped, the Council was anxious to do all it could to assist the company by authorising the commencement of work.

13. Thereafter about June, 1900, the company began the work of constructing the tramlines, and had now approached the lower part of the Kloof-road. The work done hitherto, though not approved in all respects by the Council, had not led to any dispute of so serious a nature as to compel the Council to take steps to prevent work on the road.

14. A dispute has, however, now arisen with regard to the portion of the Kloof-road between Mr. Bygott's property and Burnside-road, already referred to.

15. Voluminous correspondence has passed between the Council and the company, from which the Council came to the conclusion that it was the intention of the company to commence work on the portion in dispute without further notice to the Council, and without submitting further specifications.

16. The specifications that would be required were to show how and in what manner it was proposed to widen the road to 60 or 40 feet; how the work of finishing of and making safe cuttings and embankments was to be carried out; how proper approaches across the same were to be made; and generally such specifications as would show the Council what was to be done in carrying out so important a work as the alteration of the Lower Kloof-road. The plans previously sent in did not give this information, and no specifications have been sent in at all.

17. It was also considered essential by the Council that it should have notice when the work in question was to be undertaken, in order that it might watch and supervise the carrying out of the same if necessary.

18. In the correspondence referred to the company took up the position that it had no power to widen the street, but in reply it was pointed out that under section 34 of the aforesaid Act the road could be widened with the assistance of the Council at the expense of the company.

19. The company also took up the position that it has been represented to its predecessors, the Mills Syndicate Company, Limited, that portion of the land that would be required to widen the Kloof-road to 60 feet was the property of the Council, an allegation which is absolutely repudiated by the Council. It does not seem necessary to lay before this Honourable Court the whole of the correspondence in question.

20. I, however, annex hereto a letter marked E, dated the 5th November, 1901, addressed to me by Mr. Dickinson, in which he states that the company proposes to widen the roadway for the full width of the property owned by the Council, which in some cases was 60 feet wide, and in others of less width; in other words, that the company refuses to widen the road in accordance with the aforesaid agreement and plan.

21. The Council was not able to get from the company any satisfactory assurance as to whether it intended to give notice under section 12 of the said agreement of its intention to break open the road, and whether it intended to submit specifications with regard to the questions hereinbefore referred to.

22. The matter was accordingly placed in the hands of the Council's solicitors, with the result that the company has now undertaken to submit certain specifications, but has definitely taken up the position that it will not give the Council any further notice before beginning work upon the portion of the road in dispute. The specifications which the company agreed to submit have not yet been received.

23. The Council is apprehensive that the company may at any time, in pursuance of its avowed intention, proceed to enter upon the lower portion of the Kloof-road, and may break open the same and lay down their tramlines without further notice to or communication with the Council, and have been instructed to take proceedings to restrain the company from undertaking any such work until the necessary specifications providing for the widening and finishing off of this road to 60 feet or 40 feet, in accordance with the aforesaid agreement, have been submitted and approved, and until due notice under section 12 has been given to the Town Council.

In an affidavit, W. J. Jeffries, Assistant City Engineer, stated that on January 8 he made an inspection of the Kloof-road, and ascertained that a trench for a tramway cable had been cut from the termination of the tramline, opposite Mr. Bygott's property, for a distance of 90 feet towards the Burnside property. He found that this trench had been filled up, and that the cable intended for it had been coiled up in a hole made for the purpose, alongside the road below where the rails are at present.

For the respondents, Chester Foulton Wilson, general manager and resident engineer of the Camp's Bay Tramway Co., made the following affidavit:

1. I perused the notice of motion and affidavits sworn to by Josiah Robert Finch, Town Clerk, William George Fairbridge, and by William James Jeffries.

2. With regard to the affidavit of the Town Clerk, I say that the allegations set forth in the first and second paragraphs are correct, except that I further say that the company duly commenced its work of tramway construction on the mutual understanding with the Corporation that proper notice, under section 12 of Act 24 of 1899, had been duly given and accepted; the company carried on such work continually, and in July last, as part of such work, laid rails in part of that portion of the Kloof-road referred to in the second paragraph, and no objection was ever raised by the Corporation, but I subsequently, of my own accord, caused the said length of rails to be taken up, in order to improve the curve at the spot in question. Before I could relay the rails at this spot, the Municipal authorities requested me to do all in my power to enable the road to be placed in as good a condition as possible for the Duke and Duchess of York to pass over same. In order to meet this request in time for the Royal visit, I therefore had this portion levelled, and shifted the workmen for a time to other portions of the Kloof-road, nearer the Kloof Nek.

3. With reference to the third paragraph of the said affidavit, I beg to refer the Court to the terms of the said Act, and with regard to paragraphs 4, 5, and 6, I, in like manner, beg to refer to the terms of the agreement and the plan produced; but I say that the expression "any differences which may arise in the interpretation of such widening shall be determined by the Corporation" was meant and introduced only to provide that if differences arose as regards gradation of width from wider into narrower portions of the road, as the colouring on the plan only generally indicated that at certain spots there should be gradation, such differences should be determined by the Corporation.

4. With regard to paragraphs 7, 8, 9, and 10, I submit that the notice given in Mr. Dickinson's letter of the 27th April, 1900, was intended and given as the notice required by section 12 of the aforesaid Act, that the company intended to enter upon and break up the whole length of the Kloof-road, and no distinction was made either by the company or the Corporation between that portion lying between the Kloof Nek and Mr. Bygott's property, and that lying between Mr. Bygott's property and Burnside-road. I know of no reason why an attempt is now made to separate the Kloof-road into two such sections, and no reason to my knowledge exists.

5. The Corporation accepted the notice given in the letter of the 27th April referred to as sufficient and satisfactory, and I beg to refer the Court to the expression used by the Town Clerk in his replying letter of the 11th May, 1900, in which he acknowledges Mr. Dickinson's letters of the 25th and 27th April as "giving notice pursuant to the provisions of section 12 of the Camp's Bay Tramway Act, 1899 (24 of 1899), that the company intend to open and break up the public roads and streets along the Kloof-road, for the purpose of commencing the work of constructing and laying certain tramways."

6. At the time the then Town Clerk wrote this letter he was in possession, in addition to the plans disclosed by the present Town Clerk in his affidavit, of a certain plan and cross section, all of which, together with the specifications contained in the said agreement with the Mills Syndicate and the Act, constitute and amount to very full and complete specification, showing how the construction was to be carried out. This plan and cross-section, together with those disclosed by the Town Clerk in his affidavit, were the plans referred to in the last paragraph of the then Town Clerk's letter, dated 11th May, stating that the Council had approved of the plans submitted, and given his necessary consent for the construction of the tramways accordingly.

7. Both the Corporation and the company acted upon the notice, and the acceptance of same by the Corporation, as complete for the purposes of section 12, and as "full submission" and approved of the specification required by the first paragraph of section 13 of the aforesaid Act, and until very lately continued to act on the understanding that the concluding sentence of the then Town Clerk's letter of the 11th May, 1900, referred specially to the last paragraph of section 13 of the Act; the company has never disputed the right of the Corporation to claim to be furnished with further plans, sections, and information, if same be duly called for by the Corporation, but the present point at issue in this connection between the Corporation and the company is that the company denies the right of the Corporation to claim that the company is bound to stop work which is being done in pursuance of the express approval of the Council, duly given whenever the Council may call for additional plans, section, and information under the latter portion of section 13 of the Act, when such have reference to works which have not been commenced, and which the work now in prosecution would not affect.

8. With regard to paragraphs 11 and 12, I say that the company has never claimed that the Council did agree to waive or abandon its said rights; but, on the contrary, I say that notice in terms of section 12 of the aforesaid Act having been given and accepted with reference to the whole of the Kloof-road, and the specification referred to in the first paragraph of section 13 of the aforesaid Act having been submitted and approved, the Council has already fully exercised its said rights as to section 12 and the first portion of section 13, and retains its full rights, under the concluding paragraph of section 13 of the said Act. The company is prepared to furnish any additional plans, sections, and information called for, in terms of the latter portion of the said 13th section, and has no intention of doing any work whatsoever beyond the construction expressly approved and in accordance with approved specification, without first complying with all lawful requirements of the Council, under the second part of section 13, and is not in default through non-compliance with any requirement in terms of the said section; on the contrary, the company has furnished additional information when asked for, as, for example, in January, 1901, when it submitted certain drawings.

9. With regard to the 13th and 14th paragraphs of the said affidavit, I say that the company commenced the work of constructing its tramlines as stated on the Kloof-road, and is continuing with this work only in accordance with approved plans and specifications, and the dispute referred to in the 14th paragraph of the said affidavit does not affect the construction of the permanent way, but is purely connected with the widening of the road, in terms of the agreement between the Mills Syndicate (Limited) and the Corporation.

10. With regard to paragraph 15, I beg to refer the Court to the correspondence that has passed, and especially to the letter written by the company's attorneys on the 30th November, 1901.

11. I had prepared, prior to receiving notice of motion in this matter, a digest of drawings and specifications approved by the Corporation, covering construction work for tramways 12 and 13 in Kloof-road, from Burnside-road to Kloof Nek, and this digest proves that full and ample specifications have been furnished and approved. It was my intention to furnish the Corporation with a copy of this digest and the additional specifications recently requested before commencing any work about which there is or could be any dispute or difference, and I am prepared to furnish same with due diligence, but it is work which requires some field work on the part of the surveyor, and which it has not been possible to complete.

12. The allegations in the last sentence of paragraph 16 of the said affidavit and in the first paragraph of the affidavit sworn to by William James Jeffries are misleading and not in accordance with fact, and I would point out with reference to this question of road widening that plans and specifications on this point were submitted and approved as follows (plans and specifications given).

13. With regard to paragraph 17 of the Town Clerk's said affidavit I say that notwithstanding that the formal notice under section 12 of the said Act had been given and accepted, the company has always kept the Corporation authorities informed of where work was about to be done from time to time, and ever since work in the Kloof-road commenced it has been continuously carried on, and been under the supervision and observation of the said authorities.

14. A very considerable part of the company's work of construction has been finished with the exception of some guttering in course of construction about which there is no dispute and regular public traffic is being carried on over certain sections of the tramways, and in all these cases the plans and specifications, acted on and found ample and satisfactory, have been those now alleged to be non-existent.

15. With regard to paragraphs 18 and 19 of the said affidavit, I say that the dispute between the Corporation and the company there referred to requires that evidence should be led and in no ways affects the construction of the tramway, and is not affected by any question of specifications. The company maintains that position that the then Town Clerk when the wording of the agreement relied on by the Corporation was agreed to represented that the Corporation owned a road 60 feet wide for the distance in question, except at one spot at the corner of De Lorentz-street, although only a small portion of this road was made, and the company there upon agreed to widen the road to that width, but never undertook to acquire land from others to give to the Corporation a wider roadway than it then possessed except that it agreed to and did purchase the one property which so encroached on the 60-foot roadway. The Council has lately, however, passed plans, and permitted the erection of buildings encroaching, at several spots on the 60 feet roadway, originally represented to be the property of the Corporation, and now wishes the company to acquire and remove these new encroachments.

16. Section 34 of the said Act refers to roads under 30 feet in width, and the widening of same to that width or any lesser width the Council may agree to, but the encroachments on the 60 feet limit of the Kloof-road are beyond the limits of deviation shown on the Parliamentary plans, and the company has no power to compel any owner to sell any land outside the limits of deviation. I respectfully submit that this dispute is outside the question now before this Honourable Court.

17. With regard to paragraphs 21, 22, and 23 of the Town Clerk's affidavit, I refer this Honourable Court to the letter written by the Company's attorneys on the 30th November, 1900, to the attorneys for the Corporation. The company, although notice has been given and accepted as regards the whole Kloof-road from the Kloof Nek to Burnside-road, has always been and still is willing to keep the Corporation authorities informed from time to time of where work is being done, and has so kept them informed, and the said authorities have had full knowledge throughout the work, but the Council now insists that the company shall acknowledge that it has never given notice under section 12 of the aforesaid Act, notwithstanding that considerably more than half of the total work in and on the Kloof-road has already been actually done, and has been duly supervised throughout, and is at the present date being supervised by the Council.

18. With further reference to the said affidavit of William James Jeffries, I say that the same is incorrect and misleading, in as far as it is calculated to convey the impression that the trench for the cable was cut in that portion of the Kloof-road between Mr. Bygott's property and Burnside-road, and where the road is described on the coloured plan annexed to the Town Clerk's affidavit as 60 feet wide. The trench in question never reached the 60-foot section of the road, and was and is part of the work upon the section where work has been continuously carried on under the supervision of the Council, and the said trench stopped at a point considerably short of the limit to which the work had been continued, and which is referred to in the paragraph 2 of this affidavit, and the gutters up to this point and as far as this trench was carried have been constructed under the almost daily supervision of the City Engineer, since the correspondence annexed to the affidavit of William George Fairbridge.

19. In conclusion, I say that the work of constructing the permanent way with reference to which the plans, cross-sections, and specifications are complete and approved, and with which no fault has been found by the Council, will in no way interfere with or affect or be affected by the work, with reference to which further specifications detailed in section 16 of the Town Clerk's affidavit are now asked, and the company has given every assurance it can, and I hereby repeat such assurance, that work on the section generally called the 60 feet section will be confined to the construction of permanent way, and work fully authorised and approved, and before doing any work concerning which such additional specifications and information have been called for, the company will duly furnish the latter for the Council's approval. No reason to my knowledge exists for making the present application, and the action of the Council in so doing is, I respectfully submit, premature, and the company would be put to great loss and expense if the work on the permanent way be stopped or delayed at this stage.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the Town Council): The Town Council are clearly entitled to an interdict, because by section 13 of their Act they are bound to supply further information. This they admit. (See page 11 of the manager's affidavit.) They have not given us any full specifications as to the making and widening of the road, and they claim as of right to go on working before sending in their specifications. A dispute arose as to the widening of the road, and we told them to stop working until the dispute was settled. It was clear that by their agreement with the Mills Syndicate they were bound to widen the road to 60 feet, and this agreement is still binding on the company. Now they say that they will widen to 60 feet only where we have land for the purpose to give them. Unless they can show that we have been guilty of misrepresentation, we are entitled to an interdict. It is true that they say they are not going to lay down rails and construct their road within this space where they are bound to widen to 60 feet. The matter, however, cannot be dealt with piece-meal like this. The notice of motion calls upon them to show cause why they should not be interdicted pending their giving notice of plans and specifications. (Section 13 of the Company's Act.) The terms of this section show that the local authority can stop the work if the materials, etc., used are not satisfactory. Notice was given in very general terms by the company on April 27, 1900, before the work was commenced. In their letter the company admit their obligation to follow the plan they had submitted, and which had been incorporated in section 65. It cannot be held by the Tramway Company that a mere general notice would entitle them to go on with work over any and every section of their line. Section 13 is clearly against any such intention. They admit that the information we ask is reasonable, and hence their contention that they can go on with their work before giving us this information is untenable. If they say that they entered into the agreement, having been thereto induced by misrepresentation, it is for them to prove this misrepresentation. They have given us no information as to the road-making work, and they cannot contend that they may go on with such parts of the work as have been approved, and then fight out what is disputed. They contend that they have a right to carry their work right through without having first widened the road to 60 feet at the point specified. Section 13 provides that any work may be stopped by the Town Council until the company have satisfied them as to their plans. Paragraphs 7 and 8 of the manager's affidavit admit this right of the Council to demand further plans. Then again, under Act 42 of 1895, the Government claim for themselves the power of vetoing the opening of electric tram lines. It is no doubt true that we did say that the road could be widened under section 34 of the Act with the help of the Council. This, however, would seem to have been admitted per incuriam, so we fall back on section 65 of the Act.

Mr. Schreiner (for defendants): It is necessary to see why we are called into Court. In the first place, we are asked to furnish specifications of work to be done, and also to file plans of this work. Both of these grounds are bad as reasons for an interdict. Section 13 of the Company's Act really consists of two parts, and the point in this case is had the Council received specifications in terms of section 13? Until we furnished these we could not give notice under section 12. We admit that the first part of section 13 obliged us to submit specifications before we began the work. This we did, and gave definite notice, together with our specifications, under section 13. The Town Council might have objected that the sections of the tram line were too long and must be broken up. The Town Council now demand a special notice and specifications for a certain section of the line. We have not carried on the trench one inch beyond Bygood's property. Then how can they interdict us in face of our offer to give information? We have done all we could do. We cannot give what the applicants ask without further surveys, and of course these take time. With the exception of the line going over a certain piece of ground near De Lorentz-street (which we have expropriated), the whole road is 60 feet wide. It is true we undertook to excavate the bank, but we never undertook to find the land. We thought the Town Council was the proprietor of the land. Our specifications show how our work is to be cut. Green Point Municipality v. Metropolitan Railway (8, Juta, 61) shows that the Town Council is not entitled to an interdict. The agreement cannot be drawn in to interpret section 13. Under that section they could stop us if we refused information, but that is not their case. We actually had our rails laid before the Royal visit, and we voluntarily took some of them up because we did not like the curve. Had it been intended that the widening to 60 feet should have been done by expropriation, the Act would have been differently worded. We do not claim power to run a tramway along a narrow road; Government would not let us do that. If this interdict be granted, our whole system will be stopped.

Mr. Searle (in reply): If they have our consent to go on with this work, they got it on their promise to widen the road to 60 feet. They now refuse to do this. The specification they are now working on is not the one they put in for our approval. Section 65 shows that the agreement is incorporated in the Act.

[Buchanan, J.: You now argue that you approved of the specifications, but they are not carrying them out?]

That is a pure technicality. It is before the Court that they sent in a plan showing a 60 feet road, and now they say they are not going on with this road. The Assistant City Engineer swore, however, that 90 feet of cable had been laid along this very road. They have taken up the position that they may lay lines right through the disputed section provided they only do other work which has been approved of. This would involve a misconstruction of section 13. If the Tramway Company wanted an expropriation clause in their Bill, they ought to have seen that it was there. It was no part of our duty to watch over their interests.

Buchanan, J.: According to the notice of motion given in this case, this is an application calling upon the respondents, who are the Camp's Bay Tramway Company, to show cause why they shall not be restricted from entering upon or breaking up the Kloof-road until specifications shall have been submitted to and approved of by the Town Council, under section 13 of Act 34 of 1899, and also until they shall have given due notice, under section 12 of the Act, specifying in terms thereof the time at which they intend to begin such work. Now section 12 of the Act requires that before the Tramway Company can enter upon any part of a road or break it up they must give notice to the Town Council fourteen days at least before the commencement of the work. In April, 1900, the engineer to the Tramway Company wrote a letter to the Town Council, in which he gave notice of the intention of the company to enter upon, open, and break up the road, but this notice was not specific in terms required by the section. He says: "Although we shall not be able to commence the work within the next fourteen days." He does not specify, as the Act requires, the date at which they intend to commence the work. But the Town Council in the reply take no objection to this, as they might possibly have done. This notice given does not strictly comply with the Act, but this want of compliance has been waived by the Council. In the letter the Tramway Company submitted certain tracings to the Town Council showing what they intended to do. The Town Council accepted the notice, and approved of these tracings, which refer to the widening of the road to 60 feet, and where the rails are to be laid down. The Town Council wrote their approval to the Tramway Company, who thereupon entered upon and broke up the road. Now the Tramway Company have not, according to the Town Council, complied with the specifications which they sent on that occasion. The notice of motion calls upon the company to show cause why they should not be restrained until they have sent in their specifications. In argument the case has been reduced to this:

That the Tramway Company have not complied with the specifications sent in, but there are two quite different matters. If notice had been framed as it ought to have been, then there would be quite a different set of affairs, and other questions might arise. But the 13th section goes on further, and says that the road authority—that is, the Town Council—may at any time require further information as to the construction of the road, respecting the routes, grades, and such other details as may be required, and in the event of non-compliance with the demand, the Tramway Company will be debarred from proceeding with the work until they have supplied this to the satisfaction of the Town Council. The Town Council have objected to their going on with a certain portion until they have supplied this information. The Tramway Company reply: "It is true we have not supplied this information, but we are getting the information ready, and we shall send it in." The only objectionable thing in their reply is the statement: "We will not bind ourselves not to go on until we have sent in this." But from the affidavits it is clear that they have not attempted to go on. If they had done so, it is quite possible that under this section they might have been restrained until the additional information and plans had been approved of by the Town Council. But that is not the question before us. The Town Council seems to want to go back to the original stage, and say the Tramway Company have given no notice, and sent in no plans to be approved of, and that they must now give that notice. The affidavits show clearly that notice was given, informally it is true, but accepted by the Council, and specifications were sent in and accepted by the Council. These specifications are not so complete as the Council might have demanded, and as they may now demand. Reading the two sections together, it is quite possible that if they had not complied with the demand of the Town Council, the latter might stop the whole work. But this is not a question for the Court to decide, nor have we to decide whether they have carried out the specifications. If the Council make out a case—and they make out, on the plans before us, a very strong case—that the Tramway Company agreed to make the road 60 feet wide, and had not done so, the latter would certainly require a very strong case on their part to show why they should not carry this into effect, and comply with the agreement, which inferentially they entered into. Here, however, the Tramway Company have not proceeded with the work, and they say they were getting plans ready and were not doing this work. If the Council find they do go on, then they can apply for an interdict until this information is supplied. But the application which we have before us is to compel the Tramway Company to give the original notice and to send in the original specifications. It has been shown that this notice was given and these specifications sent in and approved, and it is too late therefore for the Council to seek to go back to the original position. What may take place on the action is quite another question. With a properly framed notice of motion, and with information on the points, the Court will be able to decide the case, but on the papers, as they now stand, we cannot decide the matter. The application seems to be misconceived, and will be refused, with costs.

Prison Breaking—Martial Law——Civil Warrant.

The Court will not uphold a conviction for prison breaking where the prisoner who had escaped from custody was not imprisoned under any Civil

Warrant but merely by order of the military authorities.

Buchanan, J., said that this case had come before him for review from the Magistrate at Worcester. The accused were charged with contravening section 23 of Act 23 of 1888, that was of committing the crime of prison-breaking, in that being unconvicted prisoners awaiting trial at the Matjesfontein lock-up, they made their escape. They pleaded guilty, were found guilty and sentenced to six weeks' imprisonment, with hard labour. Some statements made in the examination had caused me to send the case back to the Magistrate for information as to whether the accused were civil or military prisoners. The Magistrate's explanation was that the lock-up keeper at Matjesfontein occupied the dual position of civil and military gaoler. The accused Wemmer was in prison awaiting trial on a charge of horse theft, brought against him by the military authorities. Therefore he was a civil prisoner, and the conviction in his case would be confirmed. As to Link, the Magistrate said he was put in gaol by the Commandant of Matjesfontein. There was no civil warrant for his detention, and he was brought before a civil court at the instance of the military authorities. The Court had consistently laid down in all cases which had come before them that while they would not interfere with the military authorities in martial law districts, at the same time the military authorities could not expect any assistance from the civil courts to enable them to carry out their orders. The Magistrate, as a civil functionary, had no right to try this case, and the conviction in Link's case must be quashed. In Wemmer's case, the conviction would be confirmed.

WIENER AND CO. V. JAMA-LODIEN. { 1902.
Feb. 18th.
" 19th.

This was an action brought by Messrs. Wiener and Co. against one Jamalodien, who was a general dealer residing at Cape Town. Plaintiffs sued for £186 6s. 4d., money due upon a certain guarantee or undertaking of suretyship, signed by defendant on June 2, 1900. This document was to the effect that defendant undertook to guarantee payment of such sums of money as might become due for goods supplied to one Ahmet Mohamet, not exceeding the full amount of his account. Thereafter plaintiff supplied goods to Mohamet, who on June 23, 1901, surrendered his estate. Defendant had been requested but had refused to pay the amount due for the goods so supplied. The plea stated that defendant had no knowledge and no record of what goods were supplied. He said that he undertook to become surety for payment for goods not exceeding £15 in value; and that the document did not at the time of signing contain the words "the full amount of his account." He stated that there was a blank after the words "not exceeding," plaintiffs promising to put in the amount of the goods supplied.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. C. W. de Villiers) for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Wilford) for defendant.

Francis Bonnes, trustee in the estate of Ahmet Mohamet, gave evidence as to the surrender. The dividend payable to the plaintiffs was £61 7s. 8d.

Frederick C. Wiener, managing director of the plaintiff firm, said that in June, 1900, he had conversations with Ahmet. Witness drew out the document produced. A number of lithographic forms were kept in the office, and were filled in when required. Witness himself filled in this document. Jamalodien was an intelligent man. He had signed forms previously, sometimes for the full amounts and sometimes for fixed amounts. The document was read over. Marlow and Bowley, clerks in the office, were present. Goods were supplied to Ahmet thereafter. He bought goods to the amount of about £400 altogether. Defendant and Ahmet frequently came in together. Ahmet paid his account up to January. On May 6, defendant wrote stating that he would not hold himself liable for goods supplied to Ahmet in future. No goods were supplied after receipt of this letter. On August 17, defendant, for the first time, stated that the security was limited to £15. In consequence of a communication from Ahmet some goods were taken from the latter's store at the end of April for safe keeping. The store had to be cleaned by the plague authorities. Just at the time of the insolvency Jamalodien asked him to take the goods back. Witness said he could not do it. He handed the goods to the trustee. Witness had no recollection of giving Jamalodien a type-written copy of the suretyship document. The type-writer only came to the office in May, 1901. Witness had some recollection of giving a duplicate form to the accountant to give to Jamalodien.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness could almost swear that Jamalodien could read. There was no blank in the document, and there was no arrangement that this should be filled up afterwards with the amount of the goods purchased that day by Ahmet, the sum not to exceed £15. The copy (produced by Mr. Benjamin) was on the firm's paper, and was written by the firm's typewriter. On this copy the words "not exceeding" appeared followed by a blank. Witness was not aware that this copy was given in July or August, 1901.

By the Court: Witness was perfectly certain that the original document was not altered after signing. Witness could not explain how the words "the full amount" were left out of the copy.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: In respect to another suretyship, Jamalodien had repudiated liability, but paid after the declaration had been filed.

Gustavus Marlow, bookkeeper, in the plaintiffs' employ, said he was present when the document in dispute was signed. It was read over to Jamalodien, and was then in the same condition as it was now. There was no question raised in witness's presence as to limiting the amount to £15, or to one day's supply. This was never done by the firm.

By Mr. Justice Maasdorp: Witness had never signed a document concluding with the words "not exceeding."

Albert Ernest Bowley, clerk, in the employ of Messrs. Wiener and Co., gave similar evidence.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Mr. Benjamin called

Jamalodien, the defendant, who said he saw Mr. Wiener in June, 1900. Witness agreed to go surety for £15, and told Mr. Wiener to put £15 in the document. Mr. Wiener said he would put in £12 or £15, according to what the goods amounted to. Witness could not read; he could sign his name. When witness wrote the letter in May, he intended to go to India.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: He had no conversation with Mr. Wiener about the goods belonging to Achmat, which Mr. Wiener had taken back into store. He was aware that in May Achmat was likely to become insolvent, and he admitted having signed securities in favour of Messrs. Spilhaus and Mr. Ohlsson.

Achmat Mahomed, examined by Mr. Benjamin, gave evidence as to going to the plaintiff's place of business with the defendant, for the purpose of opening an account.

Abdol Gagoo stated that Jamalodien agreed to stand security for the first order only, which was under £15.

After hearing Mr. Benjamin for the defendant, and without calling upon Mr. Searle, the Court gave judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an action on a contract of suretyship for the payment of all such sums of money as may become due by the principal. The defence raised by the plea is that on the day on which the writing of the document was signed, the writing did not contain the words "for the full amount of his account," the plaintiffs promising to fill in the amount not exceeding £15. Now I may say at once that the defence at first sight seems to receive corroboration from the copy of the document which was supplied by the firm to the defendant in August, 1901, because in that copy there is nothing after the words "not exceeding the full amount of his account," and if there were not other circumstances in this case strongly supporting the plaintiff's case, the fact that this copy was delivered would be almost conclusive. The copying clerk is said by counsel (and there was no objection to this statement being made by counsel) not to be in a position to explain why the copy was in this form as he remembers nothing about it. Mr. Wiener says it is quite possible that this copy was made from another duplicate which did not contain these words. But, unfortunately for the defendant, there are other circumstances in the case which must be regarded as conclusive against him. In the first place, in his letter of the 6th May, 1901, he writes: "Please take notice that I shall not hold myself liable for any further supply of goods by you to the other parties." Now if the agreement was such as he states, this letter could not have been written. He knew that much more than £15 was owing, and there could be no further liability on his part if his statement of what occurred was true. That is an acknowledgment, therefore, that up to that time he was liable for the supply of goods to an unlimited extent. He must have known that it was for his interest to have these documents as complete as possible, because the principal was already insolvent, and he knew that he was liable. In the next place, when in August last year he was supplied with the copy, he did not go to Wiener and say at once this is a mistake, and that the words "not exceeding" ought to have been completed by adding the amount of £15. Nothing was done at the time, and that certainly is against him. On the other hand, on behalf of the firm, there really would have been no inducement to make the alteration afterwards, because the effect of this document in leaving no words after "not exceeding" seems to be legally the same as for the full amount of his account. For these reasons, I think the Court has no option but to give judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with costs. There will be judgment for £123 18s. 8d., with costs.

Mr. Searle said that the amount had not been confirmed; the plaintiff would give the defendant credit for anything which might be recovered out of the estate.

The Chief Justice said he should have thought the money was safe, and it was better to give judgment for a fixed amount.

Mr. Searle contended that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment for the amount claimed, and they would pay over any dividend from the estate as soon as they received it; they had not yet received anything.

The Chief Justice said the plaintiff would, in that case, have to make a cession of the amount to be received; judgment would accordingly be for the amount claimed.

TRUSTEES OF THE WESLEYAN CHURCH V. EAYRS.
KAISER BROS. V. THE TRUSTEES OF THE WESLEYAN CHURCH. 1902.
Feb. 18th.
" 19th.

Contract of Sale of Land—

Measure of Damages due to purchaser for want of occupation.

Certain Church Trustees had sold a piece of land to K. Bros. undertaking to give possession by a certain fixed date. This they failed to do for more than 3½ months after the date agreed upon, in consequence of having previously to erect a person who claimed to have a yearly lease. The present premises on the ground were stated to be worth £14 a month though let at £7. The purchasers had informed the vendors that they proposed erecting buildings worth £8,000 on this ground, and they now claimed damages for want of occupation based on this prospective value of the property.

Held, that any such damages were too remote, and that such damages only could be recovered for breach of contract as might reasonably be supposed to have been in contemplation of the parties as naturally arising out of the transaction, and that as the present value of the property was not shown to be more than £15 a month, a tender at the rate of £25 a month must be deemed sufficient.

The plaintiffs' declaration in the first case was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are Ezra Nuttall, Charles E. B. Garland, and William Abbott, all of Cape Town, and they sue in their capacity as trustees of the Sir Lowry-road Wesleyan Church. The defendant is Jane Eayrs, of Cape Town, married to James B. Eayrs, and duly assisted by him. Defendant carries on a boarding-house in Cape Town for her own benefit.

2. Plaintiffs are the registered owners of a certain house and premises at the corner of Sir Lowry-road and Muir-street, Cape Town.

3. In or about October, 1901, defendant was occupying the said premises as a monthly tenant of plaintiffs, and she had received due notice to quit the said premises on October 31, plaintiffs having sold the same under an agreement to give possession to the purchasers on November 1, whereof defendant had notice.

4. Defendant wrongfully and unlawfully refused to deliver up possession of the said premises, and still continues so to refuse, and plaintiffs have in consequence sustained damage in the sum of £150.

5. All things have happened, all times have elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle plaintiffs to demand that defendant forthwith quit the said premises and pay the said sum of £150.

The plaintiff claims:

(a) An order that defendant forthwith deliver up possession of the said premises.

(b) Payment of £150 as damages.

(c) Alternative relief.

(d) Costs of suit.

To this declaration defendant pleaded as follows:

1. She admits paragraphs 1 and 2.

2. With reference to paragraph 3, she admits that in October, 1901, she was occupying the said premises as a tenant of the plaintiffs, but she denies that she was a monthly tenant. In or about April, 1901, plaintiffs leased the premises to defendant for a term of twelve months from May 1, 1901, at a rental of £7 per month, and defendant is, and was in October, 1901, occupying the said premises under the said lease. She admits that she received notice to quit the premises on October 31, but denies that this was due notice. She has no knowledge of any sale which the plaintiffs may have made of the premises.

3. With reference to paragraph 4, she admits that she has refused and still refuses to deliver up possession of the said premises, but denies that such refusal is wrongful or unlawful. She denies that plaintiffs have sustained any damages for which she is liable.

4. She denies paragraph 5.

Wherefore defendant prays that plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiffs' replication was as follows:

1. They admit that one of the plaintiffs, William Abbott, did purport to make a verbal agreement with defendant that if she paid the rent of the said premises in advance on the first day of each month she would have a lease of the said premises for twelve months, as from April 1, 1901; but that if she made default in the payment of any instalment on the due date as above, she should become a monthly tenant. They say that the said Abbott had no authority to enter into such an agreement, or to bind plaintiffs thereby to a yearly tenancy by defendant.

2. They say, further, that, assuming that he had such authority, the said rent was not paid in advance as promised by defendant, but that she failed to pay the rent for June and July as promised, whereby she became a monthly tenant, whereof the said Abbott informed her.

3. They say, further, that the defendant acknowledged that she had failed to pay as promised, and accepted notice to quit the premises on October 31, and raised no objection thereto, and she has now waived any right she may otherwise have had by her conduct in accepting the said notice.

4. Save as above, they deny all and singular the allegations in the plea.

The defendant's rejoinder was as follows:

Save in so far as the replication contains admissions, she denies all the allegations therein contained, and specially that it was a term of the said lease that the rent should be paid in advance, and joins issue thereon, and again prays that plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

The affidavit of Morris Kaiser and Jacob Kaiser, carrying on business as Kaiser Bros., was as follows:

1. Plaintiffs reside in Cape Town. Defendants are the trustees of the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

2. On or about August 12, 1901, defendants in their said capacity sold to plaintiffs a certain house and premises situate at Cape Town for the sum of £3,500, £500 to be paid in cash, and the remainder to be left on mortgage at 6 per cent. for six years, and defendants agreed to give transfer and possession of the said house and premises on November 1, 1901.

3. Plaintiffs have paid the said sum of £500, and all things have happened, and all conditions have been fulfilled, and all times have elapsed to entitle plaintiffs to receive transfer and possession of the said house and premises as agreed upon, but defendants in breach of their said contract neglected and failed to give plaintiffs the said transfer and possession. Since the issue of summons in this suit defendants have tendered to give transfer of the said land on which the house and premises are, but defendants still neglect and refuse to give plaintiff possession of the house and premises.

4. By reason of the said breach of contract plaintiffs have been deprived of the use and enjoyment of the said house and premises, and have been prevented from letting it as they could have done, and have been prevented from dealing with the property and with building operations thereon, for which purpose the said land was bought, as the defendants well knew, and the plaintiffs have sustained loss and damage to the extent of £2,000.

Wherefore plaintiffs pray:

(a) That defendants be ordered to forthwith give possession of the said house and premises, and to pass transfer thereof to plaintiffs, the latter tendering to perform their part of the said contract.

(b) Judgment for £2,000 as and for damages.

(c) Alternative relief and costs of suit.

To this declaration defendants pleaded as follows:

1. They admit the allegations in paragraphs 1 and 2, but they crave leave for greater certainty to refer to the broker's note passed at the date of the agreement between themselves and plaintiffs for the terms of the contract between the parties.

2. They admit that the plaintiffs have paid the sum of £500, and that they are entitled to receive transfer and possession of the said property. They have done all in their power to put plaintiffs in possession of the said property, but the tenant, one Mrs. Eayrs, refuses to quit, and wrongfully and unlawfully retains possession, and the defendants have hitherto been unable to eject her, though they have sued her for this purpose, and the case will shortly be heard before this Honourable Court.

3. They deny that plaintiffs have sustained damage in the sum of £3,000 as alleged, but they tender to give transfer at once to the plaintiffs, and to pay the sum of £100 in full satisfaction of any damage they may have sustained, or may sustain up to February 28; then to give possession on or before March 31 next, and to pay a further sum of £50 to plaintiffs.

4. Save as above and save that they admit that they have already tendered transfer to plaintiffs as alleged, they deny all and singular the allegations in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the said plea.

Wherefore, subject to the above tender, they pray that plaintiffs' claim may be dismissed with costs.

The replication was general.

The facts appear from the judgment.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Buchanan), for plaintiff trustees: The bond bears interest from November 1, and Mr. Nuttall's evidence shows that the trustees were allowing Mrs. Eayrs to have these premises at a very low rent. The interest on the bond at 6 per cent. would amount to £120, and we have tendered £100. Something between £100 and £150 would be a reasonable sum.

Mr. Gardiner (for defendant Eayrs): There was a completed lease between Mr. Abbott and Mrs. Eayrs. Mr. Abbott says that it was agreed that Mrs. Eayrs should have a twelve months' lease. Nuttall's evidence shows this also. The lease was entered into verbally. It is true that the letter confirming it was wanting, but that was not an essential part of the lease. The trustees cannot now say that they know nothing about Abbott's affidavit. They brought the action, and they ought to have seen it. The only question is, if there was a lease, was Abbott authorised to make it? The lease was entered into on July 7, 1901, and was not confirmed until January 7, 1902. Abbott said he was acting on behalf of the trustees. The important point is: has there been any breach of this lease on the part of the defendant. Mr. Abbott did not put the conditions in writing, but we ought not to suffer for his negligence. The younger Miss Eayrs says that he told her to tell her mother that she (Mrs. Eayrs) could have the house on the same terms that her father had had it. He and afterwards his wife had been tenants of this house about twelve years in all, and it would only have been reasonable that the same arrangements as to rent which had previously subsisted should have been continued. Abbott never objected to the rent not being paid in advance. Had he done so, he surely would not have given the letter confirming the lease after default had been made in the advance payments. If the rent was to have been paid in advance, Abbott had waived that condition by accepting rent not so paid. The first intimation Mrs. Eayrs had of any supposed breach of the lease was on the occasion of Abbott's visit on August 15. Mrs. Eayrs at once repudiated the alleged arrangement. The 15th of August was a most inopportune time for Mr. Abbott to come after the rent had been already in arrear. By then promising to confirm the verbal lease by letter he waived all previous breaches (if any) of the lease. Had the August rent been in arrear, he might perhaps have given Mrs. Eayrs notice that she was only a monthly tenant; but that was paid in advance on August 1. Mrs. Eayrs and Miss Eayrs both deny that it was a condition of the lease that the rent should be paid in advance. Another ground taken up by the plaintiffs is that defendant agreed to go out, but the only evidence of this was that she had tried to get another house. That, however, should not prejudice her. She may have wished to oblige the trustees. As to damages, they cannot claim £150, seeing that Kaiser only claims to have sustained £100 damages. Defendant was only paying £7 a month, and it would be absurd to say that even if she had held over for three months she was liable thereby in £150.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington (for Kaiser Bros.): In our case it is merely a question of damages. We have to consider how far the trustees are responsible for not having put us in possession on November 1. We were going to put an £8,000 building on the ground, whereas the one there at present is worth only £3,000. The rent, therefore, paid for it is no criterion of the damage we have sustained. Our claim is based on an £8,000 value. See Agins v. G.W. Colliery Co. (1, Q.B.D., 1899, 413; Had- ley v. Brazendale (9, Ex. 341). See particularly the judgments of Bowen, L.J., and Esher, M.R., in Hammond v. Bussey (20, Q.B.D., 79). As to English law, these cases conclude the matter. An older case is Simpson v. L.N.W. Railway Co. (1, Q.B.D., 274). The language there is very general. In our own law we have Pothier on Sale where he refers to his treatise on Obligations (part 1, ch. 2, art. 3, sec. 162). It is true that contemplation is not the same thing as contract, but it would be a novel doctrine that no damages should be given on the basis of the future use if it is proposed to make of the property. See the decision of the arbitrators in the case of Dutch Reformed Church v. Town Council of Cape Town (8, Sheil, 13).

Mr. Searle in reply.

Mr. Schreiner referred to Philip v. Metropolitan Railway Co. (10, Juta, 52), and distinguished that case from the present. There Voet (19, 1, 20) was relied upon.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiffs, the trustees of the Wesleyan Church, own certain of the Wesleyan Church, own certain property in Sir Lowry-road, which in 1897 they let to one Eayrs on a contract terminable at three, four, or five years. In 1899 Eayrs became insolvent, and under the Insolvent Ordinance, this lease came to an end, but the plaintiffs allowed Mrs. Eayrs to remain in possession as a monthly tenant. She remained in such possession from 1899 until 1900, when some time in the early part of the year she wished to have a lease of the property for twelve months. She was then paying rent at the rate of £7 per month. The property was managed by the Board of Trustees, and of this Board one Abbott was the treasurer, and the person authorised to receive the rent. His evidence is not clear or satisfactory, and on his evidence alone the Court might have considerably greater difficulty in dealing with this transaction; but Mrs. Eayrs herself put the case so clearly that I cannot do better than quote her evidence. She states that when she spoke to Abbott about getting a lease of the house for twelve months, Abbott said that he would mention her name to the Board of Trustees, and that he would bring the matter up at the next meeting of the Board, and that he would write her a letter. Here, therefore, was a distinct intimation that the matter would have to come before the Board of Trustees of the church, and that Abbott would write her a letter informing her of the decision of the Board of Trustees. Now we have it that the matter never was brought before the Board of Trustees, and that no letter was ever written by Abbott to Mrs. Eayrs afterwards. A conversation took place between Abbott and Mrs. Eayrs, and I think there is very little doubt that Abbott was quite willing that Mrs. Eayrs should have the lease for twelve months, provided she paid the rent monthly in advance; but in this case, she being only a monthly tenant, and having received more than a month's notice, when she had due notice to vacate, and was now sued for ejectment, she must show to the satisfaction of the Court that the monthly tenancy ended and that a contract was entered into giving her a lease of the property for twelve months. On the facts of the case it is impossible to hold that she has discharged that onus, and she therefore, having received due notice, must be ordered to vacate the premises. In this view I take of the facts of the case, I will not now go into the question as to whether if there was a lease, it was subject to the condition that she should pay the rent in advance, and whether that condition was broken; or into the further question whether, when she received notice, she agreed to give up possession of the house. On this latter point the evidence is rather in Mrs. Eayrs's favour than against her, but there is no need to discuss this as I go on the broad fact that she has not satisfied the Court that she ever had a lease from the Board of Trustees for twelve months. Although the defendant held over from the 1st of November until the present time, the plaintiffs do not claim from her rent as such, but claim damages for continued occupation. Ordinarily speaking, the damages would have been the rent the premises would have brought in during that time. She was paying £7 per month, and in most cases the damages would have been assessed at four months' rent at £7 per month—£28; but Mr. Nuttall, one of the plaintiffs, says that the premises were worth £14 or £15 per month; the defendant was further told they were sold and that the purchasers required possession. I therefore think a very fair amount of damages for the four months Mrs. Eayrs was in possession will be £15 per month, or £60 in all. Mrs. Eayrs having held over without any justification, judgment must be given against her, and she will be ordered to give up possession of the premises within a week; and also for holding over improperly without a lease damages will be given, covering any rent due, based upon the real rent which could have been obtained for the property, viz., £60. So much for the first case. As to the other case, the plaintiffs on the 14th August sold this property through a broker to the plaintiffs in the other action—Kaiser Brothers—for a sum of £3,500, of which £500 was to be paid on transfer being given, the sellers to leave the remaining £3,000 on mortgage at 6 per cent. interest for a period of six years, possession and transfer to be taken on the 1st of November, 1901, and the mortgage bond to bear interest from that date. This contract was entered into before it came before the Board, but presumably it was afterwards ratified by the Board; at any rate, it is admitted that this contract was duly entered into, and that the Board was prepared to abide by it. Owing, however, to Mrs. Eayrs holding over, the trustees were unable to give possession on the 1st of November. They did their best to get Mrs. Eayrs out of the premises before that date, but failed. They took prompt action, and there is no evidence of negligence on their part; but that is not a sufficient answer to the claim for damages for possession not being given. Since the summons was issued in this case transfer has been effected, the mortgage bond has been passed, and Kaiser Bros. are liable to the trustees in interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 1st of November, 1901. In the declaration, Kaiser Brothers claim an amount of £3,000 as damages—which, however, is apparently a mistake for £2,000—for the delay in giving possession, although the only ground upon which they claim these damages is that they have been deprived of the use and enjoyment of the house and premises; and that they have been prevented from dealing with the property for building operations thereon, for which purpose, they say, the property was bought, as the defendants well know. That is to say, they state that they have been prevented from letting the property for four months or from building thereon, and on these grounds they claim £2,000 damages. The mere statement of the case shows the absurdity of asking £2,000 for being kept for four months out of possession of a property for which they only gave £3,500. There is no special value of any sort attached to the property, and if they were entitled to damages at such a rate it would be converting the property into a gold mine. The defendants, the trustees, admit that they ought to have given possession, and they acknowledge that, though it was through no fault of theirs they were unable to give possession, they are liable for damages. They tender for the delay up to the end of the present month the sum of £100 as damages if they are able to give possession at the end of the month, and the question we have to consider is whether or not this tender is sufficient. If our law expresses the principle somewhat differently, I think it is not in conflict with, but is the same as that laid down in the cases cited by Mr. Schreiner, that when parties enter into a contract and fail to comply with that contract, the damages payable for the breach of contract are such as might be reasonably in the contemplation of the parties as naturally arising out of the transaction. When we look at the contract, here we find there is nothing said about any special use of the property which is agreed to be sold. It is said that the defendants were informed that the purchasers intended to build upon the property. Well it is a presumption when any piece of land is sold that the purchaser intends to build, but it would never be held that a purchaser of a piece of land could come forward and say that he intended to spend £5,000, £6,000, or £10,000 upon the property, and could, in case of delay in obtaining possession, say, "You have delayed me, and therefore I have incurred a good deal of prospective loss in not being allowed to work, and you must pay the damage." In my opinion, damages claimed for a building not yet put up are too remote, and in a case like this, a fair amount would be the value of the property to the purchasers for letting or occupation as the case might be. In the case of Mrs. Eayrs, we have come to the conclusion that the property was worth about £15 per month, and as the trustees' tender is equivalent to £25 per month, we are of opinion that the amount of the tender was amply sufficient. Of course, if possession was not obtained at the end of the month, the plaintiffs may have a further claim. That cannot be settled now. Judgment must therefore be given for the plaintiffs for the amount tendered only, viz., £100.

Mansdorp, J., concurred, and said, with regard to the question of damages in the case of Kaiser Brothers against the trustees, that he did not think any evidence had been given to show that anything had taken place between the parties which would take that particular contract from under the ordinary contracts for the sale of a building or the sale of land, and in damages for the breach of such contracts, the Court had never laid down that the measure of damages would be the value of some extensive buildings which might be put up. Here, from what Abbott said, it might have been anticipated that some building or improvements were intended, but it was certainly never contemplated that the improvements would take place to the extent which the plaintiffs said they intended. It seemed to his lordship that there was a simple sale of a certain house, with a certain monthly value, and therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to get possession of that house on the specified date, or its monthly value, and the tender of the trustees was ample.

Mr. Gardiner asked that the defendant Eayrs be allowed to continue in possession until the last day of the month, as it would probably be difficult for her to get a house before then.

The Court therefore ordered possession to be given up by the last day of the month.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that the plaintiffs in the second case, Kaiser Brothers, should be allowed their costs, because although there was a tender, it was impossible for it to be an effective one, as the defendants could not give possession when asked.

Buchanan, J., said the Court was of opinion that the plaintiffs in the second case were forced into court, and therefore the judgment must carry costs.

FRYER V. FRYER.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for plaintiff.

Mr. Gardiner, for defendant, applied for removal of bar. Defendant was on active service and could not attend.

The action was one for restitution of conjugal rights.

Francis Henry le Sueur, clerk in the Colonial Office, proved the marriage of the parties.

Elsie Johanna Fryer said she was married to defendant in December, 1899. She had been previously married to him in August, 1893, and obtained a divorce in 1899. She subsequently re-married defendant in December, 1899, and he left on the following January, going on active service. There were two children, to whom, on the occasion of the divorce, custody had been granted to witness. When her husband left her he left for the front. He had been at Clanwilliam for some time. The younger child was with defendant's sister at Mowbray.

Mr. Buchanan said he appeared for defendant's sister.

Witness only asked for the custody of the elder child. She asked for an order for £7 a month for maintenance. Defendant's sister had adopted the younger child.

An order for restitution was granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on the 31st March, failing which, to show cause on the 12th April why a decree of divorce should not be granted, plaintiff to have the custody of the elder child, and why he should not pay £7 a month towards its maintenance; with costs.

JOHNSON V. JOHNSON.

Mr. De Villiers, for the plaintiff, called further evidence in this case, which was for a decree of divorce.

Henry Williamson was called, and confessed to the truth of allegations made concerning Mrs. Johnson and himself.

A decree of divorce, with custody to plaintiff of the children, was granted, defendant to have access to the children at reasonable times.

" 21st.

Civil Imprisonment—Magistrate's Court—Judgment.

Where a defendant against whom a return of nulla bona had been made on a Magistrate's Court judgment had subsequently removed into the jurisdiction of another magistrate, the Court granted a decree of civil imprisonment on the judgment aforesaid.

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence upon a Magistrate's Court judgment for the sum of £60, and £2 6s. 4d., with interest a tempore morae and costs of suit. Counsel also asked for a decree of civil imprisonment upon the Magistrate's Court judgment, to which a return of nulla bona had been made.

Buchanan, J.: Can you obtain a writ of civil imprisonment in this Court upon a judgment of the Magistrate's Court? Must you not first take out a writ upon a judgment in the Supreme Court, because if you want a decree of civil imprisonment, it must be for the disobedience of an order of that Court?

Mr. Buchanan said that the plaintiff resided in Cape Town, while the defendant now resided in Ceres, so that the plaintiff could not get a decree of civil imprisonment in the Cape Town Magistrate's Court.

The Chief Justice asked if there was any precedent for the Supreme Court granting a decree of civil imprisonment upon a Magistrate's Court judgment.

Mr. Buchanan said he had not looked into the authorities on that point.

The Chief Justice said he believed there was a case bearing upon the point, and referred to Mostert v. Forde (10, Sheil, 344). Counsel might again mention the matter if he could find the case referred to. In the meanwhile, the first application, viz., that for provisional sentence, would be granted with costs.

Postea (February 21).

Mr. Buchanan again moved for a decree of civil imprisonment, and cited Mostert v. Forde (10, Sheil, 344), Peters v. Davis (9, Sheil, 559), and Van Zyl on Costs (p. 19).

The Court granted an order as prayed.

[Plaintiff's Attorney, F. W. Greenwood; defendant in default.]

ALEXANDER V. PARKER. { 1902.
Feb. 20th.

Private International Law—Lex Fori—Lex Loci Contractus.

Where plaintiff sued defendant for provisional sentence on two liquid documents made 12½ years ago in a foreign country the statute laws of which did not recognise prescription, plaintiff being at present beyond the jurisdiction.

Held, that the case must be decided by the lex fori, under Act 6 of 1861, and hence that the debt aforesaid was barred by prescription.

This was an application for provisional sentence for £1,071 4s. 1d., and £164 8s. 9d. due on a promissory note for £1,096 4s. 1d., and on a cheque for £164

8s. 9d., bearing date December 2, 1889, and October 30, 1889, both made and signed by the defendant in favour of plaintiff, and whereof said plaintiff is still the legal holder, together with interest thereon from January 1, 1890, and October 30, 1889, respectively, which promissory note and cheque having been presented for payment, were and remain dishonoured. The affidavit of James Parker, the defendant, stated that he resided at Johannesburg from April, 1887, to October, 1892, and was in Johannesburg when the promissory note and the cheque now sued upon became due, and that he informed plaintiff that he was unable to meet the same.

2. That he purchased 1,000 Blue Sky shares and 500 Oriel shares from plaintiff in August, 1899, for £1,375, and gave him a cheque for £164 8s. 9d. and a promissory note for £1,096 4s. 1d. in settlement, and the said shares purchased were attached to the promissory note as collateral security.

3. That according to account rendered by plaintiff, and annexed marked A, it appeared that he sold the shares aforesaid which were held by him as collateral security on January 20, 1891, for £25 without any previous notification to defendant, although defendant was in Johannesburg at the time.

4. That since the due dates of the said promissory note and cheque no demand was ever made by plaintiff for payment thereof until November, 1901, when defendant received a letter of demand annexed, and marked B, and in which the aforesaid account was enclosed. Defendant now denied all liability in respect of the said note and cheque, as they had become prescribed.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for plaintiff): In the Transvaal there was no Prescription Act.

No. In Louw v. Skrad (4, Juta, 109) that rule was adopted, but this is not a similar case. My client is now in Natal, and defendant left the Transvaal some years ago. Section 11, Act 6 of 1861, shows that the Act applies only to the people of this colony. In this case both parties were foreigners at the time these notes were made, and we cannot apply the lex fori to such cases. Dickey on Conflict of Laws (p. 715, sec. 3), who cites British Linen Co. v. Drummond (10

B and C. 903). We say that the lex contractus of my client affords him protection, and takes the case out of the scope of Act 6 of 1861. Foots Private International Law (p. 391).

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendant) was not heard.

De Villiers, C.J.: It appears to me that the lex fori should be applied to this case. The terms of the second section of the Prescription Act are: "Except as hereinafter is excepted, no suit or action upon any bill of exchange, promissory note, or other liquid document of debt of such nature as to be capable of sustaining a claim for the sort of interlocutory judgment commonly called a 'provisional sentence,' shall be capable of being brought at any time after the expiration of eight years from the time when the cause of action upon such liquid document first accrued." Therefore, unless the present case falls within the exceptions mentioned in the subsequent part of the Act, the action on the note in suit must be deemed to have been prescribed. The case of Lour v. Skeud is an authority for holding that the present case does not fall within any of the exceptions. The only distinction between the two cases is that in the present case the plaintiff resides outside and not within the jurisdiction, but that circumstance certainly does not strengthen the plaintiff's case. The application must therefore be refused with costs.

Their lordships concurred.

[Plaintiff's Attorneys, Van Zyl and Buissinne; Defendant's Attorney, P. de Villiers.]

CROWDER V. WHALES AND ANOTHER.

Mr. Alexander appeared for the applicant, but asked for a postponement of the case until next provisional day, as they had not yet received proof of service on the defendants, who reside at Mafeking.

Postponement allowed.

PAARL BOARD OF EXECUTORS V. ELIZABETH BARTMAN.

Mr. C. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence upon a mortgage bond for £1,350, together with interest. The bond had become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. Counsel also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed and the property declared executable.

DE VILLIERS V. SEIDLER AND ANOTHER.

Mr. C. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence upon a promissory note for £68 13s., with interest due thereon.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed.

HAVENGA AND ANOTHER V. PAGE.

Mr. Upington moved for a decree of civil imprisonment against the defendant on an unsatisfied judgment of the Supreme Court, dated September 12, 1901, for the sum of £30 5s. 4d., together with £30 15s. 8d. costs. The Sheriff's levy had realised a sum of £7 7s. 8d., and the balance was still owing.

The defendant was in default, and an order was granted as prayed.

SMITH AND CO. V. SOLOMONS. 1901. MON. Feb. 20th.

Accountant—Reference—Costs.

Mr. Benjamin (with whom was Mr. Gardiner) moved that judgment be entered in the above case in terms of the referees' report. This stated that following the directions of the Court the referees had gone into the accounts, and found that £233 17s. 11d. was due by Solomon to Smith and Co.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with whom was Mr. Close), appeared for the defendant, and said he did not wish to oppose the motion, but he wished to address the Court in regard to the question of costs. Proceeding, Mr. Searle pointed out that, although the defendant had not established, when the matter was previously before the Court, that he was entitled to share in the Bloemfontein contract as a partner, the Court had awarded him the large sum of £180 in regard to that contract, although the plaintiffs, who had not tendered any sum at all, had said in their declaration that defendant was only entitled to £60 from that source. In regard to the salaries' question also, the Court had awarded them £15 out of their claim for £200. He claimed that in re-convention these were the only two points the Court went into. The Court did not adopt the basis of either the defendant or the plaintiffs, but were much nearer the defendant's basis than that of the plaintiffs. He also read correspondence which had taken place before the trial, to show that these were the only real points in dispute, and that defendant had offered to go to trial upon them alone, but the reply received from the plaintiffs had been to the effect that it was evident that the matter could only be settled by the Court.

Without hearing Mr. Benjamin in argument,

Buchanan, J., who, with Maasdorp, J., heard the principal action, gave judgment, and said: The parties in this suit entered into a joint speculation, and the plaintiffs supplied money to the defendant to buy provisions for the execution of certain military contracts. The plaintiffs demanded a full, true, and correct account from the defendant of his expenditure. The defendant in his answers said he was entitled to certain amounts which he was entitled to set off in account between himself and the plaintiffs, which the plaintiffs disputed. In reconvention defendant claimed that the plaintiffs should render to him an account with regard to a Bloemfontein contract, in which he claimed an interest as a partner. The Court held that the defendant was not entitled to participate as a partner in the Bloemfontein contract, that the defendant must render the account claimed, and that after that account has been debated by accountants, the Court would be able to give judgment on its being ascertained how the account stood. No tender whatever had been made by the defendant of any amount. The accountants, following the directions of the Court, had gone into the accounts, and found that there was a balance of £233 13s. 11d. due by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and in the absence of any tender or anything to take the case out of the usual principle, the judgment must carry costs, including costs of the reference.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the rehabilitation of Henning Francois Joubert van der Merwe. Applicant's estate was voluntarily surrendered on August 1, 1895, the schedules showing liabilities amounting to £448 17s. and assets £157 7s. The debts proved amounted to £518 8s. 4d., and the assets realised £81 9s. 6d., concurrent creditors receiving a dividend of 2s. in the £. There was nothing unfavourable in the trustee's report.

Order granted as prayed.

Mr. M. Bisset moved for the rehabilitation, under section 106 of the Insolvent Ordinance, of Louis Pitt. The usual certificate from the Master was put in.

Order granted as prayed.

Mr. C. de Villiers moved for the rehabilitation of Pieter Wilhelm Wilhelmus Immelman, whose estate was voluntarily surrendered on February 8, 1895. In this estate the concurrent creditors had received dividends amounting to 8s. 1d. in the £. There was nothing unfavourable in the trustee's report.

Order granted as prayed.

MOWBRAY MUNICIPALITY V. { 1902.
COLONIAL GOVERNMENT. { Feb. 20th.

Nuisance—Abatement—Extension of time.

Where the Court had ordered a nuisance to be abated within a month from the date of its judgment, and the defendants subsequently applied for an extension of time, the Court refused the application.

This matter came before the Court on notice that an application would be made for an order extending the time wherein to carry out the Court's order granted on the 11th December last owing to the applicants' inability to obey the said order within the time stipulated.

Samuel Tonkin, Mayor of Mowbray, deposed that immediately after the hearing of the case the Council met and seriously considered the judgment of the Court, and after mature consideration instructed their engineer to draw up a scheme to obviate the complaints of the Railway Department. That after the judgment the Council received from the defendant letters demanding that at various other places where water ran on and along the line this should be stopped. The Council then instructed their engineer to bring up a scheme to cover all the cases. He brought up a most exhaustive report, showing that the cost of that portion adjoining the Observatory-road Station, including the roads on both sides, will be about £5,000, and that for the remainder of the line up to the boundary of the Municipality at Rosebank a further sum of £12,500, a large portion of which will be of no use whatever when the proposed underground drainage scheme is carried out, and it will take from eighteen months to two years to carry out the work proposed, and it will only then be of a temporary nature, and in the face of the Council's determination to immediately carry out a comprehensive underground drainage scheme this will be a waste of money. This Council has been approached by the Woodstock Council to join with them in an underground drainage scheme, with a joint main outfall to the sea. That the Mowbray Council have prepared plans showing the main drain to the boundary of the two Municipalities at Eden-road, corner of Station-road, Observatory, and in May last this Council passed a resolution to join with Woodstock in their proposed underground drainage scheme, and have had several conferences with the Councils of Rondebosch and Claremont for the same purpose. This Council instructed Mr. Olive to report on that portion of the Municipality which cannot come into the scheme by gravitation, and find that the whole of the area, except the portion of vleiground along the Liesbeek and Black Rivers, can come into the scheme, and his report has been before the Council at their last meeting, when the following resolution was passed: Joint Main Drainage—On the motion of Councillor Drake, seconded by Councillor Reid, the following resolution was unanimously passed: "That this Council agrees to join the Woodstock Municipality in the proposed joint sewage outfall in Table Bay, and with a view to expediting matters, this Council agrees to the necessary expense of immediately proceeding with the survey and plans for the main drainage tunnel through the Municipality to Ryan's-road boundary by the engineer appointed by the Woodstock Council for the outfall scheme. That this Council desires to impress upon the Joint Drainage Committee the advisability of at once proceeding to take steps towards the drawing up of a drainage scheme, either jointly or for each Municipality separately, in connection with the joint outfall in which the Municipalities are about to join the Municipal Councils of Claremont and Rondebosch." The Drainage Committee of the joint Councils of Mowbray, Rondebosch, and Claremont meet this Friday (January 10) evening to consider the above resolution, which has been forwarded to these Councils; and the Mowbray Council will meet to-morrow (Saturday) evening, January 11, to consider and agree upon the terms by which Mr. Olive shall be engaged as consulting engineer, and also as to carrying out the main drain. This Council has also instructed their engineer to engage, and he has done so, two assistants to survey the Municipality for the underground drainage of the Municipality, and will commence the work on Monday (the 13th inst.), under the instruction and supervision of the engineer, and it is confidently believed that in two years' time the main sewer will be so far completed as to allow the water from houses to flow into it. In the meantime, the Mowbray Council will do all that is possible to keep the drains and watercourses clean, and will prosecute all persons found contravening the regulations.

Affidavits were filed by the station-master at Observatory-road and by the District Engineer, which were to the effect that no steps had been taken since the judgment to improve the condition of the drain in Trill-road, but that, on the contrary, the nuisance was being increased.

A further affidavit by Mr. Tonkin was read, stating that since he made his previous affidavit the Councils of Rondebosch, Claremont, and Mowbray had agreed to join with Woodstock in the drainage scheme referred to.

An affidavit by the Municipal Engineer (Mr. Drake) was also read, stating that no breach of the Municipal regulations in allowing water, slopwater, etc., to flow down the gutters in question had been reported, and also denying that there was any increase in the nuisance. In a further affidavit, the engineer stated that plans, etc., had been prepared for making up the road in Church-street, together with provision for a new stormwater sewer, and the execution of the work would be immediately undertaken by the Council; while considerable progress had been made with the survey of the Municipality in connection with the sewage scheme.

Mr. Buchanan (for the Municipality): The Court will never try to enforce an order which it is practically impossible to carry out. We have endeavoured to minimise the nuisance; we have put on a special inspector, and the engineer reports that no complaints have been made since. All these sluits and drains are cleaned out every day and inspected. We only ask for a little time—say two years—to complete a system of underground drainage subject, say, to the condition that after two months we shall be called upon to show that we are going on with the work. In similar English cases time is invariably given; here the Court has given us a month, with leave to apply again; but a month is clearly insufficient. The only alternatives before us are either total prohibition of discharge of this drainage or an underground scheme. The Council are doing their best to carry out the order of the Court. In the case of the Attorney-General v. Colney Hatch Asylum (38 L.J. Ch.) three months were given though in that case there was only one establishment to deal with, and only one drain, and yet after giving three months the Court granted leave to apply again. Three months were also given in the Attorney-General v. The Town Council of Birmingham (4 Kay, and J. 528).

Mr. Schreiner (for the Government): The drainage still comes down Trill-road and runs between the rails. This nuisance has been going on year after year, nobody has been prosecuted, and the excuse for delay which has always been put forward is that a big scheme is in contemplation. They hold out the threat that if we insist on this nuisance being abated no houses will be let. They boldly say that more than 700 houses drain into Trill-road. In fact, this is only what we have proved. Meanwhile they are sitting still and doing nothing. Much was made of the fact that the stationmaster's house contributed to this nuisance; if it did the contribution must have been infinitesimal, and has been stopped. The Municipality must do the same. All we ask is that the Municipality should be brought face to face with the judgment of the Court and compelled to take action of some kind.

Mr. Buchanan in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: In an action brought in this court, the Court held there was a nuisance, for which the Municipality was responsible, and ordered that nuisance to be abated. Now we have an affidavit from the stationmaster at Observatory-road to this effect: "As far as I can judge, there has been no improvement in the condition of the drain in Trill-road since the decree was granted; the quantity and quality of the water coming down on to the railway is just about the same." There is no denial of this statement, but there is a statement on behalf of the Municipality that they intend going in for a larger scheme, in conjunction with other municipalities, and that this larger scheme will take two years; and they ask for further time to obey the order of the Court. Now the time which they apparently ask for would be two years; but there is no guarantee even that in two years the scheme would be completed. In the meantime, before this larger scheme can be completed, the nuisance would go on—that nuisance which the Court has said must be abated. There is no clear proof that it is a matter of impossibility to abate it. Some temporary measure might be adopted while this great scheme is being carried out. That must be done, in terms of the order of Court. The matter was fully discussed in the action, and if there were not a possibility of abating the nuisance, no doubt the Court would not have given the order. Nor is it shown now that there is no possibility of abating it. Under these circumstances, the Court cannot further extend the order, and the application must be refused, with costs.

Feb. 20th.

The applicant in this case was Mrs. Wilhelmina Angelina Martin, who applied to make absolute a rule nisi granted on January 20, calling upon her husband, Jno. Martin, blacksmith, of Mossel Bay, to show cause why an order should not be granted restraining him from dealing with the property of the joint estate of himself and the petitioner, pending the result of an action instituted by the latter for judicial separation. In her affidavit applicant alleged that her husband was a habitual drunkard, and had been guilty of acts of cruelty towards her. He had been three times convicted and fined for drunkenness, and had once been found guilty of assaulting her. The rule nisi appointed Mr. Lourens as curator.

Mr. Close moved to make the rule absolute.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for respondent, who denied, on affidavit, that he was an habitual drunkard, but admitted convictions, and that he had been drunk on several occasions. He said he was quite able to manage his affairs, but if the Court thought a curator should be appointed, he suggested that Mr. W. C. Gilmore should be appointed.

Buchanan, J., said that there was no allegation that Mr. Lourens was not a fit person.

Mr. Benjamin suggested that Mr. Lourens and Mr. Gilmore should be appointed jointly.

De Villiers, C.J.: The rule must be made absolute. There is no reason shown for not appointing the person mentioned in the rule.

Costs were ordered to be costs in the cause.

THE TOWN COUNCIL OF } 1902.
CAPE TOWN V. TABLE } Feb. 20th.
BAY HARBOUR BOARD.

The Government is not entitled to enter upon land for purposes of railway construction under Sec. 3 of Act 19 of 1874 without previous notice to the proprietor, in terms of the last provision of Act 9 of 1858.

Such notice should definitely state for what purpose the land is required, and whether and to what extent it is intended to expropriate part thereof.

This was an application for an interdict restraining respondents from trespassing upon or opening up of the Dock-road in Cape Town, or from trespassing on certain land belonging to the applicants, and forming portion of the old Fish Market, and also from laying down any line of railway in the said Dock-road, save and except certain two lines of railway to be constructed in accordance with the permission given to that effect by the applicants, or from running or working any such lines of railway except for the purpose of through traffic to the Alfred Docks. Notice of this application had been served upon the Table Bay Harbour Board and the General Manager of Railways.

The affidavit of Josiah Robert Finch, Town Clerk of Cape Town, stated, inter alia, that by section 110 of Act 26 of 1893 the Dock-road is vested in the Town Council of Cape Town, and has for a considerable time been repaired by the Council at considerable expense. In view of the unsatisfactory condition of the road, deponent acting under instructions received from the Mayor, had entered into a correspondence with the Harbour Board with reference to paving and widening the said road. The Harbour Board agreed to contribute £5,000 towards the cost of doing this, and stated that the Colonial Government had approved of this contribution on certain conditions. The Harbour Board also agreed to grant to the Council the land required for widening the road. At a conference held on June 13 between deponent, the City Engineer, the secretary, and the Acting Engineer of the Harbour Board, the Railway Department was represented as the actual construction of the proposed line along Dock-road would be in their hands. A plan was submitted by the Harbour Board and the Railway Department of the proposed lines in Dock-road on June 15. This plan showed two continuous lines of railway on the Dock-road, and no sidings, and in a letter dated July 11 the General Manager of Railways stated to the Council that these two lines between Adderley-street and Bree-street would be used as through lines, and that measures would be taken to prevent interference with the present Fish Market. On August 28 the Harbour Board wrote to the Council saying that it was proposed to lay two sidings in the Dock-road as a temporary measure, and that it would be necessary to run over a portion of the land upon which the old Fish Market stood. As this was vested in the Town Council, the Council replied that if the Harbour Board wanted to use it they should purchase it. After further correspondence, in a letter dated October 5, 1901, the Harbour Board sent a tracing of the proposed lines to the Town Council. This showed certain "exchange sidings" which the Board proposed to lay down. There was also forwarded a diagram showing the portion of the old Fish Market which the Board proposed to acquire. These plans showed four lines of railway in addition to the two previously proposed. In the meantime the Harbour Board, without any notice to the Council, surreptitiously proceeded to construct the lines in question, and in so doing removed a portion of the old Fish Market which had not been expropriated or acquired by them in any way. The result has been to narrow the Dock-road to the loss and detriment of the citizens, to render impracticable the proposed scheme for widening it, and to reduce a considerable portion of it to the condition of a goods yard. Deponent wrote to the Board protesting against these proceedings. A meeting of representatives of the Board and of the Council was held on October 30, at which the Engineer of the Board admitted that their action was a breach of their agreement with the Council, and that if the "exchange sidings" remained there would be no room for the proposed tramway to the Docks. At the aforesaid meeting it was stated by one of the Harbour Board's representatives that the lines in question were being laid down by the Railway Department for, and at the expense of, the Harbour Board, who were responsible for the traffic as far as Adderley-street, where the Railway Department took it over. On November 2 the Board wrote to the Council for their consent to these sidings remaining for four years, the Board to have sole control of the traffic in the Dock-road. To this proposal the Council would not agree, but the work was still continued. Deponent says that the Railway Department has only acted as the agent of the Board in this matter, and has not addressed any communication or given any notice of expropriation to the Town Council. The affidavit of Frank Robb, secretary of the Harbour Board, stated that the grant of the Dock-road to the Council was subject to the approval of the Governor, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly, as provided for in sec. 58 of Act 36 of 1896. That the whole of the land required for the purpose of widening the Dock-road to 120 feet, with the exception of the old Fish Market, is vested in the Harbour Board by Sec. 55 of Act 36 of 1896. One condition subject to which the Government approved of the Board contributing towards the cost of widening the road was that it reserved to itself the right to lay two lines of rails from the Railway Goods Sheds to the Docks, and in case of necessity to lay sidings in order to clear the traffic. The object of the conference of June 13 was not for the purpose of considering the construction of railway lines to the Docks, but to obtain the consent of the representatives of the Town Council to the position of the tramway lines and railway lines proposed by the Railway Department and the Board. The plan referred to in Mr. Finch's affidavit was merely intended to show the approximate position of the two through lines, and the letter of July 11 cannot affect the reservation by the Board on behalf of the Government in their letter of June 6, of the right to lay necessary sidings. It is not admitted that the agreement in connection with the widening of the Dock-road was finally completed, as the Town Council did not signify its acceptance of the Board's conditions, and the necessary sanction of the Governor and of Parliament to the alienation of the land for widening the Dock-road has not yet been obtained. The General Manager's letter of July 11 to the Town Clerk points out the necessity of other sidings, besides the exchange sidings to be laid down on the Dock-road. The permission of the Council to lay down two lines of rails has never been given, nor has it been asked, as far as deponent is aware, but in negotiations with the Council the Board has always reserved the right to the Government to lay two lines of rails and the necessary sidings. As the Board owns the land on the seaward side of the Dock-road along its whole length, except at the site of the old Fish Market, the permission of the Council to run rails is not necessary. The work undertaken by the Harbour Board was carried out under an agreement entered into by it with the Colonial Government, who have statutory powers, under Act 19 of 1874, to construct and maintain a line of railway from the Castle to the Docks, and the Board, in carrying out the work, is acting as the duly authorised agent of the Government. The Harbour Board gave notice of their intention to the Town Council, as appears from deponent's letter of August 28, to the Acting Town Clerk. Deponent denies that the work done by the Board as to laying down of lines, etc., was done surreptitiously, and says that the value of the portion of the old Fish Market removed was practically nothing. Deponent denies that the works at present being carried on will affect the width of the Dock-road. He also denies that the present operations carried on by the Board aforesaid, will render it impracticable to carry out the scheme for widening the Dock-road. Deponent did not admit that if the plans of the Harbour Board were carried out there would be no room for tramways. Deponent denies that the work in question was done for, and at the expense of, the Board. Deponent admitted that by letter of November 2, the Board did state that the sidings were only temporary. As to the suspension of the work in the Dock-road, the deputation from the Board stated that they had no authority to discuss the matter. The Board admits that their rails were laid across the site of the old Fish Market, but denies that this was done surreptitiously. Defendants deny that there is any narrowing of the available portion of the Dock-road under their scheme. Deponent was advised and believed the said sidings to be necessary for the purposes of traffic. The Harbour Board does not desire to actually purchase or expropriate the site of the old Fish Market, as it does not contemplate that the sidings will be permanent.

The affidavit of Thomas Smith McEwen, Assistant General Manager of Railways, stated that the sidings in question, in respect of which an interdict was sought by the Town Council, were being constructed by the Harbour Board for the Colonial Government under an agreement, and that the Harbour Board was in regard thereto acting as the duly authorised agent of the Colonial Government. That the Colonial Government was acting under powers conferred by Act 19 of 1874. That exchange sidings were necessary for the working of the traffic and that the space between Adderley-street and the new Fish Market was the most suitable place for the temporary construction of these sidings. That no notice of expropriation was given by the Town Council because it was not intended to keep the sidings permanently, and it was confidently anticipated that within four years these exchange sidings would be removed to another spot.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the Town Council): This is now a mere question of costs. This fish market has been entered upon by the Harbour Board, and the Colonial Government without any notice of expropriation. They even say that they do not intend to expropriate.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Sheil, K.C.) (for the Harbour Board and Colonial Government): The powers of the Colonial Government allow them to take land either for a term of years or for ever. We have now given notice that we mean to take this land for good.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can you take the land unless you expropriate it?]

Yes. Town Council v. Commissioner of Crown Lands and others. (Foord, p. 21.)

Mr. Searle: We had better discuss the legal point first. Act 19, 1874, Sec. 6, sub-section 7 sanctions the construction of the Dock Railway. I must admit that if all provisions of this Act are carried out, the Government can take the land. McEwen's affidavit shows, however, that the Government do not intend to expropriate. Act 9 of 1858 gave no power to expropriate until the Government had determined the compensation to be paid. Section 3 of Act 19 of 1874 deprived the Road Commissioners of this power, and vested it in the Governor, but still the power vested in the Governor was precisely the same as that formerly vested in the Road's Commissioners. Notice to the proprietor is therefore necessary before the Government can come upon his land.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is not Act 9, 1858, repealed by Act 40, 1889?]

In Logan v. Colonial Government (11 Sheil, 114), it was held not to have been repealed. The case of Town Council v. Colonial Government (Foord, 21) should be considered in this connection. In that case the Railway Department gave notice of expropriation, whereas in the present case they say they are not going to expropriate; so that case is not on all fours with the present. Nor is this case similar to that of McDonald v. The District Engineer (7 Juta, 290). The Court has never held that Government can enter upon land and take it without notice of expropriation.

[Maasdorp, J.: Can they not take it for temporary use?]

Not without notice of expropriation under Sec. 12 of Act 9, 1858. I can find no authority for the position the Government are now trying to take up. McDonald v. The District Engineer is one of the strongest cases against us, but even that does not support the Government in the present case. It only shows that Government are not bound to supply a plan, but in this case they say that eventually they may not want the land at all.

Mr. Schreiner: My learned friend argues as if the Government had taken the fish market without any previous intimation.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was any formal notice served on the Town Council?]

No formal notice, but they knew what we and the Government were doing. That is shown by the letter of August 21.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That was not from Government.]

It was written on behalf of Government.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How does that appear?]

From Mr. McEwen's affidavit.

[De Villiers, C.J.: A notice from him is no notice from the Government.]

Yes. He was authorised to enter upon the land, Sec. 2 of Act 19 of 1874. It is true that only the Railway Department had power to expropriate, and if they did not give notice of their intention to do this they did give notice of their intention to purchase. The Town Council must have known what work was going on, for the Mayor has a seat on the Board, and yet it was not till October 10 that they wrote demanding that the work should be suspended, and on October 18 for the first time they took up the position that we could not take the land for a temporary purpose. As to costs, this case must be judged as if there had been no subsequent notice of expropriation. There was no agreement between the Town Council and the Board, but surely in view of Sec. 3 of Act 19 of 1874 no interdict can be granted.

[Buchanan, J.: Notice must be given by the Government.]

That was so before the passing of Act 19 of 1874, but Sec. 3 does not require notice.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is only reasonable that before you go upon a man's land you should tell him what you mean to do.]

The Crown primarily has a right to do what it likes in the public interest. The concessions given to the subject by Act 37 of 1888 are merely ex gratia. There is no case of an interdict being granted against the Government. Originally the application was against the Harbour Board and the Government. Supposing a contractor for the Railway Department wants a load of ballast, surely it will not be said that he cannot take it until Government has expropriated the ground. We say that the Government may take what land it requires, and then it is for anybody who considers himself aggrieved to bring his action for compensation. This case is very similar to that with respect to the foreshore. The so-called agreement between the Government and the Town Council was only a provisional understanding. As both bodies involved are public bodies, I would suggest that each should pay its own costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is an application for an interdict restraining the Harbour Board and the General Manager of Railways from further trespassing upon property belonging to the Town Council, but counsel for the applicants does not now press for the interdict, and the only question we have to decide is as to the costs. Now the costs will not be much, and neither for the Town Council nor for the Government would it be a matter of supreme importance which of them paid the paltry costs which have been incurred. The matter has, however, been very strenuously argued, as if very much depended upon the decision of the Court in the case. It appears that the Government claimed the right to go on the land under the 3rd section of Act 19 of 1874, which enacts that all and singular, the powers and authorities which are by the Act No. 9 of 1858 bestowed upon the Commissioner of Roads, are bestowed upon the Governor. In my opinion, however, these powers are subject to the proviso in the 11th section of the Railway Act, which provides that no land shall be taken, or materials raised and carried away, without previous notice to the owner thereof. Now, that question was not raised in the cases which have been cited; in point of fact, in the first case notice had been given by the Government, and although in the second case it is not clear whether notice has been given or not, the point was not raised. In the present case it is clear there was no formal notice given. There was some communication between the parties, and perhaps it is true that the Town Council knew that the Government was going to construct a railway there, but that was not notice of expropriation. When such large powers are given to the Government, the least that can be expected from the Government is that timely notice will be given to the proprietor of the land before his land is entered upon. No doubt the Government may, after giving notice, go upon the land, but, at least, let it give the notice which is required. The present seems to me to be a strong case against the Government. In his affidavit Mr. McEwen says that "no notice of the expropriation was given the Town Council, because it is not intended to keep the sidings there permanently, and it is confidently expected that within four years from the present time the exchange sidings will be removed to another spot." I am of opinion that the Town Council is now entitled to a definite statement as to what the Government intends doing, and especially whether it intends to expropriate the land. It seems that the Government or the General Manager of Railways does not yet know its or his own mind, and that no definite decision has yet been come to as to the railway to be constructed on this land. I am of opinion that this is a case where the Town Council is entitled to definite notice of exactly what the Government intends to do upon the land. There is one decision, in which the Court held that it was not necessary to give detailed plans, specifications, and diagrams of the land over which it was resolved that the line should run, but that is a very different thing to being allowed to go on land without any notice whatever. In the opinion of the Court there ought to be a notice stating definitely for what purpose the land is required, and whether and to what extent it is intended to expropriate part thereof. I think that the Town Council was perfectly entitled to come into court, and that such an interdict as that asked for could have been properly obtained against the General Manager. As the interdict is not now asked for we will make no order with regard to it, but as the Council was justified in coming into court, the costs of the application must be paid by the Government.

Their lordships concurred.

CRO. BIE V. RAUTENBACH. } 1902.
 } Feb. 20th.

Costs—Judicial discretion.

The Supreme Court will not, as a rule, interfere with the discretion of a Court of first instance on a question of costs unless there has been a reckless exercise of its discretion.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Hopley, given in the High Court of Griqualand West.

The appeal was not brought with regard to the main action in the court below, but with regard to the question of certain costs of a postponement asked for by the respondent, who was the defendant in the court below. The case was ultimately decided in the defendant's favour, and the appellant (plaintiff in the Court below) did not appeal against this decision, but he appealed against having to pay the costs occasioned by the postponement, he having at the time the case first came on been ready to go to trial, having all his witnesses present.

The reasons of Mr. Justice Hopley for his decision, that appellant should pay these costs, were as follows: This case came on for trial on the 15th of August last, before the Hon. the Judge-President and myself, the plaintiff being represented by counsel and the defendant appearing in person, in custody of a police-constable, he being then, and I believe at present, a convict in the Kimberley Gaol, under a sentence of hard labour imposed upon him by a Military Court at Vryburg for high treason. On that date the defendant was apparently ready to do the best he could in his own defence; but the Court, considering from the opening statement of plaintiff's counsel that important points of law might arise, and that, at all events, the facts might require careful elucidation, suggested to the defendant that it would be desirable that he should employ an attorney and counsel, and ask for time to enable them to be properly instructed. The case was on that day postponed, partly for that reason, and also because there was no interpreter in Court until the following day. When that arrived, the defendant had been in communication with Attorney Solomon, now a partner in the firm of Coghlan and Coghlan, but that gentleman had had no time to come to any satisfactory arrangement as to the necessary funds to enable him to get up the defence or to instruct counsel. Whereupon, again under some pressure from the Court or at all events upon its suggestion, the defendant applied for a postponement until the following term. The plaintiff's counsel then urged that the application should be granted only on payment of the wasted costs, but the Court, considering that it would be a hardship on the defendant to pay these costs if the whole case should prove to be unfounded, reserved the question of these costs until the hearing. At the hearing of the case, which took place before me alone on the 15th November, I came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's witnesses could not be relied upon, and that, as far as I could judge upon the evidence adduced, the case against the defendant was unfounded. I, therefore, thought that it would be unjust that the defendant should be saddled with the costs in question. Plaintiff's counsel argued that the Court had no discretion in the matter, but was obliged to give the plaintiff these costs. I did not take that view, and I think that if the Court is not bound, as suggested by counsel, this is a very strong case in favour of the defendant. The plaintiff knew perfectly well that the man was a prisoner, unable to get about and attend to his own affairs. He also knew, as appears from a document filed with the record, that the attorneys who had been acting for the defendant had ceased to represent him about a fortnight before the case originally came on for trial and that his then pecuniary circumstances were such that it would not be easy for him to make fresh arrangements. Yet, knowing all these facts, the plaintiff pushed on the case to a hearing, and came into court with what turned out in the end to be an unfounded claim; and in these circumstances I considered that he, and not the defendant, should pay the costs involved.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), for the plaintiff, now appellant: This is merely a question of costs. The case was postponed twice in the Court below at the distance of defendant, and I submit that he should be made to pay all reserved costs. The Court below should have granted these postponements only on condition of his paying the costs. It is the ordinary rule that if a man has no real ground for not appearing, he has to pay the costs of the day. It was not plaintiff's fault that defendant was in the custody of the military. See the Annual Practice (1902, p. 488), and the case of Stewart v. Gladstone (7 Ch. D., 394) there mentioned; Bradley v. Barr (6 H.C., 120). Plaintiff had brought his witnesses down from Vryburg, and it is a wrong principle to make wasted costs depend upon the final result of the trial.

De Villiers, C.J.: This is really a most frivolous appeal. The respondent applied for a postponement on the suggestion of the Court, and it was the costs incurred on this postponement which formed the subject of the appeal. It is a well-known practice that discretion must be left to the Court which tried the case to award costs. The Court has frequently said that such discretion must be judicially exercised, and it requires strong evidence that it was an utterly reckless exercise of discretion before this Court will upset it. It is very much to be regretted that the judge has given leave to appeal. He might fairly have refused to do so. The appeal will be dismissed, with costs.

JANSON V. JANSON.

{ Feb. 20th.

This was an application by defendant for an order on plaintiff to pay her a certain sum of money to enable her to defend the action instituted by him for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which divorce. Applicant asked for £30.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for plaintiff; Mr. Buchanan for defendant.

In her affidavit applicant said she was married to respondent in community of property in August, 1899. There were no children. Respondent had instituted an action against her on the ground of desertion. She had no funds to defend the action. She said her husband was a builder and contractor, and speculator, and had lauded property, and she further alleged that he was guilty of adultery.

The respondent denied the allegations that he was a builder and contractor and speculator, and that he had committed misconduct. He said he was a labourer, earning 6s. 8d. a day.

The Court made an order for payment of £15, costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

This was an application by the Executors of the late Elizabeth Clasina Aletha Retief, of the Paarl, for an order to pass transfer of certain land, being a part of the estate of the deceased, to Gabriel Andries Retief (one of the said executors), who had purchased the property at a public auction at a price far in excess of the Divisional Council valuation. No minors appeared to be interested, and on the motion of Mr. Goch, the Court granted an order, as prayed.

RE ESTATE LATE JEFFREYS. { 1902.
{ Feb. 20th.

This was an application for the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond passed by the late George G. Jeffreys on certain property in Uitenhage. It appeared from the affidavit of the applicant, who was executor testamentary in the estate of the deceased, that the amount of the bond had been paid off by deceased, and the bond handed back to him, but that, by an oversight, it had not been cancelled in the office of the Registrar of Deeds.

From the report of the Registrar, it appeared that the property in question had been mortgaged to certain persons as trustees of the Uitenhage Mutual Land and Building Society. The society had subsequently been dissolved, no liquidator having been appointed. Two of the trustees were now dead, but as the books of the society had been destroyed, and it was impossible to trace its financial operations, the Registrar now refused to act on the certificate of the surviving trustee and the secretary, to the effect that the Bond had been paid off.

On the motion of Mr. Buchanan, the Court granted an order as prayed.

Mr. Benjamin moved for the appointment of Mr. W. P. Buchanan as curator to assist the minor in signing articles of clerkship.

The Court granted the appointment.

Ex parte SULLIVAN. { 1902.
{ Feb. 20th.

This was an application for leave to mortgage certain property situate in Cape Town, in which certain minors were interested. The petition of Maria Sullivan, married in community to Michael Sullivan, showed that at present there were only two dilapidated rooms on the property, and that she wished to raise £750 for building purposes.

The Master's report was favourable, and he recommended that some responsible person be appointed to see the building contract carried out, to receive the rents, and look after the new property, and after making an allowance of £5 per month to the petitioner to apply the balance to the reduction of the loan until the bond has been cancelled.

On the motion of Mr. Benjamin the Court granted an order in terms of the Master's report.

GLASS V. HANSEN. { 1902.
Feb. 21st.

This was a claim for £50 damages for breach of agreement, and for £15, the cost of an advertising board erected by plaintiff on defendant's property at Salt River.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for the plaintiff. The defendant appeared in person.

Ernest George Glass, the plaintiff, said he hired a hoarding at defendant's premises at Salt River for advertising purposes. The hiring was an annual one, and the last annual payment of £2 10s. covered its hire up to September 12 last. Plaintiff had erected a hoarding 80 feet long and 12 feet high at the rear of defendant's premises at a cost of about £15. No notice to terminate the hiring was ever given, although it was originally understood that reasonable notice should be given. Plaintiff obtained from £50 to £100 a year for the use of the hoarding, and he maintained that he was entitled to a year's notice. He understood that defendant had sold the premises.

Hans Hansen, the defendant, stated that when the hoarding was first erected he told plaintiff that he was trying to sell the property, which he had since done, Government being the purchaser. He asked plaintiff if it was worth troubling to take down the hoarding, and Glass replied no. It was understood that if he sold the property the hoarding should be removed.

De Villiers, C.J., asked Hansen why he had no advocate to defend him. Mr. Steer had originally represented him, but he had withdrawn from the case; why was that?

Defendant replied that Mr. Steer wanted £25 down to go on with the case, but he (the defendant) thought he might just as well speak for himself.

De Villiers, C.J., said this was really one of the most paltry cases that had ever come before the Court; the utmost the Court would have done would have been to give judgment for 16s. 8d. and Magistrate's Court costs. He did not think the plaintiff had any claim at all. He believed it was quite likely that the defendant's account of the transaction was the correct one when he first gave permission for plaintiff to put up a hoarding; it was understood that if at any time defendant sold the property the hoarding should be taken down. His lordship did not think that plaintiff had intentionally stated what was not true, but he had probably forgotten the circumstance, whereas defendant said he remembered very well that it was understood that when he sold the property the agreement should terminate. For these reasons he gave judgment for defendant.

LOTTER V. RHODES. { 1902.
Feb. 21st.

Grass fire—Acts of Servant—Negligence.

Where a shepherd acting for the benefit of his master and in the ordinary course of his employment negligently sets fire to brushwood in order to improve the pasturage, the master was held responsible for damage done to his neighbour's farm by the spreading of the fire.

This was an action in which Johannes Petrus Lotter, of the Paarl, sued Cecil John Rhodes for £300 damages, caused by a fire on defendant's farm.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a farmer residing on, and the registered owner of, the farm Normandy, or Normandyen, in the division of the Paarl; the defendant resides at Rondebosch, in the Cape Division.

2. The defendant is the registered owner of the farm Rhone, in Groot Drakenstein, in the said division of the Paarl. The said farm adjoins the plaintiff's farm Normandy, or Normandyen.

3. On or about the 14th November, 1901, the defendant, by his agents or servants, kindled, or caused to be kindled, a fire on his said farm, close to the plaintiff's farm, and thereafter failed and neglected duly and diligently to control the course of the said fire, or to exercise due care and caution in respect thereof, and negligently and unlawfully suffered the fire so kindled as aforesaid to spread and come on to the plaintiff's said farm.

4. At the time the said fire was so kindled the grass and undergrowth in and about the locality thereof was dry, and it was dangerous so to kindle such fire.

5. The said fire did damage to the plaintiff on his said farm, and destroyed divers fruit-trees and a part of a vineyard planted thereon, as also certain grass and reeds growing thereon.

6. By reason of the premises the plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of £300, payment of which the plaintiff is now lawfully entitled to claim at the hands of the defendant, but the latter refuses to pay same or any part thereof.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) Payment of the sum of £300, as and for damages as aforesaid; (b) alternative relief; and (c) costs of suit.

To this declaration defendant pleaded as follows:

1. Defendant admits paragraphs 1 and 2, save that he is not aware that plaintiff is the registered owner of the farm Normandy, and puts plaintiff to the proof thereof.

2. Defendant denies each and every allegation in paragraph 3. Defendant admits that on or about the day complained of there was a certain fire on his farm, but he denies that it was caused by him or his agents or servants, or by any act or default of his or theirs, or that he or they were guilty of any negligence in respect thereof, or that if it spread to plaintiff's farm, which defendant is not aware of, and does not admit, it was through any act, or default, or omission, or negligence on the part of himself or his agents or his servants. The defendant says that said fire could have been stopped and extinguished by the plaintiff if he had exercised due care and caution, and if plaintiff had given the usual and due notice and warning to the defendant, and that the damage, if any, caused by the said fire was caused by the want of such care and caution on the part of plaintiff and by plaintiff failing and neglecting duly and diligently to give the usual notice, and to control, stop, and extinguish the said fire as he should and could have done.

3. Defendant has no knowledge of the allegations in paragraphs 4 and 5, and does not admit them.

4. Defendant denies that plaintiff has suffered loss and damage to the extent of £300; or any loss or damage for which defendant is liable, and he denies paragraph 6.

The replication was general.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. C. de Villiers), for plaintiff; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. J. E. de Villiers), for defendant.

Johannes Petrus Lotter, the plaintiff, said he was the owner of a farm called Normandic, which adjoined Mr. Rhodes's farm, Rhone. On November 14 there was a fire on his farm. Witness first noticed smoke about 300 yards from the dividing line of his farm, the wind blowing it towards his property. Plaintiff sent his son Carl to ascertain about the fire, which reached his boundary about midday, entering a plantation, afterwards penetrating to the orchard, where it destroyed some young trees. In addition poplar and oak trees were injured, while about 6,000 reeds were destroyed, about half of the whole farm being burnt. The farm was 445 morgen in extent. Witness and his three sons were the only persons on the farm at the time, and it was impossible for them to extinguish the fire. The cook and plaintiff's daughter also aided in the work. Plaintiff said they did whatever they possibly could to stop the fire, which at one time threatened the homestead. On the following day he wrote to Mr. Pickstone, Mr. Rhodes's manager, asking him to inspect the damage and indemnify him. Plaintiff had previously complained about the danger of fires caused by an old coloured man named Apollis, employed on Mr. Rhodes's farm. It was Apollis who had started the fire which damaged the farm. A week before the fire witness had spoken to Apollis about the danger of such fires. Witness estimated that the fire had caused damage to his farm to the extent of £300. Very many of the damaged trees were large ones, including 72 young oaks, some apple trees, young vines, and two poplar plantations. Mr. Pickstone and Mr. Mostert subsequently visited the farm, after receiving a legal demand for £300. Witness showed Mr. Pickstone the major portion of the damaged trees. Afterwards Mr.

Pickstone sent a field cornet and another person to value the damage, but they did not go all over the farm, remaining only about twenty minutes.

Cross-examined: The fire started between ten and eleven in the morning. When he went to put it out, the fire had already crossed his boundary. A portion of the oak trees for which he was now claiming compensation was damaged in a fire four years ago, for which he had received compensation; but they had grown again since then.

There were 72 oak trees and also a number of blue gums burnt, but he did not count the latter.

Re-examined: The fire could have been seen for miles around. A considerable piece of the farm Rhone was burnt, but no effort was made to put the fire out.

Carel Francois van Heerden Lotter, son of the last witness, stated that on the day of the fire, on the 14th November, he was with his father on the stoep of the homestead, and saw the smoke of the fire. He went down to the ridge and found Apollis there. The latter went away and lit a fire in two other places, although his father had told him previously that he was not to set fire to the veld. The fire spread in the direction of the farm Normandy. Witness, with his four brothers, worked hard to put out the fire.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness did not endeavour to get Apollis to say that Mr. Mostert had ordered him to light the fire. He never told Apollis that if he did not say so he would be put on the Breakwater. The place where the fire was lit was in the nature of a vlei.

John de Villiers, residing at Salt River, said he was on Mr. Lotter's farm on the 12th December, and went with the last witness on to the farm Rhone. They met Apollis there, and the latter acknowledged that he had set the veld on fire. Witness was a cousin of the Lotter's, but he had nothing to do with the case.

Cross-examined: He heard no conversation regarding Mr. Mostert, nor did he hear anything said about the Breakwater. He did not hear Carel Lotter tell Apollis that if he said that Mr. Mostert told him to light the fire he should go free, but if he did not he would be put on the Breakwater.

Daniel Pieter de Villiers, residing in the Paarl district, said that he had been asked by Mr. Lotter to inspect the damage caused by the fire. He estimated the whole of the damage at £150.

Cross-examined: The result of burning the veld would be to improve it for grazing. Several of the oak trees had been burnt in the previous fire.

John Daniel Scholz, a farmer, residing in the vicinity of Mr. Lotter's farm, said that he knew the farm Normandy well. He signed the paper with Mr. De Villiers, and made a careful valuation of the damage.

Gideon G. Lotter, a son of the plaintiff, said he did everything possible to put out the fire. It was impossible to come nearer than 50 yards to the fire. There were no horses on the farm, but everything was done to get assistance.

Cross-examined: All the mules had been commandeered, and when they went to the Paarl they used ox-wagons. He would swear that there was no bicycle on the farm.

This closed the case for the plaintiff.

For the defence,

Harry Ernest Victor Pickstone stated that he was the general manager of the defendant's fruit farm; Mr. Mostert was the manager of the farm Rhone. After the fire witness went over, on receiving a claim through Mr. Shaw, to see the damage on Mr. Lotter's farm. He explained to Mr. Lotter that he had come to see the damage, and they went round together. The damage to the vineyard was not 5s.; it was absolutely paltry. Then they went to see the orchards, and there was a row of apple trees which had been partially scorched on one side; but there again the damage was very small. Witness asked Mr. Lotter how many reeds had been burned, and the latter said about 6,000; but as they had been burnt, there was nothing to be done, and witness was not in a position to dispute the amount of reeds which had been burnt. In regard to the poplar bush, he considered that that was of very small account; he did not go up to them, but he thought that the damage was trivial. There was, as regarded the oak trees, a previous fire three years ago, when, much against witness's judgment, they paid a sum of £50,

By the Court: The fire in the present instance was a much bigger fire than the other. He would not admit that they did not pay far too much in the former case. Subsequently he selected two men to go over to Mr. Lotter's farm and assess the damage. Lotter explained to witness that his son himself saw the fire lighted.

Cross-examined: The fire was a very big blaze, and might possibly have been seen for fifteen miles around.

By the Court: He did not send anyone to assist in putting the fire out. He was very much against the settlement of the former fire, and as soon as he saw the blaze he knew that there would be an action for damages. He came to the conclusion that if he had sent boys to put out the fire, if any claim was made, it would have been held that they were responsible in the matter. If Mr. Lotter had sent down, he would have collected a hundred boys to assist, and would have been glad to have done so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Seeing that it began on your property, it would have been better to have sent them anyway.]

Witness: I did not know that it started on our property. I am satisfied now that it started on our property.

Cross examination continued: The fire was a veld fire, and there was a very strong wind blowing at the time. They took it that the burning of the veld was an improvement, and it was generally recognised to be a benefit to a farm. He admitted that there was a certain amount of damage done, but at the same time there was also great benefit. Mr. Lotter might have remonstrated with him about the practice of setting the veld on fire.

Andreas Martinus Mostert, manager for Mr. Rhodes, produced a plan of the locality of the fire, approximately showing its extent. On November 14—the day of the fire—witness in the early morning was at the orchard above the Rhone homestead. He did not see Apollis that day. The wind was not blowing very strongly, and not in the direction of plaintiff's farm. Four of witness's boys were working in the orchard. Witness was spraying trees up to a little past ten o'clock, when he left for the Paarl. He returned home about 8 p.m. In cases of farm fires the neighbours usually helped one another to extinguish the outbreak. Witness, with Mr. Pickstone, went to Lotter's farm, but found that the damage was not very much; witness thought about £20 worth. Witness was on the farm when a previous fire occurred, and when Lotter was paid £50 as compensation. Witness was very much against this payment. It was no part of Apollis's duty to light fires. The pathway across the farm Rhone was very much frequented by different people. He was not aware that Lotter had been prevented using it. Witness had examined the ground, and he was of opinion that the fire originated on the ridge near the footpath.

Cross-examined: From time to time the veld was burnt, for the benefit of the goats. Paarl was about nine miles from plaintiff's farm; witness saw the smoke of the fire from Paarl.

Wilhelm Adolf Krige, overseer at the farm Rhone, said that on the morning of the fire he saw Apollis pass about eight o'clock with his goats. About 11.30 witness saw smoke, which appeared to be on plaintiff's ground.

Cross-examined: He did not send any men to see what was the matter. The fire might have been either on Rhone or Normandie farm. Fires were of daily occurrence on the mountains.

Re-examined: Witness had never given any instructions for the veld to be burnt. The fire was in the neighbourhood of the footpath across Rhone.

Apollis Abrahams, an elderly coloured man, deposed that he was goatherd on the farm Rhone. He did not light the fire in question. He did not smoke, nor did he light fires for the purpose of cocking his food. On the morning of the fire he went out with the goats at sunrise, but did not go near the veld. Mr. Mostert gave him no instructions to light a fire that day. Witness did not see young Lotter that day.

Cross-examined: He had never burnt the veld. On the day of the fire he was far away from it, on the main road. Neither of the Lotters had warned him against lighting fires.

Goliath, another elderly coloured man, alleged that on the day of the fire he was working with other men on the cultivated lands on Rhone. He saw the smoke, but no fire; a westerly wind was blowing. The fire was far from where they were working, and they could only see the smoke.

Daniel Johannes Joubert, Field-cornet of Groot Drakenstein, stated that he had, at the request of Mr. Pickstone, gone over to Mr. Lotter's farm to assess the damages caused by the fire. He saw a portion of the damage, and subsequently handed to Mr. Pickstone a short note, showing the damage to be assessed at £35.

Cross-examined: He never told Mr. Lotter that he had decided to diminish the estimate of the damage. What he principally had regard to in making the estimate was the vineyards and fruit-trees.

Christian Frederick Beyer, a farmer, residing in the Paarl district, said that he went with the last witness to assess the damage caused to the plaintiff's farm. Independently of the reeds, of which he knew nothing, he should put the damage at £10.

Cross-examined: He considered that the fire was a very good thing for Mr. Lotter. Personally he would have been very glad to have had 200 acres converted into beautiful veld. The oak trees were exceedingly poor. He considered that the improvement to the veld caused by the fire came to more than the damage.

Mr. Uington closed his case.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for plaintiff): The case of Van der Byl v. De Smid (Buch., 1869, p. 183), clearly shows that defendant was liable for the acts of his servant. The question, therefore, is merely one of damages. The evidence shows that considerable damage was done to plaintiff's farm, and if he has assessed that damage at a somewhat high figure, I submit that it is much nearer the mark than the absurdly low assessment made by the field-cornet and the other witnesses for the defence.

Mr. Uington (for defendant): In order to render an employer liable the negligent act of his servant must have been done within the scope of that servant's employment. In this case Apollis was not employed to burn the veld; on the contrary he was told not to burn it. In the absence of proof, either of definite instructions given to him to burn, or of proof that it was part of a goat herd's duty to burn, how can his employer be held liable. See Pollock on Torts (p. 79, 5th Edition). Even if Apollis was guilty of gross negligence it must be shown that his act was culpable. Privately v. Dumyrr (15, S.C.R. 393). That was a case of a man acting within the scope of his employment, and it is true that the Court held that not every deviation from the scope of his employment, no matter how slight, would suffice to relieve the employer of responsibility; but this is quite a different case: here the servant was expressly forbidden to light fires. Beran on Negligence. (p. 716.)

De Villiers, C.J.—What act makes it criminal to set fire to the veld?

Ordinance 18 of 1859, sec. 3.: But a civil action cannot be maintained against an employer whose servant by setting fire to the veld actually improves the property. Then, again, plaintiff sent his son to the fire when it was just commencing, about 10.30 a.m. It did not come on to his ground before 12 noon. Why, then, did he not go to Mostert and tell him to put out the fire, warning him it was a danger to his (plaintiff's) place. It was clearly plaintiff's duty if the fire was a danger to him to have gone on to defendant's ground and tried to put the fire out; but he does nothing until the fire actually comes across his line. He saw this fire burning at a very dangerous season, and knew that it is the custom of the locality to assist in extinguishing fires on a neighbour's farm. He has been guilty of contributory negligence. Apollis may well be liable, but there is no evidence to show that defendant authorised either him or Marais to burn the veld, or that he was benefited by its being burnt, and that is a very important point. As to the damages, I would refer to Shaw's letter of demand, and to the amended declaration. Nothing was said about these "fine oak trees"; we hear of them now for the first time. The original claim was only for vines and fruit trees, and the fact that neither oaks nor poplars were pointed out to Pickstone when he came to inspect the damage done casts great doubt upon the bona fides of this part of the claim.

Mr. Searle (in reply): On December 7 De Villiers and Scholz found that £150 worth of damage had been done to the blue gums and the oaks, so that this part of the claim was perfectly bona fide. See Van der Byl v. De Smid (Buch., 1869, p. 183). See particularly the judgment of Bell, C. J. There the defendants thought the fire would be beneficial to them, they warned plaintiff, and they kept a man on the watch, but nevertheless were held liable. Pickstone admits that he thought the fire a very good thing for Rhodes's property, and Mostert quite agrees with him. Van der Byl v. De Smid shows that the onus of proving that due care has been taken rests in such a case upon the person who lights the fire, and this onus defendant has not discharged. It is negligence to light a fire among brushwood on a windy day—Fort (9-2-19).

De Villiers, C.J.: The defendant's counsel has very properly argued that the defendant himself should not be held liable, unless the fire which had been kindled by Apollis had been kindled by him in the ordinary course of employment. The main question is: Was this fire kindled in such ordinary course? Upon this point the Court can scarcely disregard the custom of setting fire to bushes for the sake of the pasturage. The persons employed to do this are generally the shepherds who are in charge of sheep and cattle. We find that fires had been kindled before on the defendant's farm, apparently for the same purpose of improving the pasturage; but there is no evidence that Apollis who did it was in any way punished. It is true that Mr. Pickstone investigated the matter, and Mr. Mostert says that he directly prohibited the man from firing the veld. But that seems to have been somewhat of an afterthought of Mr. Mostert's, and it is not clear that any such direction was given. In my opinion it is clearly proved that he is the man who set fire to the veld the second time. There is another point, and that is that it seems to me that all those concerned in this farm were rather glad than otherwise of the occurrence. Mr. Pickstone seems to think it has done the plaintiff's place good, and I do not think Mr. Pickstone himself strongly disapproved of this act, or did anything to prevent it. The object of Apollis was not to benefit himself, but to benefit the defendant, his master. If we look at all the circumstances of the case, and consider the custom of the country and the fact that there was no disapproval on the part of his employers, I think we may come to the conclusion that the shepherd acted for the benefit of his master in the ordinary course of husbandry, which requires that the veld on the defendant's farm should occasionally be burnt. We are justified, therefore, in coming to the conclusion that Apollis was acting in the ordinary course. Under the old English common law a person in whose house a fire originated was liable in an action to his neighbours to whose house the fire spread, even without proof of negligence. By our law proof of negligence is required. In the present case, if once it is established that the fire was lit by the defendant or his servants in the ordinary course of their employment, there is sufficient proof of negligence to render the defendant liable. The wind was blowing in the direction of the plaintiff's farm, and no attempt was made by anyone on the defendant's farm to extinguish the fire. Mr. Pickstone himself says that he saw the fire, and he gives as his reason for not going to put it out the somewhat extraordinary one that, inasmuch as on a previous occasion he had been held liable, it would have been an acknowledgment of liability on his part had he done so. But the duty of the manager of his farm went further. It was his duty, when the fire originated on his farm, to put it out, and to prevent it from going beyond his boundary; and when it was proved that the servant on the one part set fire to the veld, and that the owner of the farm, knowing there was a fire, did nothing to stop it, I think under such circumstances the Court should hold that the owner of the farm on whose place the fire originated is responsible for its spreading. The next question is as to the damages. On this point I think that the plaintiff has somewhat over-estimated the damages; these oak trees were somewhat neglected, and there must have been a considerable amount of brushwood, and they were not of a sufficiently ornamental character that the temporary injury which has been done to them should injure the value of the farm. No doubt, for a time, it will be unsightly to have this black bush about, but in a few months that will have disappeared. The Court is of opinion that the sum of £50 will amply compensate the plaintiff for any injury that has been done, and judgment will be given for £50, with costs.

MOSSOP V. COOKE.

Feb. 24th.

Land—Action for Transfer.

This was an action for an order compelling defendant, Wm. Cooke, to give transfer to plaintiff, Joseph Mossop, of certain land.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The parties to this suit reside in Cape Town.

2. On the 22nd of November, 1901, the defendant sold, and plaintiff bought, for £250 sterling, certain land, being portion of plot No. 4, Block E, Tamboer's Kloof, in Cape Town, with certain frontage and a road, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the broker's note duly passed on that day by the brokers, G. and T. Herbert, whereof the following is a true copy, to wit: Bought on account of Mr. J. Mossop, from Mr. W. Cooke,—Certain land, being portion of plot No. 4, Block E, Tamboer's Kloof, with frontage to Burnside-road, and a 50-feet road (opposite to Mr. Mossop's residence), in extent 40 English feet by 100 ditto, for the sum of £250 sterling; buyer to pay all expenses of transfer, and to be liable for all rates and taxes levied after this date. During the ownership of W. Cooke or his daughter of adjoining plot, viz., remainder of No. 4, and Nos. 2 and 3, no house to be erected on land now purchased by Mr. Mossop of less value than £1,000. The buyer agrees to pay the sum of £1 per year (for the plot purchased of 40 feet) for pro rata share of road making and drainage if payment enforced by the Town Council (£1 per year for 25 years). Payment cash against transfer. Seller to pay brokerage.—(Signed) G. and T. Herbert.

3. All things have happened, all conditions have been performed, and all times have elapsed and passed necessary to enable the plaintiff upon payment of the price and costs of transfer to demand transfer of the said land subject to the aforesaid terms and conditions, but the defendant has wrongfully and unlawfully repudiated and refuses to be bound by the said contract of sale and purchase.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for an order compelling the defendant, upon payment by the plaintiff of the price and costs of transfer, forthwith to give transfer to the plaintiff of the said land in proper form of law subject to the terms and conditions embodied in the said broker's note, or that he may have such further and other relief in the premises as to this Hon. Court may seem meet, together with costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

For a plea to the declaration, the defendant says:

1. He admits paragraph 1 thereof.

2. As to paragraph 2 thereof, he admits that there were negotiations as to a sale of the property belonging to him to defendant, but he denies that there was any completed and concluded contract of sale on November 22, 1901, as alleged, or at any time, or that he accepted or became bound by the broker's note, as alleged; on the contrary, he repudiated the same.

3. He admits that he refuses to be bound by the alleged contract of purchase and sale, and repudiates the same; but save as above, he denies all and singular the allegations in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the declaration. Wherefore he prays that plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

The replication was general.

Mr. B. Uppington appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. C. de Villiers for the defendant.

The facts appear from the judgment.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff in this action sought to enforce the sale of certain property. Defendant denied that there was any completed contract of sale. The declaration stated that the conditions of sale were set forth in a broker's note, which has been put in. This broker's note described the land, fixed the price, and settled the expenses of transfer, and there were two conditions. One was a restriction on the purchaser, by which he was not allowed to erect on the property any house of less value than £1,000, and the second was an agreement with regard to a Municipal lien that the purchaser should pay £1 per year for twenty-five years for road-making and drainage, if payment was enforced by the Town Council. A broker was employed in this transaction, both by plaintiff and by defendant. The defendant had placed the property in the broker's hands some months before the transaction took place, and when the broker found a likely purchaser, he went to the defendant and obtained from him a written document, in which he stated his price and his conditions, and in which he gave an option until the following Monday at 12 o'clock. The Monday was the 25th November. This document was forthwith sent to the purchaser, and he instructed his broker to close. It was common cause between the parties that the broker saw defendant and declared the purchaser. Here was as complete a transaction as it was possible to conceive. The terms of the contract were set forth in writing. Defendant was told the purchaser, and accepted him. There was nothing more to complete the contract. But defendant said he asked the broker to draw up a broker's note. According to the case cited by Mr. De Villiers, and according to common law, a broker's note was simply evidence of the contract. When the broker's note was drawn up by the broker, he omitted one condition. The option had been accepted, but defendant took the note back to the broker, and insisted on this condition being put in. There were negotiations between the parties as to whether the seller would not reduce the limit of the value of property to be built on the land to £750. There was some conflict of testimony as to when these negotiations took place. The broker and Mossop said it was before the contract was completed, the defendant said it was after. The condition as to the Town Council's lien was not mentioned in the contract, and defendant was perfectly justified in insisting upon this being put into the broker's note. The broker, knowing that this was a condition, and knowing that it was agreed to by the parties, wrote it into the broker's note, and handed it to the seller. The purchaser, Mossop, could not raise objection; he was bound by the option, and it was simply an omission on the part of the broker. If Mossop had refused to ratify this contract, it might then have been open to the seller—Cooke—to say, "I insist upon you carrying out the contract, or, if you do not agree to my conditions, I will cancel it." But there never was any refusal on the part of Mossop to comply with the conditions. The broker's note is only evidence of what the contract really was. After the contract had been completed a conversation took place between defendant and plaintiff, which resulted in the defendant getting into a huff, and tearing up his broker's note. The contract was a completed contract on the conditions stated by the seller and accepted by the buyer. The evidence was beyond dispute that there was a contract, and defendant must perform that contract now. The declaration only claims transfer, and judgment must therefore be given for plaintiff with costs.

COETZER V. COETZER. 1902.
{ Feb. 24th.

This was an action for judicial separation, and an order in terms of a voluntary deed executed on the 21st July, 1900, in which defendant agreed to a division of the property and to pay £24 quarterly for the support of plaintiff and her three children.

Mr. De Waal for plaintiff; defendant in default.

Francis Henry le Sueur produced the register of the marriage of the parties.

Mary Agnes Coetzer said she was married to defendant on the 23rd April, 1889, at Elliot, in community of property. There were three children, aged 12, 9, and 2. They lived happily for two years, when her husband took to drink, and ill-used her. There was a deed of separation, since the execution of which they had not lived together. After they separated, defendant sold his farm. Witness did not know what had become of the proceeds. The farm was in the Barkly East district. Defendant had not been paying his quarterly contributions regularly, according to the deed.

Buchanan, J., said the Court could not order division, and give alimony to the wife as well.

Mr. De Waal said that plaintiff elected to have alimony, and not the division of the remaining property.

A decree of separation was granted, plaintiff to have custody of the children, and defendant to pay £24 every three months towards the support of the plaintiff and children, with costs.

HENDRICKS V. HENDRICKS. } 1902.
Feb. 25th.

This was an action for divorce by the husband on the grounds of his wife's misconduct.

Mr. Buchanan appeared for the petitioner; the respondent was in default.

Francis Henry le Sueur, clerk in the Registry Office, produced the certificate of marriage between the parties.

Samuel Hendricks, harness maker, stated that he was married to respondent on July 21, 1890. They lived in Cape Town for some time, and then went to Rondebosch subsequently removing to 70, Harrington-street, where they took in lodgers. Last Christmas his wife told him that she was going to take in another boarder, and then a man named Gilbert arrived at the house. On January 8 petitioner received an anonymous letter, and two days later he accused his wife of infidelity. He then went to live in Primrose-street, but on going back to Harrington-street on the following Sunday morning he found that Gilbert had been occupying his wife's room. Gilbert informed him that he was going to live with his wife. The pair had since left for Port Elizabeth.

Mrs. Barbara Anna George gave corroborative evidence.

A decree of divorce was granted.

KITE V. JONES. } 1902.
Feb. 25th.

This was an action for a declaration of rights.

Mr. Gardiner (with whom was Mr. De Villiers) appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for defendant.

Mr. Benjamin said one of his witnesses was not present, and he suggested that his evidence might be taken on commission, and then the matter might be argued next term. They had three witnesses present. The case was originally in the hands of Sir Henry Juta, and it had only quite recently come into the hands of Mr. Searle and himself. It was an action for ejectment from certain premises occupied by defendant at Claremont.

Mr. Gardiner, while prepared to consent to the case standing over for a few days, pointed out that the matter had stood over since last term, and no application was then made for a commission.

The Court ordered the case to stand over until next term, the question of costs of the day also to stand over, and to be specially applied for.

FLETCHER V. ALIE } 1902.
MAHOMET. } Feb. 25th.

This was an action for damages for breach of contract.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff resides in Cape Town; the defendant resides at Salt River, in the Cape Division.

2. On or about the 23rd of October, 1901, the plaintiff purchased, and the defendant sold, a certain property, with houses thereon, situate at the corner of Maitland and Kent roads, Salt River, for the sum of £2,425.

3. It was stipulated in the contract, which was in writing, that a cash payment should be made against transfer to be given on November 13, 1901, while possession of the premises was to be given and taken on November 1, 1901.

4. The plaintiff is, and always has been, ready and willing to carry out his part of the contract, and has tendered, and hereby tenders, to pay the aforesaid purchase price, upon receiving possession and transfer of the property; but the defendant has wholly failed and neglected to perform his portion of the contract, viz., giving possession and transfer of the property, as above stated.

Wherefore plaintiff prays:

(a) That defendant be ordered to give him possession and transfer of the above property, he tendering to pay the purchase price.

(b) Costs of suit.

(c) Or in the alternative, the sum of £500, as and for damages for non-fulfilment of contract.

Mr. Buchanan for plaintiff; defendant in person.

Moses Fletcher said he was a speculator in land. On October 23, 1901, he bought the property at Salt River from defendant, through the latter's agent, Mr. Steer. Witness did not see the defendant personally about the matter. Subsequently witness visited the property, which consisted of eight houses and a shop, and informed the tenants that he had bought the property, and one woman paid her rent for November in advance. The total rentals were about £32 a month. Subsequently the woman wanted the money refunded, which witness did. Witness had not got transfer or possession of the property; he was ready to take transfer even now. He had suffered damages to the extent of £500, as he could have resold for £3,000. The property was worth about £3,200.

Mahomet, in reply to Mr. Justice Buchanan, stated that he himself had not got transfer of the property from Government. He admitted his signature to the condition of sale, but he could not give transfer, as he had not got it to give.

Arthur Wallace Steer, attorney, said he drew up the conditions of sale. The parties met in his office, and arranged the terms. Witness did not act as agent for defendant. He explained to plaintiff that the original seller, Goveia, had not passed transfer to defendant. The agent for the present owner told him that the sale of the property to defendant had been cancelled.

Defendant stated that he was to have paid £2,425 for the property; he paid £100 on deposit. He knew that the sale was cancelled, but he was told that that did not matter.

Morris Cherry, a land speculator, deposed that he offered the sum of £3,000 for the property to the plaintiff's agent, but as he could not get it, he bought another property.

Judgment was given for plaintiff for transfer to be given within one month from that, or failing that, for £250 damages, with costs.

Brokerage.

Where a purchaser was introduced by a broker who arranged terms of sale,

Held, that the fact of the vendor having himself completed the transaction and secured better terms for himself than those arranged for by the broker did not deprive the broker of his commission.

Semble : “ If a sale is effected through a broker, he is entitled to his commission, however small his trouble in effecting the sale has been ; but if it is not effected through his agency he is not entitled to any commission, however much pains he may have taken to bring the sale about.”

[Per De Villiers, C. J., in Macdonachie's Executrix v. Bidewell-Edwards (2 Sheil, 155).]

This was an action brought by Alfred Samuel Fowler, a broker carrying on business in Cape Town, against Benjamin Evans John, a shopkeeper, residing at Wynberg, to recover the sum of £75, alleged to be due for brokerage.

The declaration stated that in September the defendant instructed the plaintiff, as broker, to sell certain landed property belonging to him, and situated at Wynberg; that from time to time thereafter during September, October, and November, the plaintiff took steps in accordance with defendant's instructions, and with defendant's knowledge, to sell the property; that plaintiff procured one Van Oudtshoorn as a purchaser of the property for a sum of £2,900, and introduced him to the defendant on November 21; that the defendant repudiated the sale, but a few days later, in the month of November, in consequence of this introduction, he sold the property to Van Oudtshoorn for £3,000; that thereby the defendant became liable to pay the plaintiff £75, being the usual brokerage at the rate of 2½ per cent. on the purchase price, but that the defendant refused to pay any brokerage.

In his plea, defendant denied all liability for brokerage. He admitted that he employed plaintiff as broker, but said that he gave him due notice terminating the employment on 14th November. He admitted that plaintiff had sold the property to Van Oudtshoorn for £2,900, but said that he had no authority to do so. Defendant admitted that he repudiated that sale, and that subsequently he sold the property to Van Oudtshoorn for £3,000, but denied that plaintiff acted as broker in that transaction.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with whom was Mr. Alexander), appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. B. Upington appeared for the defendant.

Mr. Searle called

Alfred Samuel Fowler, who said he was a broker. The property belonging to Mr. John was put into his hands to be sold for £2,900. This was in September. Witness subsequently advertised the property extensively, and on November 5 witness's manager gave Mr. Van Oudtshoorn a viewing order. Mr. John was given an advise note. Mr. Van Oudtshoorn made inquiries respecting the bond, and in consequence of that witness on the 7th November wired to Mr. John, "Please come in to-day respecting your property." Mr. John came in, and witness gave Mr. Van Oudtshoorn particulars in writing of the information received from Mr. John. The negotiations with Mr. Van Oudtshoorn continued, and were not concluded until the 21st November, up to which time witness received no communication from Mr. John cancelling the authority to sell. On the 21st witness wrote to Mr. John, saying that Van Oudtshoorn was ready to complete the sale for £2,900. Witness extended the time to Van Oudtshoorn. The time was fixed by witness's manager to bring the sale to a head, and witness extended the time. John never fixed a time. Witness prepared broker's notes. On the 21st John said in Van Oudtshoorn's presence that he would not sell, as he had received no offer of £3,100. Van Oudtshoorn said he had bought the property, and would hold witness responsible. Witness's manager, Keith, said that witness had the power to close. After Van Oudtshoorn had left, John said that if witness could get Van Oudtshoorn to meet him half-way, he would close with him. Afterwards Van Oudtshoorn consented to give the extra money, provided he could get another loan of £100. On the 25th November John's attorneys wrote stating that John only gave power to sell up to the 14th November, and that witness had exceeded his authority. Witness gave the letter to his solicitors, and sent a letter of demand. He heard that Van Oudtshoorn had bought the property. There was correspondence with Van Oudtshoorn. On the 25th November witness gave Van Oudtshoorn the broker's notes to take to John. They both lived at Wynberg. Van Oudtshoorn told witness he had seen John. On the 25th November witness sent a telegram to John, saying that Van Oudtshoorn was prepared to meet him half-way.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: John did not tell witness that he would have to sell by the 7th November, nor that the time was subsequently extended until the 14th. Keith effected the preliminary arrangements. Witness had no recollection of John saying on the 21st that witness had no authority to sell. John imposed no time limit by which witness was to sell the property.

Walter Keith, manager for the plaintiff, said that in September Mr. John saw witness and put the property in the hands of Mr. Fowler to sell at £2,900. Witness entered this in a book, and after that the property was extensively advertised. On November 5 witness gave Van Oudtshoorn a card to view the property. There was some hitch in regard to the mortgage, and on November 7 defendant called upon witness and explained that the purchaser would have to provide all the money except the first bond of £1,800 or £1,900. Defendant never gave them any intimation that after November 14 plaintiff would have nothing further to do with the property. The sale was not fixed by November 14, but on November 21 an intimation was given defendant that Van Oudtshoorn had bought the property for £2,900. Defendant came to the office in the afternoon of November 22. The broker's note had then been made out, but defendant said he had had a larger offer, and could not accept £2,900. He refused to confirm the sale to Van Oudtshoorn for that sum. Defendant had said to witness that plaintiff had authority to sell the property, and witness told him there had been no cancellation of the authority. Defendant said that if Van Oudtshoorn would meet him half-way he would conclude the sale.

Van Oudtshoorn said there had been a sale, and that he would hold plaintiff to it.

Cross-examined: Witness had heard defendant say in September that he was going to England, and wanted the property sold as soon as possible. Witness did not know whether any offer was submitted to defendant during September and October. Defendant never said that plaintiff must find a purchaser for the property by November 7. He saw John on that day, but did not say that Van Oudtshoorn was treating for the property, and he did not ask for an extension to November 14. At the interview on November 22 witness was called in by plaintiff to be a witness. The entry previously referred to was the only one they had in their books in regard to the property. They only made other entries in cases where authority to sell was revoked. In such a case they would draw a blue pencil across the entry, and probably make some remarks. If a man came and said they must sell his property within a fixed time witness would make an entry to that effect in the books. Sellers did not frequently give orders of that kind.

Robert Montgomery, a clerk in the employ of the plaintiff, said that on November 22 he was asked to fetch Mr. Van Oudtshoorn from the Colonial Office. He brought him over to the office, where Mr. John was present. In the latter's presence plaintiff explained to Van Oudtshoorn that Mr. John said he had got an offer for £3,100, and Mr. Van Oudtshoorn said he would hold Mr. Fowler responsible for the sale for £2,900. Mr. Fowler said that if Mr. Van Oudtshoorn did that he would hold Mr. John responsible. Mr. Van Oudtshoorn left first, and then Mr. John, as he was going away, said that if Mr. Van Oudtshoorn would split the difference he would complete the sale. Mr. Fowler said he did not think Mr. Van Oudtshoorn would do so.

Cross-examined: The question of Mr. Fowler's authority was never raised at that interview.

William van Oudtshoorn said he was a clerk in the Colonial Office, and resided at Wynberg. He came to first know of this property being for sale through seeing Mr. Fowler's advertisement in the newspaper. He then went and got a viewing order, and after seeing the property he went to Mr. Fowler and said that he liked it, but before deciding definitely he wanted particulars as to the bonds, and so on. Witness got a written document of terms from Fowler. This he had destroyed.

Mr. Searle said he had a copy from Mr. Fowler's letter book.

Continuing, witness said he went and saw the place after receiving the viewing order. He told Mr. Fowler that before deciding definitely he must see if he could make arrangements about the bond. Mr. Fowler said witness could have time. On the 21st witness told Fowler he would buy for £2,900. Fowler wrote a letter to John. At the subsequent interview John said he had had an offer for £3,100. Witness said he would hold Fowler responsible. On the next Sunday witness saw John, who said he could have the property for £3,000. Witness did not then give him an answer. Later in the day witness said he would buy the property. John said that if he bought, he (John) would have nothing more to do with Fowler. Witness next day saw Fowler, and told him of this. The broker's notes were altered to £3,000, and Fowler gave them to witness to take to John. The latter said that he would have nothing more to do with Fowler, and that the sale would have to go through someone else. Witness took the notes back to Fowler. Afterwards Mr. John went to Mr. Arderne to see if he could sell without Fowler, and Mr. Arderne said he would look up some cases. Afterwards the sale was completed through Mr. Holme.

By Mr. Upington: Witness had never told anyone that the reason John had given for repudiating the sale was that Mr. Fowler had not sold in the time given to him.

This concluded the evidence for the plaintiff.

For the defence, Mr. Upington called Benjamin Evans John, the defendant, who said that in September he instructed Fowler to sell the property. He told Fowler that he was going to England, and wanted the property sold as soon as possible. When Mr. Fowler wrote on the 11th November stating that they had given Van Oudtshoorn an extension of time, witness told Mr. Keith that the 14th must be final. Then on the 21st witness was advised by Fowler that the sale had been made. Witness went to the office, and repudiated the sale on the ground that plaintiff had no authority to sell after the 14th. Witness told Fowler that he had another purchaser for £3,100. There had been negotiations with Holme respecting the purchase of the property for £3,100 after the 14th. Witness did not agree to accept £3,000. Witness did not receive a telegram on the 25th respecting Van Oudtshoorn being prepared to meet him half-way. A sale was afterwards effected through Holme.

By Mr. Searle: Witness first gave Fowler authority until the 7th November, and when he got the letter on the 11th he went and told Mr. Keith that Fowler had exceeded his authority, and that the 14th must be final.

Andrew E. L. Holme said he belonged to the firm of Holme and Co. He was in treaty with the defendant for this property, and made an offer of £3,100 for the property. He was a broker, and wanted to purchase the property as an investment.

Cross-examination: Witness did not get the property for £3,100, because defendant said Van Oudtshoorn had gone to expense in arranging the bond, and he would give him preference. Witness thought defendant considered that he was bound to Van Oudtshoorn.

This concluded the evidence.

Buchanan, J., said that it was admitted that defendant gave plaintiff the property to sell, and that it was through plaintiff that Van Oudtshoorn was introduced to defendant, but it was alleged that the authority to sell had been revoked before that date. Under the circumstances he would like to hear Mr. Upington's argument first.

After hearing Mr. Upington, and without calling on Mr. Searle for argument, the Court gave judgment for the plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

Buchanan, J., in giving judgment, said: The question the Court has to decide in this case is whether the sale of certain property at Wynberg, belonging to the defendant, to one Van Oudtshoorn has been effected through the agency of the broker Fowler, the plaintiff in this case. It is admitted that the parties were introduced through the broker, but Mr. Upington argues that the introduction, though it may have been the causa proxima, was not the causa causans of the sale. Now it has been repeatedly laid down that there must be a contractual relationship between the introduction and the sale. Two cases, Macnochie's Executors v. Biderell-Edwards and Roux v. Brittain, illustrate this doctrine clearly and distinctly. A broker's commission depends entirely upon his success, as the Chief Justice said in the case of Macnochie, "If a sale is effected through a broker, he is entitled to his commission, however small his trouble in effecting the sale has been; but if it is not effected through his agency, he is not entitled to any commission, however much pains he may have taken to bring the sale about." In this case Johns was anxious to sell his property, as he was going away to England. As far back as September he put it in the hands of the broker. The broker advertised the property for sale, but for some time had no application for it. Early in November, however, in consequence of the broker's advertisement, Van Oudtshoorn called upon the broker, and received from him all particulars. On the 5th November the broker gave Van Oudtshoorn a ticket to view the property. He went and saw the property, seemed pleased with it, and was agreeable to pay the price asked; and coming back, resumed negotiations with the broker. Van Oudtshoorn had not money to pay the whole of the purchase price, and it was therefore necessary to discuss the question of a bond. On the 11th November the broker wrote to the seller, "Mr. Van Oudtshoorn is endeavouring to arrange a bond, and is to have it decided on Thursday. I have therefore extended the time for his decision until then. I have little doubt there will be a sale." If we follow the written documents put in, there is nothing in any document which can justify the defendant in the defence set up in this case—that his authority to sell was terminated. The next communication between the parties is the telegram of November 21, which reads as follows: "Van Oudtshoorn has closed for the property at £2,900; please be here tomorrow morning at ten sharp, with papers, to sign the broker's note." Unfortunately for the parties, a disturbing element was introduced a couple of days before, through a letter written by another broker to defendant on the 19th November, in which he asks Johns whether he was prepared to accept an offer of £3,100 for the property, an advance of £200 over Van Oudtshoorn's price. This broker, Mr. Holm, was called, and said he was wishing to purchase the property for himself. Johns, in consequence of a telegram from Fowler, appeared on the 22nd at Fowler's office, and then repudiated to Van Oudtshoorn the sale which Fowler had in the meantime effected, and said he had received this offer of £3,100. Thereupon Van Oudtshoorn very naturally said to Fowler, "Well, you have sold me this property. I have closed with you, and I look to you to see that the transaction is carried out." He then left the office. According to the evidence as to what took place, there was no attempt at repudiation of Fowler's authority by defendant, but after discussion, the defendant said to his broker, "Well, if you can induce Van Oudtshoorn to split the difference, the sale may go through." That is, if Van Oudtshoorn would increase his offer to £3,000, then the broker could complete the sale. The defendant denies this, but the broker is confirmed by the testimony of two other witnesses. Instead of seeing the broker, Van Oudtshoorn went to Johns himself the day after—on Sunday, the 23rd—and after discussing matters with Johns, agreed to raise his offer to £3,000, and the sale was allowed to go through. On the evidence led in this case, I think that if this had been an action brought by Van Oudtshoorn against Johns to compel transfer of the property for £2,900, there is very strong probability that Van Oudtshoorn would have been successful in his action. But perhaps he was well advised, seeing he considered the property was worth £3,000, in preferring to pay £3,000 rather than run the risk of a lawsuit, and so avoided further dispute, and had the matter amicably settled. Now I fail to see upon what principle Johns can now say that the broker is not entitled to his commission. He contends that the broker had extended the time to Van Oudtshoorn beyond the limit which he (Johns) had given him, but he does not put in any correspondence supporting this, and there is the fact that he actually consented to Van Oudtshoorn becoming the purchaser after that date. The purchaser was introduced by the broker, and he took considerable trouble in arranging terms; and the mere fact that defendant himself completed the transaction is not sufficient to deprive the broker of his commission. I fail to see any ground at all on which the seller can say that this transaction was not brought about by the broker. It was brought about by the broker's advertisements, by the broker's introduction of Van Oudtshoorn, and by the broker's negotiations with the parties. This is one of the clearest cases of a broker being entitled to recover commission. Judgment will be given for plaintiff as prayed, with costs.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp concurred.

SIMS V. ARGUS CO.

Breach of Contract—Damages.

This was an action for breach of contract.

The declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a photographer, and resides at Cape Town. The defendants are a joint stock company, duly incorporated in this colony, carrying on business therein, and having their head office in Cape Town.

2. In August and September, 1901, the plaintiff incurred much trouble and expense in and about compiling materials, taking and preparing photographs, and obtaining advertisements for a work to be published in book form under the title of "The Royal Tour Souvenir," of which the chief attraction was to consist of photographs of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, and of the various arches, decorations, and scenes during and connected with the Royal visit to this colony.

3. On or about the 14th September, 1901, the plaintiff and the defendants orally agreed as follows, viz.: That in consideration of the price of £320 (pay-expenses during the compilation of the work were about £50. Commission to canvassers at 4d. per copy would be £166. Deducting the £50 paid to the Argus Company, witness's damages amounted to £554 5s. 8d. The Argus Company objected to one of the photographs supplied by witness on the ground that it was too dark. Witness made a lighter one, but they eventually used the dark one. Witness considered the photographs good. The defendants had not objected to the other photographs. There was no comparison between the prints executed by the Argus Company and those by the other firm referred to.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness would not call a particular photograph a first-class one, but it was good compared to the production in the book. Mr. Hardingham did not mention six weeks as the time in which the books would be supplied, nor did he say they would try to let witness have them in a month. Besides his own efforts, three canvassers were employed to sell the books. He objected to the whole get-up of the book, and contended that the photographs were badly printed. He arranged to pay the canvassers fourpence a copy, and he based the claim for damages on the assumption that he was going to sell 10,000 copies. He had a number of private customers, who had undertaken to take dozens and half-dozens, but when they saw the work they declined to take it.

David M. Smail, manager for W. A. Richards and Sons, said he had had about 20 years' experience of the work in question. He had seen one of the books (produced). He had lately had two photographs supplied to him by Mr. Sims, from which two blocks were made, which were supplied to the plaintiff. The blocks were made by the half-tone process. The prints (produced) were done by witness's firm, and there was no comparison between those and the pictures which appeared in the book. Of course a good deal might depend upon the time taken, but there was faulty workmanship in the book.

[By De Villiers, C.J.: The bad workmanship was chiefly in the machining. He would not say the work was bad, but a good deal depended upon the time taken.)

There you have the book before you; is it good or bad?—It is indifferent.

You won't say it is bad?—Some of them are bad; some are good.

How many are bad, absolutely bad?—No. 9 is very bad, but the photograph may have been bad. The photograph (produced) is not a good one, and a good block could not have been made from it. The picture is a very good impression from the photograph.

[Do you consider the print bad compared with the photograph?—No, not in this case.]

A better print could have been obtained if longer time had been taken. His firm would not have turned out such a book, but they might have refused an order if the work was wanted within a certain time.

Cross-examined: Six weeks was too short a time in which to produce the book. The photograph of the arch at the head of the Avenue could not be expected to make a good block.

Henry da Costa, a printer, said he was engaged in general letterpress printing, and had had twenty-two years' practical experience. From what he had seen of the books that were handed to him, they were very indifferently printed, so far as the machining was concerned. The picture No. 9 was badly made ready, and the block produced in the book was not a fair reproduction of the photograph. The black marks on the picture could have been avoided with a little care. The picture No. 61 he should describe as a smudge. The pages were also not in rotation, as a result, apparently, of a mistake in the folding. In regard to No. 49, the photograph of the Municipal arch, the block had not been made ready, and there was too much ink on it. The job had apparently been left to stand, and the machine-minder had gone away, and had not washed the ink off the block. A better picture should certainly have been produced from the photograph. The block made by Messrs. Richards was a very good picture.

Cross-examined: Witness was a master printer, and his business was that of a letterpress printer, but at the present time he was, unfortunately, a refugee. He carried on business in Johannesburg under the style of Da Costa Bros., and was now managing the Toll-gate Printing Works. He had never made blocks, but he had printed from them. The photograph No. 22 had been exposed too long. The pictures, generally speaking, were passable, and that was all. If a photograph were bad, the block made for it would be bad too; but, so far as he had seen, the photographs were good. He should, however, have rejected one of the photographs as being too dark.

Re-examined: On seeing all the photographs, he should say that the result should have been a great deal better than it actually was.

Henry Edward Cope, manager of the photographic department of Messrs. Heynes, Mathew and Co., said that the firm gave an advertisement to the plaintiff. On the appearance of the book, however, he rejected it, on account of the pictures being bad. He knew nothing about the original pictures.

Cross-examined: He had refused to pay for the advertisement, and did not intend to do so. He did not order any of the books.

Eli Jenkinson, iron-founder, residing at Salt River, said he gave the plaintiff a full page advertisement for the book, and decided to order 50 copies, on the understanding that the work should be good. He sent about twenty away, and on looking over the remainder he rejected them, and wrote to say he would not have them. He did not examine them before sending them away. He had intended to order 20 or 30 more if the books had been good. His impression was that the book was no use as an advertisement, and was not fit to show to anyone.

Cross-examined: He did not examine the books before he sent them away. He might have looked at his own advertisement, for which he had paid £5.

Charles Dangerfield, assistant manager of the British Hotel, Simon's Town, said that an order was given to the plaintiff for an advertisement, and it was also agreed that copies should be taken for the use of the hotel. On the book being brought down, however, they refused to take it, or to pay for the advertisement, on account of the book being turned out so badly.

Cross-examined: He expected that the books would come out as clear as the photographs.

Arthur Walter Townshend, a partner in the firm of Townshend, Taylor and Southall, said the plaintiff consulted him in September about a quotation for the book. He had never had a copy of the work submitted to him, and could not express an opinion.

Cross-examined: Witness quoted £110 for five thousand copies of small size and £160 for the same number of a rather larger size. Neither, however, were so large as that produced by the Argus Company.

Thomas James Porter, canvasser for the plaintiff, said he was present when the contract for the work was made with Mr. Hardingham. The plaintiff stipulated for good work, and Mr. Hardingham told him that he could have it. Plaintiff explained that time was an important feature in the matter, and it was arranged that the work should be finished in three weeks, or, to be safe, a month. Witness sold about sixteen or eighteen of the books, but could not sell any more, on account of the bad printing; people would not buy it on account of the bad work. He considered that he could have sold between three or four thousand if the books had been properly printed. He did not think he could have given the books away.

Cross-examined: The most important point about the contract was the time, because as time elapsed the difficulty in selling the books would increase. Witness was to get 4d. a copy for his work, and the plaintiff also said he would subsequently give him a present of £5 or £10.

This closed the case for the plaintiff.

For the defence, Mr. Searle called

Robert John Hardingham, who stated that he was the manager of the works department of the Argus Company. It was agreed that the work should be done for the plaintiff for the sum of £320. Witness told the plaintiff at the time that a number of the photographs were no good for reproduction, and could not be expected to give good results. He (the plaintiff) said witness could have what photographs he liked, and on the understanding that he should get good photographs he told plaintiff he should have first-class work. Sims agreed to bring in other photographs, and on the point of time witness said it would take about six weeks. Plaintiff asked witness to do it in a month, and he promised to do his best; and as soon as the photographs were all in they made a start, but the photographs which the plaintiff brought were no better than the original ones, and in some cases worse than the first lot, so that they had to adhere to the original ones. The work was done in about five weeks, so far as the blocks were concerned. Plaintiff came up nearly every day and saw copies of the advertisements and of the pictures; he was in a great hurry to get the books, and said he would lose the sale of the books, and consequently everything was done to save time, and, instead of having the sheets off in the proper manner, they had to run over the tapes. Witness did not think plaintiff could have expected to sell many copies, for the excitement in the Royal visit had died out, and the book was merely an advertising medium. He considered that the price charged for the book, 2s., was also too high. Considering the character of the original photographs and the time in which they had to turn it out, the work was as good as could be done. The company actually completed a thousand copies, and had expended about £220 on the job, but they could deliver the remainder in a short space of time. The whole expense would be about £250.

Cross-examined: The faults in certain of the pictures were due to the fact that the job was hurried through. He did not consider the Harbour Board picture was a credit to the firm, but the fault was due to the rollers jumping owing to the work being rushed. Carelessness on the part of the machinemen caused some of the defects. The black marks across the photographs were so caused. If sufficient time had been given, these would not have occurred. On one of the plates the blur was due to a flaw in the plate, of which Mr. Sims was informed. The process man was preparing to make another plate, but Mr. Sims said there was no time, and so the plate was used. Witness did not know that the numbering was incorrect. There was a fault in the arrangement of one of the advertisements, which should have been placed opposite the photographs of the advertising firm's premises. This was because of the work being rushed. Witness thought that in October three or four thousand of the books would have been sold. Witness considered that the photograph supplied to Messrs. Richards and Sons was a better one than that supplied to the Argus Company.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: With the photographs supplied, and with the time allowed, witness considered the firm did the best work possible.

Francis Ward said he was a process worker in the defendant company's employ. He had been in their service for nine months, and had previously had five years' experience of this class of work in London. He was in charge of the making of blocks for the defendants. When Mr. Sims brought the photographs witness informed him that they were no good for reproduction. He picked out some of the worst, and Sims said he would bring other photographs. He brought other, but they were no better, and witness used the first lot, telling Sims he would do his best with them. The making of one of these blocks should take seven or eight hours. Witness took about five weeks over the work. It could not have been done quicker. The productions were the best he could get out of such photographs. The plaintiff often came up to see witness while the work was being executed, and witness took him into the dark room and showed him the proofs. He told Sims that the book would not pay because the photographs were so bad, and Sims said he was depending on the advertisements, which would cover the cost of the book. Witness considered that better work could not be done under the circumstances from the photographs supplied.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How do you account for Richards doing better?]

Witness: They had a longer time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Then it is a question of time?]

Witness replied that he believed it had been stated that Richards had different photographs.

Examination continued: Witness would have made the work satisfactory if given a longer time, but he could not make a first-class job from photographs like those supplied.

W. Preston Buchanan publisher and bookseller, said he had been in the trade since 1886. He brought out works from time to time. In witness's opinion, October was too late for a successful sale of these books. Witness himself published a book souvenir of the Royal visit, and sold about 3,000 or 4,000 at 6d. per copy in the streets. There was no sale for them after the Royal party had gone. Witness's books were on sale while Their Royal Highnesses were here.

Charles Buxtey, manager of the firm of Dennis Edwards and Co., said he had had fifteen years' experience of the photographic reproduction process. He had seen the photographs supplied to the defendants. They were of no use whatever. They were perfectly flat, and there was no detail. He did not think that in the time given better results than those shown in the books could be obtained from such photographs. Witness's firm had published a souvenir, and had found that there was no sale for them a week after the visit.

Richard Joseph McManus, process worker, said he gave the estimate to Messrs. Townshend to do this work. The photographs were under exposed in the original negative. Good results could not be expected from the photographs. There was no tone in the photographs; they were too dark in the shadow, and too bright in the light. On the photograph produced by Messrs. Richards and Sons more time was spent by the artist.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wilkinson: The marks on one of the photographs were caused by want of underlaying.

Edwin Aukett, process worker, employed by Messrs. Van de Sandt and De Villiers, said he would not have done this work. The photographs were bad. There was no detail. One or two in the book were good. The printing might have been better, but witness did not think he could improve on the books.

Ernest T. Notcutt, proprietor of the Electric Printing Works, said he had been in the trade for thirty years. He had seen the photographs supplied to the defendants. They were too faint, and it was impossible to get good work from them. Witness did not think, taking the book as a whole, and all the circumstances, that much better results could have been obtained from the photographs than were shown in the book.

Philip Moore, employed by Mr. Miller, bookseller, Cape Town, said there was apparently no demand for book souvenirs a fortnight after the Royal visit. Witness did not think that any great number of books would have been sold in October.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wilkinson: Witness thought there would probably be a good sale of book souvenirs in England if they arrived there before the Royal party returned.

Edward M. Ashley said he was representative here of a wholesale photographic firm, and was formerly a professional photographer in Liverpool. He considered the photographs supplied to the Argus Company indifferent. Witness did not think a good job could be made in printing from such photographs. There was no detail. The fault might be in the exposure or development. The negatives, he would presume, were bad.

Mr. Searle closed his case, and counsel then addressed the jury.

In his direction to the jury, the Chief Justice said that the first question to consider was, what was the contract? When the jury had determined what the nature of the contract was, they would have to decide whether there had been any breach of such contract, and if they found that there had been a breach, they would then have to decide as to the amount of damages which the defendant company should pay to the plaintiff. He thought there was very little dispute as to the real nature of the contract. It had been stated that time was to be of the essence of the contract, but to his mind the dispute about the time seemed somewhat irrelevant and somewhat inconsistent with the rest of the plaintiff's case, because plaintiff's claim for damages rested upon this: that at the time when these books ought to have been delivered, and were delivered, they could have been sold. In point of fact, he (the Chief Justice) thought that any objection on the point of time was waived on the part of the plaintiff, who said subsequently to the time when delivery should have been made, that he was quite prepared to take the number if the work were properly executed. The real question, therefore, was: What was the nature of the contract with regard to quality? Now upon this point it was clear that the work had to be first class, but there was no doubt it had to be first class, having due regard to the nature of the photographs delivered by plaintiff to the defendant company. It could not be expected that defendant could make such artistic improvement upon the photographs supplied by plaintiff as to make this book a real work of art. As to the second question, whether there had been a breach of contract, the jury must not look at one particular feature, but must take the work as a whole; and as ordinary men of the world, as men accustomed to look at these matters, they had to decide whether the books supplied were of such a nature that the plaintiff could reasonably be expected to receive them as an execution of the work entrusted by him to the defendant company. If they decided that the book was not one which satisfied the contract, they would find for the plaintiff on the question of a breach of contract; but if, notwithstanding blemishes here and there, they considered that the book answered the requirements of the contract, then, of course, they would find for the defendant company. As regarded the photographs supplied to the defendant company, there was one important fact that the jury could not disregard, and that was that another firm—Richards and Sone—from two photographs which seemed to be fair representations of the photographs supplied to the defendant company, formed reproductions which certainly were infinitely superior to the reproductions in the book. But it was said that the copies given to Richards differed somewhat from the photographs given to the defendant company. He (the Chief Justice) had compared the two, and he could find no substantial difference. A letter was written on behalf of the plaintiff to the attorneys of the defendant company, requesting permission to take copies from the blocks or a loan of the photographs, in order to get reproductions from Richards, but they refused permission. This was to be regretted, for if permission had been given, there would have been no difficulty in deciding as to whether the work could be done better from the same photographs. The defendant company's reason for the work not being done better was that they were pressed for time, but they should have considered this before they entered into the contract. The jury would look at the pictures, and consider whether the defects in the pictures were such as to render the books unsaleable. If they found they were, they would come to the question of the amount of damages, which seemed to him to be really the most difficult part of the case, because the evidence did not strike him as proving that there would be a very large sale of the work. A great deal of excitement over the Royal visit had passed away, and much of the interest had passed away. The photographs themselves did not seem to him exceedingly interesting. There seemed to be nothing in them to greatly interest the public. No doubt, while the excitement lasted, there was a great desire to purchase works of this kind, but the jury had evidence that during the visit another work, sold at sixpence, which had been put in, and which, to his mind, was an infinitely superior work, only had a sale of 5,000. Even supposing that the pictures were works of art, it appeared to him that 2s. was a very excessive price, and he was exceedingly doubtful whether plaintiff could have sold such a large number as 5,000 if the work had been properly executed. The other work put in was sold at 6d. a copy, and notwithstanding its cheapness, and the fact that it was on sale at a time of excitement, only 5,000 copies were sold. Was it, therefore, reasonable to suppose that plaintiff would have sold 10,000 copies of this work—an uninteresting work—at a price of 2s. two months afterwards? It was exceedingly difficult now to arrive at any estimate of the number of copies which would have been sold if the work had been properly executed. If the jury found that there was a breach of contract plaintiff would at all events be entitled to recover the £50 paid by him to the defendant company. As to the £140 for advertisements, it was a question for the jury to consider whether there would be any loss to the plaintiff on this transaction. Plaintiff might have failed to sell a sufficient number to have made a profit, and the jury would consider whether the possible loss ought not to be set off against the £140. If the jury considered there would be no such loss they would be justified in adding the £140 to the £50. If they came to the conclusion that the full 10,000 copies would have been sold the amount at which plaintiff stated his damages would be perfectly fair. As to the claim in reconviction, that would only arise in case the jury came to the conclusion that there had been no breach of contract.

The jury retired, and after an absence of 45 minutes the foreman announced that they found for the plaintiff for £50 and costs.

De Villiers, C.J.: The costs you must leave to the Court.

Judgment was entered for £50, with costs, including £3 12s. for expenses of Messrs. Richards and Sons in preparing the blocks.

As his lordship was about to dismiss the jury.

The Foreman mentioned the claim in reconvention and said the jury found for defendants—plaintiffs in reconvention—for £100.

De Villiers, C.J.: If you find for plaintiff for £50, then it means there has been a breach of contract, and if there has been a breach of contract on the part of the defendants, they cannot claim anything. If, his lordship said, the jury found there was a breach of contract, they would award the £50 which, apparently, they had agreed upon, but if they found there had been no breach they must assess the damages to be paid to defendants.

After a brief deliberation, the foreman said the jury found for plaintiff for £50.

De Villiers, C.J.: Then you find there has been a breach of contract?

The Foreman: Yes.

His Lordship said the judgment would accordingly stand.

The Chief Justice said he thought the Court had previously intimated that it would refuse to make property executable immediately on giving judgment for interest.

Mr. Sheil said that in that case he would ask for provisional sentence only.

The Court then gave provisional sentence for the amount claimed, the Chief Justice pointing out that if that judgment was not satisfied, then the property could be made executable in the ordinary course.

Security—Guarantee.

R. had given to one W. a guarantee that he (R.) would be responsible for any claims one S. might have against him (W.) in respect of the production of a certain play. R., being now about to quit this Colony, was called upon by W. to give security to meet any such claims, and to pay costs of any action in respect of the above matter should judgment be given against W.

Held, that the application must be refused, but that applicant be authorized to pay into Court some £250, moneys due by him to respondent as security for costs in any such action as the above which might be brought against him, costs of the present application to stand over.

Mr. Scarle, K.C., appeared for the applicants, and said this was a matter of some urgency, as the respondent was about to leave the country to-morrow. Notice of the motion had been given to the respondent. The application arose out of proceedings which were taken before that Court a few months by Messrs. Sass, who were theatrical managers here, against Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler. The position was, that Sass moved the Court for an interdict restraining Wheeler from producing the play called "Magda." Wheeler had brought out here a theatrical company, of which McKee Rankin was the manager, and they were to begin their tour with this play "Magda," but before they did so, Sass claimed the sole right to produce the play here. Wheeler knew nothing about this matter personally, but McKee Rankin filed an affidavit and practically defended the action, saying that he had a right to produce the play, as he had got his right in America, while Sass had his from England, and that the American and the English version were really different plays, and so on. The Court then ordered the respondent Wheeler to keep an account of the receipts in connection with the play, and Sass to go to action to establish his claim. There had been negotiations between Sass and Rankin to settle the matter, but no arrangement had been come to. Continuing, counsel said that when the proceedings by Sass were threatened, McKee Rankin gave Wheeler, who really knew nothing about the merits of the dispute, a guarantee that he would be responsible for any claim Sass might have, but now he was going away, and refused to give Wheeler any security at all in the matter.

In his affidavit in support of the application, Mr. Wheeler detailed the circumstances, and said that when the action was threatened Mr. Rankin assured him he had authority to produce the play, and gave him an assurance that he would be responsible for any loss or damage he might be put to. Then, on the following day, September 25, 1901, he sent applicant the following letter: "Adverting to the proceedings instituted, or still to be instituted, by Mr. Sass, or any other person, against you for having produced 'Magda,' I hereby confirm the verbal assurance given to you, viz., that I hold myself personally responsible for whatever loss, cost, or damage you may suffer or be put to by reason of playing 'Magda.' Acting on behalf of myself and Miss O'Neil, I give an undertaking we each hold ourselves responsible to you." The negotiations for a settlement with Sass having failed, an action was about to be instituted, and as Rankin refused to give the security, the application now made to the Court was to compel him to give security for £1,000, to cover any possible claim and costs of the action. Counsel, however, pointed out that it had now been ascertained that Sass's claim would be for £500, and not for £750, as at first supposed, but the costs of the action, seeing that there would most likely have to be evidence taken on commission in America, Germany, and England, would probably be about £250. The accounts between Messrs. Wheeler and Rankin were now being made up, and it was probable that these would show a balance of £250 in favour of Mr. Rankin. That money Messrs. Wheeler were prepared to pay into court as part of the security in the action. Proceeding, counsel said that if Rankin went away, as intended, to-morrow, Messrs. Wheeler would have no security whatever that he would meet any costs or judgment against him, as he would then be beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, although Rankin was the real defendant, and it was for his benefit that Messrs. Wheeler would have to defend the action.

Mr. McKee Rankin appeared in person to oppose the application, and said that he arrived here on 16th September last with Miss Nance O'Neil and a company to support her. Miss O'Neil had a right to play a version of "Magda," but on arrival here they found that Sass claimed that he had the sole right to produce "Magda" in this country. Sass instituted proceedings against Messrs. Wheeler to interdict the production of the play, and he (Rankin) then gave Wheeler the document produced. The company had played under Messrs. Wheeler's directions for about 21 or 22 weeks, and all the time they had known just what they knew now. Even if the case went against them, he did not see why he should have to tie up a thousand pounds or a thousand pennies beyond the document he had given them.

De Villiers C.J.: But you are about to leave the country?

Mr. E. Rankin: Wheeler knows I am going to London, and will be there until September.

The Chief Justice: But this Court will not have jurisdiction over you then. Can you not give some security?

Mr. Rankin: What security can I give?

The Chief Justice: Do you object to this £250 in the hands of Messrs. Wheeler being paid into court?

Mr. Rankin: I do, seeing I am not a party to the suit at all, and that I have given them this document as security in case they lose. Continuing, he said he did not know why they had left this matter until the last moment. He was to sail by the boat to-morrow for Egypt, as they intended to give performances in Alexandria and Cairo, and if he lost that boat he would have to wait until next month. He had already arranged all his financial matters, and had sent his money on, and could not now lodge the security asked, but even if he could, he did not see that it would be just that he should do so. After they left Egypt the company was to open in the Lyceum Theatre, London, and even if Wheeler did lose they had an agent there, who could recover from him the amount due on the claim and costs. It was not as if he was an obscure individual; on the contrary he was easy to find.

De Villiers, C.J.: Mr. Searle, when this document was taken Mr. Wheeler must have known that it was possible, in fact probable, that Mr. Rankin would be leaving the country soon, and therefore ought he not to be satisfied with the document now? Can you quote any case where an attachment has been granted upon a contingent case of this kind?

Mr. Searle said it was hardly a contingent claim, because Rankin was standing between Sass and Wheeler. Rankin was really the person for whose benefit the action would be defended. The action had not been brought because there were negotiations proceeding between Rankin and Sass. He did not think Mr. Rankin would deny that.

Mr. Rankin: I do deny that.

The Chief Justice again asked if Mr. Searle had any precedent for such an application as that now made.

Mr. Searle said he could not remember one, and he had not had time to look into the authorities, as the papers had only been put in his hands that morning, but he submitted that it was a similar case to an endorsement on a promissory note.

The Chief Justice: But can you make an application like this upon an endorsement on a promissory note?

Mr. Searle submitted that there were certain circumstances the Court would look at, especially if it appeared that the matter originated entirely for the benefit of the respondent.

The Chief Justice: There is no application for his attachment or for any restraint upon his leaving.

Mr. Searle said the application was for an order compelling him to pay into the Court forthwith the sum of £1,000. If he was going away without complying with such an order they could attach him for contempt of Court. His clients did not desire to proceed to extremes, and the order they would ask for would be that he must give some security before to-morrow morning, failing that, that he should be attached. Messrs. Wheeler said that they had no knowledge whatever as to his financial position.

De Villiers, C.J.: The document relied upon in support of this application is as follows: "Adverting to the proceedings instituted, or still to be instituted, by Mr. Suss, or any other person, against you for having produced 'Magda,' I hereby confirm the verbal assurance given to you, viz., that I hold myself personally responsible to you for whatever loss, cost, or damage you may suffer or be put to." This personal assurance was accepted by the applicants at a time when they knew that the respondent might leave the country, and it is not an assurance given in regard to the past only, but an assurance in regard to the future; and further, the applicants continued to share with the respondent the responsibility for having the play produced. Some precedent ought now to be produced to justify the Court in practically preventing the respondent from leaving the country, and I don't think the Court should now call upon him to give any security as proposed, but I think it is only fair that any amount due to the respondent which the applicants may now have in their hands should be retained by them, and paid into the Court. That, at all events, would be security for the costs in an action, and if any damages should be given, I think there is no reason to suppose that the respondent will not pay them, or even if he did refuse to pay, there is no reason to suppose that he would not be amenable to the courts in England. The Court will therefore grant the order, so far as concerns the money in the applicants' hands. They will be allowed to retain that money, and pay it into the hands of the Registrar, as security in the action which is to be instituted, but the Court is not prepared to go beyond this. The question of costs had better stand over.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

GROBBELAAR V. GROBBE- { 1902.
LAAR. { Feb. 2th.

This was an action brought by Mrs. Grobbelaar against her husband, formerly a doctor practising at Cradock, for divorce on the ground of his adultery.

The declaration set forth that the parties were married at Carlisle, England, in January, 1884, the defendant being at that time a medical student at Edinburgh, but his domicile was in Cape Colony. They afterwards came to the Colony together, and lived at Cradock until they separated by mutual agreement. It was alleged that between the 7th and 10th February of this year the defendant, who was passing under the name of Van der Byl, and living at the Royal Hotel, Cape Town, had committed adultery with a person unknown to the plaintiff. She therefore claimed a decree of divorce, and half of the joint estate.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for plaintiff. Defendant in default.

Mr. Searle called

Elizabeth Grobbelaar, the plaintiff, who deposed as to her marriage to defendant at Carlisle in 1884. She had resided in Edinburgh, but for three weeks previous to the marriage had lived at Carlisle. Defendant was at that time a medical student, and in 1888, immediately he had completed his course and taken his degree, they came out together to Cradock. It was their intention to do so when they married. At that time neither of them had property, and defendant was dependent upon his father, who resided at Cradock. She lived with defendant at Cradock until 1897, when she became aware of certain conduct on his part which led to a separation being arranged, he agreeing to pay her £20 a month, which payments had been made regularly. At that time she taxed him with misconduct, and he admitted several of the charges. Afterwards she went to England, intending to take proceedings against him there, but she was informed by a solicitor in London that she would have to take proceedings in this country, as he was domiciled here. Continuing, witness gave evidence as to defendant, in answer to a letter from her, coming to see her at the International Hotel, Cape Town, where she was staying. He then sent in his name as Mr. Van der Byl, and she met him in the garden of the hotel. He told her he was going to Johannesburg. He was then staying at the Royal Hotel. He did not seem to want her to walk as far as the gate with him. The following day she engaged Mr. Peek to take her to the Royal Hotel, where she waited in the hall for her husband. He came in about 6.30 p.m. He recognised her, and came up and spoke to her. She told him she had come to make sure that he was staying at the Royal, and asked him if he was the Mr. Van der Byl staying there. He replied "Yes." She asked him "Who is the Mrs. Van der Byl staying here?" He replied that there was no such person. She said "That is a lie." He then said she had found him out. The gentleman she spoke to was her husband, Mr. Grobbelaar. She did not see him again. She subsequently received the letter handed in from her husband. He had certain property in Cradock, and she claimed a share of the estate, and applied that a receiver be appointed by the Court.

By the Court: In the letter handed in her husband wrote saying he would call and see her. She refused to see him again.

Mark G. Cameron, bedroom steward at the Royal Hotel, deposed that he remembered a Mr. and Mrs. Van der Byl staying in room 91 a few days in February, arriving on the 10th. He had not seen them since they left the hotel. They were the only Mr. and Mrs. Van der Byl staying at the hotel at that time.

Arthur Walter Peek, a detective, deposed that he took a letter from Mrs.

Grobbelaar to a Mr. Van der Byl at the Royal Hotel on February 11. Mr. Van der Byl was staying in room 91, a lady being with him. He subsequently arrested the same man at St. James's as Dr. Grobbelaar.

A decree of divorce was granted, the Court ordering the plaintiff to receive one-half of the joint estate, and appointing Mr Alfred Metcalf, Cradock, as receiver. Defendant was ordered to pay the costs.

ADRIAANSE V. ADRIAANSE.

This was an undefended action for divorce. Mr. Upington appeared for the plaintiff, and applied for a postponement.

The Court fixed the hearing for Tuesday next.

MESSINA BRON AND MASTER OF THE "POLITICIAN" } 1902.
V. MASTER OF THE } Feb. 27th.
"CROMARTYSHIRE." } Mar. 5th.

Salvage—Award.

The C., a vessel worth about £5,500, laden with a cargo of coal, had been abandoned about 100 miles from Algoa Bay in consequence of her cargo having caught fire. She was found in a burning state by the S.S. Politician, a vessel worth (with her cargo of horses) about £146,000. Some of the Politician's crew were, at great risk, placed on board the derelict, and she was towed into Algoa Bay. Two tugs, the property of the first plaintiffs, and worth £9,000 and £6,000 respectively, rendered assistance in extinguishing the fire, and were so engaged during in all 14 days, their owners meanwhile incurring out of pocket expenses to the extent of £627.

Held, that each of the salvors must be awarded $\frac{1}{3}$ of the value of the ship salvaged.

Semble: It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the awards in salvage cases, but the peril of the property saved and the value of the ship rendering the salvage services must always be among the elements to be considered by the Court.

These were consolidated actions in respect of salvage services performed by the plaintiffs.

The facts as disclosed by the pleadings were as follows: The Cromartyshire, a sailing ship of 1,401 tons, and classed A1 at Lloyd's, was on a voyage from Leith to Algoa Bay with a cargo of coal. On August 31, about 100 miles from Algoa Bay, fire broke out amongst the coal, and in consequence the vessel was abandoned by the master and crew. On September 1 the S.S. Politician, 7,228 tons, with a cargo of horses for the Imperial Government, and valued at £146,000, sighted the vessel, which was still on fire and a derelict, and deviated from her course in order to render assistance. The master, at great labour and peril, boarded the ship, and left an officer and nine men on board. He put a hawser on board, and towed the vessel into Algoa Bay, where she arrived about noon on September 2. The plaintiffs claimed £7,500 for the salvage services rendered, which they said were of an exceptional nature and of great value, and they said that by these means the ship and cargo were saved from total loss. The defendants, in their plea, admitted that the Politician rendered salvage services, but said that the cargo was still on fire when the vessel was brought into port, and the fire was extinguished by the aid of two tugs, the Talana and the Ulundi, belonging to Messina Brothers. The defendants tendered to the owners of the Politician £1,000 for their services. This tender was refused as insufficient. On behalf of Messina Brothers, a declaration was filed to the effect that when the Cromartyshire was towed into Algoa Bay, the fire was so great that the men of the Politician who were on board were about to abandon her. They said that at great labour and peril they succeeded in extinguishing the fire, and for these services they claimed £3,000. In reply to this the defendants tendered £1,000, and this was refused by Messina Brothers as insufficient.

Mr. Upington (with him Mr. C. W. de Villiers) for the "Politician"; Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Buchanan) for Messina Bros.; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for defendant.

Mr. Benjamin said it was admitted that the value of the Cromartyshire on the 2nd September in Algoa Bay was £3,000; the balance of the freight when the vessel was abandoned, £1,750; and the cargo damaged realised £3,697 gross subject to deduction of expenses. The parties now joined issue on that valuation.

Evidence was then called by Mr. Benjamin.

William Messina deposed that he was one of the plaintiffs in this action. His firm owned the tugs Talana and Ulundi. Before he saw the Cromartyshire coming into Port Elizabeth he received certain information, and prepared two tugs to go and render assistance, if required. The Talana was the first sent out on September 2. He was on board. The Cromartyshire was ablaze, the flames springing as high as the lower yards. The sails were not seriously in danger at that time. He went to the Politician first, and asked the captain of that vessel if any assistance was required. The captain of the Politician replied: "Yes, what will you do the job for?" He (witness) said he could not answer at once, but said no time must be lost, or they would lose the vessel. The captain of the Politician invited him on board, and he went on board and joined the captain on the bridge, saying, "If you do not hurry up, you will lose the ship." The captain of the Politician again said: "What will you do the job for?" He (witness) said he could not make an arrangement then, and then the captain of the Politician said, "For God's sake, then, go ahead!" The Talana then went to the assistance of the Cromartyshire. There were no other tugs at Port Elizabeth which could have rendered assistance. The tugs Ulundi and Talana were fitted with special pumps for extinguishing fire at sea, which cost £600 each vessel. The annual upkeep was about £150 a year each tug. The deck of the Cromartyshire was in a bad condition when they went on board, a lot of it being already burnt away. The crew of the Politician did nothing to assist while he was there to extinguish the fire. The captain of the Politician handed the vessel entirely over to him, and rendered no assistance. There was great danger in getting on board the Cromartyshire, owing to flames of 15 to 20 feet high. All the braces were adrift and the yards swinging aft. The ship rolled, and the braces might have caught the Talana's funnel or mast as she came alongside. The state of the weather was moderate, with a westerly wind. He subsequently assisted the Politician to take the Cromartyshire in. They towed the Cromartyshire to the northward, and anchored in five fathoms of water. They took her to the northward in case it should have been found necessary to beach her. The mate of the Politician, with whom he was in conversation, told him he could not think what the old man (that was the captain of the Cromartyshire) was about in leaving the Cromartyshire. As the Talana arrived the captain of the Politician was about to abandon the Cromartyshire. He rendered services from the 2nd September to the 9th September in extinguishing the flames, and then again from the 23rd September to 1st October in extinguishing the flames, which again broke out. In connection with those services he hired a pump from the Harbour Board, which he took out to the Cromartyshire. Witness had framed an account (put in) of his actual expenses in connection with the services rendered. This showed a total out-of-pocket expenditure of £627 5s. This did not include the appliances. It was for labour, hire of harbour pump, and shipping and landing thereof, coal consumed by the two launches, wages of special engineer, special fenders, and up-keep of them, and three coils of rope. The gross earnings of the Talana would be from £200 to £300 a week. The net earnings would be about £200. The earnings of the Ulundi would be about the same. They paid £9,230 for the Talana in April last; £6,000 for the Ulundi. Witness estimated the value of the Cromartyshire in her damaged condition at from £4,500 to £5,000. The sails were in good condition; one sail only was slightly burned. This estimate included the stores and everything. The stores, which were worth about £300, were all intact. When witness left Port Elizabeth the Cromartyshire was partly repaired. He would value her then at about £9,000. For 30 years witness had been in frequent contact with ships' captains, and he derived his knowledge of the value of vessels from information he had received from them. There was danger from the fire. Witness himself lay on deck partly suffocated from the fumes. Several times the natives refused to work on account of the fumes. Witness could see the whole extent of the damage except that to the skin of the lower hold, which he saw subsequently, and which, he would say, was damaged to the amount of about £50.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness would not pit his opinion as to the value of the ship against Mr. Gowan. Messrs. Gowan, Palmer and Beck had surveyed the ship, and valued it at £3,000 in its damaged condition. At first Captain Palmer valued it at £5,000. When he came up witness would not call the weather rough. The ship was never beached. In a short time the flames were under control, but they were not wholly extinguished, as the fire kept breaking out from time to time. The sails were in danger until witness got there. There was no risk to the men of the Politician while they were on board the Cromartyshire. If witness had been 10 or 15 minutes later there would have been no chance of saving the Cromartyshire.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: All the towage was done by the Politician. If the Politician had not towed the Cromartyshire the ship would have gone. The Politician could not have saved the ship.

Re-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Captain Palmer first valued the damage at £5,000. Since then he had estimated the damage at £3,000. When he first valued the damage, Captain Palmer could see the whole extent of the damage, with the exception of that to the stem of the lower hold.

John McRae, second hand on board the Talana, said there was a slight breeze and a swell when the Talana went out. The weather was moderate. The making fast to the Cromartyshire was a difficult operation. The crew of the Politician would not help. Witness had to jump on board. It was difficult to clear the place for working the pumps. At first they could not stand on the deck. Witness twice went through. Two Europeans belonging to the Politician told witness they were on the point of leaving the ship on account of an explosion in the main hatch. There were about six Lascars on board with the two Europeans. The flames from the main hatch were about 15 feet above the hatch. There was danger from smoke and fire. Witness saw Mr. Messina carried up and witness was himself carried up. Several of the men had to come up, and the Kafirs refused to go down. There was danger to the tug while alongside the vessel. They had no assistance from the men of the Politician. In fact on the Tuesday night they were an hindrance, because they were partly intoxicated, and were interfering with the work.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The ordinary thing when pumping a burning vessel was that the men could not remain down long, but were coming up and down frequently.

Olaus Skaugen, partner in the firm of Mercer and Skaugen, sailmakers and shipchandlers, said that two sets of sails would cost about £1,800 new. Witness was told that the Cromartyshire was a full-rigged ship. He did not know anything about this particular vessel.

Edward Dowds, engineer in Messina Brothers' employ, said he was on board the Ulundi when the salvage services were rendered. He made a scrap-log at the time, and afterwards wrote the usual log (produced) up from this. When witness went on board there was considerable danger from fumes and smoke. It was impossible to pass from one end of the ship to the other. The deck was very thin in parts, and there was danger of falling through. There was very considerable danger to the tugs lying alongside. They made a temporary deck and hatches to prevent the sea washing over in the event of there being rough weather. They once had to leave on account of rough weather. When the surveyors came on board they could see all the damage except that to the floor of the vessel, to which, witness estimated, damage was done to the amount of £40 or £50. The stores were not damaged. There was a spare set of sails in good condition.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: There would have been danger to the tugs if rough weather cropped up. Only on one occasion was there rough weather.

Mr. Benjamin said that this was all the evidence, excepting certain evidence taken on commission.

The Chief Justice said this could be read later.

Mr. Searle called

Wm. Govan, Lloyds' surveyor at Port Elizabeth, who said that at the request of the ship's agents he made several surveys. Witness made the first survey on the 16th September. It was not then possible to see the full amount of the damage. On the 19th October he made another survey, and estimated the value at £3,000. He made a full report (produced). The repairs witness estimated at £4,000. These were being executed.

[By the Court: Witness estimated the value of the vessel, repaired, at £9,000. She could only be permanently repaired in England. The temporary repairs here would cost about £5,000, and the value of the ship after these had been completed would be about £8,000.]

By Mr. Searle: There was no great risk in the towage of the vessel by the Politician. There would be danger to the men of the Politician on board the Cromartyshire. There was a certain amount of risk in connecting the Politician with the Cromartyshire.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: There would be risk—the ordinary risk in salvage—in the Talana running alongside the Cromartyshire. To go to England direct, repairs would be necessary here to the amount of £2,500, and in England it would cost about half as much to complete the repairs.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: There was no exceptional risk; the weather was fine.

August Reiners, merchant, Port Elizabeth, said his firm were the consignees of this cargo of coal. Witness's firm gave notice of abandonment of the cargo immediately they heard of what had happened. Part of the freight was paid at Home; the balance (£1,750) had not been paid. Two thousand two hundred and one English tons of the coal had been sold. After deducting charges, the balance would be £829 18s. 2d. The freight per English ton was 23s. The invoices showed that the part of the freight payable here was two-thirds—£1,750. The rest was paid in advance.

Charges to the amount of £2,867 were incurred. Witness had prepared a list showing these charges. Witness's firm were acting as agents for the ship. About £4,200 had already been spent in repairs, which were not wholly permanent. Most likely there would be further repairs while the vessel was in Algoa Bay.

John A. Chabaud, attorney for the ship's agents, deposed as to correspondence and documents put in.

Mr. Upington put in certain affidavits, reports of the Court of Inquiry from the "Eastern Province Herald," and other documents.

The affidavits of Captain Chandler and Mr. Naude, chief officer of the Politician, were read. Deponents said that the Politician towed the Cromartyshire for a distance of about 120 miles. On several occasions the ropes broke, and there was difficulty in making connection.

The newspaper report of the proceedings at the Court of Inquiry was also read. The Court held that the abandonment of the ship was justified, as the ship was in a very dangerous condition.

Evidence taken on commission for Messrs. Messina Brothers was then read. The captain of the Talana considered that that tug saved the Cromartyshire, to which vessel the danger was great. The Talana's mate gave similar evidence. They had to stand on the rail as the deck was too hot to stand upon. There was great danger and difficulty. One of the Politician's men on the Cromartyshire said they were about to abandon the vessel. The work of extinguishing was dangerous. There were explosions of gas. There were two rough days during the Talana's operations. The log was put in at the commission.

De Villiers, C.J., said that as the matter struck the Court at present, £6,000 might be taken as a fair valuation. There was an abandonment of the ship, and on the evidence, the Court thought, subject, of course, to what counsel would say, that one-half of the £6,000 would be a fair amount to divide between the two salvors, and that this amount should be equally divided between them.

Mr. Upington intimated that he was prepared to accept judgment for £1,500, with costs.

Mr. Benjamin said he was willing to take judgment for the amount mentioned.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardner), for the Cromartyshire. The Court never awards half of the value of the ship, freight, and cargo in cases of salvage. Leake on Contracts (p. 42). The high water mark in salvage cases was reached in the case of the Andes (Sheil). Her value was £6,200. She was derelict, and it was rough weather. The Midge towed her some distance, and then a large tug came up and towed her into East London. £1,250 was awarded to the Midge and £1,000 to the large tug. That is something over 1-3 was awarded as salvage, and yet the vessel was derelict.

De Villiers, C.J. In the present case there was great danger to the crew.

Counsel read the judgment of Buchanan, A.C.J., in the Andes case, and continued:

This judgment gave 1-3 of the full value of the ship saved to the salvors, and this, I believe, was the largest proportion ever awarded by any of our Courts. There is also the case of The Associated Boating Companies v. Baardsen (12 S.C.R., 330), in which 1-6 was awarded. The value of ship, freight, and cargo was a little over £6,000. The English case of the "Fortuna" was quoted in this case. We made a larger tender in this case than has ever been made in any previous case. Then, as to the two claims against us, the Politician found us about 200 miles from Port Elizabeth; the weather was not very rough. Very few similar cases of salvage ever come into Court but see the Jason. Pritchard Adm. Digest. (V. 2, p. 1,963, case 244.) It is true that in the present case the vessel was abandoned, but the mere fact of abandonment ought not to weigh so much as the services rendered.

Maasdorp, J.: What have you to say about the case of the Glengyle. (Prob. D. 1898, p. 97.)

In that case there was no special risk to the salvors, and only about one-quarter of the value of the ship, etc., was saved. Then, again, the Politician was not specially maintained for salvage. She incurred no special risk; the fire was only burning at the main hatch, and Messina said there was no risk. The case could not have been so very bad when only 146 tons of coal out of 2,300 tons were missing. The services of the Politician would be amply compensated by our tender of £1,000. The weather was not bad, and no trouble was experienced in towing. She towed only from 3 p.m. to 11 a.m.

ing the deck he was insensible owing to the gases. "We kept signals of distress flying all the day previous to leaving the ship; we were unanimous, officers and crew, in deciding to leave the ship." Then the Court of Inquiry, in giving its judgment, after going into the facts of the case, came to this decision: it appeared that the Politician, seeing the derelict, took her in tow, and she was anchored in Algoa Bay with her cargo still burning, and an explosion had actually taken place in the hold, as is instanced by the displacement of the hatches. The Court found that the captain was justified in abandoning the vessel, that she was in a very dangerous condition, so that in all probability, if the maste and crew of the Politician had not come to her aid, she would have been totally destroyed, and the owners would have saved nothing. Then the Politician, at considerable risk, went out of the way to rescue her. There was a considerable risk at all events to the crew, especially to those of the crew who were put on board the Cromartyshire, and even to the Politician herself there was some risk, although not so great a risk as that of the crew which were left on board the Cromartyshire. Anyhow it is admitted that it was a valuable service, and, in my opinion, it was a very meritorious service, and a service of this kind should always be liberally remunerated as an encouragement to others when they see vessels in this condition to come to their assistance. Certain cases have been quoted as showing the principle of rewarding salvage services, but it is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule. After all, the circumstances in each case must be carefully considered before the Court can fix the proportion of the reward to the value of the property saved. In the present case we are of opinion that if we take the valuation at a low one, the Politician should have one-quarter of the value of the ship. As I said just now, the services rendered were very meritorious, and a quarter share of the value of the ship would be a fair remuneration to the owners of the Politician. Coming now to the other party, Messina Bros., we think they were not meritorious in first rescuing the ship. Counsel for Messina Bros. goes so far as to urge that they ought to receive more than the Politician. I confess, if I had any doubt on the matter, the doubt is whether they should not receive somewhat less, because after all the Court cannot lose sight of the great value of the Politician herself, which was £146,000 with her cargo, and she went out of her way, and then, further, the nature of the cargo should be considered. There were horses on board which would require to be brought to Algoa Bay at the greatest speed possible, and there was considerable risk in any way deviating from her course, and therefore this ingredient of the value of the salving ship is very much in favour of the Politician. Of course it must be, on the other hand, borne in mind that the services of the plaintiffs, Messina Bros., were much longer continued, and that the expense to which they were put was very much greater, and, taking all these circumstances into consideration, I think that Messina Bros. should receive also one-quarter of the value of the ship. The only other question is what may be considered the value of the ship. This proportion of one-half is, we are aware, a very large proportion. In recent times it has been seldom awarded, and as a general rule one-half is regarded as a very large proportion, and no doubt it is a very high proportion, and, having awarded a very high proportion to both the plaintiffs, the Court would not be inclined to increase the valuation of the ship in any way. The Court is inclined to consider that the admission made by counsel that the property is worth £5,500 may be taken as a fair one. There is considerable discrepancy in the evidence as to the value, and possibly, if we went minutely into it, we might find that the value was nearer £20,000. The Court, however, will take the value of £5,500, and one-quarter is awarded to each of the plaintiffs. Judgment will be in each case for the plaintiffs for £1,375, with costs. I think the plaintiff, Messina, would be entitled to his witnesses' expenses.

MASSIMA J. concurred. He remarked that the case was a very unusual one in all its circumstances, and that the salvage services should be liberally rewarded. The two great features of the case were the great peril to which the vessel was exposed and the all, and these services scarcely fall under those set forth in the declaration. As to the danger incurred by them, it could not have been very great. All their men, save three natives, were willing to go on board and to work on the ship, and nobody was injured.

Mr. B. Uppington (with him Mr. C. W. de Villiers) for the Politician: There is no reason why the basis on which salvage is computed should be only half of the value of the ship, cargo, and freight. In the case of the Errato (13 Prob. D. 163) the ship and cargo were worth £3,750, a tender of £1,500 was made, and £2,000 was awarded. See also the Rash (Mew's Dig. Art. "Shipping," p. 642). In case No. 69 in Pritchard (p. 1,935) the value of the ship salvaged was £4,000, and £3,500 were awarded. Also No. 5 in Pritchard (p. 1,924) on a ship worth £14,000, £11,300 were awarded. There are many other cases in which the Court has gone beyond half the value of the ship. Now in this case the circumstances were very extraordinary. The ship was a derelict, and was on fire. I have only been able to find one case at all similar to the present. There a ship was on fire in a river. She had not been finally abandoned, for her master and her crew were still looking after her. In the present case, a Court of Inquiry found that the master was fully justified in abandoning his ship. A very dangerous cargo (coal) was on fire; the hold was full of gas, and one of the hatches had been blown off. Then, too, a heavy cross sea was running. The hawser broke and then the "bits" gave way. The master, mates, and crew of the Crormartyshire all speak of the great danger to the salvors. The barometer was falling at the time, and there was every prospect of bad weather. Then, again, the Politician was a large vessel, with a valuable cargo, and worth in all about £146,000. See City of Chester. (9 Prob. D. 202), judgment of Lindley, L.J. In public interest salvors ought to be encouraged. I would refer also to the Janet Court (Prob. D. 1897, p. 59). There the value of the ship was £7,050, and £3,000 were awarded. In the case of the Andes, the services rendered will not bear comparison with those rendered in this case. I submit that considering the risk run by the Politician, and by her crew, the value of her cargo and the imminent risk of the ship saved, the Court should not be bound by any hard and fast rule as to never allowing their award to exceed a bare moiety.

Mr. Benjamin (for Messina Brothers): Messina Brothers are not bound by admissions made by the Politician. The vessel was worth between £4,000 and £5,000. The valuations of Beck and of Palmer are not binding on us, but it must be remembered that on October 10, 1901, they valued the ship at between £4,000 and £5,000. The lower estimate was made after the vessel had been repaired. It was then difficult to judge of the value of the damages to the vessel prior to such repairs being executed. Probably in this latter valuation the two sets of sails, worth £1,800, and the stores (£200) were not taken into account. The sails were in good condition. Then again there is the cargo and freight, in all £6,000. I would submit that Messina Bros. are entitled to at least £1,500. The Court often awards more than half the value of the vessel salvaged as salvage, and has a discretion little short of absolute. Abbot on Shipping (p. 725). Again, the enterprise shown by the salvors must be taken into account. Messina Bros. keep vessels specially adapted and equipped to render these services. Again the crew of the salvor incurred great risk, much work has been done, and expenses to the extent of £627 have been incurred in doing this work. The award in the case of Messina Bros. should be higher than in that of the Politician. Kennedy on Civil Salvage (p. 162).

De Villiers, (C.J. : In this case it has been admitted that the services performed by both the plaintiffs were really salvage services, and a tender has been made upon that basis. If the Court could possibly support that tender it would have done so. If the amount awarded had been substantially near the amount tendered the Court would have supported the tender. But, on the whole, looking at all the circumstances of the case, the Court is of opinion that the tender is not sufficient. The chief ingredient in all these cases is the peril of the property salvaged, and upon that point the peril of this ship, the Crormartyshire, was very great indeed. Upon that point we have the evidence of one of the crew of the ship, who says that he went down into the hold of the ship himself before the ship was abandoned, and examined the cargo. Upon reaching the deck he was insensible owing to the gases. "We kept signals of distress flying all the day previous to leaving the ship; we were unanimous, officers and crew, in deciding to leave the ship." Then the Court of Inquiry, in giving its judgment, after going into the facts of the case, came to this decision: it appeared that the Politician, seeing the derelict, took her in tow, and she was anchored in Algoa Bay with her cargo still burning, and an explosion had actually taken place in the hold, as is instanced by the displacement of the hatches. As I said just now, the services rendered were very meritorious, and a quarter share of the value of the ship would be a fair remuneration to the owners of the Politician. Coming now to the other plaintiffs, Messina Bros., no doubt they were not instrumental in first rescuing the ship. Counsel for Messina Bros. go so far as to urge that they ought to receive more than the Politician. I confess, if I had any doubt on the matter, the doubt is whether they should not receive somewhat less, because after all the Court cannot lose sight of the great value of the Politician herself, which was £146,000 with her cargo, and she went out of her way, and then, further, the nature of the cargo should be considered. The Court is inclined to consider that the admission made by counsel that the property is worth £5,500 may be taken as a fair one. There is considerable discrepancy in the evidence as to the value, and possibly, if we went minutely into it, we might find that the value was nearer £6,000. The Court, however, will take the value of £5,500, and one-quarter is awarded to each of the plaintiffs. Judgment will be in each case for the plaintiffs for £1,375, with costs. I think the plaintiff, Messina, would be entitled to his witnesses' expenses.

Maasdorp. J., concurred. He remarked that the case was a very unusual one in all its circumstances, and one in which salvage services should be liberally rewarded. The two great features of the case were the great peril to which the vessel was exposed and the immense services rendered by the master and crew of the Politician. The services rendered were very different from most of the cases which had been cited. It might almost be said that in this case the loss to the owners of the ship was almost certain, taking into consideration that the ship was a derelict, and had actually been abandoned. It seemed to him that the rarity of these cases arose from the fact that when ships were found in that condition those who saw them saw so small a prospect of saving them that they left them. Under the circumstances of this case, he thought the enterprise shown by the master of the Politician was very great indeed. He undertook to save a ship which might have been lost after being taken in tow, and if it had not been for the assistance rendered by the two tugs his labour would have been entirely thrown away. There was a prospect of incurring great danger both to his vessel and to his crew, and also of performing great labour, the value of which might ultimately have been completely lost. Under the circumstances, he thought the services rendered by him should be liberally rewarded, and that his services were more valuable than those rendered by Messina subsequently.

De Villiers, C.J., replying to Mr. Searle, said that the taxing master would have to decide the point of the costs of attaching the ship.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. { 1902.
JOHN FOX SMITH. { Feb. 28th.

This was an action to recover the sum of £1,418 3s. 8d., being the carriage of certain mealie meal from Port Elizabeth to Bulawayo, consigned during August, September, and October, 1898. The meal was declared to be Colonial produce, and was consequently carried by the Railway Department at the lower rate, whereas, as a fact, the meal had been manufactured from imported mealies by Peachey Bros., of Natal, and consigned by that firm to the defendant as Colonial produce, and the action was to recover the difference between the two rates.

Mr. Sheil, K.C., appeared for the Government, and moved for judgment in terms of a consent paper which had been filed for £1,418 3s. 8d., with interest thereon from the 27th July, 1901, and costs.

The Court granted judgment in terms of the consent paper.

PALM V. PALM.

This was an action for divorce, the plaintiff, Mr. John Palm, of Beaconsfield, alleging that the respondent, Cornelia Palm, had committed adultery with one Gabriel Butler, with whom it was stated she was at present living. Plaintiff applied for a decree of divorce, division of the estate, forfeiture of benefits by the respondent, and custody of the two minor children.

Mr. Buchanan appeared for the plaintiff; defendant had been barred.

Francis Henry le Sueur, clerk in charge of the marriage register at the Colonial Office, produced the duplicate register of the marriage.

William John Palm, the plaintiff, said he was married to defendant on the 7th February, 1888, at Beaconsfield. They lived together until November, 1893, when witness gave defendant leave to go to her aunt at Kroonstad. He found she had gone to Johannesburg. Witness had previously prohibited a man named Gabriel Butler from coming to the house. After his wife left, Butler went to Johannesburg. Witness went to Johannesburg, gave his wife money, and made arrangements to go home with her. At dinner one evening, before going, his wife left, and witness did not see her for two years. She sent the children to him. She was now living at Sea Point. Witness wanted the custody of the children.

Daniel Storkey, gardener, Sea Point, deposed that Butler and a woman he called Nellie lived in one room in one of witness's houses.

Mr. Buchanan said that "Nellie" was the defendant's name.

John Edward Palm, plaintiff's son, said that Butler told him he was living with defendant at Sea Point.

Raymond Syter said that from 1893 to 1896 Butler and defendant lived in one house at Johannesburg. They were known as Mr. and Mrs. Butler.

The Chief Justice said it should be easy to identify the woman with whom Butler was living. The case would stand over until Tuesday for proof of adultery.

Postea, March 4.

Daniel Storkey having given evidence of identification, the Court granted a decree, as prayed.

MILLER V. MILLER

This was an action instituted by Frances Laura Miller against her husband, George Frederick Miller, for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for divorce, on the ground of desertion. The parties were married at Birmingham on the 2nd September, 1883. Defendant came out to the Colony in 1892, and plaintiff joined him the following year. In or about the month of November, 1899, he deserted her, having for some months previous to that neglected to support her.

Mr. Buchanan for plaintiff; defendant in default.

Frances Laura Miller gave evidence confirming counsel's statements. Her husband was a compositor. There were no children living; four had died. After coming out defendant worked three or four years at Richards and Sons, and then went to Johannesburg. He returned to Cape Town, where he remained for a time, afterwards going to King William's Town as foreman compositor on the "Watchman." On the 31st May, 1899, he made the last payment towards her support. Defendant had been to England, and witness had also been there, but could find no traces of him. She had received a letter saying that he had returned to South Africa.

A decree of restitution was granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff by the 15th May, failing which an order would be issued calling on him to show cause on the 31st May why a decree of divorce should not be granted, the rule to be served in the same manner as was ordered in regard to the citation.

ANNEAR V. ANNEAR.

This was an application for leave to the wife to sue her husband in forma pauperis for restitution of conjugal rights or divorce on the ground of desertion.

Mr. J. de Villiers appeared for the applicant.

Applicant was called, and said she was a dressmaker at the Paarl. She had three children, and could hardly earn enough to maintain them.

A rule was granted calling on defendant to show cause on the 12th April, the rule to be served personally; if defendant could not be found, further application to be made to the Court for substituted service.

ALIWE V. HADJIE.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with whom was Mr. Benjamin), appeared for defendant, and applied to fix a day for trial by jury.

Mr. J. de Villiers appeared for plaintiff.

The Court fixed Tuesday, the 6th May.

REHABILITATIONS.

Mr. Close appeared for the rehabilitation of Alfred Selby.

Granted.

On the motion of Mr. Buchanan, Harry George Burgess was rehabilitated.

Mr. Gardiner moved for the rehabilitation of Lewis Michael Myers.

Divisional Councils' Act—Voters' Roll—Court for hearing claims and objections—Fraud—Mistake.

In the absence of fraud, a person whose name appeared on the voters' roll, but was struck off by a Court held under the 21st and 22nd sections of Act 40 of 1889, although no objection had been made, held entitled to have his name restored.

This was an application upon notice calling on the Chairman of the Court appointed to revise the Divisional Council voters' list for the district of Bredasdorp, and one Councillor Taljaard, to show cause why the names of the petitioners should not be replaced on the voters' list as occupiers. Petitioners, it was alleged, were all occupiers of farms assessed above the required value, and their names were placed on the voters' list by the secretary of the Divisional Council. On the 30th July last a Court, consisting of the two respondents and Councillor Albertyn, sat to hear objections. No objections were made respecting the petitioners, whose names were, however, removed. Petitioners said they were duly qualified, and contended that under section 22 of Act 40 of 1889, the Court had no power to remove their names in the absence of any objections.

On affidavit it was stated that Councillor Albertyn dissented to the proposal to remove the names. A Mr. Fletcher deposed that some of the petitioners occupied land belonging to him, and had the rights of gardening and of grazing thereon. The value of the properties occupied by the petitioners were stated to be above the necessary value.

For the respondents, Wm. Thomas Clarke, chairman of the Court and Civil Commissioner, deposed that he was guided to a considerable extent by the knowledge of the properties possessed by Councillor J. J. J. Taljaard, and by the provisions of sub-section 6, section 22, of Act 40 of 1889. Councillor Taljaard deposed that to the best of his knowledge the petitioners were not qualified to be put on the roll. Four were servants of Mr. Fletcher, and were paid salaries. One of the rest was a hired servant; another lived with his mother. He denied that Councillor Albertyn dissented.

Mr. Upington for the applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondents.

Mr. Upington, after dealing with the point that the names of the petitioners being upon the list, the Court had no power to strike them off, seeing that no objection had been raised to them, proceeded to argue that the petitioners were entitled to have their names on the list, they being the occupiers of separate farms or dwellings, although they were in Mr. Fletcher's employ. Therefore it was different to the case of O'Brien v. Christian and Others (15 Supreme Court Reports, p. 282), where it was held that the houses in which the applicants resided not being separately valued, according to the assessment roll in force in the division, they were not entitled to be placed on the voters' roll.

Mr. Searle, in argument, said that it was perfectly clear that if these persons had been placed upon the list in the ordinary way under section 19, and the provisions of that section had been properly carried out, then sub-section 6 would not apply, but although the course followed seemed to have been done perfectly bona fide, and in accordance with past practice, the names seemed to have been placed on the list in a somewhat irregular manner. It was unfortunate there was not more evidence to show whether these persons were placed on the list in the proper manner, under section 19, but what was on record showed that these persons were servants in Mr. Fletcher's employ, and that it was Mr. Fletcher who brought in the list of their names.

The Chief Justice pointed out that the names were placed upon the list in perfect bona fides.

Mr. Searle admitted that he could not say there was any mala fides.

The Chief Justice said he did not see how they could get over the second sub-section of section 22.

Mr. Searle said that if the Court held that that preliminary objection was fatal to his case he could not take the matter further. As to costs, however, he submitted that the Court would not give them against the Civil Commissioner, seeing that it was a Court acting bona fide, had decided that the names should be struck off. It was therefore not a case where the Court would give costs at all.

Mr. Upington admitted that in view of the previous decisions of the Court in such matters, he could hardly contend that the respondent should pay costs, but still it seemed hard that in a case of that nature the applicant should have to stand all the expense.

The Chief Justice, in giving judgment said: It is quite clear in the present case that the names of the applicants appeared on the list which had been duly prepared by the secretary of the Council in terms of the 19th section of the Act, and it is clear also that no objection was made at the time the Court sat, but the Court considered that it had the power to correct a mistake under the 6th sub-section, and struck out the names. Now, we are of opinion that the Court acted wholly beyond its powers. I am not prepared to say whether, where there is a clear case of mala fides—where there is a clear case of fraudulent placing of names on the list—the Court would not have had the power to strike off names. It is not suggested that Mr. Fletcher committed any fraud in placing the names of these people upon the list. Their claim seems to be a reasonable one, and I am not prepared to say without further consideration whether or not it is a good one. That question, however, has not to be decided now, and what I will say upon it is only this: that it was a bona fide claim to have the names placed upon the list, and that the placing of the names on the list was not apparently a fraudulent act, such as to justify the Court in striking them off. That being so, the second sub-section of section 22 seems to apply, and this enacts that the chairman and Councillors who are revising the roll shall retain on the list the names of persons to whom no objection has been made. These persons claim to appear upon the list, and no objection has been made, and therefore the duty of the Court was to retain on the list these names. It is true that the sixth sub-section gives the Court power to correct a mistake or an omission, but it is clear that the mistake or omission does not apply to a case coming under the second sub-section, and consequently the mistake or omission which they must correct meant some mistake or some omission not provided for by any other section or sub-section. For instance, a clerical mistake, by which a man's christian name might be wrongly given, or a mistake in the spelling of a man's name, might be a mistake which it was the duty and within the power of the Court to correct, but it had certainly no power to act in opposition to sub-section 2, which directs specially that they shall retain on the list the names of all persons to whom no objection has been made. For this reason I am of opinion that this application should be granted. As to costs, the Magistrate or Civil Commissioner and the Councillors seemed to me to have acted perfectly bona fide. They had an opinion by which they were guided, and which opinion they seem to me to have somewhat misread—but that is a point which need not now be decided—but they acted perfectly bona fide, and therefore the Court will not make them pay costs. The application will therefore be granted, but no order will be made as to costs.

BROPHY V. BROPHY. } 1902.
 } Feb. 28th.
Contempt of Court — Personal Attachment.

This was an application for an order for the attachment of the person of the respondent for contempt of Court, he having failed to comply with the terms of a judgment of the Court. It appeared that in November, 1900, the applicant, Mrs. Brophy, obtained a decree of divorce against her husband, the respondent, and the latter was also ordered to pay to the applicant £1 per month for the maintenance of each of the two minor children of the marriage. The respondent, however, had not paid anything towards the maintenance of such children.

Mr. Benjamin moved.

The defendant appeared in person, and said he was only earning 5s. 8d. a day as a railway labourer. After the judgment of the Court, he arranged with the plaintiff's attorney to pay £2 a month towards the payment off the costs of the action, which amounted to £28 10s. 8d. He had now paid the whole amount of the costs, with the exception of 10s. 8d. His living cost him £1 a week, and owing to having to pay the costs, he had been unable to comply with the judgment of the Court to pay the monthly instalments for the maintenance of the children. He, however, was prepared to pay the instalments as soon as he had finished the costs.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin, respondent said he was living with a woman to whom he was not married, but she was earning her own living.

The Chief Justice said it would just make it worse for the applicant if they committed the defendant to prison, as there would then be no chance of her getting anything, and she would probably have to keep him.

Mr. Benjamin submitted that he ought to be able to pay more than £2 per month.

In reply to the Court, respondent said he would pay off the balance of the costs this week.

The Court decided that no order would be made on this application, but the Chief Justice warned the respondent that if he did not pay to the applicant the £2 a month ordered by the Court after he had paid off the costs, he would be sent to prison.

STANFORD V. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

This was an application by defendants for the postponement of a jury trial, which had been set down for hearing on March 10.

The following affidavit on behalf of the applicants was read:

I, Gideon B. van Zyl, make oath and say:

1. I am a member of the firm of Van Zyl and Buissinne, attorneys for the defendants, and have conducted all this case on their behalf.

2. I attach hereto letters and telegrams from the different defendants, or their commanding officers, all of which show that they cannot obtain leave, and that therefore it is impossible for any of them to attend the trial on March 10, and, further, that it is uncertain when they will be permitted to leave their columns to attend the trial.

3. It is not safe therefore to go to trial without the presence of the defendants, all of whom are required to give evidence for the defence.

In the correspondence referred to, Lieutenant-Colonel Aspinall wrote as follows to defendants' attorneys: "With regard to your letter of the 17th inst., I regret that I am unable to allow Captains Williams and Hayes, of the regiment under my command, away at present; cannot the trial be postponed?" Lieutenant Cecil Fane wrote enclosing a telegram from his column commander, Colonel Capper, in which the latter said he could not possibly spare the writer and Lieutenant Truman (two of the defendants). Colonel Capper also said that it was highly improbable that either of them would get leave from the field for a long time. With regard to another defendant, Hermon Hodge, a telegram from Colonel Crabbe, at Victoria West, stated that he regretted that it would probably be impossible for Lieutenant Hermon Hodges to attend at the trial. Lieutenant Prior, of the 17th Lancers, another defendant, telegraphed from Rhonoster Kop that, owing to his military duties, he could not attend the trial. Lieutenant Judkins, also one of the defendants, telegraphed from Porterville that his column commander could not allow him to come to Cape Town for the 10th March, and he asked that the trial might be put off until May. Captain Hayes wrote from Quaggasfontein that, owing to operations in the Orange River Colony, for the present all leave had been refused, and there was therefore no prospect of his being able to attend and defend the action on March 10.

The answering affidavit of Hardwicke Foster Stanford, the above-named plaintiff, was as follows:

1. That I have read the affidavit of Mr. G. B. van Zyl, together with the annexures thereto.

2. That all the defendants in this case have, to my knowledge, during the past six or nine months been in Cape Town on leave, and for their own pleasure, and only now find it difficult to get leave.

3. That no proper effort has been made by the defendants to come to Cape Town and defend the present action.

4. That there is nothing in the affidavit of the defendants' attorney or on the annexures to show that all the facts of the case have been represented to the Commander-in-Chief, with a request to allow the defendants to come to Cape Town to defend the present action.

5. That the defendant Williams, just after the incident which forms the subject matter of my claim, said: "I will not stop at anything; I have made up my mind to finish you off to-night; I have now made it impossible for any lady ever to speak to you again, and I shall make it my business to spread what has been done to you to-night from one end of the service to the other, so that you will be cut by everyone." He has apparently put his threat into force, judging from the behaviour of all the officers who have since come down from the front.

6. That several of the defendants, and particularly the defendant Judkins, have stated openly in Cape Town that they intended to do all in their power to prevent the case being tried, and that, owing to martial law, the Court, meaning this Hon. Court, was powerless, as far as they were concerned, and that I know and verily believe that the present application for a postponement is merely made with the object of defeating the cause of justice.

7. That I will be greatly prejudiced should the case not be heard on the 10th, or on an early date, as I intend to leave Cape Town very shortly, and in addition, several of my witnesses will most likely be leaving the Colony, and it will be impossible, without very great expense, to obtain their evidence should the case be postponed to an indefinite date.

8. That the defendants have spread reports of what occurred, and in doing so have misrepresented the facts in such a way as to cast a slur on my fair name and character.

9. That until the action is tried, and the true facts of the case are known, it will be impossible for me to remove the slur which has been cast upon me, and to clear my name and character, and further than this, it will be practically impossible for me to return to Johannesburg.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for the applicants. Mr. Uppington for the respondent.

Mr. Searle contended that there was sufficient before the Court to show that the application was bona fide. The commanding officers had written that it was impossible for these persons to come down.

De Villiers, C.J., asked how it was that the defendants were wanted personally. In their plea the defendants denied that the plaintiff had sustained damages, but they admitted that they committed a legal tort, and they tendered £25.

Mr. Searle said the amount claimed was £3,000. It was most important that the defendants should show the circumstances under which these things complained of were done. There was a great conflict of evidence as to what took place on the evening in question.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Have they taken all steps to have represented to the Commander-in-Chief the urgency of the case?]

Mr. Searle said it was most difficult to communicate with the defendants, some of whom were actually engaged in operations. He submitted that the Court would recognise the circumstances of the country, that there was war going on, and these persons were engaged in this war. The defendants had had no opportunity to reply to the statements made by Stanford in the affidavit just read.

De Villiers, C.J., said that if the statements in the declaration were true it was the most scandalous case he had ever heard.

Mr. Searle said the declaration showed how aggravated a case it was, and how impossible it was to go to trial without the defendants' evidence.

In reply to a question by the Court as to whether he would be ready to go to trial in May, Mr. Searle said that a post-possession until then was the most he could ask, and what evidence they could not then bring down they must have taken on commission before the trial.

Mr. Upington said the plaintiff was being very seriously injured as a consequence of these proceedings, which took place at a hotel in Cape Town. He had been deprived of a great many friends, and he had had no opportunity of putting his side of the case forward. The plaintiff alleged that the report of this thing had been spread far and wide.

De Villiers, C. J.: It is quite clear that should the case go to trial on the day fixed by the Court, the defendants will not be able to appear and give their evidence, and I think it would be a pity if a case like this was tried without their having an opportunity of doing so. Their evidence could be given on commission if they so wished, but I think that under the existing circumstances, the Court has no option but to postpone the trial. The case will therefore be postponed until the 7th of May next, with the clear understanding that it must come on on that day. If the defendants find they cannot come to Cape Town at that time they should make timeous application to this Court for a commission. The applicants must pay the costs of this application for postponement.

KIMBERLEY WATERWORKS { 1902.
CO., LTD., V. KIMBERLEY { Feb. 28th.
TOWN COUNCIL.

Appeal to Privy Council—Interlocutory judgment.

Where the High Court of Griqualand West had granted a perpetual interdict against the Town Council in favour of the company, which had only asked for a temporary interdict, and the Supreme Court had on appeal reversed the decision of the High Court, Held, that as this was not a final judgment leave could not be granted to appeal to the Privy Council.

This was an application by the Kimberley Waterworks Company for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against a decision of the Supreme Court given on February 7 in the matter of the appeal by the present respondents (the Kimberley Town Council) against a decision of the High Court of Griqualand. The High Court had granted the present applicants an interdict restraining the Town Council from proceeding with certain works for bringing into Kimberley a supply of water from the Vaal River, until the termination of a certain agreement between the Waterworks Company and the Town Council. Against this decision the Town Council appealed to the Supreme Court, which allowed the appeal.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with whom was Mr. Upington), appeared for the applicants, and Mr. Buchanan appeared for the respondents.

Mr. Buchanan said he opposed the granting of leave to appeal to the Privy Council, on the ground that it was only an interlocutory, and not a final, judgment, and under the Charter of Justice it was only in a case of final judgment for a sum over £500 that leave would be given to make such an appeal.

Mr. Searle contended that the Court could grant leave, as the construction put upon the agreement in question was practically a final judgment. However he pointed out that all his clients wanted was a decision on this point, so that when they went to trial they could not be estopped on the ground that they ought to have appealed to the Privy Council.

Without calling upon Mr. Buchanan, the Court dismissed the application.

De Villiers, C.J.: I confess it is with considerable regret that I come to the conclusion that the decision is not final, and therefore cannot be appealed against. I say with regret, because it would have saved expense if there could have been an appeal on the judgment as it stands, but the Privy Council might look upon it as only interlocutory, and not give final judgment upon the case, but only upon the provisional question which was raised. I think, upon the whole, this application should be refused. We must look at the nature of the suit before the High Court. There it was an application, not for a final interdict, but for an interdict pending an action; but the High Court went very much further than the parties asked for, and made it a practically final judgment. In order to decide this application, we must look at the application as it was made, and inasmuch as it was an application for an interdict pending an action, the parties had better institute an action, so as to have judgment in such a form that it may be appealable.

BERRY V. BARRON. { 1902.
{ Feb. 28th.

Ownership—Theft—Rei vindicatio
—Damages.

During the plaintiff's absence from the Colony, his cart, which he had entrusted to a livery stable keeper for safe custody, was stolen and given by the thief to an auctioneer for sale by public auction.

Held, that in the absence of negligent conduct on the plaintiff's part tending to mislead the public, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the cart or its value.

Held further, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the detention of the cart after the defendant knew that the plaintiff claimed it as the owner.

This was an action for the return of a certain cart or payment of its value, £70, and for the sum of £50 for damages and costs. The declaration stated that the plaintiff resided at Cape Town, and the defendant at Claremont; that in the month of June the plaintiff was the owner of a cart; that in the same month he left for England; that on returning in December he found that the cart had been appropriated, and removed from his possession; and that he found the cart in the possession of the defendant, who refused to deliver it up, and wrongfully claimed the same. The defendant pleaded that in July he purchased the cart from one Hamilton, who had purchased the same at a public auction held by Messrs. G. C. Behr and Co.

Mr. Benjamin (with him Mr. Wilford) for plaintiff. Mr. Close for defendant.

Mr. Benjamin called

Michael Berry, who said that in June last year he left the Colony and went to England. Before he left he sold a business in Long-street to Messrs. Mills. The dogcart was stored in Messrs. Kannemeyer's stable. Witness left the key for unlocking the cap of the wheel with a man named Branskoff, who had been in his employ, and whom witness asked to keep an eye on the dogcart. In September witness returned, and found the vehicle gone. Witness had a man named Douglas in his employ before leaving. He never authorised Douglas to sell the cart. Witness had caused a warrant to be issued for the arrest of Douglas. The cart was now knocked about. Defendant was using the cart every day. It would cost about £20 or £25 to put the cart in the same condition as it was in when witness left.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Witness did not put a notice in the paper to the effect that his business had been taken over by Douglas.

George Branskoff said he was given the key by plaintiff. Douglas afterwards asked witness to give him the key, but witness refused. Afterwards he sent a messenger for the cart from the shop. Witness asked Douglas where the cart was, and the latter replied that it was none of his business. Witness afterwards found the cart in defendant's possession. He looked about for the cart a good deal before finding it.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Witness saw Douglas take the cart away. He did not inform the police.

Mr. Benjamin closed his case.

Mr. Close called

Alexander Barron, who said he bought the cart in July last year from Mr. Hamilton, who bought it at a sale held by Messrs. G. C. Behr and Co., at which witness was present. The cart, together with a horse and harness, was sold for £53. Witness bought vans with Mr. Berry's name on at this same sale. Witness gave Hamilton £20 and an old cart, for which he paid £12, in exchange for the dogcart. The cart was not damaged. Witness had used the cart once or twice a week.

George Conrad Behr, auctioneer, gave evidence as to the sale of the cart. Witness was instructed to sell this and other carts bearing Berry's name. The cart was sold with a horse and harness for £51. That was a very fair price. The horse and harness were worth £25. Witness had seen the cart recently. It had not deteriorated beyond the ordinary wear and tear. It only wanted varnishing, and would cost about £3 or £4 to touch up. Douglas instructed witness's son to advertise these carts. He sold them as his (Douglas's).

Charles Percival Behr said he was instructed by Douglas to advertise the vehicles and horse and harness. Some of the vehicles had Berry's name on them. Witness thought £53 a good price.

Counsel were heard on the facts.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is no question in this case as to the bona fides of the defendant. He bought in perfect fairness, and there is no imputation upon him. Nor is there any allegation of negligence on the part of the plaintiff tending to mislead the defendant, and under these circumstances the law is clear that the true owner is entitled to follow up his property. The fact that the property was sold by public auction does not deprive the owner of the ownership unless he authorised the auctioneer to sell for him. There is no proof that there was any such authority in this case, or that Douglas was in any way authorised by the plaintiff to dispose of the cart. I should not have given any damages in this case at all if defendant had not detained the cart after he knew plaintiff was the owner. I think that for the use of the cart after he knew this he ought to pay some amount of damages, though not much. Now the cart is proved at the time of the sale to have been worth about £32, and the Court will therefore order the defendant to deliver the cart to the plaintiff, or to pay the plaintiff the sum of £32. The Court will further order the defendant to pay £5 for the use and occupation of the cart.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp concurred.

DE KOOK AND OTHERS V. } 1902.
FINCHAM. } Mar. 3rd.

Sale—Risk and Profits before transfer—Rents—Agent.

Where land is sold for cash on transfer and the purchaser is prepared from the date of the sale to pay cash, he is entitled, as against the vendor, to any rents received in respect of the intervening period between the date of sale and the date of transfer.

At the time of the sale of certain land, the purchaser appointed an agent to collect rents generally for him. The agent, who was also agent for the vendor, received rents from tenants of the property sold and, knowing that the rents for the period intervening between sale and transfer were claimed by the purchaser, paid the same to the vendor as being, in his opinion, entitled to the rents.

Held, affirming the judgment of the High Court of Griqualand West, that such payment was no defence to an action brought by the purchaser against the agent for the amount of rent received by him.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Griqualand in an action in which the present respondent, plaintiff in the Court below, claimed:

1. The sum of £25 9s. 4d., being the amount due by defendants to plaintiff for rents collected by them as his agents, in respect of Erf No. 69, situate in Mafeking, the property of the plaintiff, from the 6th May to the 14th June, 1901, inclusive; or, alternatively,

A true and full account of such rents collected by them as the agents of the plaintiff, and payment of such amount as may be found due.

2. General relief, and

3. Costs of suit.

Plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a merchant residing at Vryburg, and the defendants are attorneys, practising in co-partnership under the style or firm of De Kock and Bolus, at Mafeking, in the Cape Colony.

2. On or about the 6th day of May, 1901, the plaintiff purchased a certain Erf No. 69, with the buildings and erections thereon, situate in the town of Mafeking aforesaid, from the defendants, who were then acting as agents for one Francis, the vendor of the said erf, one of the terms of the said sale being that the purchase price should be paid in cash by the plaintiff on delivery to him of the deed of transfer of the said erf.

3. The said buildings on the said erf were at the time of purchase let to the Salvation Army, one Elliston and one Cohen respectively.

4. On the 6th day of May, 1901, the plaintiff gave to the defendants his general power of attorney, under and by virtue of which they collected the rents of the said buildings from the said date.

5. Transfer of the said erf was registered at the Deeds Registry, Vryburg, on the 14th day of June, 1901, and on the 22nd day of June, 1901, the deed of transfer was delivered to plaintiff's agent at Mafeking aforesaid, and the purchase price was paid.

6. The defendants have accounted for the rents of the said buildings from the 14th day of June, 1901, whereas the plaintiff is entitled to the rents aforesaid from the 6th day of May, 1901, to the 14th day of June, 1901, amounting to £25 9s. 4d., which sum has been collected by the defendants for and on behalf of the plaintiff, but which they refuse to hand over to the plaintiff.

7. About the beginning of the month of July, 1901, the plaintiff cancelled his said power of attorney in favour of the defendants.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims:

(a) The sum of £25 9s. 4d., being rent from the 6th May to 14th June, 1901.

(b) Or, alternatively, a true and full account of such rents collected by the defendants as the agents of the plaintiff, and payment of such amount as may be found due.

(c) General relief.

(d) Costs of suit.

Defendants' plea was as follows:

1. The defendants disclaim all interest in the subject matter of this action, and deny all liability in respect thereof, and say that the said rents claimed by the plaintiff were collected for and paid to their disclosed principal, the said C. W. Francis, and that if the plaintiff has any right thereto (which the defendants do not admit), he should claim the said rents from the said C. W. Francis.

2. The defendants admit the allegations contained in paragraphs 1, 3, 5, and 7 of plaintiff's declaration.

3. As to paragraph 2 of the said declaration, the defendants do not admit that the terms of the said contract of sale are therein correctly or sufficiently set forth, and crave leave to refer to the same at the trial.

4. The defendants say that the plaintiff gave a limited general power of attorney to the defendants to collect rents due to the plaintiff in Mafeking. Save in so far as the above contains an admission, the defendants deny paragraph 4 of the said declaration.

5. As to paragraph 6 of the said declaration, the defendants deny that the plaintiff is entitled to the said rents arising between the said 6th day of May and the said 14th day of June, 1901, or that such rents were collected by them on behalf of the plaintiff.

6. The defendants further say that they were the duly appointed agents for the purpose of collecting rents in Mafeking, both of the plaintiff and of the said C. W. Francis, and that, having regard to the fact that it was one of the terms of the contract between the plaintiff and the said C. W. Francis that the purchase money should only be paid on transfer of the erf, the said defendants considered that the rents issuing from the said premises sold up to the date of payment of the purchase money belonged by law and right to the said C. W. Francis, for whom they accordingly collected the said rents, and to whom they have been handed over.

Wherefore the defendants pray that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

In the Court below the following exception was taken to the plea: The plaintiff excepts to the defendants' plea on the ground that it is vague, embarrassing, and bad in law.

PLAINTIFF'S REPLICATION.

In case this Honourable Court shall not uphold the above exception, the plaintiff replies as follows:

The plaintiff joins issue with the defendants on their plea, except in so far as the said plea admits the allegations in plaintiff's declaration contained.

The exception was not pressed, and the following evidence was led:

Arthur William Fincham, sworn, states: I am the plaintiff, and am merchant at Vryburg. In April or May last I wished to acquire properties, and corresponded with my brother in Mafeking, and personally went to Mafeking, arriving there 4th May, and on 6th May I saw defendant, J. W. de Kock, in his office, and we had a conversation, in which I told him I was satisfied with what my brother had done, and that I would leave a cheque with my brother to pay him for the property (viz., the property of Francis). On the same day I gave J. W. de Kock a power of attorney (produced, No. 1). I also gave De Kock verbal instructions to collect and receive all my rents in Mafeking, and to allow him commission therefor. I owned other properties there besides the property I was then acquiring from Francis. I was aware from my brother that it was part of the contract that I was to pay for certain building alterations which were being done under contract between Francis and certain building contractors. I then returned to Cape Town, and in July wrote to De Kock for statement of rents to 30th June. De Kock allowed me no rent from my newly-acquired property before 14th June, but he accounted for the other rents from May 1. The amount of rent due from 6th May to 14th June for the newly-acquired property would be £25 9s. 4d., according to account put in, No. 4. I wrote 13th July, No. 5. Subsequently I put the matter in the hands of Minchin and Sonnenberg, and on 23rd July, 1901, they wrote to defendants, No. 6, put in. Later Minchin and Sonnenberg would not act in the matter, and through Rosenblatt I instructed Haarhoff and Hertog as my attorneys, and they on 9th August wrote No. 7. On 24th August Haarhoff and Hertog, received from Duncan and Brown, No. 8, and reply same date, No. 9, was sent.

Cross-examined: As far as I know, no money was paid on behalf of the contract to the builders who were working on the property before 14th June, when I got transfer.

Alfred Ernest Fincham, sworn, states: I am brother of plaintiff, and carry on business as a merchant at Mafeking. About the end of April I was looking out for property for plaintiff, and saw Mr. J. W. de Kock, who told me he had Erf 69 (Francis's property) for sale. After some bargaining offers on my part, which I knew defendant De Kock submitted to his principal, Francis, in Graham's Town, and which were refused by the latter, I eventually offered on behalf of plaintiff £1,500, and to take over the building contract of £200, those being the terms which I knew Francis had insisted on, as I had seen his instructions to De Kock on the matter, and De Kock on behalf of Francis accepted. De Kock had told me that the property was bringing in £20 a month rent. This was while we were bargaining about the price. When De Kock closed with my offer, he said, "I will go on paying the contractors so as not to complicate matters, and you can settle with me afterwards in a lump sum," and I agreed to that course being pursued. On 5th May I accompanied my brother to De Kock's office. I have heard his evidence, and agree that it is correct. A day or two later plaintiff left for Cape Town. On his behalf I made a declaration of purchaser, and produce a certified copy, No. 10. On one occasion De Kock asked me to inspect the building work, to see if I was satisfied, and I did so. That was in July, I think, after I had given the cheque. On 22nd of June De Kock handed me the title deeds of the property duly transferred to plaintiff, and I handed him the cheque for the purchase price. I had had the cheque signed, but with the amount not filled in. Ever since 6th May; I was ready to pay on delivery of transfer. In July I received a communication from plaintiff about the rents, and I went to see De Kock. This was about 16th July. I then asked him about the rents between 6th May and 14th June. De Kock said he would not hand those over to plaintiff, as in justice to Francis he should have either the rents or bank rate of interest on the £1,500, which he agreed to accept in lieu of the rent, which he would then hand over to plaintiff. This offer I communicated to plaintiff, who declined to pay the interest, and insisted on having the rents as well. Next day, acting on plaintiff's instructions, I went to De Kock and demanded the plaintiff's papers, and De Kock handed them over to me, including the power of attorney cancelled.

Cross-examined: I knew Francis was De Kock's principal, and he showed me the telegrams to and from Francis. Telegrams Nos. 11 and 12 put in. These I saw. When plaintiff was instructing De Kock to collect his rents, no special mention was made about rents of No. 69 Erf.

I did express my own opinion, when De Kock offered to pay over rents if I paid bank rates of interest on the £1,500, that his proposal seemed reasonable, and that it seemed to me that Francis should have one or the other.

FOR THE DEFENCE.

John William de Kock, sworn, states: I am an attorney at Mafeking, and a member of defendant firm. I have held power of attorney from Francis since 29th March, 1898. It is still in force. During all that time and until 14th June last, when it was transferred to plaintiff, Francis has been the registered owner of Erf 69, which is a freehold property, and I have collected his rents and accounted to him for them. The rents accrued from buildings upon the erf, which were let to various tenants. At the time of the contract nothing was said about the rents or who was entitled to them. Fincham paid nothing on Crause's building contract before 14th June. I advanced the money in dribblets on architect's certificates, and if the purchase had not been completed I should have charged these against Francis. As it was completed, I charged and was paid by Fincham, according to the terms of the contract.

On 6th May, when plaintiff gave me his power of attorney, I understood I was to be his general agent, and he gave me instructions as to two of his properties, but he did not mention Erf 69, but I assume that was only because I knew all about it. I continued to receive the rents on Erf 69 after May 6, and until the power of attorney was cancelled by plaintiff in July.

Cross-examined: When I was expending the moneys on the contract I expected to be repaid eventually by Fincham, and charged the amounts against him in my books. I made up Francis's account on about 2nd July, and, as he then came up to Mafeking, he did not draw the money till 1st August. On 2nd or 3rd June I did receive some rents, which I credited to plaintiff at first in my books, as I did not know the exact date when transfer would be passed. I always looked upon the matter as one for adjustment between plaintiff and Francis when the exact date of transfer was known. The greater portion of the rents in question I received after registration, and I then apportioned the whole between the parties.

Case closed.

Hopley, J.: In April last the plaintiff, who was then in Cape Town, instructed his brother, Mr. Alfred Fincham, of Mafeking, to try and purchase immovable property in that town for him. At that time Mr. J. W. de Kock, a member of the defendant firm, was managing certain property, to wit, the freehold Erf No. 69, in Mafeking, for Mr. Francis, a resident of Graham's Town, by virtue of a general power of attorney given to him in 1898 by Francis, and which is still of full force. That property was then being repaired under a contract with a builder named Crause, who had contracted to repair the buildings on the said erf for £200. Those buildings were in the occupation of certain tenants, who were paying rent to De Kock for Francis, and Francis was willing to dispose of the property. Negotiations were entered into between Alfred Fincham and De Kock, on behalf of their respective principals, with the result that they came to terms about the beginning of May, and the plaintiff was informed that he might purchase the property if he wished for £1,500, provided he took over as well the building contract with Crause. Thereupon the plaintiff proceeded to Mafeking, and, after an interview with his brother, saw De Kock, with whom, on the 6th of May, he closed the transaction. There is no dispute as to the terms of the bargain, which were that plaintiff bought the said erf for the sum of £1,500, which he was to pay in cash upon getting transfer, and he also took over Francis's liabilities in regard to the contract with Crause. Nothing was said as to the date by which transfer was to be given, but there is no doubt that it was understood that it should be done forthwith, because plaintiff left his cheque signed (but blank as to the amount) with his brother to effect payment on transfer, and of this fact he informed De Kock. On the 6th May De Kock informed Francis by telegram that he had sold the property in question, and on the same day plaintiff gave a general power of attorney to the defendant firm, under which they were to manage his affairs, and, inter alia, to collect and receive all rents due to him, at Mafeking, where he already owned other house property. The plaintiff then returned to Cape Town, and Mr. J. W. de Kock collected his rents on the other properties, and also the rents accruing from Erf No. 69. There seems to have been some delay in getting the transfer passed, but that formality was duly effected on the 14th of June, and on the 22nd of June the deeds of transfer were handed to Mr. Alfred Fincham, who thereupon filled in the plaintiff's cheque and handed it in payment to Mr. De Kock on behalf of Francis. The points in dispute between the parties are whether or no plaintiff is entitled to the rents paid to De Kock by the tenants of the said buildings on Erf 69 for the period between the 6th of May and the 14th of June, and, secondly, if he should be entitled to them, whether the Defendants, who have paid the amounts over to Francis, are the proper persons to be sued in the matter. It is clear that Mr. J. W. De Kock acted as the plaintiff's agent under the power of attorney given to his firm from the 6th of May until about the 14th July, when he handed back the said power, cancelled, to Mr. Alfred Fincham who on that date had an interview with him on behalf of the plaintiff—a difference of opinion having arisen between the plaintiff and the defendants as regards the said rents, which Mr. De Kock in his capacity as the general agent for Francis had apportioned to the latter. Mr. De Kock no doubt acted perfectly bona fide, and he defends his action on the ground that as the property was not transferred to the plaintiff until the 14th of June, Francis, and not the plaintiff, was entitled to the rents until that date. Now the contract of sale was concluded on the 6th of May and the effect of that was to pass all the risks and benefits attending the ownership of the property from the seller to the buyer. Voet (18.1.3) says “when a definite understanding has been arrived at with respect to the thing to be sold, and the price, nothing more is requisite to the completeness of the contract neither words nor delivery nor writing.” At 18.6.1 he lays down “as a general rule all risk concerns the purchaser as soon as the contract has been completed by mutual consent, even if the property has not yet been delivered or the price paid: for the price would have to be paid by the purchaser even after the destruction of the property. For though in general the maxim holds that the owner bears the loss (res perit domino) and the ownership does not pass out of the vendor before delivery, yet none the less on that account does the risk concern the purchaser before delivery; first, because to him accrues also all the advantages derivable from the property; secondly, because immediately from the completion of the contract the vendor become the debtor of a specific thing and it has been held that such debtor is discharged by the destruction of the thing. . . . [See also Grotius, Int. to Dutch Jurisprudence, 3.14.34; Van Leeuwen's Roman Dutch Law, ch. 17, secs. 1 and 2, with Mr. Justice Kotsé's notes (b) and (d), and Van der Keessel, Th. 639.] It was however contended in argument in this case that as there had been no transfer coram lege loci in the Deeds Registry at Vryburg before the 14th of June the property remained vested in the seller, together with all the risks and benefits arising therefrom, and the leading case of Harris v. Trustees of Buissonne was cited as bearing on the point. It seems to me that Voet (18.6.6) disposes of this contention. Referring to the following passage from Groenewegen—“De immobilium autem alienatione hodie dubium est ex Caroli Quinti Constitutione irritante omnem immobilium alienationem quorum traditio rite facta non est. Verumtamen cum ex proemio ejusdem constitutionis manifestum sit, hoc id non in universum, sed tantummodo in creditorum gratiam cautum esse: scilicet ne hi clandestina aliqua traditione hypothecæ vel alio jure frustrentur: ita ut in re duobus vendita et uni privatim alteri publice tradita, is præferri debet cui coram lege loci rite tradita est, ideo non obstante Carolina Constitutione jus civile in universum illorum mansisse, adeoque et hodie rei immobilis vendita periculum etiam ante traditionem ad emptorem pertinere censeo, atque ita in Hollandie Curia judicatum intellexi" (Inst. 3.24, sec. 3) he approves of his reasoning, and adds—"For though under the constitution of Charles V. the sale of immovable property is not held to be valid unless there has been a formal conveyance in accordance with the local law, yet no change has been made with respect to the risk. For by the Civil Law also no right of ownership passed to the purchaser otherwise than by delivery following a completed contract of sale yet, none the less on that account, was the risk considered to have passed to the purchaser immediately upon the signification of the mutual consent. Since, therefore, the only change introduced by the modern practice relates to the mode of delivery, that is to the transfer of the ownership of the immovable property, and the transfer of the risk does not depend upon the transfer of the ownership, there is no reason why a change in the form of the one should involve a change in the other, especially if it be remembered that the formal transfer according to the local law was not invented for the sake of the actual contracting parties, the buyer and the seller to wit, but rather for the benefit and security of the creditors of the seller . . . ; and moreover, that as regards the buyer and the seller there is nothing to prevent the seller even now from divesting himself of his right of ownership previous to that formal transfer by virtue of a constitutum possessorium or by some other method." Two interesting decisions on the point are cited from Neostadius by these authors and other writers on the point. Decision 32 of the Court of Holland, Zeeland and Friesland, after setting forth the ordinary rule of law that the risk passes on completion of the contract to the purchaser, and quoting the terms of Charles V.'s Placaat, which declared all sales, burdens and alienations and mortgages of immovable property to be worthless, null and void unless made coram lege loci, proceeds to state the case that arose, viz., that A. sold certain lands and houses to B., who received the use thereof and fruits but did not get transfer coram lege loci. Before this was obtained the house was burnt and the lands flooded, and the question arose which of the two was to bear the loss. Scherer, in his note 366 on Grotius 3.14.34, says that the Court decided that the risk was the seller's (see Maasderg's Translation of Grotius with Scherer's notes), but, on looking at the decision itself, I cannot find that any conclusion was come to. The report sets forth the two contending views and concludes "sed opiniones variae, neque aliquid decisum," and in a note the author adds: "Bij den Hoogen Raadt is verscheijden malen verstaan dat dit Placaat alleen plaatze heeft, ten regerde van derde personen, die andersints souden mogen bedrogen ende verkort werden, ende niet ten opsigte van de contrahanten selve." The other decision, No. 70, of the Supreme Court of Holland, Zeeland and Friesland, was given in a case in which the seller, after divesting himself by deed of sale of possession which he ceded and gave over to the purchaser, and after ordering his tenant for the future to pay rent to the purchaser, and giving an irrevocable power of attorney to an agent to pass formal transfer changed his mind before formal transfer had been effected, withdrew his mandate and ordered his tenant to pay rent only to himself; whereupon the purchaser sought relief from the Court and claimed an interdict. The seller relied upon the Placaat of Charles V., and denied that the plaintiff was in legal occupation or possession of the property. But the Court gave judgment for purchaser on the ground that the seller had divested himself of possession and so had not title at all against the purchaser. The Court held that the seller could not protect himself by the terms of the Edict, as it was made only for the protection of his creditors, but that it did not otherwise prevent him from divesting himself of his rights either by means of a Constitutum Possessorium or of any other kind of transfer. In the present case Mr. Stratford, for the defendants, relied upon the latter portion of Voet (18.6.6) which deals with special customs in certain Belgian towns to the effect that, if a sale of immovable property, especially house property, took place in mid-winter and the sale were subject to the customary condition that formal transfer should not be given until the following May, the better opinion was that until such transfer the risk remained with the seller since it was on his account and for his benefit that transfer was postponed. It seems in those sales to have been specially understood that all emoluments, fruits, rents, etc., should, until formal transfer in the summer, accrue for the benefit of the seller, and consequently, as Foot shows, it was equitable that he should in the meantime bear risks and losses. He then goes on to state that the seller, being responsible for delay, would on general principles be liable only for such accidents and damages as would not have happened to the property if it had been transferred to the purchaser forthwith, but that, this having been found an inconvenient principle as applied to immovable property a more simple rule has been established in the sale of houses, viz., that the purchaser ran no risks: at all and that the seller took every kind of risk until the day fixed by the clear agreement for the formal transfer. Mr. Stratford argued that that was the general rule, and that consequently in the present case the contract having been "cash against transfer," no risks passed to, and no benefits could be claimed by, the plaintiff until the day when transfer was effected, and the cash became due. I am, however, convinced that Foot is in that portion of the section dealing only with the case of this special custom which carried with it the special rule as to the risks. That seems to be quite clear from the terms of the section of the same Title of Foot, in which he is discussing the general law, and where he says: "But forasmuch as it is in accordance with natural equity that the advantages derivable from any thing should accrue to him who has to bear the disadvantages thereof, therefore any benefit arising from a thing sold, after the completion of the sale belongs to the purchaser even if it should fall in before transfer." He instances fruits ungathered at the moment of the completion of the sale and he adds "and as for fructus civiles, i.e., payment due from persons who have hired the property sold from the vendor; if they are in respect of property the use of which is being enjoyed at every moment such as house property, or beasts of burden, it seems that they should be divided between the seller and the purchaser according to the time when they became due, passing to the purchaser so far as they became due after the completion of the contract."

As regards immovable property the point of time when the risk and benefits pass from the seller to the purchaser seems never to have been decided in this colony between the immediate contracting parties, though as regards movables there have been several cases, of which the case of Terrington v. Simpson, 2 Mens., 110, is instructive. In that case a ship had been bought by the defendant and was wrecked before the bills of exchange drawn by the defendant in consideration of the purchase in favour of the vendor, the plaintiff, fell due and before any registration of the ship in the name of the purchaser had been effected as required by law. When sued on the bills at maturity the defendant set up the plea that the property in the ship had not passed to him owing to the non-registration thereof in his name and that consequently the risk remained with the seller, and that he consequently had received no consideration for the bill sued upon, but the Court held that the risk had passed to the defendant upon completion of the contract. It appears, then, that, in the present case, the risks and benefits arising from the ownership of the erf in question passed from Francis to the plaintiff upon the conclusion of the contract of sale on the 6th of May and that he was entitled to all rents from the property in question from that date. But, even admitting this the defendants contend that they were merely agents for Francis, and that he and not they should be sued, the fact of their being merely agents having been disclosed. Now, in the first place, the defendant firm did not hold Francis's power of attorney, but only one of the members of that firm; and in the next place the plaintiff is not suing the defendants as agents for Francis, but as his own agents, who received moneys which they should have paid to him and which they have taken upon themselves to pay away to a third party. It is clear that, after the 6th May, plaintiff was entitled to demand and receive from De Kook, acting for Francis, cession of the right of action for the rent if any of the tenants had refused to pay. The tenants however paid willingly, and when the money came into De Kook's hands he should have held it for the plaintiff and paid it over to no one else. It appears to me, therefore, that there must be judgment for the plaintiff for the rents accruing between 6th May and 14th June, received by De Kook as a member of the defendant firm. The amount it is admitted is £25 9s. 4d., for which sum there must be judgment for the plaintiff with costs.

From this judgment the defendant now appealed.

Mr. H. Jones (with him Mr. Benjamin) for the appellants: The question is, "was plaintiff entitled to rent from May 6th to the 14th June. I submit that in this case risk and profits are the same as in case of sale (Voet, 18.6.1 and 18.6.9), Loenius (Decis 34). As regards Roman Dutch Law, Voet, Grotius and Van Leeuwen all lay down that on a contract of sale being completed the risk falls to the purchaser. Voet says that this is the general rule, but that there are exceptions. No case has ever been decided in this Court as to immovable property. Taylor v. Mackie, Dunn and Co. (Buch., 1879, 166) Taylor and Poppe, Schunoff and Guttery (Buch., 1879, 191), and other cases, which I need not now refer to, all refer to moveables. It is true that the Roman Dutch authorities say that the same rule applies to both movable and immovable property, but our own customs have changed since this law was established.

[De Villiers, C.J.: I suppose you admit that after the purchase, the purchaser and not the seller has to insure the goods?]

[Buchanan, J.: If the risk falls to the purchaser, then surely the profits must do so?]

But let us suppose that the buildings were burnt down after the sale but before the transfer?

[De Villiers, C.J.: The purchaser might, of course, make a special contract that the vendor should be responsible.]

See reasons of Hopley, J., supra; also Loenius (Decis 34). On the completion of the sale, the risk passes to the purchaser. He, however, draws the distinction that if a written document is required in order to complete transfer, the property does not pass until such written document is completed. Thus no sale of immovable property is complete without transfer.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Surely a sale is complete without transfer?]

The authorities are not agreed as to immovable property (Voet, 18.6.6).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it not clear that the seller was to have his cheque on transfer?]

No, the seller was entitled to keep the property in his own name till he passed transfer. This sale was under the usual agreement, viz., that the seller should pass transfer against payment by buyer. Surely, then, the buyer ought to account to the seller for ad interim profits?

[Maasdorp, J.: Would not the purchaser have the right to profits before transfer was passed? It is a very common practice for people to get possession of property before transfer is passed.]

The interest on £1,500 should be set off against the rents. It is both legal and equitable that this should be done. There can be no doubt as to the equity of the matter. He who pays interest should receive rents.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for respondent): As to the first point raised for the appellants, the question of agency has not been raised on the pleadings. Messrs. De Kock and Bolus knew perfectly well the position that plaintiffs were taking up as to the rents.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If an agent receives money, is he not bound to account for such money received?]

This firm was the agent for plaintiff and one of the partners was agent for the defendant. An agent is bound by the acts of his principal if he knows the whole circumstances of the case.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The agent of defendant was justified in paying over money to his principal even though his firm were agents for plaintiff?]

I cannot admit that.

[Buchanan, J.: Your strong point is that De Kock was your agent and received rents in your name?]

If an agent receives rent for both parties he does so at his own risk, and cannot escape from the position in which he has placed himself by offering to pay money into Court. (See Fincham's evidence in the Court below.) Then, again, the only circumstance which could disentitle the purchaser to receive the rents would be the fact that he was in mora.

[De Villiers, C.J.: 'The only point is, who is in mora, as it takes time to get transfer passed in the Deeds Office.]

The vendor takes the first step in the making of the transfer, hence any delay in the whole transaction is his mora. I fully admit that.

Mr. H. Jones (in reply): The original summons shows that this case is not one of agency. As to the time of transfer, it must be remembered that the one party was at Mafeking and the other at Vryburg. As to the delay, the sale legally took place when it was registered in the Deeds Office. With regard to the amount in dispute, appellants are willing to set off rent received against debts due to them.

De Villiers, C.J.: I fully concur with the judgment of Mr. Justice Hopley, and with the reasons upon which it is founded. Under the Roman law it was clearly established that the risk, as well as the benefit, of a thing sold and not delivered passes to the purchaser. The Dutch law adopted the same rule in regard, at all events, to movable property; but for some time there was doubt as to immovable property. The better opinion, however, was that the same rule applied to immovable property, that the rents produced by immovable property are in the same position as other profits, and that such profits pass to the purchaser, notwithstanding that by the law of Holland, which differs in this respect from the Roman law, registration of property was necessary before the property passed. So that, if this were a case between the plaintiff and Francis, the vendor of the property, no doubt plaintiff would be entitled to recover rents from the time that this property was sold until the time when transfer was passed. Francis might possibly have had a counter-claim for interest—possibly; but this is a point not now to be decided—for the time which necessarily passed before transfer could be given; but unfortunately this point was not raised, and no evidence was given as to the practice relating to registration at Vryburg, and as to what time would have elapsed before transfer could be passed. Probably not more than a week or two would be necessary in which to pass transfer, and if Francis had claimed, the amount would most likely be not more than £2 or £3. That question, however, does not arise. The only point upon which I have had any doubt is as to the liability of the defendants, who were employed as agents by the plaintiff, one of the partners being also agent to Francis. It seems that the matter of the collection of the rents had been left in the hands of De Kock, who was acting both for plaintiff and for Francis, and if it was known to De Kock that the amount was claimed by plaintiff, I think he was wrong in paying this amount to Francis. On this point, I think that a paragraph in the evidence of Fincham, the plaintiff's brother, fairly establishes knowledge on the part of the defendants before the money was paid. "In July," says this witness, "I received a communication from plaintiff about the rents, and I went to see De Kock. This was about 16th July. I then asked him about the rents between 6th May and 14th June. De Kock said he would not hand these over to plaintiff, as in justice to Francis he should have either the rents or the bank rate of interest on the £1,500, which he agreed to accept in lieu of the rent, which he would then hand over to plaintiff. This offer I communicated to plaintiff, who declined to pay the interest, and insisted on having the rents as well." From this I think it may fairly be held that the money had not been paid to Francis. Then defendant, in the concluding portion of his evidence, says: "On the 2nd or 3rd of June I did receive some rents, which I credited to plaintiff at first in my books, as I did not know the exact date when transfer would be passed. I always looked upon the matter as one for adjustment between plaintiff and Francis when the exact date of transfer was known. The greater portion of the rents in question I received after registration, and I then apportioned the whole between the parties." Now, De Kock might have protected himself by offering to deposit the money with the Registrar of the Court or with a bank, pending the decision as to who was entitled to it, but he took it upon himself to protect the one principal in preference to the other principal, and when it was determined by the Court that the plaintiff is the man entitled to receive the money, I think the agent is not freed from his liability to pay the money to the plaintiff on the ground that he has paid the money to Francis. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Their lordships concurred.

GAY V. GAY.

{ 1902.
Mar. 3rd.

This was an action instituted by Thomas Gay, of Port Elizabeth, against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which for divorce, with custody of the minor child of the marriage, and forfeiture of benefits.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for the applicant.

Thomas Gay said he was married in London on the 8th June, 1896, to the defendant. They lived in London for 18 months, and witness then came out to Cape Town as a chef. He sent money to his wife to enable her to come out, and she came out with a friend. There were quarrels, witness objecting to his wife being absent from home when he came home from work. One day witness went home, and found a letter on the table, in which defendant stated that he was going away, and he would not see her again. She also stated that she was going to get employment up-country, and intended, when she had enough money, to return to England. That was over three years ago. He had not been able to discover her whereabouts.

An order for restitution was granted, defendant to return to or receive plaintiff on or before May 15, failing which to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted as prayed, the rule to be published in the same manner as ordered with regard to the citation, and plaintiff to write to defendant's father by registered letter offering to pay defendant the sum of £20 for expenses of the voyage to the Cape.

NAUDE'S EXECUTOR V. { 1902.
MARITZ AND OTHERS. { Mar. 3rd.
" 8th.

Insolvency—Proof of Debt—
Prescription—Judicial Interpellation.

A debt barred by prescription cannot be proved against an insolvent estate.

The sequestration of a debtor's estate does not prevent prescription from running in respect of debts which have not been proved.

Proof of debt by a creditor has the full effect of a judicial interpellation.

This was an application to have certain proofs of debt filed by D. P. Maritz, of Johannesburg, and W. A. Hall, trading as Hall and Co., of Worcester, disallowed on the ground that the debt sought to be proved by the first creditor was prescribed by law, being over eight years old, and also the promissory note itself should have been produced in respect of which the debt was alleged to be due. The claim of the second creditor was also objected to by the trustee on similar grounds.

The affidavit of Daniel Philippus Maritz, of Laingsburg, a sheep and cattle farmer, stated that the late Naude was a farmer and sheepbuyer, residing near Worcester. About the middle of 1883, deponent had sold to the said Naude certain sheep and goats for £62, for which Naude gave a promissory note payable on demand. Deponent demanded payment but Naude failed to respond to his demand, and thereafter surrendered his estate as insolvent. Deponent having been informed that there were not sufficient assets in the said insolvent estate to cover expenses of sequestration, did not prove his claim. Deponent further stated that he had lost or mislaid the aforesaid promissory note.

The affidavit of William Asworth Hall, of Worcester, general dealer, stated that previous to 1881 he had carried on business in partnership with his father, who died in the said year. The father's estate, however, remained in the partnership until 1899, when the said partnership was dissolved, and deponent took over the entire business of the firm, including all outstanding debts and liabilities. In 1881, the late J. S. Naude had purchased goods from the firm to the value of £85 5s. Deponent took over this debt, but did not prove his claim on the insolvent estate of the late J. S. Naude, as he was informed that there were not sufficient assets in the estate to cover the legal expenses of surrender. Deponent had lost, or mislaid, the late Naude's promissory note for £85 5s.

From the affidavit of Frederick Lindenberg, executor dative of the estate of the late Naude, it appeared that certain landed property of the deceased had not been brought up in his schedules, and it being thus left undisposed of, the said executor applied to the Supreme Court on October 12, 1900, for the rehabilitation of the estate. The Court refused this application, but made an order authorising the Master of the Court to assist deponent, in his capacity as executor, in passing transfer of the landed property. This was done. The property was realised, and a distribution account was lodged in due course. The Master, however, refused to pass this account pending the result of certain legal proceedings. On October 12, 1901, the Court was moved on behalf of certain of the respondents for an order authorising the Master to convene meetings of creditors in the insolvent estate of the late J. S. Naude, and a special meeting was held before the Resident Magistrate of Worcester on November 12, 1901. At that meeting the two first-named respondents filed proofs of debt to which the above-mentioned exceptions were taken, viz.:

(a) The insufficiency of the evidence and vouchers produced.

(b) Their being barred by prescription.

Applicants now asked the Court to disallow these proofs of debt on the afore-said grounds.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for applicant): The respondents are the only creditors who came forward. We say that the evidence as to these debts was unsatisfactory, and that the said debts had been prescribed. The executors filed their account and made distribution in accordance therewith. These accounts the Master refused to pass, notwithstanding the fact that he considered the debt had been prescribed. Still, the insolvent brought up this debt in his schedule. On November 14, 1883, Naude surrendered his estate. No creditors claimed, and no meeting was held. During the year 1900, Lindenberg was appointed trustee and the piece of ground said to belong to Naude's estate was found to be in a derelict condition. The whole question is, "Have the creditors any claim on this ground?" If the creditors had proved, they would have had a claim. Re Estate Parker (9 Sheil, 564) where see judgment of De Villiers, C.J. In this case the claims were not proved, and this fact raises quite a new point which has never (as far as I know) been decided in this colony. There are many English cases founded on the Statute of James I., and we must also consider whether a proof of debt is not a "suit or action" within the meaning of Act 6 of 1861 of our own Statute Law. If we interpret that enactment by English cases the answer must be in the affirmative (Robertson on Bankers' Law, 243). All authorities say that if a debt is not barred at the date of insolvency it cannot thereafter be prescribed. The fact of insolvency keeps the debt alive. Ex parte Dwydney (15 Veysey, 479) is a leading case on this point. See particularly the judgment of Eldon, L.C. (485).

The note had not been prescribed up to the date of insolvency. I admit that I was wrong in saying that it had run to the date of insolvency.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In the case you cited had prescription run before insolvency?]

Yes, it must have done so.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In Roman Dutch law, prescription ceases during the time that a party cannot be sued.]

Yes, there is Executors Meyer v. Gericke (Foord, 14) in support of this view. Roffey ex parte (2 Rose, 245).

[De Villiers, C.J.: That is all against you.]

Yes, but I cite these cases because the question has been introduced. Looking to the wording of our own Statute Law the respondents are barred. The fact of insolvency cannot put a creditor in a better position than he would otherwise occupy.

[Maasdorp, J.: In case of insolvency the estate vests in the trustee for the benefit of the creditors.]

For the benefit of such creditors as have proved in the estate. We cannot go behind the Insolvent Ordinance. See Re Estate Parker (9 Sheil, 564). I submit it is against public policy that an applicant should be allowed to come in and prefer his claim at any time.

Mr. Currey (for respondents): Our claim is based on sec. 37 of the Insolvent Ordinance. Under this section two meetings had been called, and at neither of these did the holders of the promissory notes prove their claims. Now, applicants wish to contend that sec. 37 of the Insolvency Ordinance is over-ridden by Act 6 of 1861. See judgment of Malins, V.C., in Eccles Com. v. N.E. Rail Co. (4

The Master of the Supreme Court had granted letters of administration in petitioner's favour, being of opinion that the will was valid, but on December 13, 1901, had written to petitioner's Attorney to the effect that it would be the duty of the executor—when appointed—in the interests of those concerned to apply to the Supreme Court to have the will declared.

Petitioner now prayed that the document above set forth might be declared to be the last will and testament of the said Annison, and that the costs of the application might be borne by the estate.

The affidavit of I. A. B. Downing, of Port Elizabeth, at present serving in the P.A.G. Mounted Infantry, testified to the making of the above document in pencil by Annison, and to having found it, in the same envelope after Annison's death, in the flap of Annison's despatch-book, in which he (deponent) has seen Annison place it.

Mr. H. Jones (for applicants): The Courts both in England and in this country have upheld military wills of this character. There was a case not very long ago—Van Zyl and Buissinne, ex parte. (11 Sheil, 765.)

The Court granted the application in terms of the petition.

THE EDISON-BELL PHONO- } 1902.
GRAPH CO., LTD., V. W. } Mar. 4th.
F. BRITAIN AND CO. }

Patent Rights—Phonographs.

Where an interdict was prayed restraining the respondents

from selling or dealing in certain phonographs and their accessories.

Held, that as the affidavit of applicant did not disclose in what way the instruments sold by respondents infringed his patent rights, and as no specimens of the phonographs in dispute had been submitted to the Court, the evidence in applicant's favour was too weak to justify the Court in granting the interdict aforesaid. The Court, however, directed that respondents should keep an account of all sales of the goods in question effected by them.

This was an application for an interdict to restrain respondents from infringing certain patent rights in respect of phonographs.

The matter had previously been before the Court on December 5, 1901, when it was ordered to stand over to January 13, 1902, respondent undertaking meanwhile not to sell any machines objected to. From January 13, the hearing of the application had been postponed to the present date.

The affidavit of the applicant (Denis Doyle), sole agent of the Edison Bell Phonograph Co., Ltd., in South Africa, stated that respondent had been selling and dealing in instruments which infringed on the Colonial Patents assigned by due registration to the Edison Bell Company, and originally taken out in this colony by Thomas Alva Bell.

The affidavit proceeded to enter into a minute description of the various parts of these instruments from which it appeared that the violation of patent rights complained of consisted in the use by respondent in his instruments of "a recorder or reproducer (of sound), consisting of a diaphragm composed of glass, or porcelain, and the manufacture of a phonogram blank, or surface to receive the record, composed of an insoluble soap, or of a mixture in which soap was the principal ingredient.

Respondents' defence was that they were acting as agents for the Columbia

Phonograph Company, of Broadway, New York, and that they had sold the articles in question under a written guarantee from the said Columbia Company, that they were not thereby infringing any patent. Respondent undertook by letter, dated July 10, 1901, to desist from dealing in such articles pending advices from the Phonograph Company.

Mr. Upington, for applicants; Mr. Searle, K.C., for respondents.

Mr. Upington: These patents which we have taken out stand to-day, and there is strong evidence to show the patent of the Edison-Bell Company has been infringed, and on the other side they only produce the evidence of an expert to prove that our patent had not sufficient originality. They admit our patent, but deny that our invention was patentable. We have three separate patents, all of which affect the most essential parts of the machine. As to the glass diaphragm, there are many patents of good diaphragms for transmitting sound. The respondent does not deny having infringed certain patents.

[De Villiers, C.J.: They say that these inventions patented were really matters of common knowledge.]

But they bring no evidence to prove that allegation, save the evidence of one expert.

[De Villiers, C.J.: We cannot decide this case without seeing the instruments in question.]

That is what I feel. I submit that the Court cannot decide a question affecting the validity of several patents, on the evidence of one expert. But even if the Court does not think fit to go into the whole question of the rival machines and of patents, Mr. Brittain has not put in any affidavit to show that any patent rights of his firm have been infringed by us. If the Court will not grant a perpetual interdict, I would ask for a temporary interdict to stand until we have time to institute an action. We say that our patents are good, and nothing has been shown to the contrary. The object of a patent is the protection of the rights of inventors, and this protection is all we ask.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for respondents): This application should not have been made on motion. There is no example in this Court of any similar application on such meagre affidavits. All the respondents say is that certain features of our invention are not patentable. In a matter of this kind where only a few machines have been imported into this country the Court will not interfere. Applicant should produce some technical evidence to show that his patent has been infringed.

Mr. Doyle does not profess to be an expert. I submit applicants should be put on terms to go to trial. The whole affair is only a very paltry matter. There is only a very small stock in the country, and I submit that if applicants are really serious in seeking a remedy at law they must go to action. It is certainly no case for an interdict. There is no clear right, for the onus of proving an infringement of their patent lies with the applicants, and this onus, I submit, they have not discharged. As to the question of keeping an account of sales, that is a very small matter, and we have no objection to do so, pending an action.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In what exact point, Mr. Upington, has your patent been infringed?]

Mr. Upington: With respect to the use of a glass diaphragm, a tapering cylinder, and the use of soap in the manufacture of the "blank." I submit that Mr. Doyle is an expert, as was very clearly shown in Edison-Bell v. Doyle (9 Sheil, 600).

De Villiers, C.J.: The affidavit upon which the application was founded stated the points in respect of which protection was claimed for the phonograph which was then in question. If the affidavit had stated in what respects the instruments sold by the defendants infringed any of the patents, the Court would have had something more tangible to go upon. The Court should have had before them specimens of each kind of phonograph, and there ought to have been somebody present to explain to the Court the point in respect of which there had been an infringement of patents by the respondent company. Upon the affidavits the evidence is certainly too weak to justify the Court in granting an interdict. There is nothing upon the records of the previous case to show that the respondents were selling phonographs similar to the one in question, so that that case can not be taken as a precedent. It is quite clear that the applicants are not likely to suffer much damage from the action of the respondents in the present case, because it appears that the defendants have only a few of the machines left. The utmost the Court can do will be to order the respondents to keep an account of all sales of phonographs, such as those described in the affidavit, and the Court will not grant the interdict, but leave it to the applicants to bring their action. Full particulars will be required, and certainly more particulars than have been furnished in the present case. The respondents will keep an account of all sales effected by them, and as to the costs of the application, the Court is not in a position to judge as to who should pay the costs. The Court will therefore refuse to grant the interdict, and let the question of costs stand over.

MIRRAINE V. THE CONTROLLER OF CUSTOMS. } 1902.
 } Mar. 4th.

Import Duty—Concealment of goods—Security for costs in action against Comptroller of Customs—Act 10 of 1872, sec. 51 and 67.

M. was a passenger from England to Cape Town, and on his arrival there found that a trunk containing a certain quantity of jewellery had been seized by the Customs authorities. On the authorities aforesaid refusing to give up the trunk and instituting an action in the Supreme Court for the forfeiture of the said jewellery, applicant attempted to enter appearance to defend the said action. The Registrar of the Court, however, refused to accept such appearance unless applicant furnished security in the sum of £100, in terms of Sec. 67, Act 10 of 1872. Petitioner applied for leave to enter appearance, and defend the action without compliance with this condition.

Held, that the Court had no discretion as to the demand for security, but only as to the amount, and that under the circumstances the security demanded was not excessive.

This was an application on notice calling upon the defendant to show cause why the applicant should not be allowed to enter appearance and defend the action instituted by the respondent against him for the forfeiture of certain jewellery.

The applicant alleged that he arrived from England on 21st January last by the Gaika, accompanied by his wife and children; that he brought with him a quantity of valuable jewellery, which was packed in a trunk among his luggage; that when he arrived at the Custom House to check his luggage, he found that this trunk was missing, and his wife and son at once made complaint to the Customs official in charge of the warehouse, informing him that the trunk, which contained jewellery, clothing, etc., was missing; that they were subsequently referred to the Union-Castle Company's claim office in Cape Town, and from there back to the Docks again, ultimately finding the trunk in possession of the Customs authorities at the latter place; that for some reason unknown to him this trunk with the jewellery therein was seized by the Collector of Customs, who refused to give up possession of it, and he has instituted an action against the appellant for the forfeiture of the jewellery in terms of section 51 of Act 10 of 1872. The applicant denied that the jewellery was in any way concealed among his luggage, or that there was any attempt on his part to obtain the passing of the jewellery through the Customs without paying duty, this being borne out by the fact that he disclosed the contents of the trunk, not only to the Customs authorities, but to the Union-Castle Company, and at the police office, at which latter place he had also made complaint. That he was desirous of defending the action instituted by the Controller of Customs, and signed a warrant authorising his attorneys to enter appearance on his behalf. The Registrar of the Court, however, refused to accept such appearance unless respondent furnished security in the sum of £100 in terms of section 67 of Act 10 of 1872. That this he was wholly unable to do, as he was not in possession of any means or property beyond personal effects and the jewellery referred to above; that he was a stranger in the Colony, and had no friends who would bind themselves on his behalf. He was living with a friend at the present time, who provided him with board and lodging, but he was not in a position to provide the necessary security. That if, therefore, he was debarred from defending the action unless he found security, his property would be condemned without being heard in his defence.

Benjamin Martin Wiggett, Customs examining officer, deposed that he had received instructions to take special precautions with the applicant, should he arrive by the Gaika, as information had been received to the effect that he intended to attempt to smuggle some jewellery through the Customs. Nineteen (19) packages or cases belonging to the applicant were brought up to the Customs Baggage Warehouse by the officials of the Harbour Board on the 23rd January, in accordance with the usual custom. Shortly after, the applicant, accompanied by his family, arrived at the warehouse, for the purpose of clearing his baggage. Deponent asked the applicant whether he had anything dutiable to declare, and that he replied that he had not. He asked him whether his baggage contained any jewellery, and he replied, "No." Deponent pointed out that, as he was a jeweller, there might be some jewellery. He insisted that there was not. Deponent carefully searched the 19 cases in the presence of the applicant, and found a fair quantity of silver and plated ware concealed in them among articles of wearing apparel, and in old pots, kettles, and boxes. If a cursory search had been made, the deponent would not have found them. After the search had been finished, the applicant said that a Saratoga trunk belonging to him was missing. He appeared to be particularly anxious about it, as he said that it contained all the spare wearing apparel of his daughter. No trace of it could, however, be found in the warehouse. The applicant did not appear to be aware of the fact that the trunk was missing when the search began. The applicant and his family appeared at the warehouse again on the following morning to inquire about the missing trunk, and on being informed that it had not been found, the applicant's son-in-law stated that it contained the major portion of the jewellery, and that a mistake had been made. During the course of the day the missing trunk was brought up to the warehouse by the officials of the Harbour Board, and was at once sealed by the deponent. It appeared that it had been lying on the quay at which the Gaika discharged. On Monday, the 27th January, 1902, the applicant, accompanied by his son-in-law, came into the warehouse and handed over the key of the trunk. It was opened and searched in his presence, and after a diligent search, nothing but clothing could be found. The applicant was asked to point out, in order to save time, where the jewellery was secreted, and he then showed two secret panels in the tray of the trunk, in which were found 63 rings and 46 chains, all made of gold of a superior quality.

Mr. Benjamin (for the applicant): This application is made under section 67 of Act 10 of 1872. I admit that we cannot ask leave to enter appearance without giving some security, but the Government are already in possession of the jewellery, which, of course, is some security, and indeed, is the only security applicant can give. He is only a poor man, dependent upon the hospitality of his friends, and, if required to find the security which has been demanded, the maximum security exigible, applicant's property may be forfeited without his having had any opportunity of being heard in his defence. This would be most inequitable.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Of course the Government have some security, in the shape of the rings and chains.]

Mr. Sheil, K.C. (for respondent) relied upon Graham v. Leri (Buch., 1873-98, and 1874 p. 8).

[Maasdorp, J.: What security do you require for costs?]

Not less than £100.

De Villiers, C.J.: The language of the section is imperative, and the Court has no discretion in the matter; the only question is as to the amount of security which the applicant should find. Under the circumstances, we are of opinion that security for the sum of £100 is not too much. The application must be refused, with costs.

GINSBURG V. CHURCH. { 1902.
Mar. 4th.

This was an application to have a rule nisi calling upon respondent to show cause on the 27th February why attachment of certain moneys lying to the credit of defendant, in the hands of the Civil Commissioner of Barkly East, should not be made absolute. The rule nisi was granted on February 6, 1902, in consequence of the Sheriff having made a return of nulla bona to a writ issued against the goods and chattels of defendant for the satisfaction of a judgment debt. On the motion of Mr. C. W. de Villiers the rule was made absolute.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Van der Byl and Van der Horst. Respondent in default.]

LYON V. BLACK.—PEABODY V. BLACK.

Mr. Gardiner applied for a postponement of the trial in the above cases. Mr. Benjamin appeared on behalf of the respondents.

The Court decided to set the cases down for hearing in the August term. The application was granted accordingly, the costs of the application to be costs in the cause.

SEBBA V. HIGHMAN. { 1902.
Mar. 4th.

This was an application for an order restraining respondent from collecting certain rents.

From applicant's affidavit it appeared that on February 4, 1901, he and respondent entered into a joint agreement to acquire certain property known as "Inverly Place," Cape Town, respondent to acquire two-thirds of the said property and applicant one-third. Respondent was to keep all accounts and to receive and disburse moneys, and neither party was to dispose of his share without the consent of the other party. Applicant being dissatisfied with respondent's method of keeping the accounts, it was agreed to refer the whole matter of accounts to

Mr. Maynard Nash. Meanwhile respondent had sold the property to one Drake, had given him possession, and Drake was now drawing the rent. Applicant had protested against these proceedings, and now asked for an interdict to restrain respondent from collecting any further rents, and an order upon him to hand over all rents already collected to Mr. Kempton Jones, that he might hand over the same to Mr. Maynard Nash, and that the future collection of rents should be entrusted to Mr. K. Jones until such time as Mr. Nash should have given his award.

The affidavit of respondent stated that he (respondent) had had to raise money on the property aforesaid, and also on some of his own private property by way of mortgage in order to erect certain 12 cottages on the aforesaid property. That respondent personally purchased the property in question, raised the necessary funds, superintended the erection of the cottages, without any assistance whatever from applicant, save £253 by him contributed towards the purchase of the property and the building of the cottages.

Respondent offered to submit his accounts to Mr. Nash, and should he (Mr. Nash) find any inaccuracy therein to pay to applicant any sum that might be found due to him. The only rents due and unpaid were those accruing for the current month (£53), which probably would not be paid before March 15th prox., by which time Mr. Nash would be able to give his award. Respondent denied that he sold the property to Drake without applicant's consent and authority.

In an answering affidavit, applicant merely repeated in substance the chief allegations made in his original affidavit.

Mr. Benjamin moved, and Mr. Wilford appeared for respondent. The Court refused the application, with costs.

DA COSTA V. DA COSTA. { 1902.
Mar. 6th.

This was an application for a commission de bene esse to take evidence in London of one Nancy Garwood and other witnesses in an action for divorce brought by applicant against his wife, on the ground of misconduct. Defendant went to London in 1899, and it was alleged that she had committed adultery there. The Court originally ordered that personal service should be made on defendant, but there was considerable difficulty in doing this, there being strong evidence that she was trying to evade service, so the Court ordered that a registered letter be sent her. Applicant was not certain that he could make service in the present instance, but he could send a registered letter to the same address as before—41, Russell-terrace, Bush Hill, Enfield, Middlesex.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for applicant; defendant barred.

The application was granted, notice to be sent by registered letter to defendant notifying her where the evidence was to be taken.

SAALFELD V. SAALFELD.

This was an application for leave for substituted service.

Personal service had been found impossible. The plaintiff was the wife, and she sued her husband, Maurice Felix Saalfeld, for an order for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for divorce, on the ground of his desertion. When the case was previously before the Court an order for restitution of conjugal rights before February 13 was made, and the Court directed that personal service should be effected on the defendant. The notice was forwarded to London, but the defendant's address could not be ascertained. The plaintiff's attorneys communicated with the defendant's brother, but he stated that he had not heard from his brother, and the attorneys stated that he did not seem inclined to give information as to the whereabouts of the defendant.

Mr. Buchanan, for applicant. Respondent in default.

The Court ordered that the rule should be served on the defendant's brother, and amended the previous order by directing that the defendant should return to or receive the plaintiff on or before May 15, failing which, to show cause on May 15 why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF
B. J. VAN DE SANDT VAN NOORDEN.

Mr. C. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the petitioner to sign a power of attorney to enable him to pass a bond to take transfer of certain property.

The order was granted.

RE ESTATE STRYDOM. { 1902.
Mar. 6th.

Will—Interpretation.

This was an application by the executor of the estate in question for an order declaring that his reading of a certain clause of the testator's will was correct. The petition of Gerhardus Philipus

Kemp, in his capacity as the executor of the estate of the late Wessel Marthinus Lourens Strydom—showed:

1. That the late W. M. L. Strydom is registered owner of (1) certain 1-30th share of the farm Krakeel River, (2) 1-30th share of the farm Stoiekloof, (3) 1-13th share of the farm Vryheid, all situate in the division of Uniondale, by deeds of transfer, dated January 11, 1842, and August 7, 1854.

2. The late W. M. L. Strydom was married twice, first to Johanna Magdalena Strydom, and secondly to Adriana Jacomina Strydom. Both these marriages were in community of property.

3. Johanna Magdalena Strydom, the first wife of the said W. M. L. Strydom, died intestate on November 28, 1858, leaving four sons and two daughters surviving her. Of these children, one Johannes Petrus died on June 12, 1898, leaving no issue. And one Wessel Marthinus Strydom died on October 4, 1889, leaving issue. Adriana J. Strydom died in June, 1900, leaving two sons and two daughters surviving her. She made a will, a copy of which is hereto annexed, marked B.

4. The late W. M. L. Strydom died on January 3, 1890, leaving a will made by him with his second wife, marked A.

Some time after the death of his first wife, the late W. M. L. Strydom handed over to his children by his first marriage the half share of the above landed property, and the house on the property in which he resided. He built another house, in which he resided with his second wife.

No transfer of the landed property was ever passed to the children, and no account dealing with such land was ever filed with the Master. The only account ever filed by the said Strydom is hereto annexed, marked C.

Your petitioner has now to pass transfer of the landed property to the heirs. He is advised that he should pass these transfers as follows, viz.,

(1) To the children of the marriage of W. M. L. Strydom, and J. M. Strydom, one-sixtieth share of the farm Krakeel River, one-sixtieth share of the farm Stoiekloof, one-twenty-sixth share of the farm De Vryheid.

(2) To the four sons of the marriage of W. M. L. Strydom and J. M. Strydom 1-120th share of the farm Krakeel River, 1-120th share of the farm Stoiekloof, 1-52nd share of the farm De Vryheid.

(3) To the two sons of the marriage of W. M. L. Strydom and A. J. Strydom 1-120th share of the farm Krakeel River, 1-120th share of the farm Stoiekloof, 1-52nd share of the farm De Vryheid.

Your petitioner is desirous of carrying out this advice, and has had deeds of transfer drawn as above tendered to the Registrar of Deeds, but these deeds have been rejected, as your petitioner understands that the Registrar is not satisfied that the transfers as drawn are correct. In addition to this, your petitioner has learned that some of the heirs, children of the 2nd marriage, are dissatisfied with his action, and claim that they are entitled to a larger share of the landed property.

Your petitioner has caused notice of his intention to apply to the Court to be served on all the children of the late W. M. L. Strydom, with the exception of one who is in the Orange River Colony, and whose whereabouts are doubtful; and on the executor of the second wife's estate.

Wherefore your petitioner prays for an order:

(a) Declaring that your petitioner is correct in passing transfer to the heirs in manner set forth above.

(b) Authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass such transfers.

(c) Allowing the costs of this application to be charged against the estate, and for alternative relief

THE WILL B.

I, the undersigned Adriana Jacomina Rademeyer, surviving spouse of the late W. M. L. Strydom, of Krakeel Rivier district, Uniondale, giving full force and effect to our joint will, dated May 14, 1869, whereby half of the immovable property is bequeathed to the sons born of the first marriage, which comes to them as their mother's portion, and the other or remaining half is bequeathed to the sons born of this our marriage, subject to my life interest and usufruct. I hereby declare this to be my testament and last will.

I hereby nominate and appoint my two daughters, Rosina Elizabeth, married in community of property to Johan Andries Kretzinger, and Margareta Aletta as my sole and universal heirs of all my goods, movable as well as immovable legacies and credits, nothing excepted, and to be possessed by them after my death as free property without the interference of any one.

As executor of this my will and administrator of my estate and effects, I nominate and appoint Johan Andries Kretzinger, my son-in-law, with power of assumption.

This signed, etc.

THE WILL A.

We, the undersigned W. M. L. Strydom and Adriana Jacomina Rademeyer, lawful spouses, living on the farm named Krakeel Rivier, District George, have on this May 14, 1869, agreed to dispose of the goods to be left by us at our death, and do so this day of our own free will, without the advice whatever of any one.

We appoint each other reciprocally, the first of us dying, the survivor as universal executor, or executor of the goods to be left at our death. And now as to the appointing of heirs; the survivor shall have the full and undisturbed possession of our immovable goods, whereby we mean the half of that portion of the farm Krakeel Rivier, whereof we are at present the owners, while the remaining half shall go to our sons, or male children born of our first marriage. The last mentioned shall also be the heirs to the dwelling-house, with the exception of one room, which shall be the undisturbed property of the survivor. Further, it is our last wish that the above-mentioned immovable goods shall never be alienated, but shall, on the death of the survivor, go to our son, or sons, born of our second marriage, and in case these should die and leave no male heirs, the above-mentioned immovable goods shall go to the above-mentioned sons of our first marriage, or their lawful heirs.

Further, we shall dispose of our movable goods, under which we wish included a certain erf, or plot of land situate in the village Haarlem, as further described in the transfer to be found amongst our papers.

We wish the survivor after the death of the first dying to be obliged and bound, to hold within the period of three months a public sale of all our movable goods, but from this shall be excluded: (1) The above-named erf, or plot of ground aforesaid; (2) 100 sheep-ewes, and failing this £50 sterling, which money shall come out of the proceeds of the said public sale;

(3) the silver table service. These three said things shall be given as a legacy to the survivor.

After the deduction thereof, all the movable goods as above-mentioned shall be sold, and the proceeds—in money—thereof shall be divided in two equal shares: the half thereof shall be the portion of the survivor, and the other half shall be distributed in equal shares amongst our children born of the first and second marriage.

It is further our will and desire that no one shall interfere with our estate, minor child or children, except the above-mentioned executor or executrix.

We further reserve to ourselves the right to so add to alter this above-mentioned last will as we may deem fit.

May 14th, 1869.

(Sgd.) W. A. L. STRYDOM.

A. J. RADEMEYER.

The report of the Registrar of Deeds was as follows:

The late W. M. L. Strydom was twice married in community of property, and left issue by both marriages. His first wife died intestate, but the second wife, who survived him, executed two wills; the first jointly with her husband, and the later one individually.

The executor proposes to transfer to the children of the first marriage—daughters as well as sons—one half-share of all the land belonging to the joint estate of their parents, and as the mother died intestate, I am of opinion that that is his proper course. But he desires also to transfer to the sons of the first marriage half of the landed property belonging to the joint estate of their father and step-mother, his contention being that they are entitled thereto under the joint will. In my opinion, however, the sons of the second marriage were by the will instituted sole heirs of all the immovable property belonging to such joint estate, and I am therefore opposed to transfer of any shares to the sons of the first marriage being effected, so far as that estate is concerned.

I should add that the landed estate consists of shares in the farms Stoiekloof and Vryheid, besides a share in the farm Krakeel Rivier, but apparently in applying the latter name, testators intended to include all their property.

The Master's report was as follows:

The first wife, J. M. Strydom died intestate, leaving four sons and two daughters. Therefore the father, W. M. L. Strydom, became entitled to half of the immovable property, and the other half devolved on the six children. But one of the sons, Johannes Petrus, died on June 12, 1898, and left no children: the whole of his property therefore reverted to the two brothers and two sisters, for one of his brothers, W. M. L. Strydom, jun., died before his brother on October 4, 1899, and therefore no vestment took place from the estate of the brother. W. M. L. Strydom left four children, all of whom are minors.

Now, as regards the disposition of the other half of the properties with the testator's second wife:

The testator could not dispose of the half of the property of his first wife, who died intestate: that already belonged to his children. That this, however, was his intention is quite clear on reading the will of his surviving spouse (his second wife), who confirms the joint will—"by which half of the immovable property is bequeathed to the sons born of the first marriage, which comes to them as their mother's portion, and the remaining half is bequeathed to the sons of their own marriage.

But if your lordships are of opinion that as the testator had no power to dispose of the half share of the property devolving on his children of the first marriage from the intestate estate of their mother, therefore it must be deemed that he intended to bequeath to his four sons of his first, and to his two sons of the second marriage his half share, i.e., the remaining half share of the properties; then the children of the first marriage receive, except the minor children of W. M. L. Strydom, jun. (a) in the first distribution the half share they are entitled to; and (b) in the second distribution to the extent of $\frac{1}{4}$ of the whole estate, as it stood at the first marriage according to the distribution proposed in paragraphs (1), (2) and (3) of section 4 of the petition.

Mr. Searle (for applicant): The whole point is as to clause 4 in the first will of the husband and of the second wife. All the heirs have been served with notice save one who is in the Orange River Colony, and whose whereabouts are unknown, and another who is married to petitioner. The question is: what under this clause are the rights of the children by the first marriage?

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are they minors?]

I do not think they can be, but possibly some of the children of the second marriage may be, though I do not think they are. The real question is, did the children of the first marriage succeed ab intestato to half the property, or did the testators under the second will attempt to deal with the whole estate. The presumption is that each dealt only with the half estate. Our contention is that the children of the first marriage should get $\frac{1}{2}$ plus $\frac{1}{4}$. The Registrar holds that they should only get half, and take nothing under the will. The only support any such contention could receive would be, if it had been said in the second will that the children of the first marriage were heirs ab intestato of the mother.

The matter was ordered to stand over.

Sale and Purchase—Time.

Where a vendor sells perishable goods to a purchaser, who does not take delivery at the time specified in the contract of purchase and sale, the vendor is justified in selling the said goods to a third person, but is bound to account to the original purchaser for any profits he may have made over and above the price paid by such purchaser. Should the vendor lose on such transaction, Semble, he would have a right to claim from the original purchaser the difference between the price such purchaser agreed to pay and that which was actually realized.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the R.M. of Caledon, in an action in which plaintiff claimed £7 with interest à importe moroe as and for damages sustained:

(1) By reason of defendant having in or about September, 1901, wrongfully and unlawfully sold and delivered to a third party certain 13 bags of onions, which onions plaintiff had previously purchased from him the defendant on or about September 17, 1901, by which wrongful and unlawful act of defendant plaintiff has been deprived of his due and just profits derivable from the said sale.

(2) The retention of certain 13 bags left by plaintiff with defendant for the reception of the said onions, which bags are valued at 4s. 6d., and which defendant neglects and refuses to return to plaintiff.

The Magistrate gave judgment for the defendant with costs. Against this judgment plaintiff now appealed.

The Magistrate's reasons were as follows:

"This was a verbal contract for the sale and purchase of a certain quantity of onions. The main issue of the case turned upon the date of sale and the date of delivering.

"The plaintiff in his evidence stated that he purchased the onions from defendant on September 10, 1901, and agreed to take delivery about a week after. This would be about the 17th idem, but instead of that he did not send for the onions until September 27, 1901. I therefore held that plaintiff had committed a breach of contract and that defendant was therefore legally justified in considering the contract at an end, and that he could dispose of the onions elsewhere, and I therefore gave judgment for defendant with costs of suit.

"In conclusion, the plaintiff's evidence was most unsatisfactory. He first swore positively that the purchase took place on September 17, 1901, and after giving his evidence, but before plaintiff's attorney had closed his case, he applied for an amendment to the summons from the 17th to the 10th September, which I refused, as I considered that defendant would be prejudiced by the amendment at that stage of the case, the main issue resting on the date of purchase and date of delivery.

Mr. Benjamin (for appellant): In this case time was not of the essence of the contract. No definite day was fixed for the taking of delivery. The only mention of time was "when he came to take Botha's onions."

[De Villiers, C.J.: Were the onions ascertained and set apart?]

He purchased all the onions in the store. The contract of sale had thus been completed, and the onions were at the risk of the purchaser.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was any specified number of bags bought?]

No, plaintiff says that there were from 20 to 25 bags before they began to rot. There were only 16 bags sound.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If defendant sold for less than you could have done, you would have to pay for the 20 bags—you ought, at all events, to pay the difference. Would not the vendor be entitled to sell for the benefit of the purchaser, if the onions were becoming rotten?]

No, I submit that the risk had passed to the buyer, that he was bound to take the onions aforesaid, and that plaintiff was bound to deliver them. Even if a time of delivery was fixed, it does not follow that it was of the essence of the contract. Addison on Contracts (p. 286, 3rd Edition). Bettini v. Gye (1 Q.B.D., 183). Defendant was not prejudiced by plaintiff's failure to accept on a particular day. As to the amount of damages, he sold at 30s. a bag, on which he realised 10s. profit.

Mr. Searle (for appellant): We say that time was of the essence of the contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Did he buy all the onions?]

The summons says he bought certain 13 bags, which seem to have been all that were marketable.

[Mr. Searle was stopped by the Court.]

De Villiers, C.J.: It is plaintiff's case that he bought all the onions in defendant's place on a certain day. According to defendant, there were on that day 15 to 20 bags of onions, but it is impossible to quite say how many. A time was fixed—that is certain—and on the day fixed the onions were not fetched by plaintiff as he had agreed to do. From that time the onions began to rot. Now the question is, What ought the vendor to do? In my opinion the vendor was quite justified in selling these onions, and I think he was bound to account to the purchaser for any profits he might have made over and above the price for which the onions had been bought by the purchaser. But in point of fact the loser was the seller, and possibly defendant would have a claim for the difference between the amount for which he sold the onions to plaintiff and the amount he was paid for them after plaintiff failed to fetch them. But that question does not arise, because no claim has been made by defendant. Plaintiff had not, at all events, proved he sustained damages, and even if the Magistrate's decision went on different grounds to the decision of this Court, plaintiff would not be entitled to succeed. I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp concurred.

Brothel—Common Law—Nuisance.

Appellants had been severally charged in the Magistrate's Court with keeping brothels to the damage and common nuisance of persons residing in their respective neighbourhoods and of those passing thereby. Each of the accused had been sentenced to a term of imprisonment with hard labour.

Held (on appeal), that as the keeping of a brothel in such wise as to be a public nuisance is an offence at Common Law, and as the evidence in each of the above cases disclosed that all and several of the houses in question had been so kept, the appeals must be dismissed.

The above appeals were all from women convicted in the Magistrate's Court of the Cape under the Common Law of keeping brothels in such a manner as to be a public nuisance. In the 1st, 3rd and 4th cases the appellants had been sentenced each to six weeks' imprisonment, and in the second case to two months' imprisonment, in all cases with hard labour.

The charge in the Court below was that "— did wrongfully and unlawfully for gain, keep and maintain a certain house, to wit, No.— Street, with intent and purpose that women might, for hire, lend their bodies to the carnal knowledge of divers persons in the said house, in which house certain women did upon divers dates between the dates aforesaid so lend their bodies to the great damage and common nuisance of persons there residing and passing."

The cases were remitted by the Attorney-General to be tried by the Magistrate under Act 43 of 1885. In each case the evidence went to show that appellants had solicited from the windows and stoep of their respective houses, and that their neighbours complained of these practices. Some rebutting evidence was called to show that they were decently dressed, and that other neighbours did not deem them or their respective houses nuisances.

Mr. Wilkinson appeared for the appellants, and Mr. H. Jones for the Crown.

As regarded the appellant Cohen, Mr. Wilkinson stated that she had pleaded guilty in the Court below under the impression that she was charged under the Municipal Regulations, and not under Common Law. (Under the Cape Town Municipal Regulations, the keeping of a brothel under any circumstances is an offence. Under the Common Law it is not an offence unless the house is a nuisance.)

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is a plea on record; we cannot go into that now, unless you take the point that she pleaded to what is no offence in law.]

Mr. Wilkinson: The evidence is that this house (viz., that of Cohen) was not a nuisance. The witnesses for the Crown say that they saw no indecent behaviour on the part of the women. They were all dressed in the ordinary way. The only allegation against them is that they called men in from the street, but there is no proof that they did so for any immoral purpose.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There can be no doubt about that.]

But I submit that the keeping of a brothel is not an offence at Common Law unless it is a nuisance.

[De Villiers, C.J.: This house is a nuisance to the people opposite.]

Then it is only a private nuisance, and their remedy would be by injunction, and not by criminal prosecution. Keeping a brothel is not per se an offence at Common Law. Q. v. Paulse (9 Juta, 422). But in that case the brothel was a public nuisance. See Van Leeuwen (V. 2, p. 311), Van der Linden (2, 7, 5).

[Maasdorp, J.: These authorities do not say that it is no offence, but that the police sometimes shut their eyes to it.]

It is only an offence if it be a public nuisance.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is it not a public nuisance if women stand at the door and solicit?]

Even if the crime is indictable, does it follow that it is so under Common Law? The point has never been raised as to whether Act 26 of 1892 does not supersede the Common Law. I submit it does. Under this Act the whole Government of the town is handed over to the Municipality, and the prosecution should have been under this Act. See the preamble to the Act, and also Section 170. Sub-section (8).

[De Villiers, C.J.: I do not see that the summons discloses any offence. There is nothing about soliciting in it, or about nuisance. The mere keeping of a brothel is a statutory offence, but it is no offence under the Common Law unless it be a nuisance. Why were these people not prosecuted under the statute?]

Mr. H. Jones: It was not considered that a fine of £10 was a sufficient punishment for the offence. If a brothel is a nuisance, the keeper can be prosecuted under the Common Law. Here it has been shown in each case to have been a nuisance. As to the form of the charge, it is the ordinary one, and was used in the case of Q. v. Paulse and Q. v. Sinclair (heard at the Criminal Sessions in 1889). If the charge is in order, the Court cannot interfere in the first case at all events, for in that the accused pleaded guilty.

Mr. Wilkinson (in reply): The charge was not quite the same in Q. v. Paulse, and that case does not govern this.

De Villiers, C.J.: The keeping of brothels is not an offence in common law, unless they are kept in such a way as to be a public nuisance. The only doubt which arises in my mind in this case is whether the charge is sufficiently clear that it was a public nuisance, and I think, reading the charge as a whole, we may take it that it is sufficiently clear that it was a nuisance which was charged against her, because the charge is that she did commit the crime of keeping a disorderly house to the great damage and common nuisance of His Majesty's subjects. Now reading the charge as a whole, I think it is a sufficient indication to the defendant that she is charged with keeping this brothel in such a manner as to be a nuisance to the public, and to this charge she pleaded guilty. The only remaining question is whether the evidence supports the charge. Upon this point we have the evidence of several witnesses. His lordship then proceeded to read extracts from the evidence, and continued: That is a sufficient indication as to how this place is carried on. It was undoubtedly a nuisance to the public, and it was especially a nuisance to the people living in the neighbourhood. In my opinion, therefore, the conviction was right, and the appeal must be dismissed. Mr. Wilkinson admitted that the other cases were similar, and argued briefly on the facts in Meyer's case.

[Appellants' Attorneys: Meyer, J. J. Michau, Cohen, Zerist, and Lazarus, Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller.]

His Lordship said: I do not think there is anything to distinguish these cases from the one just decided by the Court, and for the reasons given in that case, I think the appeals should be dismissed.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp concurred.

REX V. JACOBS.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Acting Resident Magistrate of the Cape in a case in which two natives, Jacobs, the appellant, and Zaaglan were charged with the theft of a purse containing £14. Jacobs was convicted, and the other man acquitted.

Mr. Wilkinson appeared for the appellant; Mr. Howel Jones for the Crown.

The evidence was to the effect that at his place of work the complainant, a native named Jim Crow, had taken off his clothes and belt. He forgot to put on his belt, and left it there. Next morning the belt was gone. The accused Jacobs was working at the place, and a witness named John Nataam said he saw Crow take off his clothes and district; the defendant has failed to prove that.

THEOPULO V. JOHNSON. } 1902.
 } Mar. 6th.

This was an appeal from a decision by the Resident Magistrate of the Cape Division.

The appellant was sued in the Resident Magistrate's Court by respondent for the sum of £8 7s., being balance of account. The Magistrate gave judgment for plaintiff, and from that judgment the present appeal was brought. When the case was heard by the Magistrate, the respondent Johnson said he had demanded payment of the account, which was for balance of goods sold and delivered—but defendant said the times were bad, and asked for time. Defendant, who carried on a general dealer's business at 119, Long-street, alleged that the order for the goods was given for the previous tenant, one Garnio, for whom he had acted as manager, and from whom he had bought the business. The Magistrate's reasons were as follows: "I find that defendant held himself out as the owner of the shop, and induced plaintiff to supply him with the goods in question."

Mr. Benjamin (for appellant): The Magistrate was wrong as to the question of fact. The plaintiff never held himself out as owner of the shop. The goods in question had been ordered by the previous owner; plaintiff was a mere manager. Plaintiff evidently had his doubts about defendant's position, for while one of his accounts is made out in defendant's name, the other is in blank. It is true that appellant was occasionally in the shop, but it cannot be inferred from the fact of his presence there that he held himself out as the owner.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The Magistrate found as a fact that he had held himself out as the owner.]

In order to saddle defendant with liability he must have held himself out as the owner at the time the goods were purchased. This he clearly did not do. Plaintiff did not know who was the owner of the shop, or why should he have made out his account in blank? The car-driver must be wrong in his dates when he says that defendant took over the shop in February.

[De Villiers, C. J.: We have only defendant's own statement that he took over the shop in August, and his conduct does not bear out his statement.

Credit was given to the owner of the shop, whoever he might be. The receipt for the price of the shop dated August 15 shows it was not taken over till then, and bears out defendant's evidence.

Mr. Close (for respondent) was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is only defendant's own statement that he did not take over the shop until August 15, 1899. The receipt produced, which was to the effect that Garnio sold the shop to the applicant for the sum of £140, does not state when the sale took place. From all that appears on this note, the sale may have taken place in January, and the receipt have been given in August. At all events, upon an important point of this kind, the least one can expect appellant to do is to produce Garnio. While these goods were being supplied by plaintiff, the defendant was, at all events, in charge of the shop, and when asked by plaintiff to pay the money he promised to do so, saying that when times were better he would pay. This statement does not constitute absolute proof of debt, but, taken in connection with the rest of the evidence, it justified the Magistrate in coming to the conclusion that credit was given to the defendant. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp concurred.

WILSON AND OTHERS V. } 1902.
 } Mar. 6th
 BRUTON.

Funeral Expenses — Mourning Clothing for Widow.

Defendant had purchased from plaintiff's certain mourning clothing on the death of her husband, in her own name and without the sanction of the executors of her late husband's estate.

is a matter of impossibility for the defendant to satisfy himself that plaintiff's husband is at present on the farm. He declares that plaintiff and her husband reside in this district, and in the absence of proof to the contrary, and of evidence that the assistance of plaintiff's husband has been solicited and has been refused, I accepted that statement, and allowed the exception. In regard to the second exception, the defendant is sued for a debt which was contracted by him whilst carrying on business in the Transvaal prior to the war. He did not leave the Transvaal of his own free will, but was compelled to do so after the war had broken out, and he came to this district for refuge. He states positively that it is his intention to return to the Transvaal as soon as it is safe for him to do so. It is not stated in evidence, but defendant is at present a member of a local corps, raised for the defence of the town and district, and, as it may be disbanded at any time, it cannot, in my opinion, be said that by such employment and residence he acquires a civil domicile in this district. In support of my judgment, I may quote the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Ebert v. Goldman, given in December, 1900 (10 Sheil, 741).

Mr. Gardiner (for appellant—plaintiff in the Court below): With regard to section 51 of Act 20, 1856, it throws the onus of showing that a married woman's husband is in the district on the defendant, and that his assistance has not been sought. In the present case this onus was not discharged. The first exception, therefore, was bad. As to the question of domicile, Ebert v. Goldman (10 Sheil, 741) has been cited, but this case is by no means a strong one on the question. A case in which the Court went very far as to domicile was Hudson v. Smythe (10 Sheil, 461). In both these cases the defendant swore that he intended to return to the Transvaal, and yet the change of domicile was presumed. Here he does not swear that he intends to return. His acts show an intention of acquiring domicile. He wishes to buy property here, and he refuses to swear that he intends to return to the Transvaal.

Mr. Buchanan (for respondent): Defendant is not domiciled here. There are only three grounds on which the Court can exercise jurisdiction, viz.: (1) Domicile; (2) the possession of immovable property within the jurisdiction, or (3) the fact that this is the locus contractus vel locus solutionis. Here, admittedly, domicile is the only ground for suing in this Court; but a refugee, who is in a place against his will cannot acquire a domicile there—Dacey, Conflict of Laws (p. 142). The Magistrate found as a fact that respondent was not domiciled in this colony.

[Maasdorp, J.: What do you say about debts which are contracted by a man in a country where he is not domiciled?]

In that case he can be sued in the local courts, because the country in which he is living is the locus contractus. Here it is not, as the "Good Fors" were made in the Transvaal, and are payable there. There is no indication of a change of domicile in this case, and the judgment of the Magistrate on both exceptions should be upheld.

Mr. Gardiner (in reply): The presumption is that a man is domiciled where he is resident, and that change of residence connotes change of domicile; it is for the man who changes his residence to prove that he has not changed his domicile.

De Villiers, C.J.: It seems that this debt was incurred in the Transvaal, and if the defendant had not come to this colony temporarily, the proper place of suit would be in the Transvaal. But the defendant has been in this colony, though temporarily. He was driven away from the Transvaal by the King's enemies, and he was in this colony by compulsion, and he states his intention to go back to the Transvaal. It is true that in one part of his evidence he says: "I cannot swear I won't go back to Mooiplaats," but that does not alter his intention of going back to the Transvaal, which is his residence. Under these circumstances I think the defendant could not be sued in the Court below. Different considerations might have arisen if the debt had been incurred in this colony, but upon that I need say nothing more. Seeing that the debt was incurred outside the Colony, that the defendant was here compulsorily, and that he intended to go back to the Transvaal, I think the Magistrate was right in deciding that he had no jurisdiction. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs. In regard to the other point, I do not agree with the Magistrate as to the onus. I think it is not sufficiently proved that the husband is in the district; the defendant has failed to prove that.

It is true that appellant was occasionally in the shop, but it cannot be inferred from the fact of his presence there that he held himself out as the owner.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The Magistrate found as a fact that he had held himself out as the owner.]

In order to saddle defendant with liability he must have held himself out as the owner at the time the goods were purchased. This he clearly did not do. Plaintiff did not know who was the owner of the shop, or why should he have made out his account in blank? The car-driver must be wrong in his dates when he says that defendant took over the shop in February.

[De Villiers, C. J.: We have only defendant's own statement that he took over the shop in August, and his conduct does not bear out his statement.

Credit was given to the owner of the shop, whoever he might be. The receipt for the price of the shop dated August 15 shows it was not taken over till then, and bears out defendant's evidence.

Mr. Close (for respondent) was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: There is only defendant's own statement that he did not take over the shop until August 15, 1899. The receipt produced, which was to the effect that Garnio sold the shop to the applicant for the sum of £140, does not state when the sale took place. From all that appears on this note, the sale may have taken place in January, and the receipt have been given in August. At all events, upon an important point of this kind, the least one can expect appellant to do is to produce Garnio. While these goods were being supplied by plaintiff, the defendant was, at all events, in charge of the shop, and when asked by plaintiff to pay the money he promised to do so, saying that when times were better he would pay. This statement does not constitute absolute proof of debt, but, taken in connection with the rest of the evidence, it justified the Magistrate in coming to the conclusion that credit was given to the defendant. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp concurred.

WILSON AND OTHERS V. } 1902.
BRUTON } Mar. 6th

Funeral Expenses — Mourning
Clothing for Widow.

Defendant had purchased from plaintiff's certain mourning clothing on the death of her husband, in her own name and without the sanction of the executors of her late husband's estate.

Held, on appeal, that she and not the estate of the deceased was liable for the said clothing.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Simon's Town.

The appellants, Messrs. Wilson, Miller and Gilmore, had sued the defendant, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Bruton, in the Resident Magistrate's Court at Simon's Town, for the recovery of the sum of £13 10s. for goods sold and delivered. The defendant stated that on the death of her husband, the late landlord of the Cosmopolitan Hotel, Simon's Town, it was necessary for her to obtain wearing apparel (mourning) for herself and daughter, which she did from plaintiffs. She told plaintiffs that she was going to pay for the goods, but she had not got special authority from the executor to make the purchases. Defendant took exception to the summons on the ground that she was exempt from liability, and that the charge was against the estate of her late husband. The Magistrate gave judgment for defendant, holding that plaintiffs should have filed a claim against the estate in response to the notice of the executors, the Magistrate considering that everything essential for the interment of the deceased—which would have included mourning for his family—should be borne by the estate.

Mr. Wilkinson (for appellant—plaintiff in the Court below).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Do you admit that the estate was liable for this mourning?]

No, the estate has nothing to do with this case. We gave credit to Mrs. Bruton personally. The mourning was not ordered by the executors, and even if it had been, it could not have been charged to the estate. Respondent never told appellants that she was purchasing on behalf of the estate, and it was not till her letter of February 16 was received that they had any idea that she disputed the account. Section 29 of Act 104 of 1833 would not have justified the executors in paying for these articles.

De Villiers, C.J.: So far as the evidence goes, it appears that the defendant, after the death of her husband, bought some wearing apparel from the plaintiffs. She bought it in her own name, and not on behalf of the estate; nor indeed could she buy on behalf of the estate, because she was not executor, and had not obtained the consent of the executors to purchase the goods. Credit was therefore given by the plaintiffs to the defendant, and the defendant is the only person whom the plaintiffs can sue. The Magistrate held that the estate was liable. In my opinion the Magistrate was wholly wrong. The plaintiffs can only look to the defendant, and to no one else. The fact that the person who supplies the funeral has first charge upon the estate for funeral expenses does not affect the case. The exception will be disallowed, and the appeal allowed, with costs in this Court, and judgment will be entered for plaintiffs, with costs in the Court below.

OBLEWITZ V. CURTIS. { 1902.

Jurisdiction — Resident Magistrate's Court.

In an action in a Resident Magistrate's Court for the recovery of the price of goods sold and delivered in excess of £20, the Resident Magistrate has no jurisdiction if the defendant pleads a bona fide claim in reconvention for a liquidated debt in excess of the plaintiff's claim.

This was an appeal from a judgment dated January 13, 1902, of the Court of the Acting Assistant Magistrate for the Cape, in an action in which plaintiff claimed £35 for one horse, harness, and cart sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant at his special instance and request in August, 1901, and the defendant claimed in reconvention the sum of £40 3s. for cash lent, etc., which action the Court dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

In the Court below defendant denied the debt to plaintiff, and excepted to the jurisdiction of the Court in that plaintiff was debtor to him (defendant) in the sum of £40 3s., as per account put in, and that he counter-claimed to that amount.

The chief item in this account was one of cash lent, £26. The other items were for hire of horse and harness and hire of a room.

At a subsequent adjourned sitting of the Magistrate's Court defendant withdrew his exception.

The evidence as to the sale of the horse, cart and harness to defendant was disputed by him.

In his reasons for his judgment, the Magistrate says:

"I dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction, because I found that the claim in reconvention was a bona fide one, capable of being pleaded in compensation and liquidated to an amount exceeding the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and that defendant could not give the Court jurisdiction by withdrawing the exception to it.

Mr. Currey (for the appellant): I must admit that the appellant seems to ask the Court to depart from the recognised principle that if a bona fide counter claim is advanced which exceeds the Magistrate's jurisdiction and is capable of set off against the plaintiff's claim the jurisdiction is ousted. The whole question, however, is, was this counter claim a bona fide one. The Magistrate ought to have taken some evidence on this point—De Jager v. De Jager (3 Juta, 69.) Then, again, in this case there was nothing to show that the account B was liquidated.

[Maasdorp, J.: Those items are all liquidated.]

The account is not sufficiently detailed.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The amount claimed is greater than the set-off; why should not the Magistrate have jurisdiction?]

Section 5 of Act 43 of 1885 restricts the counter-claim to one founded on a bill of exchange, promissory note, good for or other written acknowledgment.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Suppose the summons was for £35 for goods sold and delivered, defendant could set up the defence that he had paid, and therefore he can plead set-off, which is equivalent to payment.]

I was afraid I should be met with the difficulty that the claim in reconvention must be on a liquid document.

[De Villiers, C. J.: See De Wet v. Theron (9 Sheil, 452)]

Here the original claim was for £35, and the original counter-claim for £40 3s. That includes a claim of £30 for rent. That claim was probably founded on a written lease, or it would have been beyond the Magistrate's jurisdiction. Act 43 of 1885, section 5.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The defendant can set up a counter claim to the extent of £35, because compensation extinguishes the debt.]

Mr. Wilkinson (for respondent): I take it that the Magistrate's jurisdiction is ousted unless power is given to him by Section 5 of Act 43 of 1885. That section is clearly limited to the case where the counter-claim is founded upon a liquid document.

[Maasdorp, J.: If a man claimed £20 on £100 of book debts, would not the Magistrate have jurisdiction to go into the whole case?]

Yes.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then the question is, not what is the debt, but what is the claim the magistrate is asked to try.]

But here the amount of the counter-claim left was still beyond the jurisdiction.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Suppose the defence had been that the £35 had been paid, would not the Magistrate try that fact?]

No doubt.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Then set-off is on exactly the same footing.]

The argument derived from payment would prove that the Magistrate would have jurisdiction to any amount.

[De Villiers, C. J.: It is no doubt in your favour that while the jurisdiction is extended to £250 on a liquid document, it is limited to £100 in the case of an illiquid claim.]

Mr. Currey (in reply): There was no sufficient evidence before the Magistrate that the counter-claim was bona fide. No books were produced, and no dates given. The Magistrate is bound to take some evidence of the bona fides of the counter-claim.

De Villiers, C. J.: I am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed. The provisions of section 5 of Act 43 of 1885 extend the jurisdiction of every magistrate to cases founded upon bills of exchange, and so forth, in which the sum demanded shall not exceed £250. Then comes the following proviso: "Provided that as often as any action or suit shall be brought upon any liquid document for any sum exceeding £100, as aforesaid, the Resident Magistrate shall have jurisdiction to try any plea of set-off or compensation, on any cross case or claim in reconvention not exceeding the amount demanded by the plaintiff in his summons, whether the plaintiff shall or shall not succeed in proving the amount so demanded to be due." That proviso does not apply to suits for the price of goods sold and delivered beyond the ordinary jurisdiction of £20, but on principle I should have thought if the Magistrate had jurisdiction to decide a claim for the price of goods above £20 he ought to have jurisdiction to decide any counter-claim not exceeding, at all events, the amount claimed by the plaintiff. Certainly where, as in the present case, the counter-claim is liquidated, compensation ought to be allowed to be pleaded, for the effect of compensation is to extinguish a debt altogether pro tanto. Unfortunately, in former times the Court leaned somewhat against any extension of the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and a series of cases ending with Michiel v. Brady (3 Juta, 178), established the principle that a magistrate might refuse to exercise his extended jurisdiction if the defendant had a bona fide counter-claim which was in excess of the plaintiff's claim. In deference to those decisions I must reluctantly hold that the Court below was justified in refusing to try the case, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SEY V. THOMAS. } 1902,
} Mar. 7th.

Magistrate's Jurisdiction—Liquid Demand—Counterclaim.

S. had sued T. in the Magistrate's Court for £17 5s. 6d., work done under a written contract. T. had set up a counterclaim, composed of several items, of £78 3s. As the Magistrate found that two of these items, viz.: £17 18s. paid to a third person to remedy the defective work of S., and £5 5s., surveyor's fees, were liquidated, he held that his jurisdiction was ousted, and dismissed the case.

Held, on appeal, that as the said items of the counter claim were by way of damages, and were therefore not liquidated, the appeal must be allowed, and the case remitted back to the Magistrate on the merits.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch, sitting at Somerset West. Sey claimed £17 5s. 6d. for work done and material provided, in respect to a house which defendant was building. This work was done under written contract. Thomas counter-claimed £78 3s., and excepted to the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The Court below upheld the exception. The question was whether the counter-claim was liquidated or unliquidated, and the Magistrate held that so much was liquidated as would oust his jurisdiction. In support of his exception, defendant said that plaintiff had not done the work according to specification, and that he (defendant) had paid another man £17 18s. to complete the work. He claimed the £17 18s. paid for the work done in completing the contract, and £5 5s. for experts' fees for examination and damages caused owing to plaintiff's work being defective. The Magistrate was of opinion that the items of £17 18s. and £5 5s. were of a liquidated nature, and they amounted to a sum beyond his jurisdiction, and that as the counter-claim was a bona fide one, he held the jurisdiction was ousted.

Mr. Buchanan (for respondent): In this case the chief question is whether the counter-claim was liquidated or unliquidated. The Magistrate found that it was partly liquidated, and that the liquidated amount exceeded his jurisdiction: he therefore dismissed the case. If this amount were unliquidated he should have dismissed the counter-claim, and given judgment on the claim on convention. I submit that the £17 18s. and £5 5s., which the Magistrate held to be liquidated, were really unliquidated. If a contract is not properly carried out, and another man is brought in to complete it, we have a secondary claim in the nature of damages, being the result of a secondary obligation, such a claim is not liquidated. A sum is not liquidated because it is fixed by the one party. Here we have a surveyor charging five guineas, and a contractor £17 18s., but these are not liquidated charges, because they are not fixed by the parties to this suit. If these moneys are claimed from plaintiff they can only be claimed as damages. As to liquidated and unliquidated demands see Pothier on Obligations (par. 179) who cites the Digest (45-1-74). So here defendant practically says to plaintiff: "It is your fault that my house was not properly built, and you must pay for your default. See also Pothier (Sec. 182) on primary and secondary obligations, and on principal and accessory obligations. The new contractor bases his charges on what defendant told him he would have to do. Here there was no fixed ascertained sum, for the estimate was only that of a third party—Emsden on Building (p. 141).

[Maasdorp, J.: Do not the claims in convention and in reconvention both arise out of the same contract?]

Yes, but the Court has never admitted set-off on that account—Colonial Government v. Stevens and Another (10 Juta, 140); De Wet v. Theron (9 Sheil, 452).

Mr. H. Jones (for appellant): Defendant is claiming this money as liquidated damages. The amount due to the surveyor and to the second contractor are both fixed.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Suppose a man is injured in a railway accident, and pays £200 for medical attendance, would that be liquidated damages, as against the railway company?]

Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Yes? The Court might have to decide whether or not the amount was excessive]

In Jooste v. Petzer (11 Juta, 60) the Court went on this principle.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is it not necessary in cases of contract that the amount should be fixed by the consent of the parties, or, at least that it should be determinable?]

In Jooste v. Petzer the price of the oxen does not seem to have been so fixed.

[Maasdorp, J.: Then there was no sale.]

De Villiers, C.J.: The Magistrate, in his judgment, admits that several of the items of the counter-claim cannot be considered as in any way of a liquidated nature, but there are two items which he says are liquidated. These are the sums of £17 18s., the value of the contract entered into with another party to complete the plaintiff's defective work, and five guineas for experts' fees. In my opinion this counter-claim is a counter-claim entirely by way of damages, and it cannot be considered in any way as liquidated, more especially this item of five guineas, which is a fee which in any case would not be allowed, and if this is excluded, it would only amount to £17 18s., which would not be sufficient to exclude jurisdiction. It is said that in a case of this kind difficulty might arise as to whether the Magistrate should give judgment at all where defendant would really have a bona fide claim for damages, but I do not think any real difficulty need in practice occur. Plaintiff sues upon a contract, and he has to prove that he has performed the contract. If, before the Magistrate, the defendant proves he has had to pay another party a sum more than the amount claimed to complete the contract, that would be justification for the Magistrate holding that plaintiff was not entitled. In my opinion the Magistrate had jurisdiction in this case, and the case must therefore be remitted to him for trial on the merits. The appeal will be allowed, with costs in this Court; costs already incurred in the Court below will be costs in the cause.

REX V. WILLET. { 1902.

Liquor Law—Government Notice No. 241—Aboriginal Native—Barman.

A person whose general appearance presents the leading characteristics of an Aboriginal Native must be taken for such, and as such falls under the provisions of Government Notice No. 241, even though it may be shown that there are traces of European blood in such person.

A barman selling to a Native can be convicted under the regulations, assuming that they are not ultra vires a question not decided.

This was an appeal from a decision of the R.M. of Simon's Town. The appellant, described as "Manager of the Masonic Hotel Tap," was charged with contravening Section 1 of Government Notice 241 d—d, in that upon or about January 2, 1902, and at or near Simon's Town, in the said district, the said Thomas Willett did wrongfully and unlawfully, being then and there the manager of the licensed premises, known as the "Masonic Hotel Tap," sell, or supply to one Rose Coetzee, an aboriginal native, a certain quantity of intoxicating liquor, to wit, two bottles of brandy, known as Cape brandy, at Simon's Town aforesaid. Prisoner pleaded "Not guilty." He was found "Guilty" and fined 20s.

Rose Coetzee stated: Accused sold me two bottles of brandy on or about January 2, 1902. I am a bastard. My mother was a bastard Hottentot, and my father was a Boer. I live at Kalk Bay. I was on a visit to the Kafir Location at Simon's Town when I bought the brandy. My uterine grandfather was a Malagasy. My father and mother were married.

Martha Oliphant stated: I am a Basuto. I was with the last witness when she bought the brandy. Accused asked her where she stayed. She said "on the other side of Simon's Town." He said "I do not want to serve all the people, as I do not know them all." He did not ask what country woman or race she was. He would not serve her at first.

Nicholas Ryan stated: I would not say Rose Coetzee is a Kafir. I would call her a mixed breed. She might be a cross between white and Kafir. I would not take her to be an aboriginal native, but she resembles a Hottentot. I would have taken her to be a Cape woman.

Dr. H. Clarke (District Surgeon) stated: Rose Coetzee is very dark, and has all the characteristics of a Hottentot. She appears, however, to have some European blood. She is more of the Hottentot than of the European.

For the defence, accused stated that he was barman to Frederick Willett, who was the holder of the licence of the premises in question. He honestly believed Coetzee to be a Cape woman.

Mr. Wilkinson (for the appellant): Two questions arise in this case: (1) Was the woman to whom the liquor was sold an aboriginal native? (2) Did Willett fall under the terms of the Government notice? As to the first point, there is strong evidence that the woman was not an aboriginal native.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The Court has decided that an admixture of European blood does not prevent a person from being regarded as an aboriginal native if the features of the aborigine predominate.]

In some cases of children, one of whose parents is a European and the other a Kafir, it may well happen that in the same family some of the children will take after the white parent and others after the Kafir. Can it be said that the former are not, and their full brothers and sisters are aboriginal natives?

[De Villiers, C. J.: That was our decision.]

I think in the case referred to by your Lordship, the question was whether a whole tribe were aborigines or not. I would also point out that the regulation in question forbids aborigines and not people who look like aborigines to be served with liquor. This regulation being of a penal character should be strictly construed. Then, again, Thomas Willett is not the holder of the licence, he is only a barman. The holder of the licence is responsible, and should have been summoned, if anybody. He is liable even if he is not present in the bar when the infringement of the liquor law takes place.

Mr. H. Jones (for the Crown): The Court has always regarded the barman as equivalent to the holder of the licence. Q. v. Otto (6 Sheil, 261, 436). Q. v. Ware (5 Sheil, 21) is a stronger case...see especially the judgment of De Villiers, C. J.

Mr. Wilkinson (in reply): This is not a case of a sale by the wife or husband of the licensee, or by one who has taken temporary transfer of the licence. Accused is merely a barman.

[De Villiers, C. J.: He is the holder's brother.]

Yes, but he is neither the holder of the licence nor a manager.

De Villiers, C. J.: The question might have been legitimately raised of whether the regulations were ultra vires or not, but that question not having been raised, I will not say anything more about it. As to the question whether there has been any contravention of the regulations as they stand, I think there can be no doubt. The charge is of selling to an aboriginal native, and the regulations define an aboriginal native as any person of the Bantu race, any Hottentot, Bushman, or the like. There seems to be no doubt as to this woman being a member of the Bantu race. She says that one of her parents was a European, and that some of her ancestors came from Madagascar, but that is her own statement, and, after all, the best test is her own appearance. On that point evidence has been called to show that to all intents and purposes she is a Kafir woman. The doctor can trace possible European blood, but such minute traces are not sufficient to do away with the general effect of this person's appearance. On the whole, I think the Magistrate was justified in coming to the conclusion that the woman was an aboriginal native. Another objection taken is that the defendant was not the holder of a licence. Well, he was acting as the agent of the holder. It seems that he was the brother of the holder, and for the purposes of selling at this tap he was the holder of that licence, or else he could not sell. I think we may take it that if he sells he can be found guilty of a contravention of the regulations, the object of which is to prevent sale to aboriginal natives. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed.

REX. V. CHARLTON. { 1902.
Mar. 7th.
" 8th.

Lord's Day Observance—Act 19 of 1895—Public Entertainment—Charge for admission. Where certain persons, having previously obtained the permission of the Town Council of Cape Town, subject to the provisions of Act 19 of 1895, thereafter proceeded to give a number of Sunday evening concerts in a place of public entertainment, at which no fee was ostensibly charged for admission, but 1/- was charged for programmes, and notice issued stated that "admission was by voluntary contribution, the right to refuse admission being reserved."

Held, on appeal, that the holding of such concerts was a contravention of Act 19 of 1895.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town.

The appellant was convicted of contravening sections 3 and 5 of Act 15 of 1895—the Lord's Day Observance Act and was fined £1. These sections dealt with keeping open places of amusement on the Sabbath, and exacting or receiving fees for admission thereto. The evidence taken in the Court below was as follows: Detective Morrison said that on the evening of the 5th January he went to the Good Hope Gardens. About 60 or 70 yards from the gate was a table at which were two persons. Witness saw people go up to the gate and tender money. One of the men at the table picked the money up, and put it in a desk. Some paid for programmes at the table; others did not. There was a space of about three feet for people to enter. Witness advanced through the entrance, and put 6d. on the table. A man at the table called out "No programme." Witness advanced two yards, came back, and said, "I beg your pardon; what did I understand you to say?" He was told that programmes were a shilling. He tendered a shilling, and was given a programme, and 6d. he had previously tendered. On the 12th inst. he again went there, and tendered a sovereign, receiving 19s. and a programme. Subsequently he saw a youth pass the entrance without paying. A man at the table caught him by the sleeve, and drew his attention to the fact that he had not paid. He thereupon tendered a coin, and was allowed to enter.—Edward Preston, detective in the Cape Police, said he went to the Good Hope Gardens on the night of the 12th. At the barrier to the concert in the Gardens he noticed three persons at a table. He saw several persons pay to pass the barrier. He saw none go in without paying. He noticed that they paid 1s. each. When witness came to the table he asked what was the admission. He was told 1s.; he tendered 2s. 6d., and received 1s. 6d. change and a programme, after which he passed in. Defendant was not at the table.—Captain Lorrimer said that on the 5th he put 10s. in the plate and wanted to take his change, but a slightly-coloured man said, "Hold on, guv'nor, we'll do that." He then handed it to a man sitting in the rear of him, who gave him 7s. back. Witness intended to put 3s. in the plate. He thought it was a voluntary public subscription. On the 12th of January he went to the concert free. He was not in uniform.—For the defence, William Charlton said he was at the Gardens on the 5th and 12th of January. The persons who attended to the gate were under his instructions. His instructions to the gatekeeper were that the concerts were entirely free, and they were not allowed to stop anyone. If the persons who came in the gate wished to contribute, they could do so. He had seen people go through the gate without contributing. They had never made any charge for admission to his knowledge. They had advertised the fact that the concerts were free. There was no charge made for the programmes. Three people could walk through the gate abreast of each other. The concerts were a business speculation. The instructions of witness were that the programmes were to be given to anyone who came in the gates. He heard the men at the gate say to persons who inquired that the customary contribution was a shilling. When a person put down a sovereign, the man at the gate was instructed to give him 20s. change.—William Edward Tyler said he had the authority of the Town Council himself for the carrying on of these concerts. No one was charged for admission on the evening of the 5th. There were no complaints as to anyone being charged for admission. Witness remembered the evening of the 5th, when Captain Lorrimer put down 10s. Witness asked him what he should take, and the captain said, "Three or four shillings." The proportion of people contributing was about one in ten.—Cornelius Martin Fisher said he was in the service of the last witnesses on the evening of the 5th inst. His instructions were not to charge anyone that came to the concerts. A good many people went in without paying. He never charged anyone.—Clarke said that on the 12th January he was acting for Mr. Tyler. He was there all the evening, and had been told not to refuse admission to any respectable person. There was no charge made to anyone that evening. Several persons went into the Gardens without contributing.—Arthur Mortimer Jones said that he frequently attended the Sunday concerts. He understood that he was able to go in free if he cared. He had seen other people being admitted without contributing.

Mr. Benjamin (for the appellant): In the first place if no fee for admission was charged, but only contributions which were bona fide voluntary were taken, there has been no infringement of Act 19 of 1895. Charlton and Tyler both gave instructions to their employees not to make any charge. Hence if these men did make a charge they did so on their own responsibility, and their principals are not liable.

[Maasdorp, J.: What do you say about admission being by "voluntary contribution?"]

The evidence shows that no contributions were insisted on.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The appellant candidly admits that this was a business speculation.]

It was so in a sense, but even if a profit did accrue to the principals, that does not prove that they were guilty of any violation of the Act. If the agents did demand money, that does not render the principals criminally liable. In them there was no mens rea. The evidence is perfectly clear that appellant never ordered that money should be taken; and the balance of evidence is against the allegation that money was ever demanded. The only evidence that it was, is that of police traps, and even their evidence does not go very far. To charge 1s. for a programme was no infringement of this Act, though it might be under Act 35 of 1888: but if programmes were sold, that was not a fee charged for admission. Then as to the evidence; surely some independent witnesses should have been called. Then to come to the technical point, the summons does not set out any offence under the Act. The appellant was charged under Section 5 with wrongfully and unlawfully receiving money. He should have been charged with wrongfully and unlawfully keeping open a place of public entertainment. It is no offence to take money on Sunday, and no offence is set forth in the summons.

[Maasdorp, J.: He had leave to keep the place open, but he charged admission money, and therein lay the offence.]

No, the charge is that he kept open a place of amusement on the Lord's Day. To this he might have pleaded consent of the local authority. My chief points are: (1) There was no mens rea on the part of the accused; (2) the evidence that money was demanded as an entrance fee is very weak; (3) the summons does not set out any offence under the Act.

Mr. H. Jones (for the Crown) was not heard.

[De Villiers, C. J.: I do not wish to say a word as to the policy of the Act. The only question the Court has to determine is whether there has been an infringement of the terms of the Act. An objection is raised to the form of summons, and no doubt it would have been more formal to simply have charged the defendant with keeping open a place of amusement contrary to the provisions of the Act. To that the defendant's answer would have been "That we got the consent of the Municipal authorities." Then there would be the reply to that: "True you have the consent of the Council, but you have charged for admission." Instead of that the prosecutor raised the whole question at once, and came to the gist of the offence, the gist being charging fees. I think the summons in this form gives ample notice to the defendant of the extra charge against him, even if it is not strictly formal, and he could not in any way be prejudiced by the form of the summons. The substantial question now is: "Has there been a contravention of the Act?" Now, the Act, after prohibiting amusements on Sundays, provides that with the consent of the local authority having jurisdiction, places may be permitted to be used on Sunday, without fee for entrance or admission, for the purposes of concerts and so on. The question is, "Does the evidence show that fees were charged for admission?" Now, the purport of the evidence of the defence is that some persons did come in without paying fees, but the witnesses even for the defence admitted that the majority did pay, nine-tenths paying a shilling each. It is true that they paid a shilling each for the programme, but that programme was a mere evasion of the law—the programmes probably cost a farthing each. Therefore the shilling each was charged for entrance. There is the notice: "Music for the people; Sunday concerts," and ends, "Admission by voluntary contribution." "The right to refuse admission being reserved" immediately follows. There was nothing to prevent the gatekeepers from refusing admission to those who did not pay a shilling for the programme, but the great majority, after seeing this notice, would prefer to pay a shilling at once, and not risk the chance of admission being refused. Moreover there was one witness who swore positively as to a charge being made. A detective stated that he saw a youth pass the entrance without paying. A man at the table caught the youth by the sleeve, and drew his attention to the fact that he had not paid. The youth thereupon tendered a coin, and was allowed to enter. In cross-examination the witness says: "I was charged on both nights." Now, it might well be said that the defendant was not aware of that particular case, but defendant must have been aware of the conditions under which persons were admitted into the building. He must have known that the great majority of persons did so pay, and that very few persons, after this notice, would venture to go in without offering to pay. Under these circumstances, there was a clear evasion of the Act; in point of fact the concert was not without fees. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed.

STEPHAN V. EXECUTORS OF { 1902.
STEPHAN. { Mar. 8th.
" 12th.

Will—Construction.

By one clause of his will the testator nominated the plaintiff, with nine others, as his heirs—the plaintiff as to one-fourth and the others as to three-fourths of the residue of his estate. By another clause the testator (who in his lifetime was a partner in business with the plaintiff) directed that, in case the plaintiff should decide to continue the business, he should, on receiving payment of any bonds belonging to the partnership business, pay to the other heirs one-fourth of the amount thus received, "he being entitled to one-fourth as heir of appearer and one-half as partner of appearer."
Held, that the half of the partnership estate thus received was dealt with on a different footing from the rest of such estate, and that as to such half the plaintiff is entitled to one half, being one-fourth of the amount received by him, and that he was entitled to the remaining half of the partnership estate as partner.

A special case was stated for the opinion of the Court between Hendrik Rudolph Stephan and the executors of his late brother, Johan Carel Stephan. The point at issue was the construction of certain paragraphs of the will of the late Mr. Stephan, who died in February, 1900.

The special case was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Hendrik Rudolph Stephan, of Cape Town.

2. The defendants are the said Hendrik Rudolph Stephan and Johannes Henoch Neethling Roos, in his capacity as secretary for the time being of the Board of Executors, who are sued in their capacity as executors testamentary of the estate of the late Johan Carel Stephan, otherwise known as Johan Carel Jacobus Stephan, hereinafter styled the testator.

3. On or about November 9, 1898, the testator executed his last will and testament, and on January 17, 1899, he executed a codicil thereto. On February 6, 1900, he died, leaving the said will and codicil of full force and effect. Annexed hereto are true copies of the said will and codicil, and for convenience of reference the paragraphs of the said will have been numbered 1 to 26.

4. The plaintiff and the testator, for many years prior to the death of the testator, and up to the date of his death, carried on business together in partnership, under the style or firm of Stephan Bros., each having a half-share in the said business, and since the testator's death the plaintiff has continued to carry on the said business, as provided in paragraph 21 of the said will.

5. In paragraph 19 of the said will the testator instituted as his heirs the plaintiff and certain other eight persons named therein, subject to the conditions set forth in paragraphs 20 to 23, and by the codicil he revoked the institution in so far as one of the said persons, Samuel Novella, who predeceased him, was concerned.

6. In paragraph 20 of the said will the testator bequeathed one-fourth of the residue of his estate, after payment and satisfaction of his liabilities, and certain legacies and charges not necessary to specify, to the plaintiff, and the other three-fourths to the other heirs in equal shares.

7. In paragraph 21 he directed that the plaintiff would be entitled to remain in full possession of the residue of his (the testator's) estate during his (plaintiff's) lifetime, and to carry on the partnership business for his own account and profit during such lifetime.

8. In paragraph 22 he directed that, if the plaintiff whilst so carrying on the said business should sell immovable property or receive payment of mortgage bonds belonging to the said business, he should pay over to the other heirs one-fourth of the proceeds of such sale or receipt, he (plaintiff) being entitled to one-fourth as testator's heir, and one-half as testator's partner in the said firm of Stephan Bros.

9. In paragraph 23 he directed that no longer than six months after his death a full and true inventory should be taken both of his private estate and of the partnership business, and that his other heirs should be paid out on the valuations and accounts in the said inventory whenever such payments should, in terms of the said will, be made to them.

10. On or about July 27, 1900, the defendants, in accordance with the terms of the said will, framed the said inventory. The testator left at his death property belonging to the said business, and also property in his private estate which did not belong to the said business.

11. Thereafter, on or about the 18th July, 1901, the plaintiff, whilst carrying on the said partnership business, sold the farm Jacobus Kraal, situate in the division of Malmesbury, which farm is registered in the name of the said firm of Stephan Bros. and belonged to the partnership business, for the sum of £250. Subsequent to the testator's death, and whilst carrying on the said business, the plaintiff effected improvements on the said farm, which have enhanced its value.

12. The said farm is brought up in the said inventory at a valuation of £500.

13. Amongst the assets of the said business are certain life policies, as will appear from the extract from the said inventory hereto annexed, marked C, which said policies have been ceded to the said firm, and the premiums whereof have been, since the date of the cessions in each case, paid by the partnership business. In the said inventory the said policies were brought up at their surrender value at the time the inventory was framed.

14. Since the date of the said inventory the plaintiff has from time to time paid the premiums on the said policies.

15. The parties are desirous of having it determined on what basis the proceeds of the partnership business are to be divided as between the plaintiff and the other heirs, who are represented by the defendants.

The plaintiff contends (a) that with regard to the proceeds of the said farm Jacobus Kraal, the heirs other than the plaintiff are entitled to the sum of £125, being one-half of the testator's half-share or one-fourth of the whole value thereof, as set forth in the said inventory, as provided by paragraphs 22 and 23 of the said will; or, in case this Honourable Court should be of opinion that plaintiff is not so entitled, that he is entitled to claim to be reimbursed the value of any improvements which he has effected on the said farm subsequent to the testator's death, to the extent that the same have enhanced the value of such farm. (b) That with regard to the said life policies he (plaintiff) is entitled to receive cession of the same from the defendants, he to account to the estate for half of the surrender value as set forth in the said inventory. (c) That the half of the surrender value which plaintiff thus accounts for must be distributed as follows: One-half to the plaintiff, and the other half to the other heirs.

The defendant executors contend: (d) that the plaintiff is bound to account for and pay over to them for distribution one full half of the proceeds of the sale of the said farm, after deduction from such proceeds of any amount which the plaintiff may since the testator's death have beneficially expended out of his own funds in successful permanent improvements of the said farm, to the extent, however, only, if any, to which the value of the said farm has been enhanced for the purposes of the said sale by the expenditure of such amount. (e) That the amount, if any, to be so deducted should be determined by agreement, either by this Honourable Court or by arbitration if this Honourable Court should so direct. (f) That the half of the said proceeds so determined, when received by the executors, should be distributed by them: (1) As to one-fourth, to the plaintiff absolutely; (2) as to one-fourth, to the plaintiff as usufructuary under the will, with reservation of the rights of the other heirs to receive the same upon the death of the plaintiff, or the earlier happening of any of the contingencies contemplated in paragraphs 21 and 22 of the said will; (3) as to half, to the other heirs absolutely and immediately in equal shares. (g) That as to the said policies, the plaintiff is not entitled to claim cession thereof for the surrender values, though he is entitled from time to time as any policy may become payable, and at his death as to any policy then not yet payable, to deduct from the proceeds all sums paid by him after the testator's death in maintaining such policy, together with interest at 6 per centum per annum upon such sums. (h) That, upon the amount of any policy being received, the net proceeds after such deduction must be distributed half to the plaintiff and half to the executors, who, as to this half, must award one-fourth to the plaintiff and three-fourths to the other heirs in equal shares.

Wherefore the parties pray for judgment upon their several respective contentions, or for such other order as may be fitting, directing them in regard to the several matters in dispute, and they ask that the costs of this suit may be directed to be paid out of the estate of the testator.

The Will in question was as follows:

LAST WILL OF J. C. STEPHAN.

Be it hereby made known, that on this the 9th day of November, 1898, in presence of the subscribed witnesses, personally came and appeared Johan Carel alias Johan Carel Jacobus Stephan, resident at Loading Place, bachelor, in the Division of Piquetberg, and being of sound and disposing mind, memory, and understanding, as appeared at the passing hereof, declared it to be his intention to make and execute his last will and testament, as he hereby doth make and execute his last will and testament, in manner as follows:—

1. The said appearer hereby revokes and annuls all wills and other testamentary acts passed by him heretofore, and declares hereby to give and bequeath and legate, firstly, the following, namely:—

2. (a) To his sister, Dorothea Florentina Susanna Hinsbeck (born Stephan) wife of Frans Johannes Hinsbeck, the sum of two thousand pounds sterling.

3. (b) To his brothers, Lawrence and William each two thousand pounds sterling.

4. (c) To Reverend Edwards, now of Malmesbury, the sum of fifty pounds sterling.

5. (d) To Christina Stevens, appearer's cook, the sum of twenty-five pounds sterling.

The above legacies mentioned shall be subject to the following stipulations, namely:

6. (a) They shall be paid out to the several legatees mentioned, or their order, two months after the date of the death of the appearer.

7. (b) They shall be paid out free of any succession duty; such duty, if any, shall be paid by appearer's estate.

8. (c) Should one or more of the aforesaid legatees predecease the appearer (excepting Christina Stevens and Reverend Edwards) the legacy or gift accruing to the legatee so predeceasing the appearer shall devolve upon and go to his or her heirs according to law, and in case such legatee so predeceasing the appearer has no legal heirs, then and only then shall the legacy, bequest, or gift be null and of no effect.

9. (e) To Cecilia Agatina Charosina the sum of fifty pounds sterling, to be paid to her order by the appearer's executors hereinafter named in five yearly instalments of ten pounds sterling.

10. (f) To Jacob Johnson and Charles Constable each the sum of two hundred pounds sterling to be paid to them or their order by appearer's executors hereinafter named, in monthly instalments of three pounds sterling to each, until they have received the whole amount legated to them.

11. (g) To Elizabeth Novella, daughter of Georgina Novella, the sum of three thousand pounds sterling, and to Joseph Novella and Samuel Novella each one thousand pounds sterling, the bequests being subject to the following conditions:—

12. (a) Should Elizabeth Novella, predecease the appearer, or having survived the appearer, die before having attained her 25th year, or without having left lawful issue before attaining her 25th year, then and in that event the said sum of three thousand pounds sterling shall go and devolve upon her brothers Joseph and Samuel Novella in equal shares. Should she, however, leave lawful issue, then the said sum of three thousand pounds shall devolve upon and go to such issue.

13. (b) The said Elizabeth Novella, Joseph Novella and Samuel Novella, should they not have attained the age of twenty-five years at the death of the appearer, shall not be entitled to their legacies until they shall have respectively attained the age of 25 years, but shall in the meantime be entitled to draw half-yearly the interest which may accrue and be due upon the legacies aforesaid, the executors of the appearer being hereby empowered to put out the said legacies on mortgage on immovable property until the said legatees shall have attained their 25th year.

14. (A) To John Daniel van Gerns, Abraham Benjamin van Gerns and William Charles van Gerns, children of Betta van Gerns, each, the sum of one thousand pounds sterling, subject to the conditions that they shall not be allowed or entitled to draw the said amounts before having attained their 25th year, the executors of the appearer being hereby empowered to put out the said legacies on mortgage on immovable property, until such time as the said legatees shall have attained their 25th year, the said legatees being entitled to draw whilst minors through their guardians hereinafter named, and when majors themselves half-yearly the interest which may accrue and be due upon the legacies aforesaid.

15. (i) That appearer's executors named herein shall pay yearly the sum of fifty pounds to each of the children, John Daniel van Gerns, Abraham Benjamin van Gerns and William Charles van Gerns until they shall have reached their majority, said amounts being for the maintenance and education of the said children in addition to the interest due them on their legacies; should, however, they become at any time entitled before their majority to participate as heirs in appearer's said estate, then and then only the payment of the £50 to each of the said children Van Gems shall cease, and from that time when they participate as heirs in appearer's estate, shall the executors of appearer's estate pay them each until they shall have reached the age of majority the sum of fifty pounds towards their maintenance and education, such money to be taken from the interest or capital accruing to them out of the inheritance due them out of appearer's estate.

16.(j) To Andries Jacobus Bester, Carl Hinsbeck, Wilhelmina Hinsbeck, Hendrina Hinsbeck, Samuel Novella and Elizabeth Novella, each, 250 fully paid up £1 shares in the South African Milling Company Limited; should appearer, however, before his death, dispose of, sell or otherwise make away with the said 1,500 shares, then this legacy is to be considered cancelled and to be of no effect; should the appearer sell, dispose of, or otherwise make away with part of the 1,500 shares legated, then the balance only shall accrue to the legatees, and no more, and be divided equally among the six legatees aforesaid, and they shall have no further claim upon the appearer's estate.

17. (k) To each child, whereof the appearer is the godfather, the sum of one hundred pounds sterling, provided satisfactory proof be adduced through baptismal certificates, that appearer is the bona fide godfather of such child or children; and further that this will only apply and refer to children born before date hereof, and provided such claims be filed within six months after appearer's death.

18. (l) To Robert Johnson the sum of two hundred pounds sterling, to be paid to him or his order by the appearer's executors in monthly instalments of three pounds sterling, until he shall have received the whole amount legated to him.

All the legacies and bequests contained hereinbefore are to be paid free of succession duty, appearer's estate having to pay such duty should one or more of the legatees die before having received the whole amount which has to be paid in monthly instalments to such legatee or legatees, then and in that event the balance still due and in the hands of appearer's executors shall revert and fall back into appearer's estate.

19. The appearer declared hereby to nominate, appoint and institute as his heirs his brothers Henry Rudolph, Lawrence and William; his sister Dorothea Florentina Susanna Hinsbeck (born Stephan), wife of Frans Johannes Hinsbeck; Elizabeth Novella, Samuel Novella, John Daniel van Gems, Abraham Benjamin van Gems, and William Charles van Gems, of all the appearer's estate and effects, both real and personal and of whatsoever kind the same may be, and wheresoever situated, and whether the same be in possession, reversion, remainder or expectancy; and should one or more of such heirs come to die after the appearer's death, then the lawful representatives shall come into his, her, or their place, according to the laws of succession. The above-named heirs are, however, instituted subject to the following conditions, namely:—

20. I. After payment and satisfaction of all the liabilities of the appearer and payment and satisfaction of all the legacies, gifts or bequests and charges and payments contained herein, one-fourth of the residue of the appearer's estate then remaining over shall devolve upon and go to Henry Rudolph Stephan; and the other three-fourth of the residue of the appearer's estate then remaining over shall go to the other heirs above-named (share and share alike) that is, each of such heirs shall receive one-eighth of three-fourths of the residue of appearer's estate.

21. II. The said Henry Rudolph Stephan shall be entitled and allowed to remain in full, free and unencumbered possession of the residue of the appearer's estate (after deduction and payment of the liabilities of the appearer, and settlement of the legacies and charges herein contained) during his, the said Henry Rudolph Stephan's natural life-time, and the other heirs aforesaid shall not be allowed or entitled to claim, or have any right to their inheritances by virtue of their being heirs of the appearer (subject however, to the the reservations and conditions hereinafter mentioned) until after the death of the said Henry Rudolph Stephan the appearer being desirous and anxious not in any way to put any obstacle nor to embarrass the present business carried on in co-partnership by ap-appearer and the said Henry Rudolph Stephan, but on the contrary, to give the said Henry Rudolph Stephan every opportunity to carry on the said business as heretofore of Stephan Brothers, for his own account and profit and loss during his life-time; should, however, the said Henry Rudolph Stephan, liquidate the business of Stephan Brothers or discontinue same, or take in a partner into the firm of Stephan Brothers, or float same into a company, or otherwise change the personnel or status of the firm, then and on the happening of any one of such contingencies of events, the other heirs of the appearer aforesaid, excluding the share to be received by the said Henry Rudolph Stephan of one-fourth, shall be entitled and allowed to claim their three-fourths of the estate of appearer accruing to them as aforesaid.

22. Should the said Henry Rudolph Stephan decide to carry on the business of Stephan Brothers, and none of the contingencies happen as set forth in this clause and clause preceding this, and whilst so carrying on the business, sell, alienate, dispose of, or make away with, at any time of any of the immovable property, or receive payment of any mortgage bonds belonging to the partnership business, or to the appearer personally and privately, then and in that case should it be partnership property belonging to the firm of Stephan Brothers, he shall pay over at once to the heirs of appearer, the fourth part or share of the proceeds of the sale of such immovable property or mortgage bonds received, he being entitled to one-fourth as heir of appearer, and one-half as partner of appearer in the firm of Stephan Brothers, but in case the immovable property belongs to appearer's private estate which has been sold or mortgage bonds realised or repaid, then and in that case the said Henry Rudolph Stephan shall as heir of appearer be entitled to retain one-fourth of the money so repaid, and pay over the remaining three-fourths to appearer's other heirs. Should the said Henry Rudolph Stephan sell or alienate all the landed property belonging to the firm of Stephan Brothers he shall be considered, as far as these presents are concerned, to have discontinued the said business of Stephan Brothers, and the heirs would in that event be entitled to their inheritances.

23. III. In order to avoid all disputes and differences, the appearer hereby declares it to be his will and desire that not longer than six months after his death a full and true inventory and account shall be taken of appearer's private estate and also that of Stephan Brothers, and that appearer's other heirs shall be paid out their three-fourth share in his private estate, and one-fourth share of the firm of Stephan Brothers, on the valuations and accounts as set forth and contained in the said inventory, whenever such payment may be made to them, and they shall not be entitled to claim any profits or gains made by the said Henry Rudolph Stephan should he continue and carry on the business, nor on the other hand, shall such heirs be responsible for any losses.

24. Any moneys accruing to the minor heirs of appearer shall be administered by appearer's executors.

25. And the appearer further declared to nominate Henry Rudolph Stephan and the secretary for the time being of the Board of Executors of Cape Town, Wale Street, to be the executors of his will, administrators of his estate and effects, and guardians of his minor heirs, hereby granting to them all such powers and authority as are required by and allowed in law, and especially that of assumption.

26. Lastly the appearer declared to reserve to himself the power from time to time, and at all times hereafter, to make all such alterations in, or additions to this will as he shall think fit, either by a separate act, or at the foot hereof, desiring that all such alterations or additions so made under his own signature shall be held as valid and effectual as if they had been inserted herein.

Thus done and passed at Vredenburg, Malmesbury Division, on day, month and year aforesaid, in presence of the witnesses.

CODICIL.

It is my further wish and desire as testator of the foregoing will, on account of the death of one of my heirs named Samuel Novella, to revoke and cancel all inheritances, bequests and legacies made to, as well as all benefits that should have accrued to the said Samuel Novella under my will in case he should have survived me, and to declare the said inheritances, bequests, legacies and benefits to the said Samuel Novella as set forth in the foregoing will from this date to be null and void and of no effect whatever.

I further desire hereby to exclude once and for ever the next of kin of the said Samuel Novella, should any one of them at any time after my decease presume to lay any claim or demand on any such inheritance, bequest, legacy and benefit as are mentioned in the foregoing will, and which are now from this date by virtue of this codicil declared to be revoked, cancelled, null and void and of no effect whatever.

It is my further wish and desire to revoke and cancel, as I do hereby revoke and cancel in toto the bequest of "One Thousand Pounds" sterling (£1,000) bequeathed in the foregoing will to "Joseph Novella," and to which he should otherwise have been entitled to after my decease, and to declare the said bequest of One Thousand Pounds sterling (£1,000) to Joseph Novella, from this date to be null and void and of no effect whatever, virtually as if such a bequest had never been made.

Given under my hand at Lading Plaats, Berg River, district Piquetberg, on this Seventeenth day of January, A.D., 1899.

2. R. FRYER.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. J. E. de Villiers), for plaintiff. The important clauses of the will are 21, 22 and 23. The will begins by making a number of legacies. Clause 19 appoints certain heirs, viz., three brothers, a sister, the two Novellas, and the three Gemses. If the plaintiff's construction of the will be correct, Henry Rudolph Stephan is to get three-quarters of the property in the business, and the other heirs one-quarter between them. As to property not in the business, H. R. Stephan is to take one-quarter and the other heirs three-quarters. The farm is worth £500, and of this we are entitled to one-quarter as heirs and also to one-half. The business property is on a different footing, as I have said. This, I submit, is the only possible construction of the will. As to the life-policies, clause 22 does not mention these, but only bonds; but clause 23 directs that an inventory of appearer's private estate and also that of Stephan Bros. should be made, and in this the life policies would naturally be brought up as would the mortgage bonds and other assets.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does the policy belong to the partnership estate?]

Yes, that appears from the special case. Our only object is to get the opinion of the Court as to the division of the partnership estate. The manner in which the private estate should be divided is common cause. I do not see how clause 21 can be construed unless we admit that the partnership and private estates were to be dealt with on a different footing. The testator evidently wished this business to be carried on by his heir personally. If the firm were dissolved or wound up the proceeds would become private estate. The defendant's contention involves some very elaborate calculations which I must confess I have great difficulty in following: but I understand that they hold he should only get $\frac{1}{2}$ plus $\frac{1}{4}$ of $\frac{1}{2}$ (equal $\frac{3}{4}$) and $\frac{1}{4}$ of $\frac{1}{2}$ (equal $\frac{1}{4}$) as usufructuary. They say that they are to get half at once and a quarter as usufructuary. In the event of the business being wound up, we have to look to clause 21. If wound up the proceeds become private estate. If there is any doubt as to the policies I would certainly press my point as to the farm.

Mr. Gardiner (with him Mr. Schreiner, K.C.) for defendant. The testator could deal only with half the partnership property. He clearly wished to have the partnership estate kept up and penalised the heir in the event of his parting with it. Sections 20 and 22 are contradictory. I must admit that our construction of the will introduces two constructions of the term "one-quarter," but that is the only way in which the will can be explained. We say you take half as partner and a quarter of half as usufructuary. According to plaintiff's contention, H. R. Stephan would profit by winding up the business, for in this event he would get three-quarters of the whole instead of $\frac{1}{2}$ of $\frac{1}{2}$ plus $\frac{1}{4}$ (equal $\frac{3}{4}$). Thus a positive inducement is held out to him to realise, and that is obviously opposed to the wishes of the testator. We claim to be paid out on our share of the proceeds and not on the mere inventory value. Clause 23 is very difficult to understand, and conflicts with clause 21. We must put 23 aside when we come to deal with the special clause 22. In clause 20, $\frac{1}{4}$ means $\frac{1}{4}$ of appearer's estate; in 23 it means $\frac{1}{4}$ of the whole.

[De Villiers, C.J.: On what principle do you draw the distinction between the policies and the rest of the property?]

We base the usufruct of $\frac{1}{4}$ on clause 21.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Your contention as to the policies comes to this, that when the testator says $\frac{1}{4}$ he means $\frac{1}{4}$.]

Clause 20 is the governing clause, and that gives us $\frac{1}{4}$ of $\frac{1}{4}$. Then again these policies must be dealt with as they fall in. Plaintiff cannot claim to take them over at surrender value.

Mr. Searle (in reply): Clause 21 is a penal clause, and directs what is to be done in the event of H. R. Stephan liquidating the business of Stephan Bros. Clause 23 provides for proceedings on death of the testator, and that $\frac{1}{4}$ shall go to plaintiff as heir and $\frac{3}{4}$ of the partnership property. Here there is not a single word about usufruct. Clause 23 shows that ours is the only possible interpretation. Defendant says that we are to get $\frac{1}{4}$ and he $\frac{3}{4}$ of the estate, and in face of clause 23 he makes no distinction between the private and partnership estates.

[Maasdorp, J.: They are allowed to claim $\frac{1}{4}$ under clause 21. It is already theirs, but they can claim it then.]

If that was the intention of the testator, clause 23, which draws a distinction between the private and the partnership estates would have no meaning. The contention for defendant was that the will made no distinction between the private and the partnership estates save as to usufruct. This contention is clearly opposed to clause 23.

[Maasdorp, J.: The testator clearly intended to give $\frac{1}{4}$ of the partnership estate to the defendants under clause 21 in the event of H. R. Stephan liquidating the business, so may he not have intended to give $\frac{1}{4}$ under clause 22?]

The will would not have been drafted in the terms it was had this been his intention. Our interpretation is the only one which supports clause 23, and gives a reasonable construction to clause 22.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea, March 12.

The Chief Justice gave judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: The point to be decided is whether under the 22nd clause of the will of the late Mr. Stephan the plaintiff is entitled to a quarter of the proceeds of certain mortgage bonds, or whether he is entitled to three-quarters. Now, there is no doubt that in the earlier portion of the will, where the appointment of heirs is made, Hendrick Stephan received only a quarter. Then came the 22nd clause. The words of this clause are too clear to get over. Clearly it was intended to place such partnership property on a different footing from the rest of the estate. In regard to such partnership property the testator intended that if Hendrick Stephan should receive any proceeds from a mortgage bond, he should pay over a quarter to the other heirs, and be entitled to receive a quarter, as heir of the testator, and the other half as partner. In the opinion of the Court, the first contention of the plaintiff was correct.

In reply to the Court, Mr. Searle, K.C., said the farm in question was sold for £500.

The Court declared that the plaintiff was entitled to £375 and the remaining heirs to £125. In regard to the second contention of the plaintiff, which had reference to certain life policies, the Court expressed no opinion, the plaintiff's counsel having withdrawn this part of the case.

RADZIWILL V. RHODES. } 1902.
} Mar. 12th.

Mr. Wilkinson applied for a postponement of this action sine die. There was an affidavit on the other side.

[The Chief Justice: What is the action for?]

The action is upon a bill for £2,000. I apply for the postponement of the case. Notice of this application was served upon the defendant's attorneys yesterday. The main ground of my application is this: that a few days after service of the summons upon the defendant Rhodes in this action, criminal proceedings were instituted upon the very document upon which we are suing in this action. It would be highly prejudicial to the higher interests of justice if this action were tried before the criminal proceedings have been completed.

Mr. Benjamin (for respondent): I oppose any postponement, my lord. There is really no reason why a postponement should be granted.

[The Chief Justice: There is an affidavit that Mr. Rhodes is unable to attend. Are you prepared to lead the evidence?]

I will proceed on the affidavit.

[The Chief Justice: But you ask for a postponement, too.]

The defendant made application for the prayer for provisional sentence to be dismissed. This was the very note upon which proceedings had been taken by Mr. Louw against the plaintiff and Mr. Rhodes.

Mr. Wilkinson: In the action by Mr. Louw the present plaintiff was defendant. She had allowed judgment to go against her, as she was undoubtedly liable to Mr. Louw, and had been very properly advised not to defend the case.

The Princess is at present ill.

[The Chief Justice: As criminal proceedings have to be taken in respect of the very note now in suit, it is only fair that a postponement should take place until after the result of the criminal proceedings is known.]

Will your lordship allow me to make one observation—on the very anomalous nature of the proceedings of commencing criminal proceedings on a document which is being sued upon?

[The Chief Justice: Ah, well, we cannot discuss that.]

DAVIS AND SONS V. PAT- { 1902.
TEBSON AND OTHERS. { Mar. 12th.
Agent—Interdict.

D. & Sons had been appointed agents to a certain cycle company for all parts of South Africa east of longitude 22° and south of latitude 28°. At a place within these limits respondents opened a shop for the sale of the goods of the aforesaid Company, and represented themselves as the Company's agents. Applicant now sought to have the said respondents interdicted from making these representations, and moreover asked that they should be ordered to furnish an account of sales of the goods aforesaid.

Held, that as applicants would be prejudiced by respondents continuing to hold themselves out as agents for the said firm—as applicants were such agents and respondents were not—an interdict must be granted as prayed, with costs.

This was a motion for an order calling upon respondents to show cause why an interdict should not be granted (1) restraining them from either, directly or indirectly, advertising or representing themselves as the agents, or agent of the Raleigh Cycle Co., Ltd., or from either directly or indirectly carrying on business and selling and dealing in Raleigh cycles and relative accessories under the style of "The Raleigh Cycle Agency," or any other style or name calculated to lead the public to believe that they held the agency of the said Raleigh Cycle Company, Ltd., in Kimberley, or the division of Kimberley, or any part of the said Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, east of longitude 22 degrees, and south of latitude 28 degrees; (2) why they should not be ordered to render to the applicant a full, true, and correct statement of account of all the sales effected by them in connection with the business carried on by them under the said style of "Raleigh Cycle Agency" at Kimberley since the beginning of the previous December, and (3) why they should not be ordered to pay the costs of the application.

It appeared from the affidavit of Arthur F. Baker, of Port Elizabeth, that in 1896 the applicants were appointed agents for the Raleigh Cycle Company. The letter appointing them agents stated that the company appointed the applicants agents, provided that the total net amount of the business done by them should not be less than £3,000 per annum. The letter further stated: "Should the total net amount be less than £3,000 per annum, owing to political or other crises, we shall be happy to take these matters into consideration, and make all reasonable allowance." The agency was for the part of the Colony east of longitude 22 degrees, and south of latitude 28. This included the town of Kimberley where applicants had an agency. Recently Messrs. Ryan and Co., for whom the respondent Patterson was acting as manager, had opened a shop about 100 yards distant from the agency, and had advertised that they (respondents) were the agents for the company. The respondents said they had been communicated with by Mr. Blake, of the firm of Messrs. Julian Stephens, about the agency. Mr. Blake had visited the Colony, and had said that the company was not satisfied with the business applicants were doing. On his return Mr. Blake had an interview with the manager of the Raleigh Company, and he afterwards wrote a letter, which had been sent to the respondents, and which stated that providing the respondents were willing to agree to certain proposals, the company would give them the agency, but they would have to give applicants two months' notice. Respondents alleged that applicants were neglecting the agency, but this was denied. Respondents further alleged that applicants had broken their agreement of agency, not having purchased $3,000 worth of cycles during any of the last three years.

Mr. Searle (for applicants): As the affidavit of applicants shows, respondents have opened a rival shop about 100 yards from that of the applicant's. The applicants would seem to have accepted the agency in Kimberley on the distinct understanding that they should be the sole agents there, and in the Eastern Province. There was to be one agent for the Eastern and another for the Western Province. Nobody would take up an agency if a rival agent were to be appointed, and there are letters from White, Ryan and Co. showing that they were entitled to take over the agency for cycles. It would never pay anybody to take over such an agency unless it were a sole agency. We have a prima facie case, as respondents have simply "jumped" this agency. Respondent's affidavits are very lame. He excuses himself by saying that this area was not within the area of applicant's agency, viz., to the east of 22 degrees of East longitude. White, Ryan and Co. cannot show that they have been appointed agents for the Eastern Province. I submit that it was understood that applicant's agency was to be a sole agency, even though the word "sole" does not appear in the contract. White, Ryan and Co. cannot produce any letter appointing them. We ask for an order restraining them from representing themselves as the agents for the Raleigh Cycle Company.

Mr. Buchanan (for the respondents): This is no case for an interdict, since no clear right has been shown. Certainly applicants cannot show it under their contract. Even assuming that applicant can take advantage of his position as agent, he has quite mistaken his remedy. He should have sued for damages, and ought not to have applied for an interdict.

Mr. Searle was not heard in reply.

[De Villiers, C.J.: It is clear from the correspondence that the plaintiffs have been appointed as the agents of the Cycle Company for all parts of this colony east of longitude 22 and south of latitude 28, and unless the respondents can show that they have also been appointed as agents of the same company, I think they should be interdicted from representing themselves as being such agents. Now, this is a point upon which the respondents can give information. Applicants cannot prove the negative, but they have made out a sufficient prima facie case to show that the respondents have not been appointed, to throw the burden upon respondents of showing that they have been appointed. There are no documents and no evidence to show that respondents have been appointed agents. They produce a letter in which the Cycle Company says that the applicants have not complied with all the terms of their contract, but there is no statement in that letter that they revoke the appointment of the applicants, or appoint the respondents as agents. It must damage the agents that there should be other persons stated to be agents. If the respondents had been appointed agents they would have been quite within their rights in representing themselves as such, and it would then have been left to the applicants to seek their remedy against the company; but, as I said before, there is nothing to show that respondents have been appointed agents. Such a representation must, in the nature of things, be an injury to the applicants. The respondents cannot be restrained from selling Raleigh cycles; that is a power everyone has. There is nothing to prevent a dealer from selling, and the Court cannot restrain the respondents from selling Raleigh cycles. It is said that such injury as the applicants may suffer can be compensated by damages, but I see a difficulty about that. It would be difficult to prove that purchasers were affected in consequence of this representation; it would be almost impossible to prove how far this representation led to the plaintiffs being damaged. Seeing that the applicants would certainly be prejudiced, seeing that it is clear they are the agents, and seeing that it is clear respondents have not been appointed agents, I think the Court should protect the applicants by granting an interdict restraining respondents from representing themselves as being the agents of the Raleigh Cycle Co. for any part of this colony east of longitude 22 and south of latitude 28. But it is quite possible that at any moment the respondents may be appointed such agents, and therefore the Court will reserve to the respondents the right to apply to the Court at any time for a discharge of the interdiction. Respondents to pay costs.

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

REX. V. BELLNAGG. { 1902.
Mar. 13th.

Drunkenness in Public Place—
Sec. 28, Act 25 of 1891.

In order to justify the exercise of the extended jurisdiction conferred by Act 25 of 1891, Sec. 28, on Resident Magistrates, four previous convictions must have been recorded within one year of the fifth.

[De Villiers, C.J., mentioned a case which had come before him for review. In this case a woman named Katie Bellnagg was charged before the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town with contravening section 9 of Act 27 of 1882 by being drunk in a public place. She was found guilty, and there being three previous convictions against her, she was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment. His lordship pointed out that four previous convictions within one year of the fifth must be recorded before sentence of twelve months' imprisonment could, under the 1895 Act, be imposed. That condition did not exist in this case, and the conviction would be quashed.

Mr. Wilford moved for the appointment of a trustee to carry out the trusts contained in a certain ante-nuptial contract.

EPSTEIN V. EPSTEIN. { 1902.
Mar. 13th.

Leave to sue in forma pauperis.

Held, that the Court will not grant leave to sue in forma pauperis where the applicant is capable of earning sufficient money to pay legal expenses.

This was an application for leave to the applicant, Rosa Epstein, to sue her husband, Bernard Epstein, in forma pauperis for divorce on the ground of his adultery. The parties were married in the Jewish Synagogue, Belfast, in 1897.

Mr. Wilford appeared for the applicant.

The applicant was in court, and in reply to the Chief Justice, said that she did not work, and had no means. There were no children of the marriage. She did nothing, and just stopped with some friends. She did not work, because she was not long here, and could not get work.

The Chief Justice: You could get lots of work here if you wanted to work. Continuing, His Lordship said that the Court had laid down that where leave to sue in forma pauperis was given, it must be a clear case of distress, and the applicant must be a person who had no money and could not earn any.

It was pointed out that the case was already before the Court. It was set down for a certain day, but on that day nobody appeared, and the case dropped.

No order was made on the present application.

SEALE V. THOMPSON. { 1902.
Mar. 13th.

Ejectment — Motion — Action — Tender—Waiver.

Under the terms of a lease the lessor was entitled to put an end to the lease if the rent due for any month was not paid on or before the 25th of the following month. On the 25th of February negotiations were passing between the parties for a voluntary cancellation of the lease, and accordingly the lessee omitted to tender the rent for January. The parties not being able to agree as to the terms of cancellation, the lessee on the 28th of February tendered the rent, but the lessor insisted on his right to put an end to the lease for non-payment of rent; and sought, by motion, to eject the lessee.

Held, that the case was not one for summary ejectment on motion.

This was an application upon notice given the respondent calling upon him to show cause why an order should not be granted compelling him forthwith to deliver up possession of certain premises, situated at the corner of Longmarket and Adderley streets, Cape Town, the lease having become null and void by reason of respondent having failed to pay the rent, as stipulated in the lease.

The affidavit of the applicant stated that the respondent had from him a lease of the premises known as Seale's Chambers. The lease expired on January 1, 1903, and the rent, £32 10s. monthly, was to be paid monthly, with the proviso that should the lessee fail to pay any month's rent within 25 days after it became due, that would constitute a breach of the agreement, and the lessor should have the right to cancel the lease and take possession of the premises. The applicant alleged that at present the sum of £65, being rent for January and February, was due to him by respondent. On February 26 applicant's attorneys received from respondent's attorneys a letter, dated February 25, from which it appeared that the respondent was anxious to have the lease terminated, as he was unable to continue paying the rent, and certain conditions on which the respondent would agree to the cancellation of the lease were mentioned, it being also stated that the offer was without prejudice to respondent's claim in an action he was bringing against applicant for damages for breach of agreement. In his reply to this letter, the applicant's attorney stated that Mr. Seale would agree to the cancellation of the lease on Mr. Thompson paying the rent for January and February, and delivering up the keys of the premises before noon on the following day. Mr. Seale, however, expressly reserved the right to cancel the lease, by reason of respondent having failed to pay the rent within the time stipulated in the lease. A reply was received stating that it would be impossible for the respondent to accept Mr. Seale's conditions, and on February 28 the rent due was tendered. Applicant now moved, as stated above, on the ground that the rent had not been paid in terms of the lease.

In his replying affidavit the respondent said that when he entered upon the premises leased he had great expense, having, with applicant's consent and approval, made alterations and erected partitions dividing the premises into thirteen offices, which, with the knowledge and approval of the applicant, he sub-let, thereby deriving substantial benefit. Afterwards applicant, without any reason, gave notice that he would enforce the fourth section of the lease, in consequence of which respondent had been unable to sub-let, and since January last the premises had become vacant. Respondent then detailed the negotiations which took place with regard to the termination of the lease, applicant having at one time offered him £300 to agree to its cancellation.

[Mr. Close for the applicant; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for the respondent.]

In an answering affidavit the applicant denied that he ever consented to the erection of the partitions, and said that he had given leave to sub-let on two special occasions only. He admitted that, owing to the trouble and anxiety he had had in connection with the lease, he offered respondent £300 to terminate the lease and vacate the premises, which offer the respondent did not accept.

Mr. Close (for applicant): This application for ejectment is based on clause 10 of the lease, "Shall the lessee fail to pay any month's rent within 25 days after it becomes due, this shall constitute a breach of this agreement, and the lessor shall have the right to cancel the lease and re-enter on the premises. The rent was really due on the last day of the month, but the lessor gave 25 days of grace if the rent was not paid within that period the lease was to be forfeited. Respondent did not pay the rent for January before February 25; clearly, therefore, he was in default.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But it is stated that the rent was tendered on February 28, and this is not denied.]

That does not prejudice our right under the 4th section of the lease. It is true that a tender was made on February 28, but no tender had been made on the 25th. It would be very hard on the landlord if this privilege of the days of grace were to be abused. The rent was over due on February 28.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the tenant being under an erroneous impression, deferred his tender until three days after he rent was due the Court will not go out of its way to give an extensive interpretation to the landlord's rights.]

The tenant never made an unconditional tender at all, and this he was bound to do. It was significant that he asked our attorney whether the lease would be cancelled if he failed to pay the rent by midnight on February 25, and he was told that that was entirely in Mr. Seale's hands. Whatever took place after this was without prejudice, and the respondent cannot take advantage of it. As to an ejectment being granted on motion the Court did this in Mills v. Jones Bros. (9 Sheil, 543).

[De Villiers, C.J.: Of course the Court has discretion on that point?]

Yes.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You seem to be taking a purely technical point and to be insisting on your pound of flesh.]"

No, I submit that the tenant has been very leniently dealt with. We have granted him a privilege which he now attempts to abuse. If our right be of a technical character, it is a perfectly clear right.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for respondent), was heard on the question of costs. In the Wesleyan Church v. Eayrs (12 Sheil, p. 47) the Court decided that it would not grant ejectment on motion. Then we are not at one as to the facts regarding what took place on February 24 and 25. We offered to pay the rent on the 25th. It is true we did not actually send a cheque, but that is a purely technical point. I can only suggest that the case should go to trial. That is the course, at all events, we should wish to be followed.

Mr. Close (in reply): Should the Court decide that an action should be brought I submit that the costs of this motion should form part of the costs in the action.

De Villiers, C.J., in giving judgment, said: I think it would be quite impossible to decide the question upon the evidence before the Court. The rent fell due at the end of January, and on February 25 it had to be paid, and if it was not paid on that date under the strict terms of the lease the applicant was entitled to cancel the lease. But there are circumstances in this case to show that the respondent was misled. I don't say he was intentionally misled by the applicant but he seems to have thought that as some negotiations were going on, it was not a pressing matter that he should pay on that day. In an action the Court would be able to judge as to how far he was justified in acting as he did. It may well be that after hearing the whole of the evidence as to what took place, the Court may come to the conclusion that the respondent was not justified in supposing that the applicant waived his right to take advantage of non-payment of the rent on the 25th, but at present the Court is not in a position to decide. One thing is clear to me, and that is that the respondent did believe he was not bound to pay at once, and as soon as he discovered that the applicant intended to take the benefit of the terms of the lease a tender of the rent due was made, that was three days after the 25th. Under the circumstances, it is quite impossible for this Court to grant a summary ejectment. All the Court can say is, "Let the applicant go to action, for here there is no such clear case as to justify the Court in giving summary ejectment." The only remaining question is as to costs, and in my opinion the applicant ought to have known that this was not a case for summary process. The application will therefore be refused with costs. The applicant can go to trial in the ordinary way, and bring his action for ejectment.

This was an application for an order restraining plaintiffs from proceeding with their action, pending security being given for the costs.

We could get no relief for another month, and I submit that the present application is therefore perfectly justifiable.

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT, CAPE COLONY.

SUPREME COURT

[Before DE VILLIERS, C.J.]

REX V. MALAN AND { 1902.
BRUYNS. } April 12th.

Warrant—Escape from gaol—Martial Law—Liberty of subject—Act 6 of 1900.

Where the Attorney-General directs that the case of a person charged with high treason shall be dealt with by the Commissioners referred to in chap. 3 of Act 6 of 1900, the accused is entitled to be released from custody.

A person confined in gaol by order of the military without a proper warrant cannot, for escaping from gaol, be committed under the Colonial Act of 1888.

De Villiers, C.J.: Two cases have come before me in review from the Resident Magistrate of Clanwilliam, in which the prisoners were respectively charged with making their escape from the Clanwilliam gaol, where they are alleged to have been confined on a charge of high treason. I requested the Magistrate to furnish me with certified copies of the warrants under which the prisoners were so confined, as well as copies of any depositions taken against them. His report in the one case—that of J. W. Malan—is as follows: The prisoner's warrant at the time of his escape was not in possession of the gaoler. He was removed from Calvinia by the military during November last with other prisoners, but the warrants appeared to have gone astray, and none were with them when they arrived here or have since been received, but I have now the original preliminary examination in my possession from which record I have prepared attached copy of warrant." The first remark I would make on this report is that the gaoler at Clanwilliam was not justified in receiving a prisoner without a lawful warrant for his custody, and that, according to previous decisions of this Court, the prisoner could not be punished for attempting to escape from illegal confinement. But it appears that, as far back as May, 1901, the Magistrate of Calvinia had given a warrant to another gaoler, namely, the gaoler of Calvinia, to keep the prisoner in the gaol of that place on a charge of high treason. That warrant could not justify the detention in the Clanwilliam gaol, and indeed only became known to the Resident Magistrate of Clanwilliam after he had been asked for his report. On further investigation I find that on the 14th of January of the present year the Attorney-General sent a written direction to the Magistrate of Calvinia that the case be transmitted to and dealt with by the commissioners referred to in chapter 3 of Act No. 6 of 1900. The effect of this direction was to entitle the prisoner to his discharge from custody. The only sentence the commissioners can pass is one of disqualification from being registered as a voter or from serving in certain public capacities for a period of five years. The 45th section of the Act expressly directs that the summons to appear before the commissioners shall be served on the accused in the same manner as if it had been a civil summons, and the 49th section provides that where the accused, after being duly summoned, fails to appear before the commissioners, they shall find him guilty of the charge without hearing any evidence. When once, therefore, the Attorney-General decided that the prisoner should be dealt with on the minor charge all necessity for his further detention ceased, and he was entitled to be released from custody. The Act was passed nearly twelve months after the outbreak of the war, and if the Legislature had intended that persons to be charged before the commissioners should be detained in custody it would most certainly have said so. The prisoner was not, however, released, but was sent on to Clanwilliam by the military authorities, and there, for escaping from confinement, he was sentenced, not by a military court, but by the Resident Magistrate of the district to six months' imprisonment with hard labour. In the second case—that of Jacob Daniel Bruyns—the Magistrate reports as follows: "The prisoner, with others, was removed by the military from Calvinia on 15th November last, but no warrants accompanied them, and up to the present they have been held under informal warrant signed by my predecessor, no deposition being taken. The preliminary examination on the charge of treason was held by the Magistrate of Sutherland. In his minute, dated 25th February, received here on the 11th March, it is to be observed that he reports the Attorney-General had indicted the accused as a Class II. rebel." The Magistrate, however, seems not to have been aware of the fact that, as far back as the 11th of April last year, the prisoner had been released on substantial bail, and that notwithstanding such release, he had been again seized and sent on to Clanwilliam as a prisoner. This detention was therefore doubly illegal, for not only was the prisoner entitled to the benefit of the fact that he was to be summoned before the commissioners on the minor charge, but he had actually given bail with two sureties for his appearance in any competent court to answer any charge for high treason that might be made against him. As a further justification for convicting the prisoner of the offence of attempting to escape from gaol, the Magistrate states that the prisoner had also been committed for trial on a charge of theft. Nothing, however, was said of this commitment in the charge for attempting to escape, that charge only stating that the prisoner was confined on a charge of high treason. The preliminary depositions forwarded by the Magistrate make it exceedingly difficult to believe that the prisoner is the person who had been charged with theft. The person so charged was Jurgens Jacobus Bruyns, and not Jacobus Daniel Bruyns; he was described as a farmer, and not as a mason, and his age is given as 18 years, whereas the prisoner's age is stated in the depositions to be 37 years. Moreover, I find from the depositions against Jurgens Jacobus Bruyns for the theft of sheep that he also was released on bail. As to the other charge of theft against Jurgens Jacobus Bruyns, he is there stated to be only twenty-one years of age, and could hardly be the same man as the one now stated to be thirty-seven years old. Be that, however, as it may, it is clear that the prisoner's sentence was based on the assumption that he was legally detained on a charge of high treason, and as the escape was really from military custody, the conviction of a contravention of the Colonial Act of 1888 cannot be supported. It has been suggested to me that the Magistrate may possibly have acted in the capacity of Deputy Administrator of Martial Law in sentencing the two prisoners, but the offence charged was a contravention of a Colonial Act, and not of so-called martial law regulations. It would indeed appear that the two jurisdictions sometimes overlap, and this gives rise to an extraordinary state of things. The law provides that all magistrates' sentences above a certain limit shall be subject to the review of a judge of the Supreme Court, and that every person convicted of a criminal offence, whatever the sentence may be, shall have the right of appeal to a higher court. By electing to prosecute under a martial law regulation, instead of under the law of the land, the prosecutor has it in his power to deprive an accused person of the safeguards which the law has provided for the liberty of the subject. I cannot, in the present case, assume that the Magistrate passed the illegal sentences in his capacity as Deputy Administrator of Martial Law, and I feel bound to add that a system under which the magistrates of this colony have to administer martial law regulations appears to me to be unfair towards the magistrates and fatal to the due administration of justice. I have discussed this matter with both my learned colleagues, and they fully agree with me that the sentences are illegal, and that the additional duties imposed upon the magistrates are inconsistent with the due performance of their duties as the administrators of the ordinary law of the Colony, and ought, if possible, to be avoided. The Privy Council has decided in the case of Marais that the military authorities cannot be held liable during the continuance of the war for any illegality committed by them in this colony. After the war they may be liable to be called to account, but, in the meantime, the proper course seems to be to leave the sole responsibility with them, and not to throw upon our magistrates the invidious task of weakening the confidence of the people in the administration of justice. In the cases of Nathaniel Kock and of Sigcau I ventured to point out that the best security for the peace and good behaviour of the natives was inflexible justice. Both of them had been illegally detained in prison, but the Supreme Court ordered their release, and the result has been that, so far from increasing the disaffection of the natives, as was confidently foretold, this simple act of justice has made them more peaceable and well disposed than ever. The prisoners now in question are Europeans, and not natives, but that can hardly be a reason for denying to them the ordinary rights of British subjects. If they have committed offences, by all means let them be brought to trial, but so long as they are dealt with by judges and magistrates, charged with the solemn duty of administering justice according to the laws of the land, they are amenable only to the laws of the land. The convictions in both cases must be quashed. Of course if the prisoner Bruyns is really the man who is indicted for theft he will be detained in gaol under a proper warrant if the time has not expired within which he can be detained in confinement.

After judgment, Mr. Sheil mentioned that he had received a telegram from the Magistrate of Clanwilliam stating that there was no doubt that the J. D. Bruyns was the Jurgens Jacobus Bruyns detained on a charge of theft. If, however, the Court was in any doubt about the matter, he would request that the matter be referred back to the Resident Magistrate under section 48 of Act 20 of 1856, so that the doubt might be cleared up. Mr. Sheil also read a telegram from the Resident Magistrate of Sutherland, who had in looking over the list mistaken J. D. Bruyns for Nicholas D. Bruyns, who was charged with high treason.

The Chief Justice said if counsel would look at the dates he would find that the party was in any case now entitled to his release. The sole effect of the judgment was that he escaped the three months' hard labour.

ADMISSIONS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for the admission as an advocate of Walter Adam Burn. Counsel mentioned that the applicant was at Bloemfontein, and he asked that the oath should be taken before the Registrar of the Court there.

Granted.

Mr. Upington moved for the admission of Henry Wood Gush as an attorney and notary.

Granted, oaths to be taken at Umtata.

Mr. Buchanan applied for the admission of John Theodore Moll as an attorney and notary.

Granted, applicant taking the usual oath.

Stanley John Henry Bayly was, on the motion of Mr. M. Bisset, admitted as an attorney, notary, and conveyancer, the oaths to be taken at East London.

Ex parte GREENING.

Attorney—Admission.

Where an English attorney produced a receipt for payment of his subscription to the funds of the English Law Society.

Held, that such receipt could not be accepted in lieu of a certificate for the purpose of admission as an attorney of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Wilkinson moved for the admission of Robert Greening as an attorney. The petition stated that the applicant was on the rolls of the English Incorporated Law Society, and he produced a receipt for his annual subscription to the said society, showing that at a recent date he was on the rolls.

The Chief Justice said that the practice was laid down in the case of Milner, and he would be reluctant, sitting alone, to alter that practice. If it were altered it should be done by a full Court.

Mr. Wilkinson said that the receipt could not have been obtained if the applicant had not been on the rolls. He submitted that the receipt was quite as good proof as a certificate.

Mr. Searle, K.C., said that he had just been asked to mention on behalf of the Incorporated Law Society that the society could not give their consent to the application in view of the previous practice. At the same time they would not oppose.

An order for the admission of applicant was granted, subject to the production of the necessary certificate. The Chief Justice said that in the meantime applicant could not, of course, practice, but if the Court was not sitting the oath could be taken before the Registrar when the certificate could be produced. The form of the certificate would be found in Milner's case.

Mr. Murray Bisset applied for the admission of William Henry Cameron Macintyre as a conveyancer.

Granted, the applicant to take the oath at East London.

LAWRENCE AND CO. V. KHAN. { 1902.
{ April 12th.

Insolvency — Fraudulent alienation.

Defendant had sold certain two shops, and a few days thereafter his estate was compulsorily sequestrated. As the bona fides of these sales was questioned by certain of defendant's creditors, the Master of the Supreme Court had attached the goods in these shops under Section 13 of the Insolvent Ordinance. Defendant now applied to have this attachment removed.

The Court ordered the attachment to be continued until six weeks after a trustee had been appointed in the insolvent estate, that he might be able to take action to set aside the sale of the shops if so advised. The purchasers of the shops were ordered to pay the costs of opposition, with leave to include them in any claim for damages they might have in reconvention.

This was an application (1) to have a provisional order of sequestration made absolute, and (2) for a continuation of the attachment of certain immoveable property at Claremont, already effected by the Master's Messenger pending the appointment of a trustee in the said insolvent estate. Provisional sequestration of the estate of Hassan Khan (the defendant) had been granted by the Chief Justice, in Chambers, on March 18, 1902, on the petition of B. Lawrence and Co., Ltd., of Cape Town.

The petition alleged that the insolvent had recently disposed of his assets with intent to defeat or delay his creditors.

The affidavit of the defendant admitted that he had sold certain shops situate at Claremont for £400, but denied that this had been done with intent to defeat or delay his creditors. He said that these sales were bona fide in the ordinary course of business and for full value. That the purchasers retained no part of the purchase price, and that he intended to apply the proceeds of these sales to pay off his creditors.

The affidavit of Amajet Khan, of Claremont, stated that he had purchased one of the said shops for £237 16s. 1d., and generally confirmed the affidavit of defendant as to the bona fides of the sale, and that on March 19, 1902, the Messenger of the Court closed the shop by the order of the Court.

The affidavit of Abdurahaman Khan alleged that he had purchased another of defendant's shops bona fide for £162 10s. 3d. That this was the fair value of the shop-stock and goodwill, and that although he had paid this sum, and neither defendant nor his estate had any further interest therein. That on March 19, 1902, the Messenger of the Supreme Court closed the shop by order of the Court.

The affidavit of Aaron Shirvald stated that he was a traveller for the firm of Gerald and Co., confectioners, of Cape Town; that he was at both the shops of Hassan Khan on March 11, 1902, two days before the alleged sale to Amajet Khan and Abdurahaman Khan, and that to the best of his knowledge the stock in the one shop was then worth upwards of £200, and the stock in the other between £350 and £400. On that day Hassan Khan promised to pay to Gerald and Co. an account of £12 in the course of the following week. On the following Monday, witness called at the shop in the Main-road, and saw Abdurahaman Khan and Amajet Khan; they told him that Hassan had gone to see his lawyer, and proposed compounding with his creditors for 10s. in the pound. They never said that they had bought the shops. On that day deponent noticed that the stock in the Main-road shop had been considerably reduced. He considered the prices realised totally inadequate to the value of the property and goods sold.

James McG. Bennett, in an answering affidavit, deposed that the shops were sold for £380 (and not £400) when Hassan Khan contemplated insolvency, and that at the time of the sale he owed Abourrahman and Amajet each a year's wages. That about eight days before the alleged sale deponent visited both shops and took particular notice of the stock; he estimated the value of the stock in the Main-road shop at from £350 to £400, and in Buchanan-road at about £200. On accompanying the Master's Messenger to attach the stock in these shops, deponent noticed a marked diminution, and estimated the value of what was left in both shops at from £350 to £400.

Mr. Buchanan (for the plaintiff) cited Kersfeld's Executor v. Friedman (4 Shiel 140). There, it is true a rule nisi was granted, but the principle on which we now ask to have the attachment continued is the same. Section 4 of the Insolvent Ordinance makes it an act of insolvency to alienate, transfer, give, cede, mortgage, or pledge any goods or effects with intent, or in such manner as to defeat or delay creditors in obtaining payment. Section 13 authorises attachment by the Master's Messenger on the sequestration of the estate, and this attachment must continue if there be any grounds for suspecting fraud until the whole matter has been investigated by the trustee and (if necessary) has been decided by action. No section of the Ordinance exactly meets this case, but Section 49 seems in point by analogy. A sale made by a man contemplating insolvency must be bona fide, and for a just price. Section 70 is also applicable by analogy. Also Section 83 (as to the recovery of things alienated mala fide) looks to the time before sequestration. Section 91 upholds alienation made to the alienee, of a creditor who has been unduly preferred, provided they were made bona fide, and for value, but then the said creditor may pay over the value of the things so alienated to the trustee of the estate. We do not say that there has been any undue preference in this case, but the sums paid for these businesses show that the sales were not bona fide.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers (for defendant opposing the attachment of the property): We only received the affidavits yesterday, and hence have had no opportunity of replying. Nothing was said about fraud in plaintiff's petition, and the onus of proving it is on the plaintiffs. Shinvald and Bennett only looked in a cursory manner round the shops, and it was impossible to form a reliable estimate of the value of the stock in that way. My clients on the other hand have taken stock carefully. Section 13 of the Insolvent Ordinance does not apply in this case, for the property which has been attached is no part of the insolvent's estate. The sale was perfectly bona fide, and the price paid was based on a careful stocktaking. Besides, these two shops are not brought up in Hassam Khan's schedules; they are no part of the estate, and it would be very hard on the purchasers were they prevented from carrying on their business.

The Court granted final sequestration as prayed, and ordered that the attachment effected by the Master's Messenger on the two shops do continue for a period of six weeks after the appointment of a trustee to enable the latter to take action to set aside the sales of the said shops, and that the costs of opposition be paid by the said Amajet Khan and Abdurrahman Khan, with leave reserved to the latter to include the costs so paid in any claim for damages they may claim in re-convention. The creditors were directed at once to proceed to the election of a trustee.

SOUTH AFRICAN SUPPLY AND COLD STORAGE COMPANY V. G. MANSFIELD.

Mr. Murray Bisset applied for a decree of civil imprisonment in respect to an unsatisfied judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Cape Town for £91 5s. 4½d.

The defendant appeared in person.

In reply to the Chief Justice, defendant said he only received a salary of £10 a month, and had a wife to support.

The Chief Justice asked Mr. Bisset if his clients were prepared to accept £2 a month.

Mr. Bisset replied that the sum was insufficient. Defendant lived on the premises of the applicants free of cost.

The Chief Justice asked the defendant if he could pay £5 a month.

Defendant said he feared it was impossible at present.

The Chief Justice said he would make the amount £4 10s. a month.

Mr. Bisset said he was instructed to accept an offer of £5 a month.

Judgment was given for a decree of civil imprisonment, to be suspended on payment of £4 10s. a month, the first instalment to be made on 1st May, plaintiffs having leave to apply again.

SHERWOOD V. CARTER.

Mr. Searle, K.C., applied for a decree of civil imprisonment in respect to an unsatisfied judgment for £295 6s. 3d. Counsel said that after the writ was taken out a further application was made to attach the half interest of the defendant in a certain patent in which plaintiff and defendant were jointly interested. The application was made on the 12th April last year, but at the instance of the defendant it stood over until the 1st May. Between these dates it appeared that defendant ceded his half interest to other parties. After the order was granted plaintiff discovered this.

Defendant, who appeared in person, said he knew nothing about this. During his absence summons was served on his wife, and before he came back judgment was given against him. He had a good claim against Mr. Sherwood. He went to England, and came back in March of last year. He left again on the 17th April. He first heard from his wife in January of judgment having been given against him.

Defendant, on oath, said he was a mechanical engineer. He did not earn anything in that capacity—not since the war had been on. He had no income.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness had other patents—one for a railway chair, which he believed to be valuable. Messrs. Colley had paid his expenses to go home to try and dispose of the patents. His expenses were paid in consideration of giving certain interest in his patents. Witness came out from England this year with his sister, whom he did not support. A separation order had been granted between witness and his wife; he had to pay £6 a month towards her support. He had not paid this except on one occasion. Witness had employed three solicitors, and the action had in his absence been defended by his solicitors, who had, however, withdrawn the defence. Between the 12th April and the 1st May, the period during which the plaintiff's application for attachment stood over, witness did not sell his interest in a certain patent. A syndicate had been formed in respect to the half share witness had in a patent.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved in this matter, which was an application for an interdict restraining the respondent, Wilhelmina Pedersen from occupying, or permitting anyone to occupy, certain houses at the corner of Ryan-road and High Level-road, Sea Point, until such time as they are completed, in terms of the plans and specifications approved by the applicants, and until respondent receives certificates of completion and occupation from the applicants. The matter was previously before the Chief Justice in Chambers, ex parte, when it was directed that notice be served upon respondent. This had been done, but no replying affidavit had been filed, nor had anything been done by respondent. The buildings were not completed in accordance with the plans approved by the Council, the stormwater being carried, not into the stormwater sewers, but into the household drainage sewers, doing damage to these. He also stated that one of the houses had been occupied before the water was laid on. Correspondence had passed showing that applicant had been warned that the houses could not be occupied until the stormwater drainage was in order, and the certificate of completion granted. It was further stated that the builder of the houses, who was the father of the respondent, had given the Municipality a vast amount of trouble in continually contravening the regulations.

An affidavit of the Building Inspector corroborated that of the Engineer, and the Inspector further stated that the occupier of one of the houses had informed him that the builder had told her that she could occupy the house.

The Court granted an order as prayed.

BRADY V. THE MASTER OF { 1902.
THE SUPREME COURT { April 14th.

The Master of the Supreme Court
Insolvent estate—Trustee—
Realization of assets.

Where no creditors in an insolvent estate have attended any meeting, and no trustee has consequently been elected, the Master of the Supreme Court has no power under the Insolvent Ordinance to liquidate the estate even so far as may be necessary in order to pay the costs of sequestration.

This was an application on notice calling upon the Master to show cause why an order should not be issued authorising or directing him to sell and dispose of the assets of the insolvent estate of one Leibbrandt, and to pay thereout the sum of £7 14s., being the taxed bill of costs of the applicant of and incident to the voluntary surrender and administration of the said estate, and which sum, though duly demanded, the respondent had refused to pay or to realise the said estate.

The petition of the applicant set forth that the estate of Johann Sebastian Leibbrandt was voluntarily surrendered by the insolvent in February last upon the petition of the insolvent, and the order of sequestration was made on the 28th February, 1902.

According to the schedules, the estate shows liabilities £320 6s. 11d. and assets £34 12s. 6d.

That the applicant acted as attorney for the insolvent on the surrender of his estate, and prepared and filed his petition and schedules, and paid the fees incident thereto, and the Master's fees. The costs were taxed at £7 14s.

That the first and final meeting of the insolvent estate was held on the 14th March, 1902. No creditors appeared thereat, nor have any creditors proved since, nor was any trustee appointed, and consequently the assets of the insolvent are vested in the Master of the Supreme Court, the present respondent.

That he had requested the respondent to realise the assets in order to pay the applicant the amount of his taxed bill of costs, but he had refused to do so.

That the costs are costs of administration, and preferent, and are still unpaid, and there appear to be sufficient assets in the estate to pay the same if the person in whom they are vested, viz., the respondent, will realise the same.

The Master, in his report, pointed out that the applicant had applied to him to sell sufficient of the assets to cover his taxed costs, as however, he (the Master) had performed all the duties required of him by the Ordinance, he declined to comply with the request.

The Court was aware that it was not the duty of the Master to sell the assets of insolvent to meet the claims of creditors. The Master pointed out to applicant that it was for him to see that a trustee was elected, from whom he could recover his costs, and informed him that he was prepared to call another meeting for the election of a trustee on payment of the fees. This course the applicant declined to adopt.

Mr. Wilkinson (for the applicant): I would submit that the Master should realise sufficient to pay the taxed bill of costs. There is no necessity for the appointment of a trustee. The Insolvent Ordinance provides for only one meeting for creditors if the assets in the estate are less than £75. Du Preez v. Trustee of Botes (2 Juta, 386) shows that it is not necessary to prove the costs of a voluntary surrender—they are part of the costs of sequestration. The estate is vested in the Master: he is in the position of a trustee, and should act as such.

[Maasdorp, J.: You say that everything must be done at the one meeting if the assets are not over £75!]

In this case the assets were so small that it was not worth the while of any of the creditors to appear. If the Master does not act as trustee the creditors will never get anything, and if no trustee is appointed, it is clearly his duty to act. See Macfarlane v. Brunnette (6 Sheil, 278). Du Preez's case was decided under the 8th section of the Ordinance. Doubtless the Master would realise sufficient to pay his own costs, and why should they be to all intents and purposes preferent to any other costs of sequestration.

[Maasdorp, J.: Who says that he has done so?]

It is only natural that he should.

[Maasdorp, J.: No trustee is allowed to sell, save to pay debts that have been proved.]

Costs of sequestration do not require proof.

Mr. Sheil, K.C. (for the Master) was not heard

The Court refused the application with costs.

Maasdorp, J.: This seems to me to be a most extraordinary application. It is virtually an application for an order upon the Master instructing him to proceed with the liquidation of the estate. Well, there is nothing in the Insolvent Ordinance which gives the Master any such power. The estate is only vested in the Master until such time as a trustee can be appointed to proceed under the Insolvent Ordinance to liquidate the estate, or, under certain circumstances, if the insolvency is not proceeded with the estate becomes re-invested in the insolvent upon the proper steps being taken. Under these circumstances the Court can not grant the order prayed for. The applicant must have certain remedies, and he must discover what the proper remedy is in this case. The application will be refused with costs.

IN THE ASSIGNED ESTATE OF MARCUS HEYDENRYCH AND CO.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property without the production of the original deed of assignment, which had been lost. Counsel stated that there was a duplicate signed document made at the time.

The case was ordered to stand over until the consent of other parties to the agreement had been obtained.

Mr. Buchanan moved to make absolute a rule nisi authorising the Registrar of Deeds at Vryburg to issue certified copies of certain two mortgage bonds.

RE ESTATE BRISTER. { 1902.
{ April 14th.

Option of purchase—Executor
Minors' contingent interest.

The late J. B. had let certain property to the firm of J. B. & Co., with the option of purchase at his death, for £7,700. J. B. & Co. did not attempt to exercise this option until six years after J. B.'s death, but continued to pay rent. They had greatly improved the property, both in J. B.'s life-time and after his death. One of the partners in J. B. & Co. was also one of J. B.'s executors. He and his co-executor now asked for an order (1) directing the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of the said property to J. B. & Co. for the purchase price of £7,700, and (2) to direct that duty should be paid on transfer as though a sale had been effected six months after J. B.'s death. Certain minor children had a remotely contingent interest in the property.

The Court granted the first prayer of the petition, but refused the second.

This was an application for leave to transfer certain property situate in the town of Port Elizabeth.

The petition of Thomas Stevenson and William Brister Belt, both of Port Elizabeth, in their capacity as executors testamentary to the estate of the late James Brister, showed that the late James Brister, was the owner of certain two plots of land situate in Port Elizabeth, and extending from Main-street to Chapel-street. In these premises he formerly carried on the business of a furniture dealer, etc., under the style of Jas. Brister and Co., and he disposed of his said business to the said Wm. Brister Belt and Edward Roper Martin, who have since carried on the same for their own account under the said style. On or about the 5th April, 1892, the said Jas. Brister gave to the said firm of Jas. Brister and Co. the complete control of the said landed property, upon the payment of an annual rental of £600, so long as he should live, with the option of taking over the same at his death for £7,700, upon certain terms and conditions set forth in a letter from him hereunto annexed marked "A." At his death Jas. Brister left a paper headed "Memos. for Guidance," in which appear the words: "James Brister and Co. have the right to take over Main-street." The said firm paid the stipulated rent, and fulfilled the other conditions referred to in the said letter of April 5, 1892, until his death. At various times, both during the lifetime and after the death of the said James Brister, the firm of J. Brister and Co. made additions to the said building, at a cost of £2,984 12s. 5d. At the death of Jas. Brister the said firm did not give any formal notification to petitioners that they had exercised their option granted in the said letter of April 5, 1892, but as the deceased had during his lifetime given the first-named petitioner to understand that the said Jas. Brister and Co. were taking over the said property, and as the second-named petitioner was both an executor to the estate of the late Jas. Brister and a partner in the firm of Jas. Brister and Co., it was tacitly assumed that no such formal notification was necessary, but that the said firm could demand transfer of the said property at any time after the death of the said Jas. Brister, and in or about 1898 the second-named petitioner showed to the first-named petitioner the said letter of April 5, as a reminder that the property belonged to his said firm, and that transfer would be taken in due course. Since the death of the said Jas. Brister, the said firm of Jas. Brister and Co. have continued to pay £600 per annum, and as this sum was a better return than 6 per cent. per annum on the purchase price of £7,700, the first-named petitioner considered it for the benefit of the estate to allow the arrangement to continue without interference. The said firm of Jas. Brister and Co. have now asked the petitioners to transfer the said property to them for the purchase price of £7,700, and offer to carry out the terms of the letter of April 5, 1892, and petitioners are prepared to do this, being satisfied that they are entitled to such transfer in accordance with arrangement made with the late Jas. Brister, but as the second-named petitioner is one of the executors of the late Jas. Brister, as well as a partner in the firm of Jas. Brister and Co., and as no formal notice was given by the firm to petitioners, they consider that the ruling of the Court should be obtained as to whether, under all the circumstances, the words at my death, in the said letter of April 5, 1892, do not mean after my death? The petitioners are of opinion that no persons will be prejudiced by the passing of such transfer, as they are advised that, should transfer be refused, the said Jas. Brister and Co. will be entitled to recompense for the improvements made bona fide. The Divisional Council valuation of the property is now placed at £10,000.

Wherefore the petitioners pray that your Lordships will be pleased to grant an order authorising and directing the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of the said landed property to William Brister Belt and Edward Roper Martin, trading as Jas. Brister and Co., for the purchase price of £7,700, and that transfer duty be paid thereon, as though a sale had been effected on June 6, 1897, being six months after the death of the said Jas. Brister, or at such other date as your Lordships shall direct.

The letter marked "A" was as follows:

Port Elizabeth,

April 5, 1892.

Messrs. J. Brister and Co.,

Dears Sirs,—Referring to our conversation about my property in Main-street and Chapel-street, I am willing to hand over to you the complete control of the property, including the cottage in Chapel-street, you accepting the position and responsibility of landlord from this date, paying the agreed rent of £600 a year quarterly so long as I may live: also all rates and taxes that may be levied on the property, together with the insurance on the property, except for this year, 1892, which I will pay and retain the rent of the cottage until the end of June, 1892. And I also give you the option of taking over the whole property at my death for the sum of £7,700; £6,000 can remain on mortgage: the balance at 6, 12, 18, and 24 months.—Yours very truly, (Signed) JAMES BRISTER.

The report of the Registrar of Deeds, after recapitulating the facts, proceeds: "Instead of exercising the option at the date of Mr. Brister's death, which apparently occurred on December 6, 1896, the firm continued to pay the rent, and has only recently approached the executors with the object of procuring transfer. It appears, however, that, although paying a rental, the firm treated the property as its own, and both during the lifetime of Mr. Brister and after his death it expended considerable sums in effecting improvement." . . . I consider it desirable that the ruling of the Court should be obtained as to the right of the firm to take over the property. I am of opinion, however, that that portion of the prayer which relates to the payment of transfer duty cannot be entertained. Under section 13 of the Transfer Duty Act the Civil Commissioner is given certain discretionary powers, and he should be allowed to exercise them in this case, but it would be an advantage if the Court, in case the sale is confirmed, would indicate the date which should be treated as the date of sale."

Mr. Buchanan (for applicants): The only difficulties which arise in this case are: (1) That one of the purchasers is an executor; (2) at what date is the purchase to be regarded as completed. As to the first point, the price offered is a fair one, and was fixed by Mr. Brister himself—the transaction is perfectly bona fide, and the estate will not suffer by the sale. As to the second point, if transfer is not passed within twelve months after the date of the sale, 12 per cent. is charged on the purchase price. The Registrar of Deeds seems to think that transfer duty should be paid, not on £7,700, but that a fresh valuation of the property should be made. Of course, under section 13 of Act 5 of 1884 the Civil Commissioner can have a valuation made, but it would be manifestly unfair to make Brister and Co. pay transfer duty on the enhanced value of the property, seeing that they themselves have increased its value by their own improvements.

Maasdorp, J., said that he would order that transfer be passed, in terms of the letter dated the 5th April, 1892, and that it must be taken that the contract upon which transfer would be passed was made on the date of the death of the deceased. As the Registrar pointed out, no further order could be made as to the manner in which transfer duty should be calculated.

His Lordship asked if there were any minors interested.

Mr. Buchanan said that from a telegram he had received there would appear to be interested minors.

His Lordship said that upon the document as it now stood he could express his opinion. But some interested parties might be able to put a different complexion on the case. As it appeared that there were minors, he thought the matter should be referred to the Master, and the order would not be issued until the Master had reported.

Postea, April 26, the Master reported "There are minor grandchildren, who are at this stage only indirectly concerned, their parents being alive. The only way in which they may be affected is in the distribution of the residue of the estate in the event of the early death of the survivor of the testator's two youngest daughters, an event which may not happen until there are no more minor children. With regard to the sale, the Master recommended that it should be confirmed. An order in terms of the decision of the Court of April 14 was issued accordingly.

Applicants' Attorney: G. Trollip.

Ex parte HUGO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved for leave to the petitioner to sue her husband for restitution of conjugal rights by edictal citation.

The applicant stated on affidavit that she was married to Petrus Francois Hugo on February 21, 1893, and there was one child of the marriage, a girl of seven. After marriage she and her husband resided at the Farm Modderfontein, Prieska district. The respondent was a farmer, but owned no landed property, although he was possessed of some movable property in the shape of live-stock, etc. In 1900 the respondent left the applicant, and joined a commando of Transvaalers, under the leadership of Steenkamp. A considerable part of the live-stock had been taken away. The petitioner stated that she had received no monetary assistance since March 18, 1900. She received one letter from him from Holland, and subsequently another letter about a year ago, dated from a place called Gibeon, in the German territory on the West Coast of Africa. The petitioner desired to sue him for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for divorce.

The matter was allowed to stand over for production of the letters mentioned, and for any further information that could be brought before the Court.

RE THE ANTENUPTIAL CONTRACT OF THE LATE ARCHIBALD ORIGHTON BELL AND PREDECEASED SPOUSE JOSEPHINE BENJAMINA BELL (BORN BURNETT).

This was an application for the appointment of a trustee in the place of the trustees appointed by the antenuptial contract, both of whom were now deceased.

Mr. Wilford, who appeared for the applicant, said that the matter was before the Court last provisional day, and was postponed for the purpose of an affidavit as to the death of one of the trustees being produced. The original affidavit had clearly stated that the one trustee was dead, but was not clear as to the death of the other. The necessary affidavit was now put in.

Order granted as prayed, George Henry Gasson being appointed trustee.

Ex parte MCNAMARA.

Mr. McGregor said that was the return day of the rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act in the above matter, but he asked that it be allowed to stand over until May 1.

Mr. Sheil, K.C., appeared on behalf of the Government, to consent to the postponement.

Postponement granted, the question of costs also being postponed.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. MARITZ.

This was the petition of Henry de Smidt, in his capacity as Assistant Treasurer of the Colony and Receiver-General of the Revenue, and as such representing the Colonial Government.

The petition set forth that on the 5th March, 1896, one Christoffel Carolus Johannes Maritz passed a mortgage bond in favour of the Colonial Government under Act 15 of 1887, for the sum of £114 8s. on first mortgage, of certain pieces of land situate at Douglas, in the division of Herbert, being agricultural lots No. 71 and No. 82.

That it was provided in the mortgage bond that the said Maritz should pay interest on the capital sum of £114 8s. to the Colonial Government on the 1st day of January in each year at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, reckoned from the 20th October, 1896, and that in the event of failure to pay the interest within three months after the day on which the same should have become due the whole of the capital sum and arrears of interest should thereupon become forthwith legally due and payable without any notice whatsoever.

That Maritz had never paid any interest on the said capital sum of £114 8s., and that from inquiries which had been instituted by the Civil Commissioner of Herbert it appeared that Maritz was an absconded rebel, at present with the Boer forces.

Petitioner was desirous of suing Maritz by edictal citation for the recovery of the capital amount of the mortgage bond, and interest from 20th October, 1896, and he prayed for an order for the attachment of the said landed property ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and that upon the return of the writ of attachment he might be allowed to issue summons by edict against Maritz for the capital sum, and interest with costs, and that the Court might direct as to the mode of serving the summons and as to the time for the appearance of the defendant.

Mr. Sheil, K.C., appeared for the Government, and moved in terms of the petition.

The Court granted leave to attach the property ad fundandam jurisdictionem, and to sue by edict, returnable on the 12th June next; personal service, if possible, failing which, one publication in the "Government Gazette" and one in the "Gazette" of the Orange River Colony.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. POTGIETER AND COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V VENTER.

These were similar applications to the last mentioned. In the former the amount claimed was £242 8s., with interest and costs, and in the latter £236, with interest and costs.

Mr. Sheil, K.C., appeared for the Government.

The Court made orders similar to that granted in the case of Maritz.

IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE BAREND
PIETER DU PLESSIS.

Mr. Close moved on behalf of the petitioner, in his capacity as executor testamentary, for leave to purchase for the benefit of the children who are heirs in the above estate certain property. The purchase price was to be paid out of moneys belonging to the estate, and as the father of the children had the usufruct of this money, he was to have the usufruct of the ground purchased. The father had purchased this property for himself for £2,000, paying £750 in cash and passing a bond for £1,250 for the remainder, and he was now to put the property into the estate on the payment of the mortgage bond alone. The two major children had consented to this being done, and the Master's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF AMY GARDNER GUSH.

Mr. Russell moved for leave to sue for restitution of conjugal rights in forma pauperis. Plaintiff alleged that her husband had deserted her. She was instituting an action for restitution of conjugal rights.

The applicant stated that she was a hospital nurse. She had not sufficient money to pay an attorney.

The application was granted, the case being referred to Mr. Gardiner.

HLANGE V. TABATA.

Mr. Bisset moved for leave to sue in forma pauperis. The case concerned certain property which plaintiff alleged he had bought, and for which defendant held the title deeds.

The application was granted, the case being referred to Mr. Bisset, a rule nisi being granted calling upon the respondent to show cause why he should not give up the title deeds aforesaid.

Postea, July 14: The rule was made absolute.

BLAKE V. BOSCH.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to attach £55 17s. 6d., in the hands of the High Sheriff of Cape Town, belonging to defendant, pending an action to be instituted, and for leave to sue by edictal citation.

Leave was granted, the return day being fixed for the 12th June, personal service to be effected; otherwise, service by publication, once in the "Government Gazette" and once in the "Gazette" of the Orange River Colony.

DANVERS V. ARCHER AND DANVERS AND OO. V. ARCHER.

Mr. Upington applied to attach certain moneys, amounting to £13 1s. 9d., in the hands of Messrs. Mannering and Stevenson.

Granted, with costs against the respondent, Archer.

MCKENZIE AND CO. (LTD.) V. HOWES
BROS. AND CO. (LTD.).

Sir Henry Juta, K.C., moved for leave to sue by edictal citation in the above matter. The petition of McKenzie and Co. stated that on November 5, 1901, they entered into a contract with the respondents for the supply of Australian butter, and they had a right of action against respondents for £1,650 damages for breach of that contract. On March 26, his lordship, Mr. Justice Maasdorp, granted an order attaching 500 cases of butter, to found jurisdiction. Jurisdiction having been founded, the applicants now asked for leave to sue by edictal citation, and also to serve intendit and notice of trial together with the citation.

Maasdorp, J., said that, as this butter had been attached, they might consider whether it was not advisable to dispose of it.

Sir Henry Juta said that, of course, if it was fresh butter, it would be better in the interests of all to sell it, although if it was in tins, it might not matter; but he did not think the respondents had representatives here who could act for them in that connection.

Leave was granted to sue by edictal citation, July 12 being fixed as the return day, and also to serve the intendit and notice of trial along with the citation.

RE MINORS WADDELL. { 1902.
Ex parte CURREY, N.O. { April 14th.

Minors property—Option of purchase.

A division of certain property having been made, it was discovered that the portion assigned to certain minor heirs had been leased with an option of purchase to the lessee. The lessee now insisted on his option, and the trustee for the said minors asked for an order authorising the sale, or, in the alternative, setting aside the option as ultra vires. The Master recommended the confirmation of the sale.

The Court granted an order authorizing the sale of the property.

This was an application for an order of the Court granting leave to sell certain property bequeathed to the above minors, or, on the other hand, to set aside, as being ultra vires, and not to the benefit of the minors, a certain clause in a lease giving an option to purchase.

The petition of William Arthur Currey, in his capacity as secretary to the General Estate and Orphan Chamber, and as such trustee for the minors Edward George Waddell and Albert Victor Augustus Waddell, children of Richard Waddell, and his predeceased wife, Fanny Ada Waddell, was as follows:

1. The petitioner, as secretary of the General Estate and Orphan Chamber, was, by order of Court dated March 17, 1899, duly appointed trustee of the said minors.

2. On March 17, 1899, the father of the said minors, together with one George W. Parry, in their capacity as executors testamentary to the estate of the late Fanny Ada Waddell, presented a petition to this Hon. Court praying for an order authorising the raising of a loan of £6,000 upon the security of certain properties, situated at Wynberg and Kenilworth, and registered in the name of Richard Waddell.

3. That your petitioner craves leave to refer this Hon. Court to the petition and annexures thereto filed of record with the application.

4. That this Hon. Court, on March 17, 1899, in answer to such prayer, made an order in terms of the Master's report, and your petitioner was duly appointed trustee.

5. That in terms of the said Master's report and order of Court, the property situated at Wynberg, and described in the deed of transfer in favour of the said Richard Waddell on September 28, 1898, was transferred on March 29, 1899, to the said minors as their share of the property of the deceased Fanny Ada Waddell, and the property situated at Kenilworth was transferred to the said Richard Waddell as his share.

6. That after petitioner had been appointed such trustee, and after he had taken transfer as above, he was informed by one B. W. Davies, of Station-road, Wynberg, who was the tenant of the premises in question, as well as by the said Richard Waddell, that the said B. W. Davies held the premises under a lease from the said Richard Waddell for a term of five years from March 1, 1897, to February 28, 1902, with the option of purchase for £2,000, and your petitioner thereafter received notice on January 7, 1902, intimating that he, the said Davies, intended exercising the option of purchase.

7. That as the wife of the said Richard Waddell died on June 10, 1894, and the will was dated April 9, 1891, under which will the said Richard Waddell has adiated and received benefit, your petitioner submits that the said Richard Waddell had no right to give the said Davies, or anyone else, the option of purchase over the said property, and that, therefore, the option mentioned in the said lease of March 11, 1897, is ultra vires, and of no effect.

8. That the property was valued by a sworn appraiser at the time application was made in 1899 at £2,500, but it has now been valued by a sworn appraiser at £1,600. The price fixed in the lease is therefore an increase on the present appraised value.

9. That your petitioner is anxious to have the decision of this Hon. Court as to whether the option given in 1897 is legal or not, and to the benefit of the minors, and if so, whether your Hon. Court would authorise the sale of the property to B. W. Davies, and authorise the Registrar of Deeds to register the necessary deed of transfer from your petitioner in his aforesaid capacity to the said B. W. Davies.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that it may please your lordships to grant an order, either setting aside the option clause in the said lease of March 11, 1897, and ceded to the said Davies on October 14, 1897, as being ultra vires, and not to the benefit of the minors; or in the alternative, for an order authorising your petitioner, in his aforesaid capacity, to give transfer to the said Davies, and for authority to the Registrar of Deeds to register such deed of transfer, and that the costs of this application may be paid out of the revenue derived from the said property; and for alternative relief.

Mr. Searle (for petitioner) stated briefly the facts of the case.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is Davies represented?]

[A gentleman, stated to be a law agent, here rose and stated that he had a power of attorney from Mr. Davies.]

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (as amicus curiae), pointed out that only counsel could be heard in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Searle: The option was an improper option, and therefore there was the alternative prayer. The Master in his report said that, if the property was sold for £2,000, there would be no actual loss to the minors, because if it were put up by auction, it would not fetch more than that. It appeared that the property had now been valued, and while one valuator gave the value as £2,250, the other gave it as £1,600, so that, taking the average of £1,925, the Master thought the sale for £2,000 should be confirmed. As for the trustee, he left the question as to whether the property should be sold or the option clause set aside in the hands of the Court.

The Court granted an order in terms of the Master's report, allowing the sale of the property, costs to come out of the proceeds.

RE ESTATE OF LATE { 1902.
SLUITER. { April 14th.
Minor—Maintenance—Allowance to Natural Guardian.

*S. had by an unwitnessed

usufruct of his estate to his wife and the corpus to his child (still a minor). The Court having previously decided that the widow could not claim benefits under this will, had authorized the administrators of the estate to pay £250 annually for the maintenance of the child. The widow now asked for the life usufruct of the whole estate to enable her to maintain the child more suitably, and as a recompense for any expense and trouble she might be put to in so doing. The income from the estate was £1,000.

The Court ordered that, pending a further order of Court, £500 per annum should be paid to the mother for the use of the child and to meet any extra expense she might incur on the child's account.

This was an application for an order authorising the executors to pay from time to time to the widow of the late Herman van Loeven Sluiter the whole of the usufruct of the estate of deceased.

The petition of the applicant set forth that she had been married to deceased in this colony out of community of property. That by the said marriage there was only one child, a girl now 11 years of age. That on August 25, 1897, deceased had made a holograph will, by which, after leaving a sum of money to his brother, he appointed petitioner heiress to the residue of his estate in trust for the child, or children of the marriage, petitioner to have the usufruct during her lifetime, and upon her death the estate was to be divided equally among the children of the marriage. That, as this will was not duly attested, it was ineffectual as far as petitioner and the legatee were concerned, and that the one child of the marriage was the sole heiress of the estate. That petitioner (contrary to the obvious intention of her late husband) had been left without means to support herself, and that the board of executors, as ex-cutors of the estate of deceased, refused to pay more out of the usufruct than was required from time to time for the maintenance and support of the child, without an order of Court to that effect, as they maintained that the said usufruct was for the benefit of the child only. They therefore refused to pay more than £250 per annum. Petitioner submitted that this sum was insufficient for the child's requirements, and that petitioner, as her guardian, was entitled to some remuneration. The estate was worth about £25,000, and the annual income therefrom was about £1,000. Petitioner prayed for an order directing the aforesaid executors to pay over to her the entire usufruct, in the terms of the will.

The Master recommended that such portion of the usufruct as might be necessary for petitioner's support be paid to her, and considered £500 per annum a reasonable sum for this purpose. The Master further called the attention of the Court to the fact that the testator only appointed executors to his will and not administrators of his estate, but that the board of executors had exercised the function of administrators and had declined to pay the minor's money into the guardians' fund, as is customary where administrators have not been appointed. By this the minor was the loser, as the Board only allows simple interest at 4 per cent., but the Guardians' Fund allows compound interest at the same rate.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for petitioner): The two questions before the Court are: (1) Should the board of executors be ordered to pay this money into the Guardians' Fund? (2) what sum should be allowed her for the child's maintenance and education. The Master suggests £500 a year, and that certainly is not an unreasonable sum considering the value of the estate.

[Maasdorp, J.: Should not the mother be under some kind of supervision?]

She is the natural guardian. At all events, it is not in the interest of the minor that the board of executors should continue to act as administrators for the Guardians' Fund, who give better interest for the cash balance in the estate, but the Board proposed to invest this money at a higher rate. The Court has never laid down that even an executor is bound to liquidate the estate piecemeal and pay in any balance to the Master of the Guardians' Fund, and here the Board has taken out letters of administration.

[The Master: Only testators appoint administrators; we do not.]

[Maasdorp, J.: If the estate is not finally liquidated it should not be paid in piecemeal. Have the executors yet done their duty as executors?]

The Master: Not quite; they still have some money in hand.]

[Mr. Searle: They have some thousands in bonds, some of them at 6 per cent., and others at 7 per cent. or 8 per cent. But it is only incidentally that the point whether executors are bound to pay in balances to the Guardians' Fund, as they realise arises. My chief application is for an allowance for Mrs. Sluiter, and I submit that £500 a year is a very reasonable sum.]

Maasdorp, J.: Whoever retains the money, whether the Board of Executors or the Master, a report must be made to the Master as to the manner in which the money allowed the applicant is expended. I am asked to express an opinion as to the position of the Board of Executors, and so far as my opinion is concerned, I think that it cannot be contested that they have only as executors to liquidate the estate. As to the period required to do so, that depends upon the nature of the estate and the investments on account of which it may be quite correct for the executors to delay the liquidation; but if they delay the liquidation unduly, then the Master should move. I don't think the Court should now grant an order to pay over the money to the Master piecemeal. I will not grant such an order now, but if, on further information, the Master wishes to move again, he can do so. With regard to the application of the mother, it seems that when the matter was before the Court on a former occasion, the Chief Justice pointed out that there should be no instruction or direction that the administration should be for the benefit of the mother—as owing to the nature of the will, and the fact that no probate would be granted upon it, the testator did not, according to law, confer any benefit upon that mother. The question only arises now, in how far should the minor be benefited by the expenditure of moneys on her by her natural guardian—the mother—and what amount should be beneficially expended by the mother for the minor. It is suggested that £250 would be sufficient under the circumstances for the education and maintenance of the minor, but it seems to me, considering that a large amount of money annually comes to the minor, that it would be to the advantage of the minor that the mother herself should be placed in such a position as to be able to maintain the child personally. The mother, having no means, cannot properly maintain the child, unless she make a home for the child, and it cannot be expected that the mother should go to great expense and make a home for the child unless she can be assisted from the money that comes to the child for that purpose. Referring to the Master's report, it seems that the Master himself considers that £500 would be a reasonable amount to allow. Now that amount will be allowed only until further order of the Court—it may be that circumstances may arise making it advisable to remove the expenditure from the mother—consequently the authority will be given to pay this amount until further order of the Court, and while this money is so payable, the mother will make a report to the Master showing that the money is properly expended. At present the Court will make no order as to the question arising between the Master and the executors.

Antenuptial Contract—Trustee.

Where a man by antenuptial contract settled certain property upon his future wife in trust for her support and for that of any issue of the marriage, and children of the said marriage having since been born, the consorts asked for leave to sell the property and reinvest the proceeds. The Court granted an order authorizing the sale and transfer to purchasers, but directed that the proceeds should be paid over and bonds passed to certain trustees to be appointed by the consorts to be held upon the trusts mentioned in the antenuptial contract.

This was an application for leave to sell certain property.

The petition of Herbert Waite and Minnie Beatrice Waite (born Ensor) stated that the petitioners were married at Port Elizabeth under an antenuptial contract on October 29th, 1891. In this contract the first-named petitioner ceded and transferred to the second petitioner two pieces of ground situate in Port Elizabeth, and further described in the said contract. This cession was made by the first-named petitioner in consideration of his intended marriage, and for divers other good causes and considerations. The rents, profits and benefits accruing from the said property during the joint lives of the intended consorts were to be applied to the maintenance and support of the second-named petitioner, and for the maintenance, support and education of the issue of the then intended marriage up to and until the youngest child should have attained the age of 21 years, or be married, when the property was to be realised and paid out to the child, or children, then alive, or should no such child or children survive the mother, the property should become hers solely and exclusively, and should be disposed of as she might think fit. Should the second predecease the first petitioner, there being issue of the intended marriage, the proceeds of the property were to be paid out as aforesaid on the death of the first petitioner. Other clauses of the contract provided for the disposal of the property in case (1) the intended wife should predecease her husband, there being no issue of the marriage; and (2) the husband should predecease the wife, leaving issue. In this case the wife was to continue to enjoy the rents and profits of the land aforesaid for the support of herself and of her children, and on her death or re-marriage the proceeds of the property were to be applied to the support and education of the children until the youngest of them should attain the age of 21, or be married, when the said proceeds were to be distributed as aforesaid. During her lifetime the wife was to be trustee of the property. Should she resign the trusteeship, or become incapacitated from acting, or forfeit, or wish to be relieved of the same, the spouses reserved to themselves jointly during their joint lives the power to appoint any other fit and proper person as trustee, and on the death of the first dying, the survivor was to have the like power; a life policy effected by the husband upon his own life for £2,000 was also assigned to the wife by the said antenuptial contract upon the same conditions.

The petition proceeded to state that there was issue of the said marriage, two boys and three girls. That the said ground with the buildings thereon cost the first-named petitioner £2,250 in July, 1891, and that they are now let at £20 16s. 8d. a month. Petitioners had now an opportunity of selling the property for £10,250. Of this sum £2,250 was to be paid on or before transfer, with option to purchasers to pay £8,000 on or before transfer, or to allow the said sum of £8,000 to remain on first mortgage at 6 per cent., of which £1,000 was to be paid off within the first year, and another £1,000 in the second year; the remaining £6,000 to remain on first mortgage at 6 per cent., subject to six months' notice on either side. Petitioners regarded such offer as most advantageous to those concerned under the said antenuptial contract and prayed for an order to enable them to sell the said property under the conditions aforesaid, and to reinvest the balance of the proceeds, after paying all expenses of sale for the purposes named in the said antenuptial contract.

The affidavits of the Secretary of the Divisional Council of Port Elizabeth and of a sworn appraiser, both stated that the price offered for the property was exceptionally good.

The Master's Report was as follows: "The terms and conditions of the sale appear to be most advantageous to the seller, but the trustee referred to in the antenuptial contract has not been appointed. I think this should be done, the policy ceded to him, and the proceeds of the sale of the property should be invested by him, otherwise the settlement is merely an arrangement to evade the claims of creditors."

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for applicants): The property is vested in Mr. Waite, subject to the same conditions as the policy of insurance upon trust or in the trustee after provided for in the antenuptial contract. Mrs. Waite is the only trustee mentioned, and it is only in the event of her dying, or becoming incapacitated that the appointment of another trustee is provided for; all persons interested agree to this sale, and I am instructed to say that petitioners have no objection to the secretary for the time being or the Ægis Insurance Co. being joined with Mrs. Waite as co-trustee. We ask the Court to sanction this sale; to authorise Mrs. Waite to pass transfer, as the property is registered in her name, and that the proceeds of the sale be handed over for investment to trustees to be appointed by the consorts in terms of the antenuptial contract.

The Court ordered the sale to be confirmed; that Mrs. Waite be authorised, as trustee, to transfer the property mentioned in the petition registered in her name; and that the money be paid and bonds be passed to the trustee, to be held upon the trusts mentioned in the antenuptial contract.

Postponement of Trial—Absence of Witnesses—Practice.

Application for the postponement of a criminal trial on the ground of the absence of material witnesses refused in the absence of any affidavit stating the names of the witnesses, and in what respect their evidence was material.

Mr. Wilkinson, who appeared for the accused, said he had an application to make, and that was that the trial should be postponed to the next Criminal Sessions, and the application was based on the following grounds: They had witnesses who were at present in Europe those witness would prove that certain evidence that had been given before the Magistrate on behalf of the prosecution, and which would presumably be given at the present trial, evidence of a most important and damaging nature, was utterly false.

De Villiers, C.J.: Whose evidence?

Mr. Wilkinson: The evidence of two witnesses who are at present in Europe. It is impossible for us to get those witnesses before—

De Villiers, C.J.: No. I mean whose evidence do you say is false?

Mr. Wilkinson: Well, I would prefer not to indicate which portion of the evidence that is.

De Villiers, C.J.: But I think you should do so, and you should state what witnesses you wish to contradict.

The evidence would account for the way in which they became possessed of these bills, and for the making of the bills. That was one portion of the evidence, and he submitted that if they could satisfactorily account for the possession of those bills, and, more than that, if they could satisfactorily account for the way in which those bills came into their possession, and for the actual making of the bills, then he submitted that on that account alone the evidence for the prosecution would utterly fail, without going into other matters.

De Villiers, C.J.: Have you any affidavit?

No, but an affidavit to that effect can be made immediately. These are my instructions, and I make those statements with a full sense of responsibility.

De Villiers, C.J.: Yes, I daresay you do, but practice requires an affidavit.

Then we will have an affidavit made to that effect immediately.

De Villiers, C.J.: What you have stated you wish to prove by affidavit?

The Chief Justice (to the Attorney-General): What do you say, Mr. Graham?

Mr. Graham: Of course, my lord, I object most strongly to any postponement.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the Attorney-General objects there can be no postponement.

Mr. Wilkinson: Do I understand that your lordship has given judgment on the postponement?

De Villiers, C.J.: Yes. Do you wish to address the Court again?

Mr. Wilkinson: I had refrained from alluding to the second part of the evidence, in reference to which our evidence is contradictory. That is the evidence that was given as regards the typewriting. We can clearly establish that the whole of that evidence is founded upon an utter mistake. I won't use any stronger words than that.

Graham A.G. (sotto voce): No, you had better not.

Mr. Wilkinson: My friend says I had better not, but any stronger words would be out of place. Proceeding, Mr. Wilkinson said he would submit strongly that in the first place, if this were an application made on behalf of the Crown on the ground that material witnesses were absent without whom he could not go to trial, there would not be any strong reason for objecting. In this case he put it as strongly as he could that, by going to trial without witnesses who might have an important bearing on the case, they would be incurring a most imminent risk of a complete miscarriage of justice. When an announcement of this sort was made, and the nature of that evidence was indicated, he could not understand how the Crown could persist in opposing the postponement, if their object was not to snatch a conviction, but to elicit the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. He would therefore urge upon his lordship, in the interests of justice, in the interests of the community, and of the lady who at present, at all events, must be considered as innocent, and who supposed that she had evidence that would completely rebut certain evidence of the Crown, that the trial might be postponed.

De Villiers, C.J.: An application is made for the postponement of this case on the grounds that there are two witnesses in Europe who can contradict evidence here. I asked for the names of the two witnesses whose evidence was to be contradicted, and counsel for the defence declined to give them.

Mr. Wilkinson: No, my lord, I did not understand—

De Villiers, C.J.: You said you would rather not give the names of those whose evidence is to be contradicted.

Mr. Wilkinson: But I went on to refer to the evidence that we were going to contradict.

De Villiers, C.J.: Then whose evidence was it? I will give you another opportunity.

The evidence of Dr. Scholtz.

De Villiers, C.J.: Upon what point?

Upon the point of the genuineness of the signatures, and where the bills were made, and how they were made, and how they came into our possession.

De Villiers, C.J.: Then whose names did you decline to mention?

The names of the two witnesses whom I desire to call.

De Villiers, C.J.: Then I think it is worse if he refuses to give the names of witnesses whom he wishes to call. Upon that point no such application should be made. It is usual, when an application of that kind is made, to be prepared with an affidavit in support of the statements of counsel. Here there is no such affidavit, but we are informed that one can be made immediately. If there had been the slightest grounds for believing that justice would be imperilled in consequence of the absence of these two unnamed witnesses, I should certainly have ordered the postponement, but there is no reason to fear anything of the kind, and therefore the application will be refused.

Forgery—Production of Forged Document.

Held, that if a forged document can be traced to the possession of a person accused of forging it, and that person fails to produce it on notice, a conviction may be sustained notwithstanding its non-production.

Graham, A.G., said that this was a note the prosecution could not produce. It bore the alleged signature of Mr. Rhodes and Dr. Scholtz.

Mr. Wilkinson (for defendant) said all the notes mentioned in the indictment should be produced, and he took objection to the evidence.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is a pity you did not raise that objection at first. What are your authorities, Mr. Attorney?

The Attorney-General submitted, first, that on general principles he was entitled to produce evidence as to this note, and he pointed out that, supposing a person was accused of having forged a document, and undoubted evidence was produced of the existence of that document—that the document had actually been in the possession of the Crown—and that, during the course of the trial, before going to the jury, the accused person obtained possession of that document and destroyed it, surely it would be impossible to suggest that on that count evidence in regard to that note should be excluded. He submitted that once they had satisfied the Court of the existence of the note or bill, and that it had been traced back to the possession of the accused, the jury, if they were convinced that the note had been forged or uttered, were entitled to bring in a verdict of guilty on that count. He quoted Taylor on Evidence, par. 408, to show that secondary evidence could be led even in a case of forgery, although then notice must have been served upon the accused person to produce the document, and such person must have failed to do so before secondary evidence could be taken as to the contents of the document. The authorities only laid down that reasonable notice must have been given the accused to produce that document.

[De Villiers, C.J.: That such notice has been given has not been proved yet?]

The Attorney-General: It is filed of record. These documents were served on accused by the Sheriff. The Attorney-General quoted R. v. Haworth (4 C. and P. 254) R. v. Hunter (3 C. and P. 591), in support of his contention, and also pointed out that he had personally argued that very point in Q. v. Searle (1898, July 15), in which he prosecuted when he was last Attorney-General. It was the case of a Cape Town Post-office official, and the point was whether they were entitled to call secondary evidence when the documents were not forthcoming. It was then held by Maasdorp, J., that such evidence was permissible. As a matter of fact, the jury did not find the prisoner guilty on those counts, as the evidence was not particularly satisfactory, but the principle was decided in favour of the argument he now brought forward.

Mr. Wilkinson did not reply in argument, saying that he left himself entirely in the hands of the Court.

De Villiers, J.: I think the evidence is admissible. There may be some difficulty in proving forgery where the document is not produced, but that difficulty may be met in many cases. For instance, where a person has never in his life signed a promissory note, and he states that he could not have signed a certain promissory note not produced because he had never signed a promissory note, that would be conclusive evidence. In the same way, in the present case, Mr. Rhodes was satisfied that he never signed any promissory notes in favour of the Princess Radziwill, and that will be sufficient evidence to go to the jury. But I think that the ordinary principle regarding missing documents should be applied in a case like the present. If the document was traced to the possession of the accused, and she could not produce it, then secondary evidence might be led as to the contents of the document. I see now notice has been given to accused to produce the document, and therefore, in the absence of such production, the evidence is admissible.

MCKENZIE V. DREYER AND { 1902.
CO. } May 1st

Ostensible Partner—Liability.

Held, that where a man has ceased to be a partner in a firm, but has given no public notice of his withdrawal therefrom, and has thereafter held himself out as a partner, he is estopped from denying his liability on a promissory note given by the firm subsequent to his withdrawal therefrom and accepted in consequence of his having held himself out to still be a partner.

This was a motion for provisional sentence on an acknowledgment of debt, under which Dreyer and Co. undertook to pay a sum of £31 10s. on November 4, 1901, and a similar sum on December 21, 1901. The acknowledgment of debt had been given to P. G. H. Wilmott and Co., who had ceded it to the estate of the late James McKenzie, for which they had been acting as agents. Provisional sentence was asked for £63, with interest on half that sum from November 4, and interest on the other half from December 21. Mr. Upington moved.

Mr. Buchanan appeared for John L. Irvine, who had been sued as one of the partners of the firm, but who denied that he was a partner. The affidavit of Irvine stated that he was a partner with Dreyer, in the firm of Dreyer and Co., from February 1 to May 31, 1901, when the said partnership was dissolved by mutual consent. The acknowledgment of debt sued upon had never been signed by him, and the date of the document being September 21, it had been signed after the dissolution of partnership.

In an answering affidavit, P. G. H. Wilmott said that in July, 1901, he was acting on behalf of plaintiff, and then sold to Messrs. Dreyer and Co. certain furniture for £93, receiving £30 and the acknowledgment of debt for £63. He understood that the firm consisted of both defendants, for the reason that the letters, including the document sued on, had not only the title of the firm Dreyer and Co. upon it, but set forth the names of the two defendants as the partners, and in addition to that the defendant Irvine had expressly told him that he was a partner of the firm. He (Mr. Wilmott) had not seen in the "Government Gazette" or anywhere else any notice of the dissolution of partnership, nor was it ever notified to him. Whilst the negotiations for the sale were going on, he called at defendants' office and asked to see Mr. Dreyer, but the latter was not in. The defendant Irvine was there, and on Mr. Wilmott mentioning his business, Irvine distinctly said, "You can give it to me; we are partners." To neither of the demands made by Mr. Wilmott or his attorneys did defendant take or set up the defence now raised. The affidavit further set forth that, owing to the defendants' action, a case brought in the Magistrate's Court had to be withdrawn, and proceedings taken in the Supreme Court, necessitating extra expense.

Mr. Upington (for applicant): Irvine's defence is that the partnership was dissolved before the sale to the firm by McKenzie's executors took place, but no notice of dissolution of the partnership had been published, and the document sued upon bears the name of Irvine, as one of the individual members of the firm. A retired partner may be liable for partnership debts if no notice of the dissolution of the partnership has been given (Story on Partnership, p. 275, section 160, and p. 515, section 324, 5th edition). The latter passage refers particularly to the rights of third persons in the event of the dissolution of a partnership. In this case Irvine's name still appears on letters sent out by the firm, and Wilmott states on affidavit that Irvine held himself out as a partner. Hence, if an innocent third person gives credit to the firm, Irvine is estopped from setting up the defence that he is no partner. I submit the Court should grant provisional sentence, and leave it to defendant to establish his contention in the principal case.

Mr. Buchanan (for defendant Irvine): The only ground for holding Irvine liable is that no notice of dissolution was given. In order to hold a former partner liable the transaction must have been entered into during the subsistence of the partnership and must be in connection with the partnership business. It was Wilmott's duty to find out who were the partners.

[Maasdorp, J.: But Irvine said that he was a partner.]

We have not had an opportunity of denying that, and defendant's affidavit states that he retired before negotiations were pending. McKenzie had had no previous dealings with the firm, and therefore no notice to him of Irvine's retirement was necessary. The passages cited from Story on Partnership are quite in our favour. Irvine's denial of partnership is equivalent to a denial of his signature. If Irvine's name is left on the notices that does not constitute him as a partner.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff has sued upon an acknowledgment of debt which he alleges was made by these two defendants as partners in the firm of Dreyer and Co. It appears from the affidavits put in that this acknowledgment was given in satisfaction of a contract of sale which took place in July, 1901, and it also appears from the affidavits that in July, 1901, when the negotiations were proceeding for that contract, the defendant Irvine stated to Mr. Wilmott that he was one of the partners in the firm. It must be taken, therefore, that it was upon the credit of both Dreyer and Irvine that that transaction was entered into. While this acknowledgment of debt was not given until September 21, it does not appear that between July and September any notice was given, or that it had come to the knowledge of Mr. Wilmott that this partnership had been dissolved. The first question is whether, as a matter of fact, this partnership had been dissolved before this contract was entered into, and the second as to whether notice had been given to anyone dealing with the firm of the fact of such dissolution. As to the dissolution of the partnership we must refer to the affidavits, and it is there distinctly stated that in July Mr. Irvine stated to Mr. Wilmott that he was a partner in the firm, and if he was a partner what value can be attached to his statement in his affidavit that the partnership was dissolved on the 31st of May, 1901. If the contract was entered into at a time when he was alleged to be a partner then it was upon his credit as well as that of his partner that this transaction was entered into and consequently the debt was incurring by Mr. Irvine as well as by Mr. Dreyer at that time. It may be a question hereafter as to whether the partnership was dissolved or not, and some other questions of law may arise if the parties go into the principal case, but the view I take is that the statement made by Mr. Irvine, that he was a partner, has the legal effect of estopping him from setting up the defence that he was not a partner, and that that transaction was entered into on the strength of the joint partnership, and that, therefore, provisional sentence must be given. Also as throwing some doubt upon the statement made by Mr. Irvine, as far as the document is concerned, I may point out that on the acknowledgment of debt itself the name of Mr. Irvine still appears as one of the partners in the firm of Dreyer and Co. Under all the circumstances provisional sentence must now be given, but the defendant can still go into the principal case if he wishes.

Provisional sentence was granted with costs, including costs of the postponement.

FROST V. GEDDES. } 1902.
} May 1st.

Provisional Sentence — Promissory Note—Liquid document.

F. and G. had signed certain promissory notes in favour of M. by making themselves jointly and severally liable. F. had paid these notes after they became due, and now asked for provisional sentence against G. for the entire amount, alleging that they were for G.'s accommodation, and that he (F.) had received no consideration.

Held, that as these notes did not show ex facie that G. was indebted to F., provisional sentence must be refused.

Semble, provisional sentence cannot be given upon a bill alleged to be an accommodation bill.

This was a motion for provisional sentence upon three promissory notes signed by the plaintiff and defendant jointly in favour of Mrs. Muff. The summons alleged that these notes were signed by the plaintiff as an accommodation to the defendant, and had on becoming due been paid by the plaintiff. The notes were dated August, 1898, and two of them were for £550 each, while the third was for £50 10s.

Mr. Upington for the plaintiff; Mr. Buchanan for the defendant.

In an affidavit the defendant wholly denied that the promissory notes were signed for his accommodation, and detailed the circumstances under which plaintiff joined him as a partner. In 1897 defendant was carrying on business as a law agent and broker, and plaintiff joined him as a partner, agreeing to pay the sum of £250 as goodwill. He had paid £100 on account, but had not paid the balance of £150. Under the agreement the plaintiff was to keep all the books of the partnership business, and was to have equal powers with defendant in respect of signing of cheques, while the profits and losses were to be shared equally. Some time afterwards, on plaintiff's suggestion, a branch of the business was opened at Simon's Town, under the name of Geddes and Frost. This was under the control of plaintiff, who alone had power to sign the partnership name of Geddes and Frost, while a separate banking account was opened for the said branch, and the plaintiff alone had power to operate upon such account. In 1898 an action was instituted against defendant by Mrs. Muff for the recovery of certain money, being the balance of the purchase price of certain property which she had sold, and the price of which had passed through the hands of the firm of Charles Geddes. When summons was issued against him personally, instead of against the firm, defendant conferred with plaintiff, and it was agreed that the action should be allowed to proceed in that form. While the action was pending the plaintiff, without defendant's knowledge and consent, withdrew from the partnership funds a sum of £300, ostensibly for the purpose of paying partnership debts, and deposited the same to the credit of his own private account. Judgment was given for Mrs. Muff in the action mentioned above, but in consequence of plaintiff's action, it was impossible to satisfy the judgment, and it was thereafter arranged that the partnership should be dissolved. This was given effect to, but subsequently the partnership was revived, and one of the conditions of the revival was that the notes now sued on should be signed by defendant and plaintiff in partial discharge of the debt due by the partnership of Charles Geddes and Co. to Mrs. Muff, and that they should be met either out of the assets of that partnership as the assets should be collected, or out of the funds of the new business which they were to carry on. Thereafter a further and final dissolution of the partnership took place, and defendant restarted business on his own account. After alleging that in some respects plaintiff had failed to carry out the partnership conditions, defendant went on to say that no fair settlement between himself and plaintiff could be arrived at until the books of both the Cape Town business and the Simon's Town business had been carefully examined and audited by some impartial person, and upon the receipt of summons in this case he caused his attorneys to write to the plaintiff's attorneys, suggesting that such a course should be adopted, but the defendant had refused to accede to that suggestion. In conclusion, the defendant said that as a fact he had paid out of his own earnings about £150 to creditors of the firm of Charles Geddes since the second dissolution above mentioned.

In a replying affidavit, William Frost, the plaintiff, said that the promissory notes now sued upon were signed by him solely for the accommodation of the defendant under the following circumstances: On June 30, 1897, he entered into partnership with the defendant. The partnership was to last for two years, and in consideration of the same he was to pay the defendant £250 in instalments and the sum of £26 to give him a half-share in the office furniture. He paid the sum of £26, and one instalment of £100. The sum of £250 represented the consideration for a two years' agreement, and the deed specially provided that in the event of the death of either party within that period a pro rata rebate was to be allowed upon that amount. Shortly after the commencement of the agreement, plaintiff alleged, the defendant fell into dissolute habits, and his conduct was such that after sundry negotiations between them, plaintiff had to force a dissolution of the partnership, and a deed of dissolution was finally agreed upon on May 2, 1898. Owing to the conduct of the defendant plaintiff lost fourteen months of the partnership, and, in addition, during the continuance of the partnership the business deteriorated very much owing to the same cause. Proceeding, plaintiff stated that the deed of partnership provided that the defendant should open a bank account in the name of Charles Geddes No. 2, to distinguish same from his private account, and that both partners should operate on this account, but that although repeatedly called upon to do so, it was not until the 23rd February, 1898, that this new account was opened. Prior to that time money belonging to or held in trust by the partnership had been paid into the defendant's private account, upon which plaintiff had no power to operate. While the bank account was in this state the defendant negotiated the sale of landed property for Mrs. Muff, and received for her the purchase price, amounting to something above £700, but the transaction was not recorded in the books of the partnership, and the purchase price was paid into defendant's private account. It was alleged that the defendant used the purchase price for his own purposes, and upon being called upon to pay the same by Mrs. Muff, he was unable to do so, and he and not the firm was sued by her for the recovery thereof. About this time the account of Charles Geddes No. 2, being the partnership account, was opened in the bank. On March 9, 1898, having become apprehensive that the defendant had been drawing money from the bank account at such a rate as to endanger the payment to clients of moneys held in trust for them, plaintiff withdrew £300 from the partnership bank account and entered it in the account of Geddes and Frost, Simon's Town, upon which he alone had power to operate, and afterwards removed it and deposited it in trust with the secretary of the General Estate and Orphan Chamber. He paid

£140 of the said sum to Mrs. Muff and the balance of £160 to sundry parties, for whom the partnership held money in trust. Plaintiff then went on to say that in order to save the defendant from criminal proceedings with which he was threatened, at Mrs. Muff's instance, he agreed to sign with him three notes for £50 each in favour of Mrs. Muff, the defendant settling or arranging for the payment of the balance due. He contended that the transaction with Mrs. Muff was a private one of the defendant's, the partnership receiving no consideration for the sum, no entries having been made in the books, and prior to his signing the promissory notes, no claim having been made on him by Mrs. Muff, and the defendant having further himself used, either partially or entirely, the proceeds of the sale. As regards the second partnership with defendant, he said that that was entered into on June 1, 1898, at the urgent request of the defendant, who made the most solemn promises of reform, and that no money was stipulated for between the parties as a consideration of the said agreement. That, notwithstanding these promises, the defendant immediately afterwards returned to his former habits, and was totally incapacitated from attending to business, so that, on June 21, 1898, plaintiff availed himself of a clause in the deed providing for such an eventuality, and cancelled the partnership. Owing to the condition of the defendant, it was impossible to come to any satisfactory arrangement regarding liquidation, and plaintiff paid the debts due by the partnership, as far as they appeared from the books, having to employ his own money for the most part in liquidating the same. He stated that if the defendant had discharged £150 of debts after the dissolution, they must have been a private transaction of his own, as they did not appear in the partnership books. He had frequently to remonstrate with defendant for doing work on his own account, and not giving the partnership the benefit of the same. As regards the defendant's statement regarding plaintiff drawing from the partnership bank account, plaintiff stated that from the time a partnership bank account was open, until the end of the partnership, he only drew £25. Prior to that he drew from £10 to £15 per month, for which the defendant drew cheques, as the account was solely in his name.

Maasdorp, J., asked what there was upon the face of these documents to show that the notes were accommodation notes, or that the one party had the right to sue the other.

Mr. Upington said that plaintiff was now the legal holder of the notes.

Maasdorp, J. asked if there was any authority to show that provisional sentence had ever been given upon a bill alleged to be an accommodation bill.

Mr. Upington said he was not prepared with authorities.

Mr. Buchanan (for defendant): This is a purely partnership transaction, and is not a case for provisional sentence. The parties in this case are joint makers of a promissory note. They are jointly and severally liable to Mrs. Muff, unless it was an accommodation note. To prove that it is this, evidence must be led aliunde, to show it is not a liquid document. It was not indorsed by E. Muff to Frost, and there is nothing on the face of the document to show that the partners were not equally liable. The allegations as to the liquidation of the Simon's Town business not having been finally settled, are not denied by plaintiff.

Mr. Upington (for plaintiff): The document is sufficient to render defendant liable to plaintiff for half the amount of the bill at all events. It is not disputed that plaintiff paid the note.

[Maasdorp, J.: If there is any question as to the amount defendant has to pay, you cannot get provisional sentence on the note.]

The note shows that it was made by plaintiff and defendant jointly and severally, and as we paid it, we are entitled to a refund of half from the defendant.

[Maasdorp, J.: And yet you ask for the whole amount. What is there to show that it is an accommodation note? Have you any authority for granting provisional sentence on the allegation that a note is an accommodation note?]

I have no authorities at hand, but plaintiff is the present legal holder of the note, and can sue on it, as against defendant, even though he is one of the parties liable. Ex facie, the document shows a liquid liability.

The Court refused provisional sentence.

Maasdorp, J. : The documents upon which this action is brought are promissory notes signed by plaintiff and defendant in favour of Mrs. Emily Muff. There is no evidence on the face of these notes as to Geddes being indebted to Frost. They are only evidence that Frost and Geddes are jointly indebted to Mrs. Muff, and it was therefore necessary for plaintiff to depend upon an agreement by which it was agreed that the one party should accommodate the other—which would place it outside this agreement—It would be necessary to prove that there was an agreement between Geddes and Frost by which Geddes had promised to hold Frost harmless or indemnify him in case he should not pay the amount to Mrs. Muff. It is quite necessary to lead evidence to prove that, and consequently that shows the necessity of having evidence beyond that contained in the documents. On that ground alone no provisional sentence can be granted.

MOSTERT V. WOODSTOCK { 1908,
MUNICIPALITY. { May 1st.

Town Council — Debentures—Interdict.

A Municipal Council had issued certain debentures in order to provide funds for the carrying out of a certain water scheme. As this scheme had not been undertaken under statutory powers, and as the provisions of neither the General Municipal Act nor of the Public Health Act had been complied with, the Supreme Court had, at the instance of certain ratepayers, interdicted the said Council from paying interest on these debentures until the provisions of one or other of these Acts aforesaid had been observed. One of the debenture holders now asked for provisional sentence against the Council for interest due on certain of the said debentures held by him.

Held, that until the said interdict was removed the Court could make no order inconsistent therewith.

This was an application for provisional sentence for £400, being interest due on certain debentures issued by the Municipal Council of Woodstock in connection with a scheme for supplying water to the Municipality from certain streams at Oliphant's Hoek.

The affidavit of the Mayor of Woodstock (Mr. W. E. Moore) was as follows:

1. The defendant Council has been sued by plaintiff for the interest due upon certain debentures issued by the Council to him.

2. The Council is willing to pay the said interest, but is interdicted under a rule nisi granted by this Hon. Court from doing so until the sanction of the Government has been obtained to the issue of the said debentures.

3. The Colonial Secretary, in reply to a deputation of the ratepayers of Woodstock, who waited upon him, stated that in view of the fact that a Commission was sitting to deal with the whole question of the water supply to the Peninsula, he could not at the present time consent to the whole scheme proposed by the Municipal Council for the supply of water to Woodstock, but that he was willing to sanction the purchase of the water rights (in respect of which the said debentures were issued) if he might lawfully do so without committing himself to the whole scheme. He was, however, advised by the Law Department that he could not sanction the purchase without thereby committing himself to the whole scheme.

4. Upon the issue of summons in this suit the defendant Council convened a meeting of the ratepayers at Woodstock, and at that meeting, which was very largely attended, the Council was authorized and empowered to appear to the said summons and to submit to the judgment of the Court.

Maasdorp, J., asked on what grounds the Court had granted the interdict referred to.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendants): The interdict was granted at the instance of a ratepayer, who said that the whole proceedings in regard to the debentures were illegal. We are quite willing to pay the interest on these debentures, but the Court has interdicted us from doing so.

[Maasdorp, J.: The Court has said that it is not a legal debt; are you prepared to pay an illegal debt?]

It was legal when we contracted it. The interdict was continued until the scheme should have been approved of by the ratepayers, and the Court intimated that when this had been done, application might be made again. This interdict was granted originally in November, 1901, till February 1, 1902. The matter was before the Court on the 17th of February, and the interdict was then continued until the consent of the Governor under the Public Health Act had been obtained.

[Maasdorp, J.: You have not observed all the provisions of the Act.]

We did so subsequently. We obtained the approval of the ratepayers. I admit that the consent of the Minister has not yet been obtained, but we have acted under section 70.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for plaintiff): We are suing on an acknowledgment of debt, and the debt is not denied; we are therefore entitled to provisional sentence. The question, how are we to get the debt paid, is of course, a different matter. We were no parties to the interdict.

[Maasdorp, J.: Here a third person is interested, and we cannot grant judgment until that third person is heard.]

Surely provisional judgment must be given on an acknowledgment of debt, unless the defendant denies his signature.

Maasdorp, J.: It appears that there is at present an interdict in existence which prohibits the Municipality from paying any of the debenture-holders. That interdict was granted at the instance of one ratepayer, and at the time the interdict was applied for, an opportunity was given the debenture-holders to join in the action, and they must be regarded as parties to the proceedings, and this interdict must stand good as against them also. Anyway, it is perfectly clear that, whatever procedure the debenture-holders may take, the interdict stands, and this Court cannot give an order for the payment of the debenture-holders' interest, as that would be inconsistent with the previous order of the Court. It would conflict with the order now in force. Some steps may be taken by the debenture-holders, if they wish to do so, to have that interdict discharged, but as matters now stand, the application must be refused.

Sir Henry Juta asked that no costs be given.

Maasdorp, J., said that the debenture-holders must have known that the interdict would be binding upon them.

Sir Henry Juta pointed out that the Council were willing to pay the interest, if the Court could allow them to do so.

Mr. Searle said that on the question of costs he would leave himself in the hands of the Court.

Maasdorp, J.: The application will be refused, but no order will be made as to costs.

Bills of Exchange—Acceptance.

Mr. Upington moved for provisional sentence on certain bills of exchange. Last provisional day sentence was given on five of these bills against the Grand Junction Railways (Limited), but it now appeared that the acceptors of the bills were the Grand Junction Railways—not a corporation but a partnership, the partners being John Walker, sen., John Walker, jun., R. M. Frank Hill, and Thomas Cameron Walker.

Maasdorp, J., pointed out that notarial certificates of protest were not put in,

Mr. Uppington: In this case a certificate of protest is not necessary. If a bill is accepted at a certain place, and the words "and not elsewhere" are omitted, that is only a general acceptance (Act 19 of 1893, section 17, sub-section 2), and in such case neither presentment nor protest is necessary in order to render the acceptor liable (section 50, sub-section 1).

The Court granted provisional sentence as prayed.

He also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. Counsel said that a clerical mistake had been made in the summons, and instead of the interest being due from July 1, 1901, it was due from July 1, 1900. He asked that the summons be amended.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp pointed out that to do that the whole proceedings would have to be withdrawn.

Counsel said that in that case he would ask for provisional sentence for the amount set forth in the summons.

Provisional sentence was then granted as prayed, and the property specially hypothecated declared executable.

JARDINE V. JARDINE.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order calling upon the defendant, Maggie Carnick Jardine (born Makin), to restore to the plaintiff, Gilbert Rudolph Jardine, his conjugal rights, failing which, to show cause why a decree of divorce should not be granted.

There was no appearance for the defendant.

Gilbert Rudolph Jardine stated that he was married to defendant on July 6, 1900. He was then carrying on a business at Molteno, and his wife was at King William's Town, residing with her parents. After marriage, she returned to Molteno with him. She remained there about three months, and then her mother came to Molteno, and practically insisted on her returning to her. To this he had to consent, much against his will. After defendant had been away two months, he went to fetch her from King William's Town. Out of the eighteen months of their married life, she had only lived with him eight months. In August, 1901, she again went to King William's Town with his consent, and had never returned, although he had asked her repeatedly. On one occasion he went to King William's Town to see his wife, but her mother refused to allow him to enter the house. He wrote a long letter of appeal to her and sent a cheque, and in reply received a letter from a firm of attorneys in King William's Town, returning the cheque, and demanding the delivery of his wife's clothing and movable property. Witness then instructed his attorneys to write expressing how abocked he was at his wife's action. He denied that he had ever been harsh to his wife. The whole trouble was caused by his mother-in-law. There was one child of the marriage—a girl of eleven months old. He understood that his wife and her mother had now left for Scotland, taking the child with them. His wife's father was, however, at King William's Town.

The Court granted an order calling upon the defendant to make restitution of conjugal rights by August 1, failing which, to show cause on August 14 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with the right reserved to the plaintiff to make further application in regard to the custody of the child should he wish to do so.

Postea (August 14): The Court granted a decree of divorce.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN BREW-ERIES V. BARRITT. { 1902.
May 'st.
" 2nd.

Landlord and Tenant—Assignment of Premises—Liquor Licence—Ejectment on Motion.

Respondent had purchased the good-will of a certain hotel from one Martienssen. The agreement provided that respondent's tenancy should be terminable on a month's notice given in writing by the landlord, and that he should then be bound to transfer his licence to the landlord or to the nominee of the landlord. Subsequently Martienssen assigned all his rights over the said premises and all his interests therein to the present applicants, and respondent thereafter paid rent to them and discussed with them the terms of his lease. Applicants had given him a month's notice in writing, but he refused to quit the premises, and contended that even if ejected he was not bound to transfer his licence to the applicants. Applicants now asked for an order of ejectment.

Held, that as Martienssen had assigned all his rights in respect of the said premises to applicants, and as respondent had by his acts accepted them as his landlords, he was bound to accept a month's notice from them, and that he was under the same obligation of thereupon transferring to them his licence by which he had been previously bound to Martienssen.

Semble, that though the Court will not ordinarily grant ejectment upon motion, it will do so (1) in cases of urgency and (2) where no facts are in dispute.

This was an application set down for the 12th April. The petition was for an order on the respondent, Walter B. Barritt, to give up possession of certain licensed premises known as the Roma Hotel, Waterkant-street, and for authority to transfer the licence to James Wallace, or other nominee of the applicant company. The hotel in question is the property of the South African Breweries (Limited), who purchased the hotel, together with all leases, goodwill, and rights from one Martienssen. The respondent is the tenant of the hotel. The lease, which was in writing, contained the right to terminate the tenancy by one month's notice, and it appointed the landlord as agent for the tenant to make application for the licence. The tenant had by this lease undertaken to give up the licence on a month's notice, and to transfer the same. This was by written contract, which the applicants held from Martienssen, from whom they purchased. Applicants had given the respondent notice to quit. On his declining to quit the applicants brought him before the Magistrate, under Act 44 of 1885, one section of which gave the Magistrate and two other members of the Licensing Court, under such circumstances power to order a transfer. Mr. Barritt, however, appeared before the Magistrate, and opposed the application, and the Magistrate made no order. This was done at the end of March, or early in April, and the applicants now came to the Supreme Court for an order. The applicants contended that Mr. Barritt was a person whom they could not leave safely in the place. The licence was jeopardised, and having given him a month's notice, they had made arrangements with Mr. Wallace to put him (Mr. Wallace) in. The applicants were not willing to prejudice their position by selling him beer and other articles, which he obtained from elsewhere, and for the same reason they could not take the rent. These circumstances made the matter urgent, and therefore it was sought to be dealt with by motion instead of by action.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), for applicant; Sir H. Juta, K.C., for respondent.

[Maasdorp, J.: What position does respondent take up?]

Mr. Schreiner said he did not quite know. It seemed that Barritt had agreed to pay Martienssen £700 for the goodwill. The applicants had an action pending against Martienssen for money received by Martienssen from Barritt after he (Martienssen) sold to applicants. That might be a good action or it might not be, but how it could affect Barritt was difficult to see. Another point was that by the concluding portion of the lease, Barritt was given by Martienssen the option of purchasing. Barritt might have an action against Martienssen for damages on the ground that he had an option of purchasing before Martienssen sold to anyone else, but the property had become the applicant's, and that question did not affect the position as between Barritt and the South African Breweries.

A number of affidavits and certain material clauses of the lease were read. Respondent said, on affidavit, that he had been offered £1,000 for the goodwill of the hotel by Mr. Orpen, the breweries manager, provided he gave up possession by a certain date. He (respondent) refused this offer, having received offers of £4,000 and £3,500 for the goodwill. He had also received an offer of £3,000 from Wallace. In the affidavits filed on applicants' behalf reference was made to the respondent being intoxicated. The manager of the breweries deposed that the £1,000 was offered in respect of the furniture, billiard-table, etc. Wallace denied that he ever made an offer of £3,000 to respondent. Wallace, in a further affidavit, alleged that the applicants were attempting to expropriate the goodwill without paying him therefor. He denied the allegation as to his being intoxicated.

Mr. Schreiner (for applicant): The point in this case is very simple. Under the lease the lessee is bound to go out on one month's notice, and this notice he has received. Our law is very unfavourable to tenants who hold on, and though ejectment is usually decided on action; it is sometimes done, in urgent cases on motion. This case is urgent, because our licence is in danger. Then, again, we have lost a tenant, and we have lost the sale of the beer we should have sold had the tenant we selected obtained possession of the premises, because we cannot supply respondent, and moreover we are losing our rent, since to accept rent from the respondent would be equivalent to a relocation. It can hardly be supposed that the Court will allow a man to hold on for months until an action can be tried.

[Maasdorp, J.: As to the one month's notice, what did he pay £700 for?]

These people cannot get a licensed house without submitting to some such clause. Nearly all of them are monthly tenants, but they are not usually disturbed as long as they conduct their business properly. Should, however, the landlord insist on his rights, the tenant must give up both the premises and the licence. In this case the £700 was paid merely for the right to get into the premises. On the pleadings it is admitted that not only the premises but the licence and all interests in the business were sold by Martienssen. When the S.A. Breweries bought the Roma Hotel, Barrett still owed a balance on the £700, and we say that he paid some of that to Martienssen after Martienssen had sold the property to the S.A. Breweries, but that question has nothing to do with the present case, and it has nothing to do with Barrett or with his position. We are not suing him for rent, for that we are suing Martienssen. As to "goodwill," Barrett has none to sell. He is only a monthly tenant, and he can only sell the certainty of one month's occupation, and the hope of a longer tenure. It is true that we cannot re-enter without an order of Court, but where there is such a clear right of re-entry as we have under this lease, surely we need not bring an action to get ejectment. We showed all the indulgence we could to Barrett under Section 8 of Act 44, 1885.

Sir H. Juta (for respondent): There are two prayers embodied in this application, and the first is practically for a mandamus to the Resident Magistrate. I submit that in the absence of mala fides your lordship has no power to compel the Magistrate to do what is within his own discretion. This discretion he has already exercised by refusing to authorise the transfer of this licence to the nominee of the S.A. Breweries. As to the tenant's agreement to hand over his licence, the Court refused ejectment on motion in Parson's case (11, Sheil, 233), though they ordered Parsons to hand over the licence. But this is a very different case. Barrett has never attorned to the S.A. Breweries. His contract was with Martienssen, and to Martienssen he paid £700 for his lease. In a transfer of a lease, the assignment of the lease must be clear beyond dispute, and so must also the acceptance of the new landlord by the tenant. This case is different from all the other cases in which hotels have been sold to the S.A. Breweries, for this is the only case in which they have claimed money due to the vendor from a lessee of the vendor. There is no evidence that Barrett had ever recognised the S.A. Breweries as his landlords.

[Maasdorp, J.: But they say that you have recognised them.]

It is true that they are owners of the premises, but we have no agreement to hand over the licence to them.

[Maasdorp, J.: Does not Section 8 of Act 44 of 1885 oblige the tenant to hand over the licence on the expiration of his tenancy?]

No, a licence is a personal thing, and no man can claim a licence from another save in virtue of some lease or agreement. It is not the premises which are licensed, but the man. A man cannot carry on a licensed business simply because he is a landlord of licensed premises, and he turns out a man who has a licence, and procures that that licence should be handed over to him. He must go to the magistrate and get permission to carry on the business. Should the Court now decide that the S.A. Breweries have stepped into Martienssen's shoes in all respects as far as this property is concerned, it might prejudice questions which are now pending between the S.A. Breweries and Martienssen.

[Maasdorp, J.: They say that you have quitted the premises on certain conditions.]

Yes, but we never admitted their right to eject us.

[Maasdorp, J.: Did you not ask them to show you certain consideration?]

They say so, but we deny that. (See affidavits of Orpen and of Barrett.) At first Orpen offered to treat for our goodwill, and in an affidavit treats this communication of January 20th as a notice to quit. If after this Orpen extended the time, Van Zyl and Buissonne could not confirm a notice to quit.

My points, then, are (1) That no mandamus can issue to the Magistrate to compel him to do a thing which is within his own jurisdiction. (2) No assignment of a lease can be valid unless the tenant accepts his new landlord. In this case, there has been no such acceptance. Whatever may have passed between the S.A. Breweries and Martienssen, Barratt certainly never made over his rights to the Breweries. Facts here are in dispute, and therefore the Court will not decide this matter on affidavit. (3) Will the Court under these circumstances grant ejectment on motion? It is true that it has done so in cases of extreme urgency, and applicant is trying to show that this is such a case. Respondent was accused of having given way to intemperate habits in October, December, January, and February, and yet in the following March the licence was renewed without opposition. Then was the danger to the licence, not now; and as there is no danger now, there can be no urgency. What, then, is the use of this ejectment? The Magistrate would not be compelled to grant a licence to a new tenant. I submit, therefore, that the first prayer of the petition cannot be granted, and that the Court will not grant the second prayer until an action has been brought and decided.

[Maasdorp, J.: Of course, the Licensing Court must determine whether the nominee of the applicant is a fit and proper person. We cannot decide that.]

[Mr. Schreiner: All we ask is that applicant should be declared entitled to the licence.]

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the applicants ask for an ejectment against the respondent from the premises in question, and also for an order declaring that the applicants are entitled to the licence and to carry on business under the licence which now stands in the name of the respondent. This matter is brought before the Court on a motion, and Sir Henry Juta was quite right in saying that as a rule questions of ejectment ought to be brought before the Court by action, but we have precedents in which the Court has decided upon motion on questions of this nature. Now, it is not only upon a point of urgency that these questions have been entertained by the Court, but it may also be upon other grounds. It may be a case where there are no facts in dispute between parties, and need not form the subject of an action, and also when a case could be decided upon motion with less cost. Now, I do not deal so much here with the question of urgency, and I may say this, that any decision I may come to in this matter will be based upon facts that are undisputed. If it had been necessary to go into disputed facts then I think the matter should properly have been ordered to have been decided upon action. Now, I may mention one circumstance brought up in this case upon which I make no finding, and that is as to the misconduct of the respondent. If it had been necessary to decide in this case whether the defendant had been guilty of misconduct, then I think the matter ought to have been tried by action, but it is unnecessary to make any finding on that point. It is a disputed point, and it is a very serious matter, so far as the respondent is concerned, and the Court would not have decided it on affidavit. But I think the whole matter can be decided upon the documents, and agreement, and certain undisputed facts now before the Court, and admissions made in his affidavit by the respondent himself. There was a contract entered into between one Martienssen as the landlord, and respondent as the tenant, under which Barritt carried on the business of licensed victualler in the premises in question, and one of the conditions of that agreement was that "the tenancy shall commence on June 1, 1897, and be determined at any time in any year, either by the landlord or the tenant, by one month's previous notice in writing, the leaving or affixing such notice to any part of such house to be sufficient service of such notice." If we take that paragraph of the agreement in connection with the 3rd paragraph of the agreement, it seems at first hard to come to the conclusion that the parties really intended that the tenancy should be determined at one month's notice, because it seems that under that 3rd paragraph the tenant gives as much as £700 for the goodwill. Now that seems a very large sum to give for such a precarious holding, which may be determined upon one month's notice without any consideration being given the tenant, but the wording of the first section is so clear that no doubt can be cast on its meaning that the tenancy can be determined by one month's notice. However, that circumstance is somewhat explained by the fact that when tenancies of this nature are terminated, the landlords as a rule show very great consideration to the tenant in passing over the goodwill and any rights or property he may have to the incoming tenant. Such consideration has been shown, and I think in a contract of this kind the tenant might fairly expect, not as a legal right but as a concession—I think a very proper concession—on the part of the landlord that he should show him every consideration. I think it may even be possible now for the parties, after all this litigation, to come to some sort of reasonable arrangement as to the terms on which the tenant should hand over property now on the premises, and which must be of some value, and whether some consideration should be shown to him when the new tenant takes over the goodwill. There is no doubt the goodwill belonged to him when the property was bought by the Breweries; that lease and goodwill was vested in the tenant, and under these circumstances if the Breweries now get the goodwill by giving a month's notice they certainly gain something, and they might show the tenant some consideration. But that matter I merely refer to as explaining why tenants in such cases are so willing to enter upon such a precarious holding and pay such a very heavy price. Under these circumstances Martienssen would have had a perfect right to give Barritt a month's notice, who would then have been obliged to give up his tenancy, and so under the 6th paragraph of the agreement, Martienssen would have been entitled to force from Barritt transfer of the licence. The question arises as to whether the Breweries in all respects stand in the same position as Martienssen. Now there has been a complete assignment of all the rights in those premises and under the lease by Martienssen to the Breweries. It appears from the broker's note that the buildings as they stand were sold, with all interests, leases, goodwill, etc. Under the deed of sale it appears that Martienssen sold the plant, stock-in-trade, and goodwill, including all outstanding debts and rights belonging to the business carried on by the sellers of every description. Under these circumstances all the rights which belonged to Martienssen were assigned by him to the Breweries. The question then arises as to whether such assignment is binding upon the tenant. I am inclined to think, although I shall not base my decision wholly upon that point, that such an assignment could have been made, and that rights as against the tenant would have vested in the Breweries without any consent on the part of the tenant. However, it is not necessary to decide that legal question, as there is the further question as to whether the tenant by his own conduct did not become a party to this assignment and recognise the Breweries as landlord in this case. It is quite clear that in certain respects he did so. It is admitted by counsel for the respondent that he paid the rent and that he did have certain discussions with them as to the extension of the notice for one month more. It is said that this is only a partial recognition, and does not necessarily carry with it all the rights now claimed by the Breweries. I do not consider that a partial recognition. It recognises the Breweries as the landlord for all the purposes of the agreement, and right which Martienssen had of giving respondent one month's notice to determine this lease is vested in the Breweries and they have now the right to put that condition in force. A month's notice was given in writing, and consequently the tenant has no further right to occupy these premises. Now the question arises as to whether, upon quitting these premises, he is bound to transfer this licence to the Breweries. It has been argued that this is certainly not one of the rights which the respondent could have intended should also pass to the Breweries, but as I have said, it seems to me that by his conduct he did recognise the Breweries as landlords, and they are now entitled, under the fourth clause of the agreement, to obtain transfer of this licence. There is another point which has been raised, and which it is said ought to have the effect of postponing these proceedings. This point is, that the question affecting the parties is now before the Court in an action between the Breweries and Martienssen, but it does not seem to me that that in any way affects the question as between the Breweries and Barritt. I think the question there is whether such moneys as Barritt paid to Martienssen in respect of goodwill after the sale took place between the Breweries and Martienssen belong to Martienssen or the Breweries, and that does not affect the position of the respondent with respect to the Breweries. Under these circumstances, I have come to the conclusion that the Breweries are entitled to determine the tenancy by one month's notice, and they are now entitled to the occupation of the premises, and therefore, that the respondent must give up the premises to the Breweries. An order will therefore be granted for the ejectment of the respondent, and it is further declared that, after March 31, 1902, the respondent is no longer entitled to the benefit of that licence, and that the benefit of that licence now vests in the Breweries.

That declaration is one upon which the Magistrate can go. I don't think this Court will go the length of declaring now who is the fit and proper person to hold that licence. That will be decided by the Magistrate, but he will decide it in view of the finding of this Court that the respondent is no longer entitled to the benefits of this licence, and that the applicants are entitled to the benefits of the licence from April 1. Costs will follow the results.

In reply to Mr. Schreiner, His Lordship said that ejectment would be forthwith.

Sir Henry Juta said he supposed the respondent would be allowed some little time to get his things out.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp said he was sure the Breweries would allow that.

Mr. Schreiner said that that had already been to some extent anticipated, and that, as the company had previously offered to give respondent £1,000 for those rights, although not legally claimable, he hoped they would still give him some consideration.

The order was then made ordering respondent to give up the premises forthwith, and declaring that the applicants are entitled to the benefits of the licence.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

PROSSER V. PROSSER. { 1902.
May 2nd.

This was an action for divorce, brought by Edward Percival Prosser against his wife, Johanna Helena Prosser, on the ground of her adultery with one Barron. The defendant was in default.

Mr. Russell appeared for the applicant, and stated that in the November term the marriage of the parties was proved, and the plaintiff gave evidence that they lived after marriage in Stellenbosch until 1899, in which year he proceeded to the front. Whilst at the front he received a letter from his wife, which was put in, and on coming back again he found that she had left Stellenbosch and was living in Bree-street, Cape Town. He saw the defendant, who refused to return to him, and admitted that she and Barron were living in the same house. Counsel read the defendant's letter to the plaintiff, in which she said she was in partnership with a gentleman named Barron. She confessed she had not been true to plaintiff, and said she was very happy and comfortable, and could not think of parting from the man with whom she was living.

The case had been postponed for production of further evidence.

Cornelia Margaretha Easton was now called, and said that in August last she was cook at 69, Bree-street, where Barron and defendant lived together as man and wife, the defendant passing under the name of Mrs. Barron.

Decree of divorce was granted, defendant to forfeit all benefits of the marriage.

BREWER V. BREWER.

This was an action for separation a non est thoro, brought by Mrs. Sarah Jane Brewer against her husband, James Brewer, on the grounds of his intemperance and cruelty towards her.

Mr. Rowson appeared for the plaintiff, the defendant was in default.

Sarah Jane Brewer deposed that she was married to the defendant in Cape Town in March, 1891. The defendant was then working in the Salt River Railway Works. He was there three years, when he was discharged on account of his intemperate habits. After that he was not the same man. He quarrelled with her and wanted to break all the things in the house. He tore off her clothes and called her all the names he could lay his tongue to. Since he left the railway he had been doing nothing but "boozing." She had been keeping a boarding-house, and had kept the defendant. He went up to the front for 12 months, but when he came back he was worse than ever. Once he was "fairly in the rats," and she had to get two doctors for him. He threatened to put a bullet through her head on the first opportunity. There were no children of the marriage. Defendant had no property at all, and plaintiff asked for a separation and forfeiture of the benefits of the marriage simply to protect her own earnings.

In reply to the Court, it was stated that defendant was now in Mowbray, and had been personally served with the summons and notice of trial.

The Court granted a decree of separation with costs.

SEALE V. SEALE.

This was an action for divorce, brought by Lily Florence Seale, a native of St. Helena, against her husband, Henry Charles Seale, for divorce on the ground of his adultery with one Maria Julison.

Mr. De Villiers appeared for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

Lily Florence Seale said she was married to defendant on May 24, 1894, and they resided happily together for three years, when the defendant left her, and she had discovered that he was living with another woman, Maria Julison. There was one child of the marriage surviving, a boy aged five years. She thought £3 per month would be a reasonable sum for the maintenance of the child. Defendant was a mason, and earned about 12s. 6d. or 13s. per day.

Frederick A. Julison said he got a divorce from his wife in 1898 on the ground of her adultery with defendant. The woman Maria Julison was witness's daughter, and she also lived in the house with defendant.

The hearing of the case was postponed for further evidence.

ELLEFSEN V. STEPHAN ERON.

This action, involving a claim for demurrage, was mentioned, and set down for trial on Monday, June 2, it being deemed desirable, in view of several important points raised, that it should be heard before the full Court.

STANFORD V. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

This was an application, made by the defendants in the above action, for the appointment of a commission to take evidence, and also for the postponement of the trial. The main action is one in which Stanford sues Williams and nine other defendants for £3,000 damages for assault. The action, after being postponed from last term, was on February 28 set down by the Court for trial on May 7.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for the applicants (defendants in the action); and Mr. Schreiner, K.C., with him Mr. B. Upington, appeared for the respondent (plaintiff in the action).

Mr. Searle said that the application was for a commission to take the evidence of the defendants, who were at present with moving columns, and unable to come to Cape Town, and for a postponement of the trial until the commission could be held. He read the affidavit of Mr. G. B. van Zyl, the defendants' attorney, who stated that after the previous postponement had been granted, he wrote to each of the defendants, care of their column commanders, and had received replies from some of them. One of the defendants (Mr. H. B. Williams) wrote from the Upper Tugela, Natal, under date March 28, saying that he was quite unable to say when he could obtain leave, but that unless the situation up there was clearer, it would be useless to apply for leave. He expressed the conviction that if all the defendants could attend the court and give evidence, "Stanford would gain very little." Another of the defendants (Mr. Prior) telegraphed on April 16 from Williston, that the statements made in the newspapers were absolutely false. He denied that he and another of the defendants had anything to do with the alleged assault. Another of the defendants telegraphed on April 25 that he did not see any chance of being able to get to Cape Town for the 7th, and asked whether it was necessary for everyone to attend. Mr. Searle also read a communication from the adjutant of the 3rd Dragoon Guards, stating that the G.O.C., Harrismith district, had definitely refused to give leave to two of the defendants, owing to the exigencies of the service. Mr. Van Zyl's affidavit went on to say that it was not safe to go to trial without the evidence of the defendants, and it was impossible to intimate where the different commissions could be held, as the columns were continually moving about. Mr. Searle added that yesterday a telegram came from another of the defendants, which said: "Call to see you Saturday morning."

Mr. Schreiner read the affidavit of Alfred Benjamin Lawton, the plaintiff's attorney, stating that since the service of the notice of this application he had had no time to communicate with the plaintiff. He pointed out that there was nothing in the affidavit produced for the defendants to show that the facts of the case had been represented to the Commander-in-Chief with respect to allowing the defendants to come to Cape Town.

The affidavit was also read of Agnes Sarah Wakefield, who stated certain two of the defendants boasted to her at different times that the trial would never come off, because martial law was supreme, that Lord Kitchener would never let the matter come into the Supreme Court, that he would stop it, that the matter would be repeatedly postponed until it was dropped, or until they had an opportunity of slipping off to England, and that they could snap their fingers at the Chief Justice and the Supreme Court.

After argument by counsel, the Court refused the application with costs.

Maasdorp, J., in giving judgment, said: The applicants in this case ask in the first instance for the appointment of a commission for the purpose of taking the evidence de bene esse of the defendants, who are at present with moving columns, and unable to attend the trial in Cape Town on May 7. Now, when an application is made for a commission it is usually necessary to put the matter before the Court in such a form that the Court can appoint a commissioner and appoint a place where the commission is to take place, and to some extent intimate, or let the parties have some notice of, the time that this commission is to take place. There is nothing before the Court now to enable the Court to make any distinct and definite order upon these points, because, although the commission is asked for, there is no suggestion as to where it would be possible to hold such commission, or at what time the commission might conveniently be held; in fact, in the affidavit put in on behalf of the applicants it is stated that it is impossible to say where and how this commission can be held, because the witnesses who are required to give evidence are moving about in such a way that it is impossible to say where a commission could sit to take their evidence. If you take the further application it leaves the matter in a very unsatisfactory position, because the further application is for the postponement of the trial until such time as the evidence should have been taken by these commissioners, and until such time as the evidence can be returned. Here there is no intimation on the part of the applicants as to when they have any reasonable hope of being prepared to go on with the action; there is no suggestion that they would be prepared to proceed to trial within a certain number of months, or even within the next year. Under these circumstances, the commission cannot be granted, because, on the showing of the applicants themselves, it is impossible for the Court to fix a place or time for such commission, or even to fix the commissioners. No suggestion has been made to help the Court in that respect. It appears this case was set down for trial on the 10th of March, but that date was anticipated by the defendants moving the Court, on the 28th of February, for a postponement of the trial. The applicants then gave their reasons why the Court should conclude that there were difficulties in the way of their appearing on the 10th of March, and the Court granted them certain indulgence upon the affidavits put before it, and postponed the trial to the 7th of May, but intimated at the time the order was granted that there must be a clear understanding that it must come on on that day, and that the defendants should make timeous application to this Hon. Court to have their evidence taken on commission, should they not be able to come to Cape Town for the trial. I think that clear understanding was arrived at by the Court, because even at that time the Court was not quite satisfied, although it granted this indulgence, that the defendants had made every possible effort in order to appear at the trial, or meet the claims of the plaintiff within some reasonable time, and I think the position of the defendants, upon their affidavits, has by no means improved. They have not made timeous application for a commission so as to be prepared to come to trial upon the 7th of May, but we have statements similar to those put before the Court as to the difficulties in the way of their appearing. I don't think these difficulties are sufficiently authenticated by those in whose power it is to prevent the defendants from appearing, and who, I think, would have been very willing to give the Court such information for the benefit of those who are subordinate to them, if such information had been to their advantage. No commanding officer has placed before the Court any information which would enable the Court to decide as to whether the defendants had done their very best to appear in Court or meet the plaintiff's claims, or whether there are real obstacles in the way of such appearance. Under these circumstances I must say that I am not satisfied that the defendants have done their best to appear in Court themselves to meet the case, or to obtain the necessary commission timeously to take their evidence, which might be put before the Court on the 7th May. Under these circumstances the application must be refused, with costs.

Ex parte BRIGHT. { 1902.
 { May 2nd.

Jurisdiction—Domicile—Divorce.

Mrs. B. applied for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation for divorce on the ground of his malicious desertion. Applicant was resident within this Colony, but her husband had never left England.

Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction in the matter.

This was an application for leave to sue by edictal citation.

Mr. Buchanan appeared for the applicant.

From the petition it appeared that the petitioner was married to the defendant in Somersetshire, England, in 1898. Shortly after marriage there were differences, and in November, 1898, she alleged that her husband deserted her, and his relatives stripped the house in which they were living of everything it contained, and turned her out into the street. In the following March a child was born. She stated that she experienced considerable difficulty in maintaining herself and her child, and was dependent on the charity of her friends. The respondent was stated to be at Bath, and had refused to contribute towards her support.

In reply to questions put by the Court, it was stated that the petitioner now resided in this country, but the husband had never left England.

The application was refused, Maasdorp, J., holding that the Court had no jurisdiction over the husband.

Maasdorp, J.: The applicant moves for leave to sue her husband by edictal citation, and the question arises as to whether the Court has jurisdiction over the husband. Jurisdiction for the purpose of the threatened action by the wife in this case could only be based upon domicile or bona fide and permanent residence, and if the respondent had his domicile here then the Court would have jurisdiction. Now it appears that the parties were domiciled in England, that they were married there, and that the wife left England and came to this colony after, she said, her husband had deserted her. But the husband never left England, and never changed his domicile, and it is impossible to hold that this Court in respect of either domicile or residence has any jurisdiction over the husband. Therefore no order can be made.

Re ESTATE OF LATE { 1902.
STRYDOM. May 2nd.
" 28th.

Will—Construction.

The late W. M. Strydom was twice married in community of property. His first wife died intestate leaving issue—four sons and two daughters. W. M. S. and his second wife made a joint will, containing, inter alia, the following provisions:—"The survivor shall have the full and undisturbed possession of our immoveable goods, whereby we mean that half of the farm Krakeel River, whereof at present we are the owners, while the remaining half shall go to our sons, or male children born of our first marriage, the last-mentioned shall also be heirs of the dwelling-house . . ."

After a prohibition against the alienation of the immoveable property the will continues:—

"This property shall, on the death of the survivor, go to our son or sons born of our second marriage, and in case these should die and leave no male heirs, the above-mentioned immoveable property shall go to the above-mentioned sons of our first marriage, or their lawful heirs."

Held, that under the said will, the survivor was entitled to a life interest in half the farm Krakeel River, that on the death of such survivor the said half should become the property of the sons of the second marriage, and that the heirs of the first wife were entitled to the remaining half thereof.

This was an application by the executor of the estate in question for an order declaring that his interpretation of a certain clause in the testator's will was correct. The case was before the Court on March 6 of the present year, when a similar application was made, and then the Court, without granting any order, directed that the case should stand over. (See 12 Sheil, 225) where the wills in question and the reports of the Registrar of Deeds and of the Master respectively are given in extenso.

Mr. Searle (for applicants): This is a mere question of the construction of a will. We say that under this will the spouses were only dealing with the property in community. The survivor was to have half of this property, and the children the other half. Thus one-sixteenth of Krakeel River was to be dealt with.

[Maasdorp, J.: Probably the husband gave the wife the usufruct of half his share. Of this half the wife has the usufruct, and half goes to the children. The question is whether this half is the half with which he had been dealing?]

That may be, but it would be very strained to say that they meant to give that half to the children of the first marriage, which had previously been vested in them.

[Maasdorp, J.: It often happens that people do deal with property in that way.]

There should be something on the face of the will to show this. It is far more natural to suppose that the children of the first and the second marriage should share equally per stirpes. As regards the children of the second marriage, the bequest would, of course, be subject to the second wife's usufruct.

[Maasdorp, J.: The will speaks of the children of our first marriage.]

That is not an unusual expression, but the interpretation that by his testament the testator wished to cut out the children of his first marriage from all benefit under the will can hardly be sustained. Both his marriages were in community. I can only submit that the testators were dealing with such property as they had. The executors were so advised, and as our contention is in favour of the minors it would be of no advantage to have anybody to argue for them.

Cnr. Adv. Vult.

Postea (May 28th).

Maasdorp, J.: The late Wessel Strydom, who was the owner of certain land mentioned in the petition, was married to his first wife Johanna in community of property. She died intestate on the 28th of November, 1858, leaving children of the marriage, four sons and two daughters surviving her. He married again, and on the 14th day of May, 1876, he made a joint will with his second wife, in which the following appears: "And now as to appointing the heirs, the survivor shall have the full and undisturbed possession of our immovable goods, whereby we mean the half of that portion of the farm named Krakeel River, whereof we are at present the owners, while the remaining half shall go to our sons or male children born of our first marriage, the last mentioned shall also be heirs to the dwelling-house, with the exception of one room, which shall be the undisturbed property of the survivor. Further, it is our last wish that the above-mentioned immovable goods shall never be alienated, but shall, on the death of the survivor, go to our son or sons born of our second marriage, and in case these should die and leave no male heirs, the above-mentioned immovable property shall go to the above-mentioned sons of our first marriage or their lawful heirs."

Upon the death of the first wife, children by that marriage became entitled to half the joint estate, but no division of the estate was made by the survivor, so far as the land was concerned, of which he remained the registered owner, but occupation of half of the land was given to the children. Affairs remained in this position till the 3rd January, 1890, when Wessel Strydom died, leaving his second wife surviving him, with two sons and two daughters. She died in June, 1900, leaving these children surviving her. The executor of Wessel Strydom now proposes to divide the estate, by giving half the land to the children of the first marriage, half of the remainder to the sons of the first marriage, and the other half to the sons of the second marriage, and asks for an order to allow transfer to pass accordingly. The Registrar of Deeds has refused to pass such transfer, being of opinion that the children of the first marriage are entitled to half the land, and no more. It now becomes necessary to construe the above extract from the will, to ascertain whether the executor is right in his contention. It is contended in this behalf that the testators, when they made their joint will, were well aware that the right to half the land was already vested in the children of the first marriage, and that they proceeded to deal with the other half, which of right belonged to the testator, and of that portion they bequeathed one-half to the sons of the first marriage. The will directs that "the survivor shall have the full and undisturbed possession of our immovable goods." If nothing further was said, then this would refer, if the testators were under no misapprehension, to half the land, because the other half was vested in the children of the first marriage, as heirs of their mother, although the testator was still the registered owner. But the will proceeds to explain that by "our immovable property" the testator meant "half of that portion of the farm Krakeel River whereof we are at present the owners." It would be absurd for the testators to say that by their immovable property they meant half their immovable property. Their clear intention, in my opinion, was to dispose of the immovable property, which they had a right to dispose of, that is, half the property of which the testator was the registered owner, for the reason that the other half belonged of right to the children of the first marriage. The will proceeds to direct that the other half shall go to our sons or males born of our first marriage. This seems to me to be intended to be simply declaratory of the right of the children of the first marriage, although it is not correct, because the other half passed, not to the sons of the first marriage, but to the heirs of the first wife, who also had daughters. But even if it was intended as a disposition by will, such disposition had reference to the half of the property which was already vested in the children of the first marriage, whose vested rights could not be prejudiced by it. There are other considerations which point to the same conclusion. If the executors are right, then the father reserved to himself a life interest in the half only of his own property. The testators are supposed to say that the testator, if he survives his wife, shall remain in full and undisturbed possession of half his property, and the other half shall go to the sons of the first marriage. The consequence would be that the father, by will, divests himself of half his estate before his death in favour of his sons by his first marriage. That contention is wholly untenable. I am of opinion that the survivor got a life interest in half of the land mentioned in the petition of which Wessel Strydom was the registered owner. That half the will directs, shall, upon the death of the survivor, go to the sons of the second marriage. The sons of the second marriage are therefore entitled to half the land, and the other half will go to the heirs of the first wife. It will be the duty of the executor to divide the land accordingly, and the present application must be refused. Costs to be paid out of the estate.

[Applicants' Attorneys: Friedlander and Du Toit.]

JONES V. JONES.

Mr. Russell applied on behalf of Mrs. Mary Ann Jones for leave to sue her husband for divorce by edictal citation. The applicant stated on affidavit that she was married to Thomas Jones at Walsall, Staffordshire, in 1874. In 1900 her husband came to this colony, and she and her family subsequently followed. She alleged that the respondent had been guilty of misconduct with a woman with whom he left this colony and proceeded to Durban, Natal.

Leave was granted to sue by edictal citation for divorce, personal service to be effected, and the rule to be returnable on July 12.

CROSBIE V. LE ROUX AND OTHERS.

Mr. Currey moved for leave to sue by edictal citation in an action in which Gabriel le Roux, sen., and Gabriel le Roux, jun., were being sued for the recovery of £300 with interest, due on a mortgage bond. It was stated that both the respondents were said to be with the Boer forces in the Transvaal. It was also asked that certain property be attached to found jurisdiction.

An order was granted attaching certain property to found jurisdiction, and giving leave to sue by edictal citation, returnable on 12th July, personal service to be effected if possible, failing that, one publication to be made in the "Government Gazette," or in the Transvaal "Government Gazette," and one in the "Bechuanaland News."

Ex parte MEYBURGH AND { 1902.
WIFE. { May 2nd.

This was an application for an order calling upon the Registrar of Deeds to register a certain agreement between one Petrus J. Meyburgh and C. J. Meyburgh, as an ante-nuptial contract. Mr. C. J. Langenhoven moved; and from the petition it appeared that the bride was a minor at the time she signed the said contract. The ante-nuptial contract aforesaid was signed by her with the assistance of two certain persons, she being at the time under the impression that the two persons aforesaid were her legal guardians. On application, however, to a notary, he refused to attest this document, and pointed out that the guardians aforesaid were not legal guardians.

Thereafter the marriage between the applicants was duly solemnised, and the parties aforesaid now applied to the Court for an order authorising the execution and registration of the said document as an ante-nuptial contract, saving the rights of ad interim creditors.

The Court granted an order as prayed.

Ex parte VICE AND WIFE.

Mr. Buchanan moved for leave to have a certain contract, made between the above parties, registered as an ante-nuptial contract. The parties had agreed to be married by an ante-nuptial contract, but through some omission the deed was not registered.

Leave granted, with the usual order as to the rights of creditors accruing between the date of the marriage and the registration of the contract being reserved.

ESTATE OF THE LATE WM. HURST.

Mr. B. Upington moved for leave to mortgage certain property in the above estate.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

JOSE V. JOSE.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an extension of the return day in the above action for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which for divorce, and for substituted service, as the defendant could not be found, so that personal service could not be effected.

The return day was extended to July 12, personal service to be effected if possible, failing which publication to be made in the "Government Gazette" and the "Daily Telegraph," London.

Postea (August 5), the rule was made final, and divorce granted.

Ex parte SAIDEN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for leave to the executor dative to transfer certain property. The Master's report was to the effect that the price to be obtained was very good, and he recommended that the sale should take place, but that the share of the minor interested should be paid in to the Guardians' Fund for the benefit of the said minor.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Re THE MINOR BOTHMA. } 11/12.
} May 2nd.

This was an application for an order (a) Authorising the Master of the Supreme Court to pay to Pieter Gerhardus Bothma (the petitioner), in his capacity of executor dative of the estate of the late Petrus Gerhardus Bothma, the sum of £20, which had been paid in to the Master, and formed the inheritance of the minor, Petrus Gerhardus Bothma, from the estate of his father, Andries Johannes Bothma, and from the estate of Cornelia Johanna Catharina Bothma (born Botha), formerly Henning, second wife of his grandfather, the late Petrus Gerhardus Bothma, or such other sum as might be found to be due to the said minor from the Guardians' Fund in part payment of the sum of £106 13s. 4d., to be paid by the said minor in terms of the joint will of the late Maria E. Bothma and her surviving spouse, to his two sisters for a certain piece of land bequeathed to him, subject to the condition of his making the payment aforesaid.

(b) Authorising the said petitioner to appropriate the sum of £21, the value of two cows given to the said minor by his aunt, towards the payment of the aforesaid sum of £106 13s. 4d., and other costs and charges due by the said minor.

(c) Authorising the co-petitioner, Charlotta Gertruida Pretorius, mother of the said minor, and as such his natural guardian, to receive from the other petitioner, Pieter J. Bothma, transfer of the one-third share of the land, known as Badspruit and Landdrift, in trust for the said minor, and to raise a loan upon first mortgage of the same for a sum not exceeding £160 (less the sums of £20 and £21 aforesaid), to pay the said sum of £106 13s. 4d. to the estate of the late Petrus Gerhardus Bothma, the succession duty due by the said minor and the transfer duty, costs of transfer, and of raising and passing the said mortgage bond, and the costs of this application.

The Master's Report was as follows:

It appears that it would be for the benefit of the minor to accept on his behalf transfer of the ground, and that the mortgage be authorised; but it is not clear how the sum of £160 required to be raised is arrived at, seeing that there are the sums of £20 and £21 available.

I would respectfully recommend that such sum as may be shown to be necessary, not exceeding £160, be authorised to be raised. As, however, the mother by her remarriage has lost the right of natural guardian, application should be made to the Master for the appointment of a tutor to whom in trust for the minor transfer can be given, and to protect the minor's interests during his minority. On the motion of Mr. Goch, the Court granted an order in terms of the Master's report, with leave to the petitioners to apply again in case they failed to make arrangements for the payment of certain £270 due as arrear interest on bonds. The appointment of a tutor was referred to the Master.

Re ESTATE OF LATE COETZEE.

This was an application for leave to mortgage certain property.

The petition of Andries Jacobus van der Walt, of Steynsburg, in his capacity as executor testamentary and tutor testamentary of the estate of the late Maria Magdalena Catharina Coetzee (born Hemming) set forth: That under the will of the late M. M. C. Coetzee, petitioner obtained letters of administration as executor testamentary on September 16, 1901, and by notice in the Gazette called upon all creditors to file their claims. These claims amounted to £207 10s., exclusive of the interest due on a certain mortgage bond.

That petitioner obtained letters of confirmation as tutor testamentary over the minors on January 4, 1902, and forthwith had all the movable property in the estate sold by public auction, and that it realised £86 6s. 3d. That there is registered in the name of the estate the farm Kalkfontein, in the division of Steynsburg, in extent 1,169 morgen, and valued by the Divisional Council at £1,169. The said property is already mortgaged, first to the minor children, in respect of their paternal inheritance, for £337 12s. 1d., and secondly to Messrs. Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton, as agents for Ellen K. Jones for £350, but ceded to Tjaart N. Coetzee. In order to meet the claims of the creditors in full, petitioner will have to realise the immovable property, but in the present state of affairs that will result in a serious loss to the estate, and to the prejudice of the minor children. The second bondholder, T. N. Coetzee, who is prepared to advance a further sum upon security of the immovable property, has no intention of calling up the bond, and should it be called up, petitioner has already made arrangements with one Andries Coetzee to take over the existing bond.

Wherefore petitioner prays for leave to mortgage the immovable property for the sum found insufficient to pay the creditors in full, to pay the costs of working and liquidating the estate, and the costs of the present application, in a sum not exceeding £175.

The Master's report recommended that the prayer of the petitioner be granted.

On the motion of Mr. Currey, the Court granted an order in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte FARO.

This was an application for permission to bring the judgment of the native Appeal Court for East Griqualand in the case of Swanepoel Pakkies v. the Petitioner under the review of the Honourable the Supreme Court.

Applicant's petition set forth: That on April 23, 1901, he was sued by one S. Pakkies in the Court of the R.M. for Matatiele for £12, as and for damages caused by petitioner's alleged negligence in knee-haltering a certain mare. The property of the said Pakkies. The case was heard by the Acting R.M. of Matatiele, who, without calling upon petitioner for any evidence, gave judgment in his favour on May 14, 1901. Petitioner had at the time evidence to prove that the said mare was knee-haltered with the consent and at the request of the said S. Pakkies. Thereupon the said S. Pakkies appealed to the Native Appeal Court of East Griqualand, which Court reversed the decision of the Court below, and gave judgment in favour of the said S. Pakkies for £12 and costs in both Courts. The evidence adduced by the said S. Pakkies disclosed no negligence on petitioner's part, and even if it had, petitioner was entitled, as a matter of right, to call evidence on his own behalf. That the proceedings of the said Native Appeal Court were therefore grossly irregular, in that it reversed a decision upon fact in the lower Court, or otherwise committed a great error in law in deciding that the facts adduced disclosed negligence, and further in that, even if such evidence did disclose negligence, such Court should have remitted the case back to the Acting R.M. to enable petitioner to adduce evidence on his own behalf, instead of by its decision barring him from so doing.

Petitioner therefore prayed that this honourable Court would grant him permission to bring the aforesaid decision of the said Native Appeal Court under its Review in terms of Rule of Court 190.

The Appeal Court stated in the course of their reasons for their judgment, that in their opinion the defendant (now appellant) had been guilty of negligence by knee-haltering a mare in a paddock where there was a water hole to which she had access, and that the fact that the mare had fallen into this water hole and been drowned, was due to such negligence.

Mr. Buchanan moved.

The matter was referred to the Registrar, in order that he might decide whether to issue summons under Rule 190 or not.

Ex parte DU PLESSIS. } 1902.
} May 2nd.

This was an application for the appointment of a curator.

The petition of the applicant, Jan Frederick du Plessis, of Ladismith, C.C., stated that he was a minor, aged 20 years and seven months, and that he was desirous of being articted to a certain attorney. Having, however, no guardian, he prayed the Court to appoint his brother, Daniel Hendrik du Plessis, of Ladismith, as curator, to assist him in signing articles of clerkship.

On the motion of Mr. Langenhoven, the Court granted an order as prayed.

[Applicant's Attorney: C. W. Herold.]

Ex parte VAN DER WALT.

This was an application for leave to the petitioner, in his capacity as executor testamentary in the estate of his father, Johannes C. van der Walt, to pass transfer to himself individually of a certain erf situate in the village of Petrusville, division of Philip's Town. The said land formed part of the joint estate of the late Johannes C. van der Walt, and of his predeceased spouse, Jacoba P. du Plessis, and was by them bequeathed to their son Petrus J. van der Walt, for the sum of £45. The legatee refused to accept the said bequest on these terms, and on September 21, 1900, executed a formal deed of renunciation. Petitioner thereupon advertised the said erf for sale by public auction, and himself purchased it thereat for £111.

The Registrar of Deeds reported that this seemed to be a fair and reasonable price, and that he therefore saw no objection to the petitioner's prayer for the confirmation on the sale being granted.

On the motion of Mr. Russell, the Court granted an order as prayed.

[Applicant's Attorneys: Fairbridge, Arderne and Lawton.]

Ex parte ROOS.

Mr. Benjamin moved for an amendment of a certain order of Court granted on February 1, 1902, a date having been, through a clerical error, put in as the 9th February, 1866, instead of 27th February, 1866.

Order granted.

Ex parte SOOTT.

Mr. Buchanan moved for leave to the petitioner to execute a certain mortgage bond and pass certain transfer without the assistance of her husband, from whom she was living apart under a deed of separation.

Order granted.

Ex parte GALLOWAY.

Mr. Alexander moved for leave to the petitioner to sell certain property in which minors were interested.

The report of the Master was favourable, and an order was granted, in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte JOHNSON.

Mr. Currey moved for leave to the petitioner to have registered a certain deed as an ante-nuptial contract. Petitioner was the attorney who drew up the deed in question, and owing to some misunderstanding it was not forwarded to Cape Town for registration within the prescribed number of days.

An order was granted, subject to the consent of the parties to the deed, if they have already been married, being filed with the Registrar, and also with the usual reservation as to rights of creditors.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAAS-DORP.]

WIENER AND CO. V. OHLS-SON'S CAPE BREWERIES. { 1902.
May 5th.

This was an action for the recovery of money due on an account.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is William Frederick Stamper, of Cape Town, who sues in his capacity as secretary for the time being of Wiener and Co. (Limited), a company trading in Cape Town, being duly authorised to sue on behalf of the said company; the defendant is Ohlsson's Cape Breweries (Limited), a company carrying on business in Cape Town and elsewhere.

2. In or about the month of October, 1901, one Algernon Ernest Watson, who was carrying on business as tenant manager of certain military canteens at Cape Town and Wynberg, was indebted in certain sums of money to both the plaintiffs and the defendants for goods supplied.

3. On or about October 14 the defendants informed plaintiffs that they were going to take over and work the business of the said Watson until further notice, and it was then agreed between plaintiffs and defendants that in consideration of plaintiffs supplying further goods for the said canteen business, all orders for such goods given by the said Watson should be countersigned by either Messrs. Etheridge or Kirsten, agents or employees of defendants, for and on behalf of defendants; that the amount due to plaintiffs for goods supplied during the month of September should be paid by defendants, and the amounts for goods supplied in October and thereafter from time to time on orders given as aforesaid should also be paid by defendants when the same became due, the cheques being signed by the said Watson and countersigned by defendants.

4. Thereafter, in accordance with the said agreement, the plaintiffs supplied goods from time to time to the said Watson on orders countersigned by or on behalf of defendants, and the cheques therefor were signed by Watson and countersigned by defendants, and thereafter payments were made by defendants.

5. In or about the month of December, 1901, on plaintiffs requesting payment of a certain amount of £383 16s. 9d. for goods supplied by plaintiffs to the said Algernon Ernest Watson, carrying on business as aforesaid, the orders for which were countersigned by or on behalf of defendants as agreed upon, the defendants refused to pay the said sum, and repudiated all liability.

6. The plaintiffs have supplied goods amounting in all to the sum of £580 12s. 11d. under the agreement aforesaid, on orders countersigned by or on behalf of defendants, which the defendants now refuse to pay for, and all things have happened, all times have elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle the plaintiffs to recover the said sum for the defendants. The plaintiffs claim: (a) The sum of £580 12s. 11d., with interest a tempore morae; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

And for an alternative claim the plaintiffs say:

7. They crave leave to refer to paragraphs 1 and 2.

8. On or about October 1, 1901, the defendants entered into an agreement with the said Watson whereunder it was agreed inter alia that the defendants should take over the business of the said Watson and pay him a salary of £20 per month as manager, and under the said agreement they became liable for all debts and obligations thereafter contracted by the said Watson in and about the said business; the plaintiffs crave leave to refer to the said agreement when produced.

9. Thereafter the plaintiffs from time to time supplied goods to the said business, and the defendants became liable to pay to the plaintiffs the value thereof; but although there is now due and owing the sum of £580 12s. 11d. for goods supplied by plaintiffs to the said business, the defendants neglect and refuse to pay the same.

The plaintiffs claim: (a) The sum of £580 12s. 11d., with interest a tempore morae; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The defendants' plea was as follows:

1. The defendants admit the allegations in paragraphs 1, 2, and 5 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraphs 3 and 4, they deny that they, on the 14th October, 1901, or at any time, informed the plaintiff that they were going to take over the business of the said Watson as their own, or agreed that they would themselves pay for goods supplied during September or October, or thereafter, to the said Watson, and they deny that at any time they made payments to the plaintiff for such goods.

3. All payments were made by cheques signed by the said Watson, to whom the goods were supplied and credit given, and countersigned by or for the defendants, who had the control or supervision of the business of the said Watson, and shortly after October 14 the plaintiff Stamper and Frederick K. Wiener were definitely informed that the defendants refused to accept liability for or to guarantee payments of amounts due or to become due to the plaintiff company for goods supplied to the said Watson under the arrangement.

4. The defendants admit the supply of goods to the said Watson to the amount of £580 12s. 11d. on orders countersigned by on or their behalf, and that they refuse to pay for the said goods, but otherwise they deny the allegations in paragraph 6 of the declaration.

5. As supervising and controlling the business of the said Watson, the defendants were unable to cause the said amount to be paid out of his funds, which were insufficient for the purpose, and his estate has been surrendered as insolvent.

Wherefore the defendants pray that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

For a plea to the alternative claim of the plaintiff, the defendants say:

6. They crave leave to refer to the foregoing paragraphs, and say that the only arrangements between them and the plaintiff were that orders for goods given by Watson should be countersigned either by Etheridge or Kirsten, and cheques signed by Watson and countersigned by defendants should be given in payment of such goods.

7. They deny that the tenour of the agreement between themselves and the said Watson is correctly set forth in paragraph 8 of the declaration, and say that the said agreement was not known to the plaintiff until after the supply of the goods, the price of which is claimed in this suit.

8. In so far as the agreement between themselves and the said Watson is relevant to the matters at issue between the parties to this suit, they beg to refer to the same when produced in court, and they specially deny that by the said agreement they took over the said business of Watson for their own account, or became liable for any debts or obligations thereafter contracted by the said Watson in and about the said business.

9. They admit that there is owing by the said Watson to the plaintiff the sum of £580 12s. 11d., and that they refuse to pay the same, but otherwise they deny the allegations in paragraph 9.

10. They say specially that the goods, the price of which is now sued for, were not supplied to the said Watson in the faith of credit of the defendants, or upon any guarantee by them.

Wherefore they pray that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

[Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Goch), for plaintiffs. Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.), for defendants.]

Frederick K. Wiener, one of the managing directors of the business of Wiener and Co., stated that prior to October last year his firm had supplied goods to Algernon E. Watson, who had a contract for the supply of goods to the military. During October they stopped supplying goods to Watson, who was at that time owing them certain money. Watson carried on what was known as a dry canteen and also a wet canteen at Cape Town and Wynberg. Witness's firm supplied provisions, etc., and the Breweries supplied liquor for Watson's business. In the month of October, Watson came to witness with one Kirsten, the representative of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries. Kirsten told witness that Watson was indebted to Ohlsson's for a large sum, and as Watson had failed to pay the amount due, they had taken the matter in hand, that they had taken stock of the affair within the last few days, and had decided to take it over, and that they had entered into an agreement with Watson under which the latter was to become an employee of the company, and that this arrangement was to go on until such time as Watson had paid off his liability to Ohlsson's, which was over £1,200. Kirsten told witness that this affair must be better looked after than it had been in the past, and that further orders supplied by plaintiffs must be countersigned either by Kirsten or Etheridge as representing the Brewery Company. Witness said: "That means you are to take over the whole responsibility of it?" to which Kirsten answered, "Yes, but only in so far as the countersigned orders are concerned." Witness said, "It is not likely we are going to supply anything on Watson's own initiative, as you are going to take over the business and desire us only to supply those orders so initialled and countersigned." At that time there was a sum of £437 9s. 4d. due on the September account, and Mr. Kirsten told witness that that amount would be paid by Ohlsson's Cape Breweries within the course of the next few days, as they had opened a special account, and as soon as there were sufficient funds in that account they would pay the amount due. That amount was paid on October 17 by cheque signed by Watson, and countersigned as arranged. Mr. Stamper was present at that conversation, but Mr. Etheridge was not. On October 14, witness wrote a letter to the defendants confirming the arrangement. After that the arrangement was in practice carried out, the orders executed after that being always countersigned either by Kirsten or Etheridge. Witness knew that Etheridge was a responsible clerk in the employ of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries. The September and October accounts were so paid by cheques signed by Watson, and countersigned by Kirsten or Etheridge. The cheques came from the office of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries. In some cases items were eliminated from the orders, witness thought by Mr. Etheridge, on the ground that witness's prices were too high. Witness was not definitely informed, shortly after the conversation with Kirsten, by Mr. Etheridge or anyone else, that the company would not be responsible for Watson's liabilities. In December, Kirsten and Watson again came to witness, and Kirsten told him that the Field Force Canteen was going to take over Watson's business, and the result would be that as Watson could not possibly compete with the prices he would have to close his business. Witness asked what about the payment of the money for the goods witness had supplied. At that time the November account had not been paid, and there was also something due for goods supplied in December. Kirsten, on behalf of Ohlsson's, said that of course they were not going to pay, and that witness must come to some arrangement with Watson and give him time to pay. He led witness to suppose that when Watson's affairs were settled, there would be ample funds. Witness told Kirsten that they could give Watson no time at all, and that they looked to Ohlsson's Breweries for payment. At the same time Kirsten said they would cease initialling the orders, and that if witness's firm cared to supply Watson further they would do so on their own responsibility. After that they supplied a few orders, but only when they got the money before delivering the goods.

By the Court: Watson made some remarks either at that or the previous conversation, but when he did so, Kirsten said: "You be quiet; I am speaking now, and there is no necessity for you to speak." Watson, therefore, did not say anything of consequence.

Examination continued: Witness was never informed by Etheridge that the reason for countersigning was to prevent Watson buying large quantities of unsaleable goods. Neither Kirsten nor Etheridge had said anything like that to witness.

Cross-examined: Witness might have seen Etheridge about an order a few days after the letter of October 14. Etheridge did not tell witness what was afterwards embodied in a letter, viz., that Ohlsson's did not guarantee any responsibility. If he had told witness that, he would have distinctly remembered it. Witness could not recollect what he went down to Ohlsson's office for on that occasion. Witness would not say that Kirsten was a subordinate in the office of Ohlsson's Cape Breweries. He did not know that Kirsten was one of the travellers. He told witness that he had taken stock of Watson's business, and that he was going to run the business. Witness could not possibly compete with the Field Force Canteen, seeing that the latter imported goods duty free. It was explained to witness that Ohlsson's did not take over the business in their own name, because the military might not allow them to carry it on. Therefore it was agreed that the business should still be carried on in Watson's name. At the meeting in October Kirsten had told witness that they felt sure that in a few months Watson would be able to work off his liabilities, and they would then hand him back his business, but that before they did so they would give witness a month or so notice, because then witness would have to supply goods on his own responsibility. When Kirsten tried to lead witness to suppose that after Watson's affairs were settled there would be plenty of funds witness knew that to be impossible.

[By the Court: Witness knew that before the conversation with Kirsten in October his firm had decided to stop supplying goods to Watson until they got a settlement of the September account then due.]

Counsel read the agreement entered into between Watson and Ohlsson's, from which it appeared that the former being indebted to the latter for a considerable sum, and being unable to settle it, Watson requested Ohlsson's to grant an extension of time on the following conditions: Watson to give, grant, and make over to Ohlsson the sole control and management of his military canteens, this control to continue until the whole of Watson's indebtedness was discharged. Watson was to manage the business under the supervision of Ohlsson's, acting as an employee at a salary of £20 a month. The amounts taken by Watson were to be paid into a special account, to be opened at the Standard Bank. Ohlsson's were to supply and deliver to the canteens the necessary quantities of liquor, while the profits made by the carrying on of the business were from time to time to be paid to Ohlsson's in reduction of the amount of Watson's indebtedness. The arrangement was to terminate when the full amount of Watson's indebtedness was paid off.

Harry Alexander Stamper, one of the managing directors of the plaintiff company, said he joined the firm on September 15. The firm was then carrying on business with Watson. Witness took over the management of the accounts. Watson's account was then running, and witness, noticing that it was a pretty large account, made enquiries about it. On May 7, Watson had not paid his account, and witness started worrying about it, and held back the orders, while their traveller was instructed to go and try and get the amount in. Kirsten and Watson came in one day; Watson was treated as an utter nonentity, Kirsten being the man. Kirsten said they were going to take over the whole concern, that Watson was going to be an employee of his, and that in future they would initial all orders, and Ohlsson's would be responsible. Witness asked, "What about the money already owing?" Kirsten replied, "Oh, we will see that you get that; you will get your cheque for September in a day or two." The arrangement was perfectly satisfactory, and orders were executed from time to time. Subsequently when witness went round to get payment for the cheque, Etheridge said it would be forthcoming in a few days, adding "You will get your money all right; we may lose, but you won't lose a penny." A few days after that they got a cheque. The cheques were endorsed by Ohlsson's Breweries.

Cross-examined: Watson's orders were not kept back a week, witness did not even think they were kept back a few days; the holding back of the orders and the arrangement with Ohlsson's was done jointly. The order dated October 11 was countersigned by Etheridge. Any orders not initialled were torn up.

[By the Court: He positively swore that there were orders of Watson's that were kept back which plaintiffs would not execute until some other arrangement was arrived at.]

Cross-examination continued: Etheridge told witness when he asked for the cheque that there were not sufficient funds; witness thought Ohlsson's would have to realise more of Watson's goods before they paid. He did not know what arrangement Watson had with Ohlsson's apart from what he had heard. He thought he only went twice for the cheque. Witness was under the conviction that Ohlsson's were responsible for every penny of that account, otherwise they would not have supplied Watson's with a "tickey's" worth of goods. Ohlsson's guarantee was for future goods, and not for past goods; the first cheque for the September account was not included in the guarantee. Witness went to Etheridge for the purpose of finding out if what Kirsten had said represented the correct state of affairs. (Subsequently witness corrected himself, and said the above statement did not represent what he had meant to convey; he simply went to Etheridge to get a cheque, the obtaining of which from Ohlsson's would have corroborated Kirsten's statement immediately.) Witness was not afraid to ask for such a corroboration. Plaintiffs subsequently wrote to Ohlsson's for the purpose of ascertaining if what the clerks had informed them was correct; no reply was received to this letter.

Simon Jaffe said he was a traveller in the firm of Wiener and Co., and recollected two of the orders countersigned by Kirsten and Etheridge. He got the orders from Watson, and went with them to Ohlsson's, where Etheridge struck out two of the items, saying the price was too dear. Witness went to see Watson at his head office at the Castle early in October. He met Kirsten there, and the latter said he supposed witness was aware that Watson's business was in a hopeless condition. Witness said that he was not, and Kirsten said that if they declared the man bankrupt now, they would get nothing, and proceeding, said that they proposed to take over the control of the business, and by effecting economies they would be able to pay off the debts. With regard to orders, Kirsten said they would not hold themselves responsible for anything not countersigned by Etheridge himself. That was before witness had any orders countersigned by Etheridge or Kirsten.

Alfred Newton Foote, a clerk in Mr. Syfret's office, said that Mr. Syfret was trustee in the insolvent estate of Watson, and witness had charge of the papers in that estate. The documents produced had been the only ones handed in in the estate.

Mr. Schreiner objected to this evidence, holding that, in the first place, if they could go into the condition of the insolvent estate, the trustee should be called, so that he might be cross-examined. Mr. Schreiner further submitted that, even if Mr. Syfret himself were to put in the books, the evidence would not be at all relevant to the case between Wiener and Ohlsson, which had nothing to do with any third party.

[Mr. Searle: The first point was a purely technical one, and I have never dreamt that such an objection would have been raised. As regards Mr. Syfret, however, his evidence can be taken on the alternative claim in the pleadings, which was that after a certain date Watson's business became Ohlsson's business, and Mr. Syfret's evidence would only refer to the business after that date.]

Maasdorp, J.: I don't hold that these books are not admissible, but they must be put in by someone who can swear that these books are from Watson's, and not by someone who has simply been told that they are. At present there is no evidence that these books are from Watson, and they cannot be put in. At present there is no relevancy to this case shown, because the only evidence is that they are produced out of the office of Mr. Syfret by his clerk, and no connection is proved between these books and any of the parties to the case.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Mr. Schreiner called

Edwin Bernard Etheridge, clerk in the employ of Ohlsson's Breweries, who stated that he was temporarily managing the office in the absence of Mr. A. Ohlsson. Kirsten—a traveller representing the breweries outside the office—inquired into Watson's business for the firm. After the investigation, the agreement of October 1 was entered into, and Kirsten went around with Watson to Wiener's, amongst others. There were other creditors in addition to Wiener's—altogether, about £600 was owing. Ohlsson's were the largest creditors for £1,300 odd; this sum was reduced to exactly £1,300, and embodied in a promissory note. Witness had no recollection of any interview with Stamper or any other member of the plaintiff's firm before the letter of October 14. Witness opened this letter, but did not reply to it; the same morning that it was received Stamper called at the office. A conversation took place between witness and Stamper at the counter; Cooper and Bennet and several other clerks were in the office at the time. Stamper asked witness under what arrangements they were going to work Watson's account. Witness told Stamper that certainly Ohlsson's were not going to guarantee anything. Plaintiff's reason for initialling Watson's orders was to keep his accounts for him, because he had ordered goods which were of no use to him, and he was overstocking himself, and he had also been ordering personal goods, which defendants did not think was fair to his creditors. Mr. Stamper referred to a guarantee, and witness told him that Ohlsson's certainly would not guarantee any man's account unless they were running the business for their own benefit, but that they would do their best to keep Watson's account in check. Witness further told Stamper that the September account would most likely be paid within a week. Cooper at the time was standing at witness's elbow, and Bennet was just behind. The cheque for the September account was paid on the 17th, a few days after the above interview. Witness subsequently saw Mr. Wiener on the same subject, and repeated to him what he had already told Stamper—that he (witness) was certain Ohlsson's would not guarantee anything. No special fund was ever opened at the bank, but Watson's special account was countersigned by Ohlsson's. No action was taken by Ohlsson's under the power of attorney to represent Watson. Generally Watson managed his own banking account.

Cross-examined: Wiener's were supervising Watson's account. Witness had nothing whatever to do with the agreement. Watson arranged with the bank that every cheque should be countersigned by Ohlsson's, but he could cancel this arrangement at any time. Mr. Watson had personally written to the bank, stating that in future he wished all his accounts to be countersigned by witness. Watson paid Ohlsson's by cheques countersigned by witness. With regard to the letter from Wiener's, witness did not think it was necessary to repudiate it, considering the conversation he had had with Stamper. Witness believed he had struck out two or three items from Watson's orders, but this was under Watson's instructions. Watson used to tell witness what his balance was at the bank. At this time witness was not aware of the agreement. He never saw Watson's passbook, but he used daily to ask him what his receipts were.

Re-examined: Ohlsson's proved in Watson's insolvent estate. Witness took steps as a vigilant creditor to secure the money due to Watson from the Field Force Canteen, but defendants never put any pressure upon Watson to make him insolvent. The October account was paid in the usual way by Watson by a cheque countersigned by witness. Ohlsson's kept no books from Watson, and never bought from him. No profit from Watson's business was ever paid to Ohlsson's.

By the Court: When the agreement was made Watson was practically insolvent. They wished Wiener to go on supplying Watson in the way they had been doing, because if Ohlsson's had sent in their account Watson would have been insolvent.

[Maasdorp, J.: What inducement did you or Mr. Kirsten hold out to Wiener to continue supplying an insolvent business?]

Nothing but that they would possibly get their money if they continued to supply goods, and the business was carried on.

And it would appear from the agreement that it was for the benefit of Ohlsson's that the business was being carried on, as under the agreement they were to get the whole of the profits?—Yes.

James Forbes Cooper, a clerk in the employ of Ohlsson's, said he overheard part of the conversation between Mr. Stamper and Mr. Etheridge in October last. He heard Etheridge say that they were not responsible for Watson's orders, but were keeping a check on his stock, as they knew him to be an unsatisfactory man to manage the business. He afterwards saw Mr. Wiener there, but did not hear what he said, but it was in regard to Watson's business.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: You say you overheard nothing of this conversation with Mr. Wiener, but yet you say that it was in regard to Watson's business, and nothing else. You meant that you imagined it was?

Witness: Yes.

Charles Ernest Bennett, also a clerk in the employ of defendants, said that he had overheard part of the conversation between Stamper and Etheridge, and heard the latter distinctly say to Stamper that they did not guarantee any accounts of Watson's, but were merely countersigning orders for the purpose of keeping a check on his stock. As Mr. Stamper was leaving, Mr. Etheridge referred to the letter of October 14, and asked if a reply should be sent, but Mr. Stamper said it was not necessary, as the matter had been fully discussed.

Mr. Searle: When were you first asked to recollect what you knew about this matter?

Witness: It was understood all along that I was to give evidence if there was an action.

Was it an understood thing that you should listen to the conversation?—Certainly not, but these things are spoken of when a case of this kind is coming on, and the clerks would say what they knew about it. Proceeding, witness said it was first brought to his recollection about January 3 that he had heard this conversation. He only heard a portion of the conversation, because he did not pay particular attention. Witness simply wanted to see Mr. Stamper about his horse "Once More." Witness had backed it, and lost money on it, and he wanted to know the reason why the horse lost.

Hermanus Dampers Kirsten said that in October last he was a traveller in the employ of Ohlsson's Breweries, and was instructed to look into Watson's account. From what he ascertained, he was instructed to see Wiener and Co., and did so. From witness's standing in the firm he had no authority to give guarantees. He had no authority whatever when he went to Mr. Wiener or anyone else to give guarantees. When he went to Wiener's he saw Mr. Fred. Wiener and Mr. Stamper. Witness told Mr. Wiener that he had gone through the stock and found that Watson was about £1,000 to the bad, and that Ohlsson's were going to help him to carry over the business, as they knew it was a good and payable business, and that if it was looked after they would be able to pay all his creditors, and that Watson was going to be allowed to pay all his creditors except Ohlsson's, who were going to take a bill for the balance. Mr. Wiener said that it was very good of Ohlsson's to do so, and witness said it was not exactly kindness, because they knew it was a good business. The September account was mentioned, and witness pointed out that there were several overcharges in the invoices, and said that it would be better in future if all orders Watson gave Wiener's traveller were gone through and initialled by witness or Mr. Etheridge. Witness explained that he was going to assist Watson in his business in looking through the invoices, as he had been overcharged in the past. He told Mr. Wiener that the September account would be paid in a few weeks' time, because Watson was going to pay all his creditors except Ohlsson's. Mr. Wiener said he understood Watson's contract was likely to be for two years, and expressed the hope that the orders would still be brought there, and witness said the orders would be brought there if Wiener's prices were as low as those of other merchants. He never said anything to Wiener or Stamper about Ohlsson's going to pay Watson's accounts out of their own pockets. He had nothing of that sort in his mind. He had no instructions to tell them anything of the kind. He did not tell them at all how their accounts would be paid. He never mentioned anything about the payment of any account except the September account. The letter of October 14 was shown to witness on October 15. The next witness had to do with the matter was when he went round with Mr. Watson to tell Mr. Wiener about the cash payments, in the early part of December. They went into the private office, and witness, speaking for Mr. Watson, said that Mr. Watson wanted Wiener and Co. to allow the November account to stand over, and Mr. Watson would pay them the December account, or would pay cash for all goods received after that, and would also pay them up to date. Mr. Wiener said they could pay him cash in the meantime, but he would see his father regarding the November account. They then left the office, and witness never saw Mr. Wiener again. Witness knew of the agreement between Ohlsson's and Watson, and knew the terms of it. These terms had not been carried out in respect of the banking account, which had never been opened. Witness agreed with Mr. Etheridge's evidence in regard to that agreement. Neither Wiener nor Stamper came to speak to witness after the latter had been at their office with Watson early in October.

Cross-examined: The terms of the agreement with Watson were discussed between Mr. A. Ohlsson, Mr. Watson, and witness, so that witness knew when he went to see Mr. Wiener that all the profits in the business were going to Ohlsson's, but he had no authority to make any arrangement with Wiener.

[By the Court: Watson got his salary as set forth in the agreement. He got it by cheque.]

Witness never told Wiener about Ohlsson's taking over the business. When he was shown the letter of October 14, he said it was rot and ridiculous, and did nothing more. Witness supervised Watson's books from time to time. If it had not been for the field force canteen starting, there would have been a good thing made out of it. Witness's real object in going to Wiener in October was to get the September account rectified.

Re-examined: The £20 salary to Watson was paid on the latter's own cheque.

By the Court: The arrangement witness went to make with Wiener was with regard to the errors in the September account, and also to let Mr. Wiener know the state of Watson's business. He never told Mr. Wiener that payments would be made by cheques signed A. E. Watson, and countersigned by Ohlsson's.

Cliff Axel Ohlsson said he was the manager of Ohlsson's Breweries, and during his absence at Ceres in October last, Mr. Etheridge acted for him. The contract between Ohlsson's and Watson was arranged in the early part of October, while witness was still there. Mr. Etheridge had nothing whatever to do with the contract. Witness had no communications with either Mr. Wiener or Mr. Stamper. He had given no authority before he left for the undertaking of any such guarantee as that now alleged to have been given. He had given no authority for Ohlsson's to bind themselves. He knew the arrangement that was being made as to the payment of the September account, but he knew nothing about the company taking any responsibility for accounts.

Cross-examined: A few days after witness came back from Ceres he was told the contents of the letter of October 14. While witness was away Mr. Etheridge had no access to the agreement between Ohlsson's and Watson. Mr. Kirsten knew the contents of the agreement. Witness knew that if that agreement had been carried out, Ohlsson's Breweries would have got all the profits from the business.

[By the Court: The agreement was never enforced. It was true that all orders were countersigned, but that was under an arrangement with Watson. The cheques for Watson's salary were also countersigned.]

Re-examined: Mr. Etheridge told witness the contents of the letter of October 14, and also what had been done in regard to it.

[Mr. Searle objected to witness repeating a conversation, and saying what he had been told by Mr. Etheridge, but the Court, after hearing Mr. Schreiner on the point, held that a part of the conversation having been given in cross-examination, and an imputation made, the rest of the conversation could also be given.]

On being told the contents of the letter, he asked Mr. Etheridge what he had done, and the latter said that Mr. Stamper and Mr. Wiener had come down to the office, and he had assured them that under no circumstances could Ohlsson's guarantee any accounts. As to Watson's salary, none of that came out of the funds of Ohlsson's Breweries, and not a penny of Watson's obligations to outside creditors had come from Ohlsson's. Watson's own account was only operated upon in a restricted way. The agreement was not carried out as a whole.

[By the Court: The agreement was acted upon in a way in this respect, that they supervised Watson's business affairs. They had a modified form of control of Watson's account at the bank. The agreement was only drawn up so that in the event of Watson mismanaging his affairs they could supervise the business more effectually.]

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

After argument by counsel on the facts, the Court gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount sued for, with costs.

Massdorp, J.: The plaintiffs in this case sued the defendants upon a contract whereby it was alleged that the defendants promised to pay plaintiffs for certain goods supplied by the latter to the business of Watson. To put the alleged agreement more precisely, it is said that the defendants were to pay for such goods as were supplied on orders signed by Watson himself, and countersigned by some representative of the defendant company. Now this agreement must be gathered from certain conversations which took place between the parties. It is a verbal agreement, and it is only in a certain indirect manner that light can be thrown upon it by any documents which may be produced. It appears that when the conversations took place which constituted the alleged agreement, if there was any, there were present on behalf of the plaintiffs two of the partners of the firm, viz., Messrs. Wiener and Stamper, and there was on the other side Mr. Kirsten, who is connected with the business of the defendant company, and Mr. Watson, whose business comes into question here. Now, the two partners of the plaintiff firm have been called and have given their evidence, and have stated pretty fully their conversations and the purport of those conversations, while on the other hand Mr. Kirsten has been called, but Mr. Watson has not been called. Now, I will point out before referring further to the alleged conversations, that at this time, according to Mr. Etheridge, there was some idea that some arrangement should be made between Ohlsson's Breweries and the other creditors for the purpose of enabling Watson to carry on his business, and to prevent it being closed. It was thought that it was necessary to come to some arrangement for such a purpose, and Mr. Etheridge says that he left the matter in the hands of Kirsten, and he further said that he told another witness that he was glad the business had been arranged by Kirsten. Now, it does appear that there was some idea that some agreement should be made by these parties. We have on the one part, therefore, the statement made by Mr. Wiener and Mr. Stamper that some agreement was made, and before referring further to that I would say that when we come to Kirsten's evidence it would amount to the making of no agreement at all. The two partners have stated that Kirsten agreed that Ohlsson's Breweries would become responsible for goods supplied upon orders which were countersigned on behalf of the business, and we find that Mr. Jaffe says that when he met Mr. Kirsten the latter said that none of the orders would be recognised, and that they would not be responsible upon any orders except such as were countersigned on behalf of the Breweries Company. So here we have three witnesses who state positively that some arrangement was made, and in substance their statements of the conversations are identical. Mr. Kirsten says that he made no arrangement at all; that he entered into no agreement, and that he merely went to Wiener and Co. to inform them that Watson was in difficulties, to tell them that they must send in their bill; that bill would be paid for September, and that for the future they should not supply any orders but such as were countersigned. That constitutes no agreement or contract by either party, while Mr. Etheridge says that the idea of going to Wiener and Co. was to see if an arrangement could be come to so as to enable Watson to carry on longer and prevent the business being closed up. The statement made by Mr. Wiener would have such effect, because it would have the effect of an inducement to them to supply further goods upon some promise made by Ohlsson's Breweries, while Kirsten's allegations would have no such effect, because he says that he merely went to tell them to make out their account for September, and it would be paid, but that was no agreement for further supplies or inducement to Wiener and Co. to hold their hands and not to press Watson. Under these circumstances I think that the contract is supported by the surrounding circumstances, such as those alleged by Etheridge himself. There are other circumstances, but before I go to that point I wish to refer to the position of Kirsten as agent of Ohlsson's Breweries, because there is another defence on the part of Ohlsson's Breweries, not only that no agreement was entered into, but that even if an agreement was entered into it was made by a person who had no authority to make it. It appears pretty clear that during the absence of Mr. Ohlsson, Mr. Etheridge conducted such business as Mr. Ohlsson himself would have had the power to carry on were he present, and Mr. Etheridge says that he left the making of any arrangement in the hands of Kirsten. It appears quite clear, therefore, that Etheridge, who had stepped into the shoes of Mr. Ohlsson, had full powers to instruct Kirsten to make the necessary arrangements for the purpose of this particular transaction. Consequently Kirsten had full power from Etheridge to conduct the business of Ohlsson's in this matter. Mr. Ohlsson says this is such an important matter that it would never have been left in the hands of Kirsten, but the question is whether it would appear to be such an important matter after all. Watson was in difficulties in the beginning of October, but the business he was carrying on was considered a very good business, if he could only tide over his difficulties. He owed Ohlsson and Co.'s Breweries £1,300, which that company was very anxious to save, and the only way they could do it was by getting the other creditors to give this business further time. Ohlsson's then entered into a written arrangement with Watson himself, and according to that arrangement, Ohlsson's Breweries were to take all the net profits made by the business. Not only that, but they had the power to order all the goods required in the business, and what hardship therefore was there to Ohlsson's in making themselves liable for the payment of the goods which were supplied to the business, of which they were to have all the benefit. The one object they had in view was to obtain the continuance of the business, and to do that, they had to get other creditors, such as Wiener and Co., to go on supplying goods, otherwise this dry canteen could not have been carried on. Consequently it seems to me that it was only a very natural agreement they should enter into with Wiener and Stamper, that the latter should go on supplying goods for that business, and that, for the payment of goods so supplied on countersigned orders, Ohlsson's should be liable. It was a natural arrangement, and not only supports the statements of Mr. Wiener and Mr. Stamper as to the probabilities of the contract, to which they have borne evidence, but it also throws some light on the position of Mr. Kirsten, who was simply carrying out the wishes of Ohlsson's Breweries, as evidenced by their own contract. Kirsten had to make some arrangement to induce Wiener and Co. to continue sending the goods, and consequently he made a promise that the goods should be paid for by Ohlsson's Breweries, who would have the full benefit of the business, and who would take possession of the goods, and derive the full benefit from the goods which they so paid for. I think that, under the circumstances, we have a set of circumstances which largely corroborates the evidence given by the plaintiffs. Even when we go to the documents, I think the evidence becomes quite conclusive. We have here a letter of October 14 from the plaintiffs to the defendants, in which the terms of the agreement made between Kirsten and the plaintiffs are set forth, and the conversations referred to were alleged to have taken place a few days before that. It is impossible to read this letter without coming to the conclusion that the information contained in it must have been obtained from Kirsten himself as to the manner in which the orders were to be made out, and the manner in which the cheques were to be drawn. This information could only have been obtained from Kirsten himself, and the question therefore arises whether this formed the subject of an agreement. Kirsten says that so far from that being the case, he never even referred to the manner in which the cheques were to be signed and countersigned. In the face of this document, I must come to the conclusion that the evidence given by Messrs. Wiener and Stamper is correct, and that that of Kirsten is incorrect. Then we have got other documents which support the statements of Wiener and Stamper, and when we refer to these other documents—which embrace the orders and cheques—we find that they prove that the business was carried on exactly in the way in which Wiener and Stamper say Kirsten had promised it should be carried on, and in the absence of such an agreement as that alleged by the plaintiffs, it is impossible to account for the form of these documents. I have therefore come to the conclusion that the evidence put before the Court by Wiener and Stamper regarding the conversations is correct, and that if it is necessary to look further for evidence to support those statements it is to be found in the documents. Judgment will therefore be for the amount claimed by the plaintiffs, £280 12s. 11d., with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), and a Jury.]

ALIWE V. HARDIE. { 1902.
 { May 6th.

Libel and slander—Balance of account.

This was an action for damages for alleged libel and slander, and also for the recovery of a certain sum, being the balance of an account. There was a counter-claim for damages for alleged malicious and illegal arrest of the defendant, and for the recovery of the sum of £100 due by plaintiff to defendant.

The plaintiff was Said Abdullah Aliwe and the defendant was Hadje Abdol Hardie. The plaintiff sued the defendant on three counts, two being for libel and slander, and one for the balance of an account of money due to plaintiff. The plaintiff was, as his name of Said betokened, of the highest noble class of the Mohammedan world. He had been for very many years, until the dismissal, one of the two pilgrim guides at Mecca, to whom went the devout Moslems who made many pious journeys to the shrine of the Prophet. Said Abdullah was the pilgrim guide at Mecca, and had a very great following, particularly among the Cape Mohammedans. He had held this position altogether for 27 years. Nine years ago the defendant came over to Mecca, and stayed there with one of his wives named Hadeje, and he left her in the charge and care of the plaintiff, who had an establishment at which a great many of the Moslems stayed, and Hadeje stayed there till 1901, when she returned, and was still living with Hardie. The plaintiff now claimed £61, for the balance of account for Hadeje's board, lodging, rent, clothing supplied, and money paid for her various trips. Four years ago the defendant Hardie sent another wife of his named Amina on a pilgrimage to Mecca, and she was placed with the plaintiff in his establishment. She had with her sums of money provided by her husband, and she deposited £100 with the plaintiff, to be drawn against her said husband from time to time as might be required. She received the whole of that £100, according to the evidence for the plaintiff. Amina remained there two years, and then she came back to this colony. When she came here her husband discovered that all was not with her as it should be. Said Abdullah, the plaintiff, had looked after her to the best of his ability throughout the whole of the time she was at his establishment. She had come there with a friend of the defendant—a man named Abdoola. Nothing was alleged at all against Abdoola in connection with the matter. But a man named Mohamet, who also lived at the establishment, appeared to have come with her on the same steamer back to the Cape, and it was suggested that was how the woman went wrong. Thereupon Hardie, the defendant, wrote letters from Cape Town to the Governor of Mecca, or Shereef, in which he impugned the character of Said Abdullah, and said that he was responsible for the seduction of his wife, and thus he caused the dismissal of the plaintiff from a position worth to him at least £600 per annum in the direct emoluments and indirect gifts associated with the high position he held. Many of the Moslems who were there at the time took this very much to heart, and made strong appeals to get the plaintiff replaced, but without success. Plaintiff had not been able to procure the letter actually written by the defendant to the Shereef. He was able to produce secondary evidence as to its contents, and defendant boasted in Cape Town of having sent a letter or letters to Mecca which would secure the dismissal of the plaintiff. The Moslem world of Cape Town was very much affected by this case. They had made a protest to His Majesty's Government through their representative at Constantinople for the reinstatement of the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed £3,000 damages, measured by the injury which had been done to him. The defendant denied altogether having slandered the plaintiff. He admitted responsibility in regard to Hadeje, but said that the balance due to the plaintiff was only £49. The defendant claimed in reconvention £250 as damages in consequence of the plaintiff having caused his arrest, and he also claimed £100, which the said Amina had deposited for him with plaintiff, and of which no account had been rendered.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.), for plaintiff. Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) for defendant.

Hadje A. Soeker, a cab proprietor, said he had lived a long time in Cape Colony, and was formerly in Cape Town. He had known defendant for many years. Witness had been at Mecca, but had had Omar as a guide, not plaintiff. The last Malay fast time was between December 13 and January 12, and during that month witness was standing at the corner of Wale and Adderley-streets with another man named Lani, when defendant came up and asked witness if he was keeping any meeting. Witness asked, "What for?" and defendant said, "About the Said." At that time a petition was being prepared in regard to the plaintiff's reinstatement for sending through the Government of this colony to the Turkish Government. Witness said to defendant, "What about the Said?" and defendant replied, "Well, I hear all the Cape Town people want to sign a petition to send him away; I would like to see the whole community of Malays put that man away. I was the man who wrote many letters to the Shereef, and I was the man who took him (meaning plaintiff) out of Mecca." Witness asked defendant why he did that, and defendant said plaintiff was a bad man, and both he and his son had had improper relations with his (defendant's) wife. Witness told defendant that he ought to be ashamed of himself for saying such words as those. The other man, Lani, then pulled witness away, as he was getting angry.

The point as to whether secondary evidence as to the letter alleged to have been written by defendant to the Shereef could be taken was raised.

Mr. Schreiner submitted that evidence of the defendant's admission that he had written such a letter could be taken. As regarded the non-production of the letter, it was hopeless for them to attempt to get it, as the Shereef who received it was in a foreign jurisdiction.

Mr. Searle said the defendant admitted writing a letter, but they had got witnesses who actually saw the letter, and who would say that it was not a letter of the nature alleged at all, and did not in the least accuse plaintiff of immorality.

[The Chief Justice: Mr. Schreiner contends that the production of the letter would be dispensed with upon evidence being given to the effect that defendant himself admitted to divers witnesses that he had written such a letter.]

Mr. Searle said he was not aware of any authority which went to that extent.

[The Chief Justice: The point is whether we can accept any secondary evidence.]

Mr. Schreiner quoted R. v. Watson (2 Stark, 129), and Judson v. Hudson and Morgan (7 A. and E., 233 n), to show that where a defendant had admitted that he was the author of a book containing a libel, it was held that that was sufficient to entitle the prosecutor to put in the book. That showed that the defendant's admission was admissible as evidence. Then, if once they admitted his evidence, they had the defendant stating that he was the man who drove plaintiff out of Mecca, and counsel submitted that the fact that it was in consequence of the letters that he wrote, was more than was necessary for the purposes of this declaration.

[The Chief Justice said that it did not cease to become secondary evidence because the defendant stated the contents of the letter.]

Mr. Schreiner said it did not cease to be secondary evidence, but it was the very best they could produce. As to the non-production of the letter, counsel submitted that proof of the refusal to produce was really not necessary under the circumstances of the case. The Governor of Mecca, in whose possession the letter was, was beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, and it was quite impossible for plaintiff to go to Mecca and ask the Governor for the letter.

[The Chief Justice: It would have been quite possible to ask the Governor for the letter, and get his refusal.]

Mr. Schreiner said they had the defendant's own admission, and he submitted that they could have nothing better.

[The Chief Justice: But it remains secondary evidence.]

Mr. Schreiner said he did not deny that it was secondary evidence, but he submitted that, in the nature of the case, it was the best evidence they could produce.

[The Chief Justice: The best evidence is the production of the document, and we cannot allow secondary evidence unless you can show that the document cannot be found, or that the person in whose possession it is will not give it up.]

Mr. Schreiner said he could not take the matter further than that.

[The Chief Justice: Then I am afraid we cannot take this secondary evidence, even by way of admission.]

In reply to a question, Mr. Schreiner said that the witness was not one of the persons alleged in the declaration to have heard the slanders, and therefore he did not put forward that witness's evidence as evidence upon which they could claim damages, but only as corroborative of the mental attitude of the defendant, and that he had considerable evidence of very respectable Citizens of Cape Town, who, after the dismissal of the plaintiff from his position of Pilgrims' Guide, waited upon the Shereef, and asked the reason why he was dismissed, and received in reply a certain admission.

[The Chief Justice said he was afraid that point could not now be raised.]

Mr. Searle said he was just about to raise the point that after the decision of the Court in regard to evidence as to the letter, no evidence could now be given to show that plaintiff was dismissed through anything that the defendant had done. Then the case would be reduced to the allegations of slander and the question of account, and it would shorten the evidence.

[The Chief Justice said that what the Shereef said to these people who went to see him could not be taken as evidence.]

The hearing of the case was then proceeded with, and Hadje Lani was called and corroborated Soeker's evidence as to defendant using the words mentioned by that witness. Lani had been in Mecca, and plaintiff had been his guide, and witness knew him thoroughly as a good and virtuous man.

Hadje Aragmat said that last fast-time he met defendant on the Parade, and defendant asked him what he did going to the house of a dirty or bad fellow like the plaintiff, and on witness asking what he complained about, defendant said that plaintiff and his son had had improper relations with his (defendant's) wife Amina. Witness said he did not believe that.

Cross-examined: Witness had heard that defendant had divorced his wife Amina on the ground of her adultery with one Izak.

Hadje Abdul Rajiet said he had a conversation with defendant in Hanover-street during fast-time. Defendant asked witness if it was long since he had been to the Said, and witness said, "You are speaking of the Said; why don't you go?" to which defendant answered that he could not go to a man who had had improper relations with his wife. Witness had himself been to Mecca, and knew the Said there as a man who was much honoured and respected.

Hadje Joseph corroborated the evidence of the last witness.

Imaum Jamodien said he was in Mecca at the time of plaintiff's dismissal. There were then a considerable number of Cape Malays there who were very dissatisfied with plaintiff's dismissal, and they got up a petition to have him reinstated.

Said Abdullah Aliwe said he was the plaintiff in this case. With two short breaks he was for 27 years pilgrims' guide at Mecca. He was called Said by right of birth, and was descended from the Prophet. He was also a priest of the Temple of Abraham at Mecca. His father had been chief guide. Witness had kept a large establishment where pilgrims came to rest. Witness's means of livelihood were his positions as pilgrims' guide and priest, principally as pilgrims' guide. He was no longer a guide, having been dismissed from that position about a year and a half ago in consequence of a letter.

[The Chief Justice ruled that the letter could not be read.]

After his dismissal he came to the Cape for the purpose of bringing an action against defendant owing to the letters he had written. Since his arrival here witness had been to various places. He was staying at Hendricks's home in Cape Town. Nine years ago defendant came to Mecca, and placed his wife Hadija with him. From that time onwards for eight years she was in witness's house, and then she came back to the Cape and joined her husband. The latter had from time to time paid witness money, but there was still an amount owing. Witness charged £15 a year for board, lodging, clothing, and some other expenses of the woman. The balance still due by defendant was £61. Defendant's wife Amina came to witness's place about four or five years ago. She did not come with defendant. She brought £100, which she put into witness's hands. He paid that £100 back to her from time to time as she wanted it, and when she returned to the Cape about two years ago there was about £40 remaining, which he gave to her, so that now witness owed defendant nothing of that £100. Before she went away witness knew nothing of any misconduct on her part. Abdullah, who came to witness's place as defendant's agent, made some complaint while he was there as to a man Mahomet Izak, who now resided at Wynberg. Abdullah alleged misconduct on the part of Izak and Amina. That same night witness made inquiries, and Amina, in the presence of Izak and Abdullah, denied any misconduct. Witness absolutely denied having had any improper relations with Amina.

[By the Court: No one ever charged witness's son, before Amina left, with having miscondacted himself with Amina.]

Witness's income from his position as pilgrims' guide was £600 a year, and living at Mecca was much cheaper than in Cape Town. Witness had nothing he could turn his hand to other than being a guide and a priest.

Cross-examined: Witness came here about seven months ago. He was still a priest in Mecca, but did not get much money from that. He had two houses in Mecca, the one he lived in and the other had been used for the accommodation of the pilgrims. They were large houses. With regard to the account for Hadija, witness had only sent the one account, and that showed a balance of £49.

[The Chief Justice pointed out eight years' maintenance, etc., was sued for, and the account was for seven years.]

Mr. Searle said then the point was how long she was there, and he would lead evidence to show that she was only there seven years.

The Chief Justice said that the difference of one year at £15 was very small.

Mr. Searle said that of course if she had the year they were ready to pay for it.

Continuing, witness said that Amina came there with £150 and a letter from defendant, which simply asked witness to receive Amina with £150. Amina gave witness £100 only, and retained £50 in her own possession, and that £100 had been repaid to Amina in different sums from time to time.

[The Chief Justice: I don't understand. Hadija in eight years did only spend £123, and Amina in two years spent £150.]

Amina had a child with her, and they were rich, and had to have a doctor and one thing and another.

He never received another £40 before Amina went away.

Mr. Searle read a letter from witness, in which he acknowledged receiving from defendant, through another man, a sum of £35, and having a balance of £27 of that money still in his hands.

Witness said that the money that man brought Amina took, but he wrote the letter acknowledging receipt. Witness got none of the money. That was about the end of 1899. Witness admitted that after the statement made by Abdullah regarding the conduct of Amina and Izak, he wrote to defendant as follows: "Should you hear anything against the character of your wife Amina, you must disbelieve it, as people intend to cast reflection on the character of your wife. It is back-biters from Cape Town. As God says, back-biters are worse than murderers. Therefore disbelieve them."

Re-examined: Witness was still a priest, but did not hold the same position of honour that he previously held. In regard to Amina and Abdullah, witness at the time believed the allegations made were merely back-bitings.

Mr. Schreiner closed the case for the plaintiff.

Mr. Searle called

Abdul Hardie, the defendant in the case, who said that he never said to the persons who had been called by the plaintiff that the plaintiff had had improper relations with his (defendant's) wife Amina. Witness never spoke to Soeker about the plaintiff. Soeker just wanted to ruin witness. Witness could not speak Dutch at all, but spoke a little English. He came here from Kimberley in 1883, and eight years ago went to Mecca, where he stayed six months. He took Hadija with him, and left her there, where she remained for eight years. The account showing a balance of £49 still due to the plaintiff was brought back from Mecca by Hadija. Witness had received no other account from the plaintiff. Witness sent with Amina £150, and afterwards sent another £40. He had had no account of the £100 from plaintiff. He was willing that the £49 or £61 should be deducted from that £100. Witness had never spoken to Abdol Aragmat about the plaintiff. He had not spoken to that man for over three years. Two years ago Abdol Lani had beaten him, and he had never spoken to him since. He was on bad terms with them. He had never spoken to Joseph or Lani about the plaintiff. Witness had never made a charge to anyone that the plaintiff had had improper relations with his wife. The day after his wife Amina arrived from Mecca witness divorced her before the priest. Five months after her arrival she gave birth to a child. When witness was summoned for £61, he never told anyone that he was about to leave the country, nor did he take any steps to do so. Witness owned a number of valuable houses in Cape Town, and was worth about £1,500, after deducting his liabilities. He was arrested at plaintiff's instance, and taken to gaol, where he was kept five days. He had to give security to the amount of £3,500, and after five days he made some arrangements with friends, and found the necessary security. Three persons accompanied him to the gates of the gaol. They were not friends of his, but his enemies. Witness was arrested in the office of his attorney.

Cross-examined by Sir Henry Juta: The women witness married in Cape Town were Cape Malay women. Witness spoke English to them.

Witness could not speak English very well. Witness had two wives, both of whom knew English when he married them. Witness had no servants. He had been in Cape Town for about eight years. Previous to that he was in Kimberley for about 8 years. Witness used to converse with Malay friends. He spoke to them in English. Witness remembered seeing a report in the newspaper about a petition being got up. He had talked about it with friends. He did not speak to three Malays (named by Sir Henry Juta) about this. Witness heard Soeker give evidence. There was no truth in what Soeker said. He never told any of the witnesses that his wife had been misled in plaintiff's house. When the Malays were getting up the petition, witness did not believe that his wife had had improper relations with the plaintiff. Since he sent the demand for £100 to an agent in Mecca, twenty-one months ago, witness had made no further demand. Plaintiff never gave witness an acknowledgment in writing that he owed witness money. Witness had made an affidavit in the case of his arrest, and he had stated that he had a claim against plaintiff for £100 on an acknowledgment of debt signed by him. His agent used to write witness that plaintiff owed him £100. Witness had not told anyone that he was going to leave for Mecca, and that in regard to the case plaintiff could do what he liked. At the time he got the summons he spoke with certain people mentioned, but he never said he wanted to go to Mecca. Before the plaintiff summoned him, it was always in his mind to go to Mecca.

Re-examined: It was not in his mind to go to Mecca when he was summoned. He never had the acknowledgment of debt from plaintiff; he had only heard from his agent in Mecca that plaintiff had given one.

[By the Court: Witness was born at a place near Mecca.]

Hadje Abdullah Jamat said he knew plaintiff and defendant. Witness was in Mecca, and occupied a room in plaintiff's house there while Amina was in the house. Witness had witnessed improper relations between Amina and Mahomat Isak. After witness had told plaintiff that, Amina and Isak remained four months in plaintiff's house, and continued to misconduct themselves. Witness, Amina, and Izak returned by the same steamer.

Cross-examined: After witness reported Amina's misconduct to plaintiff, the latter called them all together in one room to make inquiries. None of the men then present said that it was just that witness was jealous. He had never witnessed any misconduct, except on the one occasion. The plaintiff did not believe what witness said. A week or two after the first occasion Amina removed to another room in the plaintiff's house, and lived with Izak as his wife.

Hadija, wife of the defendant, said eight years ago she went to live at Mecca. At the time of her marriage she was not a Mahomedan, but a Christian, and was sent to Mecca in order to learn the tenets of the Moslem religion. Plaintiff had charge of witness at Mecca, and she lived in his house. She had seen Amina and Izak occupying one room together in the plaintiff's house. Plaintiff knew that.

Mr. Schreiner said that all this evidence was no justification.

The Chief Justice said that was so.

Proceeding, witness deposed that when she returned to Cape Town she brought with her a letter and the account produced.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for plaintiff): It would seem that all the witnesses we have put into the box are unfriendly to the defendant. It may be possible that mistakes may have arisen as to what was said months ago. But that is not defendant's case. He implies that this is a question of deliberate lying. Is it likely that the Said would come from Mecca unless he had a good case? Is it going too far for Abdol to say that he never made any statements against the Said? The plaintiff said that he did not understand Dutch, his wife does not understand Arabic, and clearly does not understand English. Plaintiff's story is clearly correct, the charges against the Said are false, and I ask for exemplary damages, and not merely for damages commensurate with the mere loss sustained. The defendant admits that he did not take the initiative, and sue the Said for what he claims in reconvention. Why not? Because he knew perfectly well that he could not sustain such a case. As to the arrest of the defendant, the question is whether he intended to leave the country. Surely, it could not be said that defendant was free, thus to evade an order of Court. In point of fact, the Court confirmed the arrest, though they subsequently reduced the bail.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendant): In the first place we have to deal with the question of defamation. What then was said by defendant in December, and what damage has resulted to plaintiff therefrom. The Said was here in August, and in December, and we have only to do with what was said then. The scandal was well known amongst the whole Mohammedan community. Amina was divorced in August, 1900, and it seems clear that the misconduct which led to that divorce occurred in the Said's house at Mecca, and that the Said knew that Mahomet (the Said's son) and Amina lived together in the Said's house for some months. The accusing of the Said must have been a mistake, as to accuse him would be absurd. It was not till after this that the Said issued summons. That summons might have supplied a motive for making the charge against the Said, but no such motive existed in December, when the charge was, in point of fact, made. Defendant does not speak Dutch well, and he may have said that "Amina was defiled by the Said," meaning, "in the Said's house." The Said still stands as high in the estimation of the Mohammedan community as ever. Plaintiff had withdrawn his summons, and had arrested defendant on the ground that he was in meditatione fugae, and he was bailed for £3,500. This was reduced by the Court to £500. It is true that the law allows a man to obtain civil imprisonment in a civil matter, but if a man has property in this country he should not be called upon for security. Here, indeed, there was malice, but not on our part. As to the damages, damages for £3,000 have seldom or never been granted in this Court. As to the claim in reconvention, Amina took £150 to plaintiff, and there is a further sum of £35 (Hadija said £40), and this Amina never received. Nor has he accounted for the balance of £85, which was given to Amina. As to the slander, plaintiff has received no damage. As to the malicious arrest, defendant had property here, and should not have been arrested. I quite admit that the words used were slanderous. As to the question of damages, it is for the jury on taking a broad view, and to consider who was the injured party.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): We do not plead justification. The evidence of Amina could not carry the case any further. The Said did all he could do. He called his people together and made inquiries. The whole question in issue is, more or less, one of damages. Amina had been left by defendant under plaintiff's roof. Would she have stayed there had she found the place to be an improper house. Surely, if she were living with a man in the same room in a place dedicated to religious uses the Moham-madan community would have taken cognisance of the fact. As to the arrest, it is said that we should have arrested defendant's property, but this property is bonded.

De Villiers C.J. summed up, saying that the jury must dismiss the first claim for libel altogether from their minds, in view of the Court's decision in regard to the letter. As to the other claims, His Lordship reviewed the evidence, and pointed out that it was mainly a question of the credibility of the witnesses.

After retiring for a few minutes, the jury returned with a verdict for the plaintiff of £200 on the second claim, that in connection with the slanders uttered by the defendant in Cape Town, and on the third claim (balance of account for Hadeje's board) for the amount asked, viz., £61. On the claim in reconvention for illegal and malicious arrest, the jury found for Hardie for £200, and for the full amount of the other claim, viz., £100.

Mr. Schreiner moved that judgment be entered accordingly.

After hearing counsel on the question of costs, the Court entered judgment as follows: Judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of £261 with costs in convention, one-half of counsel's fees to be taken in these costs, and in the claim in reconvention, judgment for the defendant (now plaintiff), for £200 with costs in reconvention, the other half of counsel's fees to be taken in such costs.

SECOND DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAAS-DORP.]

KENNEDY V. GLUTSON { 1902.
BROTHERS. { May 6th.

Mr. Close applied for a commission to take the evidence of plaintiff at Bulawayo.

Granted, Mr. Sheppard being appointed commissioner.

SCHIFFMAN V. CARELSE.

Lease—Specific Performance—Damages—Ignorance.

Where the defendant had failed to fulfil a certain contract of lease entered into with the plaintiff, and had in violation thereof let the premises which were the subject of the said contract to another tenant; damages were awarded to plaintiff, and defendant was ordered to give plaintiff possession of the premises within twenty-five days.

Semble, The Court will set aside a written lease on the ground of fraud, if it can be clearly shown that one of the parties thereto being a man of defective education was deceived as to the contents of the lease he had signed, even though he might be able to read it.

This was an action brought by Morris Schiffman against Carel Carelse, for an order on defendant to carry out a certain contract, and to give possession of certain premises, and for damages and costs. The declaration stated that plaintiff was a shopkeeper at Wynberg, and the defendant a landed proprietor. An agreement (annexed) was entered into between the parties on the 29th May, 1901, whereby plaintiff agreed to rent a shop in Ottery-road, Wynberg, for two years (with option of renewal for a period of years) commencing 1st November, 1901. By this lease plaintiff had the right to sub-let, and to renew for a term of years, subject to three months' notice being given. Since the agreement was entered into, defendant had repudiated the agreement, and refused to give possession. Plaintiff had always been ready and willing to carry out his part of the contract. In his plea, the defendant said that on some date previous to the lease being entered into, there was a verbal contract of lease whereby defendant agreed to let the property subject to a special condition that the lease should be determined forthwith in the event of defendant selling the property. Before affixing his mark to the written agreement, he was informed by one De Beer, a law agent, that it contained this condition. He was unable to read or write. He claimed an order declaring the agreement null and void. In his replication the plaintiff denied that there was any such agreement as stated in the plea, and said that defendant fully understood the terms of the written agreement which was read over to him before he signed.

Mr. Close, for plaintiff; Mr. Benjamin, for defendant.

Morris Schiffman said he was the plaintiff. He carried on business as a tailor in Hall-road, Wynberg. Defendant owned a house and shop in Ottery-road. Before May of last year defendant, who was a customer, told him he had a shop to let in Ottery-road. Witness asked what the rent would be, and defendant said he would charge £4 10s., the same as the old tenant paid. Witness offered to take the premises for a grocery business for five years. Defendant said he would take time to consider whether he would let the place for five years. Subsequently Carelse told him he could have the shop for two years, and that he could have good terms for five years afterwards. Witness asked him for a written agreement. Defendant told him to write one, and witness said he would see Mr. De Beer, a law agent of Wynberg. Witness went to see the latter, who said he would require to see Carelse and witness together. This was at the beginning of May. Afterwards witness and defendant went to the office of Mr. De Beer, and saw the proposed agreement. Carelse said he would show the agreement to his wife. Witness believed he took a copy of the document away. Some time afterwards Carelse and witness went again to the office, and Mr. De Beer read the document over, both in English and Dutch. Witness did not understand Dutch. Mr. De Beer explained the terms of the agreement as he read. On the first occasion when Carelse went to the office, witness believed De Beer read the agreement. Before the agreement was signed, there was a discussion as to the clause giving witness power to renew. Witness wanted the right to renew for four years; defendant wanted the period to be two years. He said he would give a good further term. The following clause was inserted: The lessee shall have the right to continue this lease for another period of years, provided that three months' notice in writing be given to the lessor.

[His Lordship said that it might be that this clause for an indefinite term would be void. That, however, would not arise in the present case. It could be argued if plaintiff sought to enforce the clause.]

Witness, continuing, said that in August he saw defendant, who told him that the old tenant had offered him £5 10s. a month. Witness refused to pay an increased amount of £5 10s. Defendant's son was present. Witness said he would stick to the writing. Correspondence ensued between the attorneys. On the 22nd August defendant, through his attorney, repudiated the written agreement, saying that his mark had been improperly obtained. He denied that the document was drawn in accordance with his instructions. In December defendant wrote stating that one of the conditions upon which the lease was entered into was that plaintiff should give up possession if defendant sold the shop. Witness offered in December to take the shop for two years, with the right to renew for two years. Witness claimed £200 damages. Witness arranged for his wife to take charge of the business. Witness had been put to a considerable amount of trouble and inconvenience. Witness's assistant, Abramowitz, was present at the interview between witness, the defendant, and the defendant's son.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness did not tell defendant that he wanted to buy the place. Before the lease was signed witness did not have a conversation with Mrs. Carelse. The latter spoke to him when he went to see the premises. She said she was pleased that witness was going to have the place. She did not say to witness, "You can have the lease, but if my husband wants to sell the place at any time, he must be able to break the lease." Witness could not read. Defendant would not agree to a right of renewal for four years. He said that when the first two years expired, and if witness was a good tenant, he would, on three months' notice, "surely give him another two years." Defendant signed the agreement at the same time as witness did. Witness believed they both used the same pen and the same ink.

Mr. Benjamin (handing the document to witness): You see it is different ink, and it seems to have been signed at different times.

Witness never offered Mr. Brady to cancel the lease. Witness went to Mr. Brady's office with Carelse. He (witness) told Mr. Brady that Carelse had told him he wanted to settle the case, and that he (Carelse) was prepared to let him have the premises. Carelse, however, wanted witness to pay the costs, but witness refused, and left the office. Witness did not say he was willing to cancel the agreement and pay costs, and Mr. Brady did not say, "I cannot consider this matter because you must have your own lawyer."

Mr. De Beer, law agent, Wynberg, gave evidence corroborating the plaintiff's statements in certain particulars. Witness understood that there should be a renewal for a reasonable number of years.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: Witness carefully read over the agreement to the parties, and explained it clause by clause.

By the Court: Witness never heard of any condition as to the lease being determined if defendant sold the shop. There could not have been any misunderstanding.

Wm. B. Wheatly, clerk to Mr. De Beer, said he was in the room adjoining that in which the parties discussed the agreement before signing. Witness heard the agreement read and explained. He heard nothing about a condition as to determining the lease if defendant sold the premises. It was understood that the term of renewal would be similar to the period of the original lease.

Louis Abramowitz, an assistant employed by plaintiff, deposed to the conversation between plaintiff and defendant in August. Defendant wanted plaintiff to pay £1 a month more than agreed, saying the old tenant—a Chinaman—had offered £5 10s. a month. Carelse, his son, and plaintiff were present.

Mr. Close closed his case.

Mr. Benjamin called

Carel Carelse, the defendant, a coloured man, who said that plaintiff had asked him what he wanted for the place. Witness told him he wanted £1,000. Afterwards he offered witness £800. Witness refused. He asked witness if he could hire the shop. He kept on asking witness this. Witness told him that if the place was sold the lease would have to be broken. He said this because there were so many offers for the place. Witness told plaintiff that before he could have a lease he (witness) would have to get instructions from his wife. Witness subsequently agreed to give plaintiff a lease for two years, stipulating that if he sold in the meantime the lease should be broken. Witness signed the lease produced. He did not hear it read. He only saw it on the occasion he signed. Witness asked Mr. De Beer if it was all right. Witness was only at De Beers office once. Witness gave the Chinaman (his former tenant) notice to leave in August. Afterwards witness showed a copy of the agreement to Mr. Brady, who wrote the letters put in. After the case was commenced, plaintiff came to him and said he wanted to settle the case. He did not want to go into court, but Mr. De Beer said he would not. Subsequently to this witness and plaintiff came to the office of Mr. Brady, and that gentleman said plaintiff said he wanted to "cancel the case," and Mr. Brady said he would have to pay costs. Mr. Brady said that plaintiff should see his lawyer.

Cross-examined by Mr. Close: Mr. De Beer did not read the paper to witness; he never explained it.

Elizabeth Carelse, wife of the defendant, said that she told plaintiff that her husband must be able to break the lease if he sold the property. Afterwards plaintiff said he would settle the case, as he did not want to bring it before the Court.

After hearing Mr. Benjamin in argument, the Court gave judgment for plaintiff for £35 damages and costs, and ordered possession of the premises to be given to plaintiff on or before the 31st May.

Mr. Clooe was not called on.

Maasdorp, J.: The plaintiff in this case claims the specific performance of a contract of lease, and also claims damages for the delay on the part of the defendant in putting him in possession. It is alleged that according to the agreement of lease, the plaintiff should have received possession of the premises on the 1st November, but he has not received possession up to the present. In respect of that delay, he claims damages. Now the written lease has been put in, which seems to be properly executed, and signed by the two parties in proper form; and, under ordinary circumstances, if nothing further appeared this written lease would be binding upon the defendant, and he would have to conform to the conditions which it contains. Defendant, however, sets up the defence that he was never a consenting party to this written lease, for the reasons that he never properly understood the conditions of this document, and really signed it without knowing what it contained. Now, such a defence would only avail a person who is unable to read a written document placed before him for signature, or a man of such little education that he might be deceived as to the contents of a document, even though he might be able to read it. Under such circumstances the Court might give some redress to a person entering into an agreement under such conditions. The defendant says he entered into this contract upon the assurance of the plaintiff's agent that this document was "all right"; that is to say, upon the assurance that it contained all the conditions that he (defendant) had said should form part of the agreement, and consequently he sets up this statement on the part of the plaintiff's agent as an allegation of a falsehood, and a fraud on the part of the agent. It really amounts to this: That the plaintiff's agent led the defendant to believe that the document which was placed before him contained all the conditions that he had agreed upon; whereas the plaintiff's agent very well knew it did not contain these conditions. In short, it amounts to an allegation of fraud, and if he succeeded in proving that, I think the Court would have relieved him from the performance of this condition. I may state briefly that I have no doubt that the evidence given by the plaintiff's witnesses is in every respect correct, and that I am quite prepared to accept their credibility and the veracity of their statements, and when I do that, I find that it was proved that this document was not only read over once to the defendant, but that he, on an occasion before the actual execution of that document, had received a copy of it, which is produced in court to-day, and which he had taken home with him, and discussed with his wife; that the contents of that document were explained to him, and that when the parties met again to sign the document, the terms were perfectly clear to him. The defendant says that this document ought to have contained a condition that the lease should be cancelled upon the sale of the property by him to another person. Well, it appears quite clear from what has been said that it never was intended that there should be such a condition, and that such a condition was never mentioned by defendant himself, or any other person. Reference has been made to the last part of the agreement, from which it appears that an option is given to plaintiff for the renewal of the lease. I may state that I only find now that that clause, as it stands, was fully understood by the parties, and that they agreed that it should be one of the conditions of this contract. What the effect of it may hereafter be found to be, it is not for me now to say. I will not construe the meaning of that clause now. If at any future time notice is served by plaintiff upon defendant that he claims the renewal of the lease under that section, then the parties will have to consider what action they will take in the matter, if they cannot come to some agreement. When that time arrives, then it may be necessary to construe that clause; but at present it is not necessary to do so. I merely find that it was agreed by the parties that it should form part of the lease. Under this lease defendant should have given possession on the 1st November. He has kept plaintiff out of possession for something over six months. He was very well aware at the time that the premises were required for the purpose of carrying on a business similar to that which is now carried on by the present lessee, and it must therefore be taken that it was in his contemplation that, if he did not give possession, then damages should be assessed upon the value of the premises to the plaintiff, as premises in which such business was to be carried on.

At this point His Lordship asked Mr. Close if he wished to argue as to the amount of damages. He (the learned Judge) thought that the plaintiff's claim of £15 a month was excessive. He thought that if judgment were given on the basis of a loss of £5 a month, it would be fair.

Mr. Close said he was prepared to accept this.

His Lordship (continuing) said: The plaintiff is entitled to damages for having been kept out of this place from the 1st November, and so been prevented from making a profit out of the business which he intended carrying on there, and which defendant knew he intended to carry on. Plaintiff himself has stated that on this he might have made a profit of £15 a month. It is quite possible he might, but I am not quite satisfied that he would have made such a profit. Under the circumstances, I think he should receive some damages, and I am quite sure he would have made some profit, and if I fix that at £5 a month, I think it would be a fair valuation of the damages.

Mr. Benjamin, in answer to the Court, said that defendant would prefer not to give possession forthwith, but to be able to give a month's notice to the present tenant.

His Lordship thereupon made an order on defendant to give up possession of the premises to the plaintiff on the 31st May, and to pay plaintiff £35 damages and costs.

STANFORD V. WILLIAMS { 1902.
AND OTHERS. { May 7th.

This was an action brought by Mr. H. F. Stanford against eight commissioned officers in His Majesty's Army, in which the plaintiff claimed damages measured at £3,000, for which he alleged the defendants were jointly and severally liable, for an assault committed upon him as alleged in his declaration. The occasion was a dance on the 24th December last at Mount Nelson Hotel, at which the plaintiff was present, and at which it was acknowledged he took a great part. It was really a military dance.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington), for the plaintiff; Mr. Searle, for the defendants.

Mr. Searle said that in view of an understanding which had been arrived at, the details, which might introduce controversial matter, should not be gone into.

Mr. Schreiner said he did not wish to go into such details, and he was anxious to abide by the spirit of the understanding which had been arrived at. Proceeding, Mr. Schreiner said that after the dance the circumstances took place on the night of the 24th and morning of the 25th December which were complained of in this action, and for which £3,000 damages were claimed. Upon the pleadings as filed there was an admission of legal tort, and a tender of £25 damages, with costs, and there was an allegation of extenuating circumstances, but that also he did not wish to go into. The case was originally set down for trial on March 10, but owing to military exigencies a postponement was obtained until to-day (Wednesday). A further application for postponement had been made, but his lordship having intimated that the case must come on to-day, the Court declined to grant the further postponement. These were the circumstances under which the jury would have been asked to try the case, but at the last moment an arrangement had been made by which the case could be settled, and by which he understood it was to be settled. It had not yet been drawn up, but the basis of the consent paper had been absolutely settled, and he would ask his lordship either to direct the jury to return a verdict in accordance with that arrangement or to withdraw a juror and enter judgment in accordance with the terms of the arrangement. Counsel further stated that three of the defendants were here, but the other five could not be present. The three who were here would sign the consent paper, and it would be signed by the defendants' attorneys on their behalf, and would also be signed by the attorneys for the plaintiff. The terms of the consent paper were as follows: "The defendants hereby express their sincere regret at their conduct towards plaintiff on the 24th and 25th December, and acknowledge that their said conduct was wrong and unjustifiable, and consent to judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of £1,500 and costs."

Mr. Searle, on behalf of defendants, consented to judgment being entered in terms of the above consent paper.

De Villiers, C.J., said it was not necessary to trouble the jury, and he would withdraw a juror. His lordship then entered judgment by consent for £1,500 and costs against the defendants jointly and severally, in terms of the consent paper produced to the Registrar.

GRANT V. GRANT. } 1902.
} May 7th

This was an action for restitution of conjugal rights, failing which, for divorce. The parties were married in community of property at Cape Town, and there were three children of the marriage, of whom two were still living—a boy of eleven and a girl of six. Plaintiff claimed an order for restitution, with forfeiture by defendant of benefits, and custody of the two children. She also claimed £5 per month as maintenance.

Mr. Close, for plaintiff; defendant in default.

Mr. Close called the plaintiff, who said that she was married to the defendant in community of property in December, 1881, at the Presbyterian Church, Cape Town. Since 1892 the defendant had failed to support her, and they both went to live with her mother, who supplied the defendant with money, food, and clothing. In 1896 he had to leave Cape Town, and he went to Port Elizabeth. She had seen him since then, but not to speak to. He had been lodging at the Salvation Army Home.

His Lordship made an order calling upon the defendant to make restitution on or before May 31, failing which to show cause on June 12 why a decree of divorce should not be granted, with custody to plaintiff of the children and forfeiture by defendant of benefits of marriage in community.

Postea, June 19th, the rule was made absolute.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAAS-DORP and a Jury.]

DAVIES V. THE MUNICIPALITY OF WOODSTOCK. } 1902.
} May 9th.

Municipality - Negligence - Damages.

This was an action for damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant Municipality or its servants.

The plaintiff (Mrs. Davies), a widow, living at Woodstock, sued the Woodstock Municipality for £500 damages for injuries which she sustained while walking down a road within the Municipality. She was walking along the pavement, when she tripped over an iron surface box, which had been let in to the pavement, but which protruded about 2½ inches above the surface of the pavement. Through her fall plaintiff sustained severe injuries. While she was in robust health before the accident, since then, through the injuries she had sustained, she was in very poor health. The surface box in question was placed in that roadway or footpath by the servants of the defendant Municipality.

Mr. C. W. de Villiers, for plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Alexander), for the defendant Municipality.

Sir Henry Juta said that he did not know whether it would shorten the evidence, but he was quite willing to admit that both the footpath and the surface box were under the control of the Municipality. It appeared that before the Woodstock Municipality or any other municipality took over these waterworks there was a waterworks company which ran mains through Woodstock, and there were connections from the mains to the houses. This place where the accident occurred was one of those ordinary places where they turned off the stopcock. In broad language, they took the responsibility for that surface box, and if there was any negligence in connection with it they took the responsibility.

Mr. De Villiers called

Mrs. Dinah Ann Davies, the plaintiff, who said that on October 14 last, about 10 a.m., she was walking down Albert-road, Woodstock, on her way to the station, when she fell. After she fell she looked back and saw this surface box. It was a dreadful fall, and she sustained severe injuries. There was a shop in the neighbourhood, and she went into it, and remained for some time. Afterwards she went to Sloan, the chemist, at whose shop her head was bandaged. She felt very ill, and could not go home at once. After dark, about seven or eight o'clock, her son helped her home. There she remained eight or nine days in bed. She was not well after that, and was not well yet. Before the accident she was in robust health, and could do lots of work. She had, before that accident, kept three boarders, and did all the work in the house herself. She was attended on the night of the accident by Dr. Hewat's assistant. He attended her twice, and then a fortnight or three weeks after the accident she saw Dr. Hewat. She found there had been certain internal injuries, and it was about that that she saw Dr. Hewat, who told her to go home and go to bed. She could not say how much the doctors' bills came to, but she thought about £3 or £4 altogether. Her leg was still bad, and she was suffering in other respects as well. She had paid £4 or £5 for medicines. Acting under medical advice, she spent three weeks in the country, and that cost £10 or £20. She went to Diep River, where she put up at a boarding-house. She had not been able to attend to her housekeeping since her accident, and that had cost her £5 or £6 a month extra. She had also to give up keeping boarders, and she reckoned her loss on that at £6 a month. She had also done millinery and dyeing and curling feathers before the accident, and through being unable to carry on that, she had lost £3 or £4 a month. Besides that, before the accident her business was growing, and she believed she could have eventually made £20 a month. All that she had been compelled to give up; in fact, her health was completely shattered.

Cross-examined: She had lived in Woodstock over a year before the accident, and had often been down Albert-road, but always walked on the other side of the road. That morning she was walking on the side the surface box was on, because it was shady. She had never, to her knowledge, walked on that side before, but that morning she had been to see her son, who was employed at Sloan's, on the same side of the road. She did not notice other surface boxes sticking up in the footpath, and did not know that it was a common thing to see such boxes in Woodstock. The surface box in question could be seen from the other side of the road. If she had been looking for this box, she could have seen it. She did not walk in a tearing hurry, but she wanted to catch a train.

Re-examined: On her way to the station she would reach Sloan's before this spot where the accident happened.

Dr. John Hewat said he practised at Woodstock, and saw plaintiff at the end of October. He believed it was about a fortnight after the accident, but could not say of his own knowledge, as he was away from the Cape at the time of the accident. The plaintiff when he saw her had a black eye and a scratch on the side of the head. She also had an internal trouble, and suffered from nervousness. The internal trouble and the nervousness might have been caused by the fall.

Cross-examined: Witness had seen the surface box on Sunday. It was a pretty prominent object in the pavement. Any person looking where he was going must have seen the box. There were other boxes of the kind in Woodstock.

Alfred H. Wells deposed that on the morning of October 10 he was walking behind plaintiff, when she tripped over the surface box and fell heavily. He went to her assistance, and found that her eye was swollen. The surface box was about 2½ inches above the level of the pavement.

Cross-examined: There were several other surface boxes in the neighbourhood. It was a general condition in Woodstock for surface boxes to be sticking up above the level of the pavement. When witness went about, he looked out for that sort of thing.

By the Court: The other boxes in the neighbourhood did not project so much above the level of the ground as this one did. Nearly all the surface boxes in Woodstock were in bad condition.

John Robert Rutter deposed that he was a plumber and sanitary engineer, and at one time he was in the employ of the Woodstock Municipality. He had put in the surface box in question. He placed it, in accordance with the Municipal instructions, level with the pavement. The surface box now projected above the pavement, through the ground being worn away. It was in a dangerous condition.

By the Court: When witness put in the box the ground round about was level. After a time the gravel had worn away, and the box being the harder remained.

Examination continued: If a person was looking for the box he would see it, but a person was not supposed to go about looking for these boxes, which ought to be level with the ground.

Edward Jonathan Davies, a son of the plaintiff, put in photographs of the box in question, showing the projection above the ground.

Cross-examined: Witness had never noticed the box before the accident, but naturally, since then, he had looked at it every time he passed. The photographs were not taken at the same hour of the day as the accident happened.

Re-examined: The Sunday morning after the accident he saw the box about half-past ten, and it was then in the shade.

Henry Kirby, a staff quartermaster-sergeant in the Army Pay Corps, deposed that at the time of the accident he boarded at Mrs. Dayies's house. After the accident Mrs. Dayies was confined to bed for some time, and after she got up she still had two black eyes. The same day witness examined the box in question. He found that it projected above the pavement. It was situated 6 feet from the kerb and 2 feet from the walls on the other side of the path. The box was that day covered with dust, and was not easily seen.

Cross-examined: The box was a pretty prominent object. In Woodstock it was a pretty common thing to see such things, but a person did not always go about looking for such things, so as to avoid falling over them. Even with ordinary care a person might have fallen over the box on that day, because it was covered with dust.

William Davies, another son of the plaintiff, deposed that he was a partner with Mr. Sloan, chemist, at Woodstock. He saw his mother about an hour after the accident, and found she was suffering from injuries to the eyes, about the worst he had ever seen. She also complained of other injuries. Before the accident his mother was a very strong and active person, but since the accident she was a different woman altogether, very nervous, and could only walk with difficulty.

Cross-examined: Witness did not call in a doctor at once.

Re-examined: He took his mother to her own house that evening and immediately sent for a doctor.

This closed the case for the plaintiff.

Sir Henry Juta called

Frederick Barling, a baker, carrying on business in Albert-road, who deposed that he knew the surface box in question. It could be seen from a distance of about 100 feet each way, and in an ordinary way a person could see it.

William Henry Bond said he had noticed this particular box, which was one of the best there was in Woodstock, because it was on a footpath 8 feet wide.

while there were many on footpaths 4 feet 9 inches wide. The box was of a dark colour, set in red brick, while the road was a different colour. He had gone along the road at half-past ten in the morning, when the box was in the shade, and it could be seen 80 or 90 yards away.

[Maasdorp, J.: Do I understand you to say that there are many boxes worse than this in Woodstock?]

Witness: There are a great many boxes in Woodstock which project, which is due to the south-east wind coming on before the ground was perfectly consolidated. That made an obstacle in the way, but I do not think that with ordinary care a person would trip over it.

But why should you avoid it?—The same as you would avoid a piece of orange peel.

Now if it was properly laid, why should you avoid it?—There would not be any cause to avoid it then.

But these things are not meant to be avoided, but to be trodden on if necessary?—Yes.

Thomas Calmeyer, a builder, living at Salt River, said he knew the box in question. It could be seen a long way off, and there were worse places than that. No person walking along the street could possibly avoid seeing it. Witness had made experiments, and tried to trip over this box, but could not do so.

Cross-examined: He did not consider the box dangerous at all. No person taking ordinary care would trip over it.

Robert William Menmuir said that he had been Town Engineer of Woodstock for about nine months. He was well acquainted with the side-walks of Woodstock and the other Municipalities, including Cape Town, and everywhere there were the surface boxes. In Cape Town, between Castle Bridge and the Municipal stables, in Sir Lowry-road, he had counted sixteen such boxes projecting from 1 inch to 4½ inches above the level of the ground. It was one of the features known to the people living in Cape Town and the suburbs. The surface boxes were for turning on or shutting off the supply of water to houses, and there were usually one box to each block of houses. The south-east wind had a good deal to do with the condition of these boxes, blowing away the stuff from around them. If they had always to keep the paths level at these spots during the south-easter season, they would have to keep on always repairing them. The south-easters blew away the stuff as soon as it was put down. The box in question was a prominent object. There were other boxes in the locality which projected above the ground pretty well. If a person came down the road and did not look where he was going, he might go over the box. Witness did not think a person would do so if ordinary care was exercised.

Cross-examined by Mr. De Villiers: When you walk along the pavement, you are always looking where you are going?

Witness: Yes, or I should have suffered from a broken neck before this.

You have suffered?—No, I have not been here long enough.

Further cross-examined, witness said the box was in good and safe condition, although it stuck up above the level of the ground. If witness were putting in such a box he would undoubtedly put it in level with the ground.

Mr. De Villiers: Then how can you say this box is in proper condition?

Witness: You lose sight of the fact that it is the footpath that is worn away.

Then you say the box is all right, but the footpath is the delinquent in this case?—Yes.

[Maasdorp, J.: If the box is all right, what do you think of the footpath?]

Witness: It is wrong undoubtedly.

Mr. De Villiers: Is that box in a dangerous condition?

Witness: No, I don't say it is.

This is a public footpath, where people are supposed to pass along, and yet you would say that a box striking up beyond the level of the road is in a proper condition?—Yes. Continuing, witness said other boxes were in an even worse condition. They had not done anything to the box since the accident. The big surface box a little further along the road was in about the same condition.

Re-examined: The box was left in the same condition on purpose, so that it could not be said they had to repair it owing to its dangerous condition. There had been no other complaints in regard to this surface box. This was the only one he had heard of since he came here.

John Evans Jones, building inspector, Woodstock, also put in some photographs. He had taken these one morning, about half-past ten o'clock. The box in question was a prominent object. In his opinion any person exercising ordinary care in broad daylight could not avoid seeing the box.

Cross-examined: The photographs showed the shadow. They were only amateur's photographs.

John Carver said he had examined the surface box. It was a prominent object, and he did not think any person exercising ordinary care could avoid seeing it. Such boxes were common all over Woodstock. Some of the surface boxes in Cape Town were far worse than this one, which was one of the best in Woodstock.

After addresses by counsel and his lordship's direction to the jury, the latter retired, returning after an absence of twenty minutes, with a verdict for the plaintiff for £80.

Judgment for £80 with costs was then entered.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.).]

GENERAL MOTIONS.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. { 1902.
HILLS. { May 9th.

This was an application for an order authorising the Government to take over certain railway lines, in terms of the provisions of a certain contract.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., appeared for the Government; Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondent.

Mr. Searle applied for a postponement, in order to allow respondents to file an affidavit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicants): Unless strong ground is shown for a postponement, none should be granted. Mr. Walker has full power to act. For Hill's employees are in a turbulent condition and the military have been called out. We only ask for an order to enable us to take possession of the lines. They are Government lines and not concession lines.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for respondent): There is no necessity for the Colonial Government to come to the Court. If there is such excessive urgency they can take possession of the lines in the meantime.

The Court granted a postponement until Monday, and ordered respondent to file an affidavit before noon on Saturday; all engines, rolling-stock, and other railway materials belonging to the Government to be handed over to the Government Engineer in the meantime.

Commission—Raising Money on Loan.

There is no fixed rule that an agent who obtains a loan on mortgage is entitled to a commission of two and a-half per cent. from his principal.

The plaintiff, a commission agent, having been employed by the defendant to keep his books at a salary, obtained a loan for the defendant, at his request, of £6,000 on mortgage of landed property.

Held, that one per cent. was a sufficient commission.

This was an action in which plaintiff claimed a sum of money as balance of wages due for services rendered to the defendant, and also another sum as commission earned on raising a loan for defendant. Plaintiff alleged in his declaration that he agreed to keep the defendant's books for £10 per month, and that he had performed this service from the 1st July, 1900, to the 31st October, 1901—a period of sixteen months. Defendant had from time to time paid sums of money, amounting to £101 9s. 6d., in respect of these services, and he now claimed the balance of £58 10s. 6d. Plaintiff further alleged that, in or about the month of September, 1901, defendant desired to raise a loan for £6,000 and employed plaintiff as his agent to raise the loan, and agreed to pay plaintiff £150, being the usual $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission. Plaintiff raised the loan from the South African Association, and claimed £150. In his plea, defendant stated that he never agreed to pay £10 a month, or any other definite sum, but was willing to pay £3 a month. He had advanced plaintiff sums amounting to £101 9s. 6d., as loans. He never agreed to pay £150 for plaintiff's services in raising the loan, but agreed to pay a small amount. He was willing to pay £60. Defendant annexed to his plea an account showing the sums of £48 (for plaintiff's services for sixteen months at £3 a month) and £60 (for commission), and deductions of £101 9s. 6d., leaving a balance due to plaintiff of £11 10s. 6d., which amount he offered to pay.

Mr. Russell, for plaintiff. Defendant in default.

The plaintiff, Osborne Richard Coley, said that in or about June, 1900, he made an agreement in terms stated in the declaration. Witness did not only look after the defendant's books, but business matters generally as well. In January, defendant gave witness a bill for £65 for services. He had received sums since, which made the total £101 9s. 6d. Witness understood that this was for services rendered. Witness acted for defendant in May last in obtaining a loan. He succeeded in September in raising a loan for £6,000 from the South African Association. Both witness and defendant understood that witness's commission should be $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Defendant stated that he had understood that there would be a postponement. His attorneys had not withdrawn from the case.

The case was ordered to stand over until defendant could communicate with his attorney.

Subsequently defendant agreed to go on with the case.

The plaintiff, in cross-examination by defendant, said that the latter did not agree to pay a small commission.

By the Court: Witness was a commission agent.

Cross-examined by Mr. Russell: Witness had applied to defendant for the amount of the commission. Witness had written a letter signed by defendant, in which the latter authorised the payment of £150 commission. Witness did not get the money.

Defendant said this letter was in the possession of the attorneys to whom he had written it.

Mr. Russell put in a copy of the letter, which instructed the attorneys to pay agents' commission £150, and expenses of bond.

Defendant said that this £150 was not in the letter when he signed it. Mr. Barker was, so far as witness was aware, present when the commission was agreed upon.

Witness said the letter bore the figures £150 when defendant signed the letter.

Mr. Rosenthal, a broker, said that the usual commission on raising money on loan was $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Defendant stated that the salary was not agreed upon at £10. Plaintiff suggested that he could get the books done for £2 a month, and that the business would not run to £10. Witness saw Mr. Gibson, of the South African Association, about the loan in May or June, and he told plaintiff so.

Cross-examined by Mr. Russell: Witness had not his books in court. Witness lent plaintiff £65 (a bill) in January. It was to get plaintiff out of difficulties. It was for Coley's own accommodation, and was a loan.

Geo. Barker said that he was in Coley's office when a conversation took place between Coley and Clews in September, 1900, regarding the keeping of the books. Coley said he would require £10 a month and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the turnover. Clews said he could get his books kept by a competent book-keeper for £2 a month. Nothing more was said concerning the remuneration at that interview.

Cross-examined by Mr. Russell: Witness made a note of the conversation at the time in the pocketbook produced.

Mr. Standen (of the firm of Sauer and Standen) gave evidence, and produced the original of the letter written by defendant. Immediately after he had this letter defendant said that it contained no reference to £150 when he signed it. Plaintiff, who brought the letter to the office, said nothing when witness challenged him about the £150 in the letter.

Cross-examined by Mr. Russell: There was no usual commission on raising loans. Witness considered that agents would get 1 per cent.

Mr. Russell: The first point to be considered is the contract of serving which was entered into on July 1. Plaintiff was content to drop the 2½ per cent., but he offered to keep the books for a certain amount. Mr. Barker seems to be very indefinite. His notes do not correspond with those of other witnesses. Then as to the contract. About £60 was paid by plaintiff to defendant. Defendant says that he got this £60 and various other sums for £100, defendant was not in good circumstances at the time, and I submit that these sums were not advanced as loans, but as partial payment of wages. There was no hint up to the time of the proceedings in issue that money advanced should not be part of the loan. As to the commission, 2½ per cent. is a very ordinary commission. It is no part of a book-keeper's duty to raise loans. Plaintiff goes to defendant and writes a letter, including inter alia a demand for £150. Doubt has been thrown on this letter, but I submit it is genuine. There is an innuendo as to a small commission, but evidence shows no commission was agreed to, and I submit that 2½ per cent. was a fair amount.

De Villiers, C.J.: In regard to the claim for salary, plaintiff claims £10 a month for keeping defendant's books and doing other work for defendant, but defendant denies that £10 was agreed upon, and he calls Mr. Barker to support his statement. Well, it is quite possible Mr. Barker may not have heard the whole conversation, but even if he did, I think Mr. Barker's evidence is not conclusive that the plaintiff's account is wrong. What the defendant should have done would have been not to have employed plaintiff at all until plaintiff had withdrawn his offer to do the work for £10 a month. That was the latest offer made by plaintiff. Defendant says he said that £2 or £3 was enough, but plaintiff said nothing to that, and never withdrew his offer. Defendant made the mistake of continuing to employ him when he had not withdrawn his offer of £10, and therefore left plaintiff under the impression that he was to do the work for £10. Under these circumstances, I think I will have to give judgment on the first count for the amount claimed by plaintiff at £10 a month. In regard to the second count of £150, I have great doubts whether any commission ought to be allowed at all, but defendant admits that a small commission should be paid for this. Some evidence has been given in regard to the amount of the commission, and I think 2½ per cent. is a most exorbitant charge. What had plaintiff done to earn £150? Defendant had previously been to the South African Association, and if he had not offered this 1 per cent. I should have hesitated to give judgment for that amount. I consider 1 per cent. ample payment for the work done in raising the loan, and I therefore give judgment on the second count for £60, with costs. [Plaintiff's Attorney, A. W. Steer. Defendant in person.]

THOMPSON V. SNALE.

On the motion of Mr. Searle, K.C., the Court fixed the 30th May for trial by jury of this cause.

IN THE MATTER OF THE PAARL SPIRIT CO.

Mr. Searle, K.C., presented the report of the liquidator, which the Court directed should lie for inspection.

REX V. LEWIS. { 1902
May 9th.

Police Offences Act, 1882, Sect. 7,
Sub-section 6—Locomotive.

Where a vehicle has been drawn into a public street by a locomotive and left standing there without the locomotive and without any horse or animal harnessed to the vehicle, the person who so left it is guilty of a contravention of Sub-sec. 6 of Sec. 7 of the Police Offences Act of 1882.

This was an appeal against a conviction by the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Cape Town in a case in which appellant was charged under Act 27 of 1882 with leaving two wagons in Riebeeck-street without any horse or other animal harnessed thereto.

The summons in the Court below called upon John Lewis (the present appellant) to answer to a charge of "having contravened Section 7, paragraph 6, of Act 27 of 1882, in that he did on or about January 13, 1902, wrongfully and unlawfully leave upon the public thoroughfare, to wit, Riebeeck-street, Cape Town, two wagons without any horse or other animal harnessed thereto, no accident having occurred." The evidence showed that appellant was an employee of the Harbour Board, and left two trailers in the street. Objection was taken to the conviction on the ground that the previous week appellant had been acquitted of a charge of leaving trailers in Riebeeck-square. A mistake had been made in the summons, but later defendant was charged with leaving trailers in Riebeeck-street and convicted. A further ground of appeal was that the section did not apply to locomotives or vehicles drawn by locomotives.

Mr. Wilkinson appeared to support the appeal, and Mr. Howel Jones for the Crown.

Mr. Wilkinson: The original summons under Section 7 Act, charged with having wagons in Riebeeck Square, and not in Riebeeck-street. Accused might have been convicted under that summons if the summons were amended.

[The Chief Justice: He was never in jeopardy under that summons.] The exact locality of the offence was named, and accused could not be charged again. Taylor, Ev., (par. 1717). Then as to the section any animal means "draught animal," and vehicle means vehicle drawn by draught animals. One horse would have been no good.

[The Chief Justice: You might have had a team attached. If the engine had been attached there might have been a difficulty, and we might have had to decide the question of the legality of the use of these engines.]

But see Cape Town Municipal Regulations (240), sub-section A. This contemplates the use of traction engines, and that the locomotive may be detached from the trucks. The sub-section of the Act does not contemplate these large wagons drawn by traction engines. If proceedings were taken at all they should have been under some Municipal regulation relating to the use of these trucks.

Mr. Jones was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: If these regulations are inconsistent with the Police Offences Act, they cannot repeal the provisions of the Police Offences Act, and the section must be construed quite independently of these municipal regulations which have been referred to. His lordship read the 7th section of the Act, and proceeded: Here we find that two trucks were left in the public street without any horse or other animal harnessed thereto. If there had been a locomotive attached to these trucks there might have been some doubt in the matter, because it might have been contended that the locomotive should stand in the place of a horse or other animal. The object of the Act apparently was that in case of an accident there should be some means of removing a vehicle from its position in the street, and if a locomotive had been attached these trucks could have been removed if necessary. But in the present case the locomotive had been detached from the vehicles, and no horse or other animal was harnessed to the vehicles. In my opinion there has been a contravention of this Ordinance. A further question has been raised as to whether the defendant had not been previously acquitted, but the offence upon which he was discharged was a different offence, and defendant was never in jeopardy in reference to the particular offence with which he is now charged. Therefore I do not think the previous acquittal can hold good. The appeal must be dismissed.

Mr. Nightingale moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £350 and interest, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable. Granted.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. SWANEPOEL.
Service of Summons.

Where summons had been served by affixing a copy thereof to the floor of a tent. Such service was held good.

Mr. Nightingale appeared for the Government, and said that before asking for provisional sentence, he would like to point out the peculiarity in the return of service. The Deputy Sheriff said that being unable to find defendant or any of his household after having made diligent search, he duly served the summons on the 21st April by leaving a copy thereof at defendant's last known place of residence, and posting the same on the platform of his tent, it being his last known place of residence. Counsel said that in April last year there was a very much stronger case than this, in which the Court held the service to be good. There the defendant appeared to have been trekking about in a wagon, and the Deputy Sheriff not being able to find him, fixed the summons on the ground on which the wagon had stood.

The Chief Justice: Do you say the wagon had gone? It must have been there still.

Mr. Nightingale: I understand from the report that the wagon was not there still.

Counsel further alluded to a case in the Gordonia district in February, 1900.

The Chief Justice said he considered the service in this case to be sufficient.

Mr. Nightingale thereupon moved for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £40, with costs and interest, and for specially hypothecated property to be declared executable. The service was held good, and provisional sentence was granted.

Liquor Licensing Acts—Permitting drunkenness.

The appellant—holder of a liquor licence—served several soldiers, who were in an excited condition and verging on intoxication, with liquor, with the result that a quarrel and fight ensued between the soldiers and another customer.

Held, on appeal, that although the appellant endeavoured to stop the fight by removing the other customer, he was guilty of a contravention of the 1st sub-section of section 73, Act 28 of 1883, by permitting drunkenness.

This was an appeal against a conviction by the Assistant Resident Magistrate of Stellenbosch, sitting at Somerset West. Appellant is the holder of the licence of the Central Hotel, Somerset West. He was convicted and fined for permitting drunkenness or riotous behaviour. The appeal was based on the grounds that the evidence led did not show that defendant permitted drunkenness, and that irrelevant matter prejudicial to the defendant was admitted as evidence.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., appeared for appellant; Mr. Howel Jones for the Crown.

Mr. Schreiner read the record of evidence, from which it appeared that a disturbance occurred on the defendant's premises. It commenced by some soldiers, who were said by some witnesses to be staggering, and by others to be sober, striking a man named Turner, who retaliated, the result being a general fight. Turner, in his evidence, said: "The majority of these men were drunk. Mr. Norman served them in the bar." Some of the witnesses said that Mr. and Mrs. Norman did their best to stop the disturbance, and got Turner out. The evidence objected to was a statement by a police witness that Norman had been previously warned.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for appellant): On January 13 we could not appeal, because no sentence had been pronounced. The accused had been reprimanded and discharged, and the case was referred back for sentence. A fine of £3 was imposed. Thereupon notice of appeal was given.

[Counsel read the evidence taken in the Court below.]

There is nothing to support the charge on the record, save hearsay evidence; we could not appeal. Rex v. Erfust (12 S.C.R., C. 427), under Act 1876, and our house was in peril.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But if a drunken man comes in, surely you may not serve him?]

I would not argue that. As to Turner's evidence, it is not reliable. The Court will draw their own conclusions from the evidence, Queen v. Bisset. Turner's presence and conduct caused the disturbance. My client must be proved to have permitted something, either drunkenness or riotous conduct. As to the latter see Queen v. Robertson (9 Juta, 299), and also sub-section 7, 8, Licensing Act). Norman did exactly what he was required to do; he tried to turn out disorderly people, but lex non cogit ad impossibilia. He turned Turner out and he sent for the police. Sergeant Bishton went with the Town Guard. How, then, could he alone turn these people out? Then, did he permit drunkenness. The men could demand lunch and something to drink with it. There is a great difference between being in a state of alcoholic excitement and drunkenness. If a case like this could come before this Court, would it convict? In Bisset's case, where the evidence was believed in the Court below, the decision was reversed on appeal. Even if one or more of these men were drunk, is there any evidence to show that the landlord permitted it. Permission involves something positive (Robertson's case).

Mr. H. Jones, for the Crown, was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: I think there is sufficient evidence to justify the Magistrate in his verdict. I dismiss from my mind altogether the evidence which has been objected to as being inadmissible, and on the rest of the evidence I am of opinion that the Magistrate was right in the conclusion at which he arrived. It was said in evidence that these soldiers were intoxicated when they entered the hotel. They were, perhaps, not drunk, but at any rate, it seems clear that they were verging upon intoxication, and while they were in that condition, there is evidence that the defendant served them with liquor. Supposing even that they were not quite drunk when he served them, this liquor with which he supplied them was probably the last straw. They got into such a state of intoxication that they unnecessarily quarrelled with a man who had done them no harm, and when things came to such a pitch that something had to be done, the defendant turned against the man who was not the cause of the quarrel, removed him from the premises, and did nothing in regard to those who actually caused the disturbance. It is said that these men could not be removed, because there were so many of them, and it was useless to try to remove them, but no attempt was made to get them to leave the place. One might have imagined that defendant would have tried to persuade them—would have tried to use his influence to get them to leave the premises. Instead of that, he removed the man who was not the cause of the disturbance, and did nothing in regard to the others. To my mind, the evidence shows that in what he did he permitted drunkenness. It is said that mere acquiescence is not enough, but he actually served these people with drink. I do not know of any stronger proof of permitting drunkenness than serving further liquor to excited soldiers who came to the place. The appeal must be dismissed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D. (Chief Justice), the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN, and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

REX V. ARNOLDS. { 1902.
May 12th.

Previous Conviction—Act 39 of 1885.

A conviction under sec. 27 of Act 37 of 1885 cannot be regarded as a previous conviction in the case of a woman convicted under sec. 17.

Maasdorp, J.: A case came before me as judge of the week from the Resident Magistrate of Simon's Town, in which the accused was charged with contravening section 17 of Act 39 of 1885, in not submitting herself to periodical examination. She was found guilty, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment with hard labour. It appears that a sentence of three months, or a sentence exceeding one month, can only be inflicted in the case of a second or further conviction under this particular section, and in this case no previous conviction under this particular section has been proved. There is proof of certain previous convictions for offences of a different nature—for instance, there is proof of a conviction for leaving the hospital without leave, and again on another occasion she refused to take a bath when ordered to do so by the matron—but none of these convictions fell under this section, and consequently the sentence is excessive, and must be reduced to such sentence as can be passed for a first offence. The sentence will therefore be reduced to one month's imprisonment with hard labour.

ADMISSION.

Robert Greening was admitted to practice as an attorney, the oaths being administered by the Registrar.

MICKALA V. BALLE.

This was an application for the execution of a decree of civil imprisonment, granted on May 1. When the case first came on the defendant was in default, but it now appeared that he had been waiting in the Supreme Court, while the case was heard in the Record Room, and accordingly permission was given to reopen it.

Mr. Howel Jones appeared for the applicant.

The defendant appeared in person, and offered to pay £1 a month. He said he was a carpenter by trade, and received 13s. a day. He lost all his carpenter's tools in a fire in August last.

In reply to the Chief Justice, defendant said he was already paying £1 a month to Messrs. Findlay and Co. in liquidation of a debt.

After defendant had been cross-examined by Mr. Jones, the Court suspended execution of the decree of civil imprisonment pending payment of the debt by instalments of £1 per month, the first instalment to be paid on May 15, with leave renewed to the plaintiff to apply for the payment of larger instalments in case it could be proved that the defendant had means to pay.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. } 1902.
HILLS. { May 12th.

Interdict—Contract.

Respondent had contracted with the Colonial Government to construct certain railroads under conditions which bound him, inter alia, to employ competent employees and to use suitable plant, and gave power to the Government engineer, in the event of the incompetency of any employees or unsuitability of the plant used, to give notice to the contractors requiring them to remove such incompetent persons or such unsuitable plant, and replace them or it. Should the contractors disregard such notice, the engineer was to have power to remove such persons or plant, and to engage or hire others at the cost of the said contractors. The contractors being unable to continue the work, the Government now applied for an order authorizing them to resume or take possession of these lines under construction, and to call upon the respondent to show cause why he should not be interdicted from obstructing the Government in the prosecution of the said works.

The Court granted an order authorizing the Government engineer to remove the persons and plant complained of at the cost of the contractors, and to employ such other engineers, &c., as he might deem necessary.

This was a motion on notice calling upon the respondent to show cause, if any, why an order should not be granted authorizing the Colonial Government to take all such steps and to do all such acts, including the resuming or taking possession of the whole or any portion of the lines mentioned below, or either of them, and of any work connected therewith, as might be necessary for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of clauses 23 and 24 of the general conditions of the contract entered into on July 4, 1900, between the Colonial Government and the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Company (Limited), for the construction of the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat and the Somerset East-King William's Town lines of railway, and further to show cause why he should not be interdicted from in any way interfering with or obstructing the Colonial Government in the execution of such work.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., appeared for the Government; Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for the respondent.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., appeared to watch the interests of a Port Elizabeth firm who had claims against the respondent, and had in their possession certain goods ordered for the railways in question, over which goods they had a lien.

Mr. Schreiner said that as far as he could see this action between the Government and the contractor would not really affect the rights of any third party.

The Chief Justice said that any judgment given would not prejudice the rights of any such third party.

In an affidavit, Mr. Thomas Rees Price, C.M.G., General Manager of the Cape Government Railways, said:

1. That on the 4th day of July, 1900, two contracts for the construction of railways were entered into between the Colonial Government and the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Company (Limited), viz.: (a) for the construction of a line of railway from Oudtshoorn to Klipplaat via Willowmore; (b) for the construction of a line of railway from Somerset East to King William's Town; the said two contracts were confirmed by Act No. 19 of 1900.

2. That thereafter, to wit, on or about the 20th day of March, 1901, the Thames Ironworks and Shipbuilding Co. (Ltd.), with the consent of the Colonial Government, ceded its rights under the said contract to Arnold Frank Hills, who took over all the obligations of the said contracts.

3. Clauses 23 and 24 of the said contracts are as follows: Clause 23—If the engineer shall at any time consider any engineer, agent, inspector, foreman, or workman employed by the contractors for the purpose of the contract to be inefficient, incompetent, or should they misconduct themselves, or the number of the workmen or beasts of labour, or the amount or character of the plant or materials then employed or provided by the contractors in or upon or for the purposes of the works, to be insufficient or improper, or that the works, or any of them, are not being executed with due diligence and despatch, then and in every or any such case it shall be lawful for the engineer to give notice in writing to the contractors requiring them to dismiss any such inefficient or incompetent engineer, agent, inspector, foreman, or workman, and to remove any unsuitable men, beasts, plant, or materials, and to appoint in lieu of such persons respectively other fit and proper engineers, agents, inspectors, or foremen, and to employ other workmen, and to provide other beasts, plant, or materials, and also to make such additions to the engineers, agents, inspectors, foremen, or workmen employed, or to the number or amount of the beasts, plant, and materials, or such change in their character, either until the completion of all or any of the works, or for a limited period, as the engineer may think necessary, and shall by any such notice require. Clause 24—If the contractors shall not, upon the receipt of any such notice, or within a time to be specified therein, comply with such notice, it shall be lawful for the engineer, on the account and at the cost of the contractors, to remove the engineers, agents, inspectors, foremen, workmen, beasts, plant, or materials complained of, and at like cost to provide and employ such other and additional engineers, agents, inspectors, foremen, and workmen for such time, and to purchase and provide such additional or other beasts, engines, plant, and materials respectively as he may think necessary, and to pay such other or additional engineers, agents, inspectors, foremen, or workmen such salaries, wages, and to pay for such additional beasts, plant, and materials respectively such prices as the engineer may think proper, all which salaries, wages, and prices respectively, if paid by the Government, and any extra expense the Government may incur in relation thereto, shall on demand be repaid to them by the contractors, or the Government may retain or deduct the same out of the moneys then due, or thereafter to become due, from the Government to the contractors under this contract.

4. The progress of the work on the said lines has been most unsatisfactory, only about one-half of the work on the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat line, and about one-third of the work on the Somerset East-King William's Town line having been done, and no single section of 20 miles has been completed.

5. The work that has been done is not kept in proper order or repair, and is deteriorating steadily, through natural causes, as I can testify, not only from reports received from time to time from the engineer, but also from a personal inspection of the works on or about November 29, 1901, to December 7, 1901.

The respondent has been repeatedly requested to proceed with the work, in terms of this contract, but without success, and he has recently on several occasions intimated that without further advances from the Colonial Government he cannot proceed with the work,

6. On the 28th April I notified to the respondent, who is in London, by cable, through the Agent-General for the Colony, that if the work was not proceeded with with due diligence the Colonial Government would avail itself of the provisions of clauses 23 and 24 of the conditions of the contract, and I gave a similar notice to his accredited agent in Cape Town, Mr. T. M. C. Walker, at the same time. No reply has been received from the respondent.

7. I am informed and believe that for a considerable time past the wages of the natives and other men employed on the works have not been paid, and on the 2nd inst. I received the following telegram from the Acting Resident Engineer at Willowmore to the Engineer-in-Chief, Cape Town: "May 1.—Position of affairs here most serious; 1,000 contractor's native employees threaten lives of all engineers. Many refuse food and demand money for support of families. Military have been called out."

8. That on the 2nd inst. a notice under the said clause 23 was addressed by the Engineer-in-Chief to the said respondent, which notice was served on the said T. M. C. Walker, the agent in this colony of the respondent.

9. Taking as a basis the average rate or progress since the respondent commenced work, it would, as I conclude after careful deliberation with the engineers, take about three years to complete the lines.

10. It has become and is urgently necessary that without delay the Government should be in a position to intervene, and proceed with the work, which the contractor's default has left in such an unsatisfactory condition.

11. The time fixed for the completion of the said contracts was in the case of the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat line twelve months, and in the case of the Somerset East-King William's Town line fifteen months, from the 19th October, 1900; an extension of time as provided for in clause 30 of the contracts was granted by the Engineer, but has long since expired.

In an affidavit Mr. John Brown, Engineer-in-Chief of the Cape Government Railways, confirmed the allegations made in the General Manager's affidavit, and further stated in regard to the notice given by him on the 2nd inst. to the respondent that he had received a reply stating that the contents had been noted, but nothing had been done.

Mr. Thomas Mout Cameron Walker, in an affidavit, stated

1. That I am the respondent's representative in Cape Town.

2. That I beg to refer this Hon. Court to the affidavit sworn by me on the 9th inst., having reference to the service of the notice of motion and annexures herein. (This affidavit had reference to an application for the postponement of the hearing of the motion on Friday, May 10, which was granted).

3. That I admit paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of the affidavit of Thomas Rees Price, General Manager of Cape Government Railways, but I say that the action at present taken under clauses 23 and 24 of the said agreements, if taken at all, should be under clause 52 of the said agreements, that clause being provided for such a case as is now set forth by the applicants, the same having been inserted in the contract for the protection of the public interests, and I further say that clauses 23 and 24 do not empower the applicants to take over the lines.

4. With regard to paragraph 4 of the said affidavit, I say that the distance of the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat line is 156 miles, and of this 102 miles of rails have been laid and earthworks are completed for 125 miles; and I further say that on the section between Klipplaat and Willowmore (63 miles) passenger traffic has been carried on for two years, the train running three times a week, thus showing the section to be in good working order. On the Somerset East-King William's Town line of 149 miles, rails have been laid for a distance of 76 miles and earthworks for 103 miles. The completed portion of this line has on very many occasions been used by the military authorities for the conveyance of stores and troops, and as construction trucks have been used the work has necessarily thereby been greatly retarded.

5. That sufficient men have always been kept on the works, and more would have been employed if the respondent had been supplied with material necessary for the due carrying on of the construction, but the applicants have continually failed to deliver material through, as alleged by them, shortage of rolling-stock, and on very many occasions have used respondent's construction trucks for carriage of material, thus considerably hindering the construction works.

6. That the war occasioned a complete stoppage of construction during the months of January, February, and March, 1901, and at various times since different sections have had to stop work for the same reason.

7. That owing to the war, applicants have been prevented from conveying, as bound by clause 31 of the agreement, and giving delivery of material at Klipplaat and Cookhouse, and this material has been accumulating at Port Elizabeth since 1900, there being at present at that place 21,283 rails and 106,974 sleepers, which, together with fastenings, etc., represents some 11,842 tons awaiting delivery, upon portion of which the contractor has been paying rent.

8. That the Government has failed to comply with the terms of clause 7 of the Somerset East-King William's Town contract, in that no payment was made within the time provided, and in that £13,000 due to the contractor under that clause has not been paid by the Government.

9. With regard to paragraph 6 of the said affidavit, I say that I have been advised by cable that the respondent, on the 25th April, and again on the 2nd inst., communicated with applicants by cable through the Agent-General of the Colony in London.

10. That there are good and sufficient grounds for the non-completion of the lines within contract time, and that respondent is reasonably within his time for completion, on account of breach of contract by Government, the war, and the disturbed state of the country.

11. That the estimate made by Mr. Price (based on the progress made by the contractor) of time required to complete the lines is under-estimated, as it will take more than three years, at the rate material has been forwarded by the Colonial Government during the past six months, to clear the accumulation of material at Port Elizabeth, which is absolutely necessary for the completion of the lines.

12. That the contractor has suffered very heavy financial loss on account of the war, as will be seen from the report of the applicant's acting resident engineer at Bedford, which shows an expenditure of £250 per month on his section alone, that amount being wholly direct loss, and as a matter of fact, this section has suffered less than any other, with one exception.

13. That on the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat section, in January, 1901, actual damage to the extent of £14,633 was done by the Boers, for which no compensation has been received.

14. That the respondent has done everything in his power, not only to comply with his contracts, but also to meet the military and applicant's requirements and the public's interests by carrying on the work throughout the war, until lately, and has thereby incurred an expenditure greatly in excess of his estimated financial requirements, thereby necessitating applications for advances from applicants. Had the respondent consulted his own interests solely, he would have closed down all works in January, 1901.

15. That clause 56 of the contracts provides for the submission to arbitration of any dispute between the parties thereto, and the applicants have never suggested the settlement by such means, which should, under the contract, have been done before the submission of the matter to this Hon. Court.

16. That the notice of the engineer of the 2nd inst. demanded an impossibility, even under the most favourable circumstances, the time stated not being in any way sufficient to allow for the due fulfilment of his requirements, and it therefore cannot be considered as due notice, under clause 24 of the contract.

17. That the respondent is anxious and willing to complete the work, and would be enabled to do so if the applicant will grant him such considerations as is only due to him in view of the adverse and abnormal condition of the country and of affairs generally, with which he has had to contend.

The letter from the Acting Resident Engineer of Bedford (referred to in the above affidavit), with regard to the extra expenditure caused by the war, contained the following: "From the information you have sent me from time to time, and my own observation, I have compiled an estimate, and herewith enclose my rough copy, which I shall be glad if you would examine and return to me without delay, the estimate now being considerably overdue. Roughly, it averages about $250 per month—no small proportion of our certificates. Any comments I shall be pleased to receive, for it is desirable we should be fairly in accord on the matter."

The 52nd section referred to in the above affidavit is as follows: If the contractors or their permitted assignees (in case of assignment) become insolvent, or compound with their creditors, or if from any cause whatsoever, other than the act of God, war, insurrection, rebellion, the execution of additional works, strikes, lock-outs, combinations of workmen, or any extraordinary or unforeseen circumstance, which in the opinion of the Commissioner are beyond the control of the contractors, they shall fail to complete and deliver over the said railway and works to the Government in the manner and by the time in that behalf fixed by Article 27 hereof, or any extension of such time as provided by Article 30 hereof, the 10 per cent. retention money shall be retained and dealt with as provided in Articles 47 and 49 hereof, and thereupon this agreement shall cease and determine, and it shall be lawful for the Government to enter upon and take possession of such incomplete line in so far as it has been constructed by the contractors, and the Government shall thereafter so soon as the amounts of the actual cost shall have been ascertained pay to the contractors the amount so ascertained less such amount as shall have been paid on account, and less the amount of detention money hereinbefore referred to.

An answering affidavit by Mr. Thomas Smith McEwen, Assistant General Manager of Railways, was as follows:

1. That previously to holding my present appointment I was Chief Resident Engineer on the construction of the Oudtshoorn-Klipplaat and Somerset East-King William's Town lines of railway, and occupied that position up to March, 1901, and since then I have frequently had to deal with matters in connection therewith.

2. I have perused the affidavit of Thomas Mouat Cameron Walker.

3. With regard to paragraph 4, the lengths of earthwork constructed and rails laid, as stated by the said Walker, are approximately correct, but earthworks and laying rails represent the simplest and easiest part of the contract work. A very large part of the more expensive work on both lines, viz., bridges and culverts, superstructure of bridges, ballasting, station buildings, houses, station yards, and such like still remain to be done. That although by special permission and at passengers' own risk it is true that passenger traffic has been carried on between Klipplaat and Willowmore, yet no section of 20 miles between these points has actually been completed in accordance with the terms of the contract. The line, though incomplete has been used to a certain extent by the military authorities, but the progress of the work has not been greatly retarded thereby.

4. With regard to paragraph 5, I deny that sufficient men have always been kept on the works. There have been some delays in delivering material, but not sufficient to account for the extraordinary delay in proceeding with the construction works. That the extension of time allowed beyond the stipulated time has been more than ample to cover any delays, whether caused by the inevitable shortage of trucks, the circumstances of the country, war, or otherwise. The construction trucks referred to in the said paragraph are not the property of the respondent, but were hired to him under clause 38 of the contract; the number so hired would be equal to about 212 short trucks, and owing to the military demands in connection with transport service, some of these trucks, not more than sixteen, I believe, were by arrangement with the respondent withdrawn for the purpose of carrying construction material from the port to the junctions where the contractor's work commenced. The respondent was not hindered to any considerable extent thereby.

5. With regard to paragraphs 7, 11, and 12, I say that there has been no undue delay in forwarding material, and respondent has been delayed, if at all, only in a minor degree, amply covered by the extended times which have been allowed, but from frequent communications received from him his delay would appear rather to have been occasioned by financial straits, in which he has received every reasonable consideration, even beyond the strict tenour of his contracts.

6. With regard to paragraph 8, I deny that Government has failed to comply with clause 7 of the Somerset East-King William's Town contract, save that a portion of the amount due, to wit. £8,757 5s. 10d., was not paid within the fourteen days, and that the sufficiency of the total amount paid, viz., £97,676 8s. 10d., was upon the respondent's reading of that clause disputed by him to the extent of £13,000.

7. This dispute remains unsettled, but the Government has, in consideration of his position, made advances to the respondent of sums far exceeding the amount in dispute, over and above such advances as he was by contract entitled to.

8. With regard to paragraph 9, I attach hereto a copy of a cablegram of the 2nd inst., forwarded by respondent through the Agent-General. I am not aware of any cablegram sent by respondent on the 25th of April, but in any case such a cablegram could not be a reply to a message sent on the 28th of April.

9. I deny the allegations in paragraph 10.

10. With regard to paragraph 13, I admit that some damage was done by the Boers, for which Government is not liable, but to what extent I am not aware.

11. With regard to paragraph 14, I deny that the respondent has done everything in his power to complete the contracts.

12. As to paragraph 15, I say that throughout the recent negotiations occasioned by the critical position in which the contractor is placed, no suggestion has been made that any matter in dispute should be referred to arbitration. Under the circumstances as they stand the delay which would be occasioned by any arbitration would be extremely dangerous to public interests, and in no way assist the contractor to fulfil his obligations under contracts which he has already broken, and the full time for completing which has expired.

13. The urgency of the matter may be further illustrated from the annexed telegrams from the Civil Commissioner of Willowmore and the Acting Magistrate of Willowmore, dated respectively 2nd and 3rd of May.

14. As regards paragraphs 16 and 17, I would respectfully beg to remind this Hon. Court of the many judgments recently obtained against the respondent, with others, in this Hon. Court, under some of which judgments materials actually delivered for the construction of these lines have been attached for execution, and I submit that an extension of further consideration and time is impossible, having regard to the public interests.

15. I attach a copy of a telegram dated 7th inst. received by the Chief Resident Engineer on Construction.

The following is the cablegram referred to in above affidavit: From Agent-General to Commissioner.—In reply to your cable, April 28, Hills writes to-day; begins with reference to my letter, April 29, cabled Wednesday. Am advised Grand Junction creditors' rights not affected by clauses 23 and 24 construction contracts. Such clauses being inapplicable in existing state affairs, and incapable of being put in operation by Government at present, therefore in any arrangement with Government provision must be made for paying all Grand Junction creditors, and as creditors' rights extend also to our interest in Mossel Bay line, it is necessary for Government to decide, and inform us its attitude regarding that line; partners and I recently decided revert our undertaking in Grand Junction Railways (Limited). I suggest, without prejudice, solution present troubles would be found if the contract we have signed for sale to Grand Junctions be completed with Government assent, and Government take up alkali* debentures of that company, meantime advancing sums necessary avert present crisis. By this means Government would have satisfactory security for the money, and we be able pay our creditors and proceed completion of all lines. Sale contract was sent our Cape Town agent on April 19. (Ends.) In my opinion, all further negotiation with Hills at this end are hopeless.

The following are the telegrams referred to in the above affidavit: Civil Commissioner, Willowmore, to Secretary, Law Department, Cape Town.—93. May 2, 1902. At a meeting of the Mayor and leading inhabitants of Willowmore to-day, it was brought to the notice of the authorities that, owing to a general strike of the Grand Junction employees, all communication with Klipplaat has been stopped, and the food supply cut off. It was resolved that the Civil Commissioner be requested to lay the matter before the Government, with the request that steps be immediately taken to give relief. Besides the ordinary population of the town and a large district, there are at present 1,500 railway natives here without food or work. The food supply here will be exhausted within a week. (Ends.) I have been requested by the community to send this to General Manager of Railways, as well as to Secretary Law Department.

Roux, Acting Magistrate, Willowmore, to Secretary, Law Department, Cape Town.—94. May 3, 1902. Yours 1457, May 2, 1902. Please refer to my wire to you, 73, yesterday. Present state of affairs critical. The day before yesterday I had to collect the D.M.T. as additional police, the whole village being overrun with natives, who were becoming very boisterous, and as an extra precaution I closed both the hotel bars. They have been temporarily pacified. Mr. Currie, the Grand Junction Railway representative here, who has not been paid his own salary for the last six months, obtained some meal, but this will only last for a few days. Have a very large district to supply with food-stuffs. In addition, several farmers from Uniondale and Aberdeen, under martial law, get their supplies from here, and if matters do not mend within the next few days, there will be a serious trouble. The natives are all demanding their pay, and nothing else. I have arranged with the Administrator, No. 4 Area, Uitenhage, to give them immediate employment as general labourers, mule drivers, or for blockhouse work, at £3 per month and rations, but this apparently does not satisfy them. The farmers along the line of railway must also be considered.

Tippett, Port Elizabeth, to Railways, Cape Town.—May 7, re obtaining possession of Government engines and rolling-stock, Somerset East-Bedford portion of the line. (Stop.) A.R.E., Bedford, wires that contractors' agent (Hirst) refuses to give up possession, and has removed all engines and stock out of the Government yard on to the new lines, and has erected fences across the new lines outside yard at Cookhouse. (Stop.) I have wired Popkiss that he should not take forcible action until further advised by me, but should serve notice on Hirst, holding him personally responsible for such damage or loss that may be incurred by the department. Await your instructions on the subject.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicants) read notice served, Hills and Price's affidavit, and cited the Railway Act (19 of 1900, scheduled 2,324). Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendant) read an answering affidavit, and cited section 31 and clause 7 of the King William's Town Railway Act, also clause 56, which provides for arbitration.

Mr. Schreiner: The Act of 1900 took the place of the Acts of 1895 and 1898. By the latter the Thames Iron Works was to take over two of these lines, and the King William's Town line was to remain a concession line. Payment was to be made for every 20 miles constructed. Clause 30 of the contract provided for delay arising from act of God or of the King's enemies, but left the engineer the judge as to the necessity of extension. Six months' extension was given. They were only entitled to three months. The contractor wants the Government to advance more money, but they are not bound to do so by the contract. The Thames Iron Works assigned their contract to Hills, and he does not seem to be able to go on, and so wants to fall back on the old Grand Junction Railways, but the Thames Iron Works assigned to Hills, and not to anybody else. Labourers and engines were there, but they were not working. Hence the short notice given on the 2nd to go on by the 5th. Clauses 23 and 24 are the very clauses we should proceed on in a question of urgency. We are now fenced out from the line by respondents. We will be quite content with an interdict forbidding respondents from excluding us from our line. Respondent has never said he wishes to throw up the whole thing, so we cannot proceed under section 52, so sections 23 and 24 are the sections we wish to proceed under.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Do you wish to remove the engineer?]

Technically yes; we may re-engage a good many of the men. We do not want absolutely to take over the work, but only to see that it is gone on with.

[Buchanan, J.: The question is, have they exceeded the time allowed them?]

They have, but we cannot proceed under section 52 unless Hills becomes insolvent.

[Buchanan, J.: But do you say that you can break off the contract on the ground of failure?]

Section 52 says "as the commissioner shall determine," not "as the contractor." Hills may insist under this clause on arbitration. Meanwhile the line will be going to destruction.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If we grant an order, whose servants will the work-people be?]

Those of the Government (see sections 24 and 38). If Hills were shown to be on the verge of insolvency surely the Court would have no hesitation in stepping in to enable us to take charge of the line. No portion of the line has really been completed.

Mr. Searle, K.C.: I don't understand counsel's argument. There is only one section which justifies taking over the line.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Any order made will be in terms of section 24.]

We hold that not sections 23 and 24, but 52, applies. (Mr. Searle read 23 and 24.) Under section 23 applicants can only ask for the dismissal of employees on the ground of incompetence. The expiry of the contract time does not come in under this clause. If Government may provide other men that does not imply that they can take possession of the line or control of the work. Section 24 does not apply, because the notice asks us to provide 4,000 skilled and unskilled persons between Saturday and Monday.

[De Villiers, C. J.: What time should you have had?]

I cannot say, but clearly the time given was too short. They are not taking over the works on the ground that we cannot pay our men. The notice was insufficient; what if they had only given us an hour's notice?

[De Villiers, C.J.: It may be that the notice would have been too short if you could have gone on with the work. Will you consult your client as to whether he will engage to employ the number of men asked for within a fortnight?]

He cannot do that, because he is not instructed. The case the applicants make is under section 53. They do not say that our engineers are incompetent, but that they are too few. They cannot therefore dismiss them. Sections 23 and 24 do not contemplate any resumption of the lines by Government: and it is difficult to say whether these sections justify the applicants in coming to Court. The fact that the engineer had seized certain locomotives did not justify applicants in applying under these sections. As to arbitration, the matters referred to in sections 23 and 24 are not left to the judgment of the engineer, like those mentioned in section 30. The Government can employ persons and pay them without coming to the Court, and hence the Court cannot now decide this whole question on motion. The parties are not agreed as to facts; and the applicants have not made out a clear right under sections 23 and 24, because they have not offered to provide men. Had they done so, and we had refused to let them come on the line, the applicants might have had a case.

[Buchanan, J.: Can you justify your obstruction of the line?]

That is quite extraneous matter imported into the case in connection with an answering affidavit: it has nothing to do with sections 23 and 24.

Sir H. Juta was not called upon in reply.

De Villiers, C. J.: If, even now, at the eleventh hour, the respondent would undertake within a reasonable time, say, two or three weeks, to supply the number of men whom the engineer considers to be necessary for the purpose of completing this work, I should not make any order, but I should give the respondent time within which to do it, because undoubtedly the notice was short, and in ordinary circumstances I think the Court would hold that the notice was far too short for calling on the respondent to do what he is asked to do. But it is perfectly clear from the facts which have been disclosed in this case that respondent is unable to undertake this work, and even if he were given two or three weeks or a month, the work would not be done. His men are unpaid—at all events, the greater part of them—and it is a serious question for the Government to consider whether they will allow the present state of things to continue. Now, under the 23rd section of the contract between the parties, if the engineer should at any time consider that the works, or any of them, are not being executed with due diligence and despatch, then he may call upon the contractors to make additions to the engineers, agents, inspectors, foremen, or workmen employed, or to the amount of plant or material, or such change in their character, either until the completion of all or any of the works, or for a limited period, as the engineer may think necessary, and shall by notice require. It is clear from the evidence that the works have not been executed with due diligence and despatch, and that notice has been given to the respondent in terms of the 23rd section. That notice has not been complied with. The time, no doubt, was short, but any longer time, I am satisfied, would not have induced the respondent to do the work, and I think therefore an order should be made. But the order should not be made in terms of the notice of motion. The order made should strictly follow the terms of the 24th section, of whatever value it may be. I think the Government may seriously consider whether it would not be better to proceed under the 52nd section. But they are entitled to proceed under the 23rd or 24th sections if they chose, and the Court will therefore make an order authorising the engineer employed by the applicant to remove the engineers, agents, inspectors, foremen, workmen, beasts, plant, or materials complained of, and at the cost of the contractors to employ such other engineers, etc., as he may think necessary. I think the respondent must pay the costs.

Mr. Schreiner asked if the Court would not grant the interdict asked for in the concluding portion of the motion.

The Chief Justice: Is there any danger that they might interfere? The Court will not grant an interdict unless there is some reason for thinking they will interfere. We cannot suppose that they will disobey the order of the Court.

Mr. Schreiner said he would be satisfied with the expression of opinion from the Court.

Buchanan, J.: I fully concur in what His Lordship the Chief Justice has said, and I strongly endorse the suggestion that has been thrown out for the further consideration of the Government as to whether this is the best course for them to pursue. However, that is a matter of policy for them to consider; but probably they would be in a very much better position if they acted upon the suggestion thrown out.

Maasdorp, J., concurred.

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP.]

SEALE V. SEALE. { 1902.
May 12th.

This was an action for divorce instituted by the wife. The case originally came before the Court on the 2nd May, when it was adjourned, in order that there should be further evidence as to the misconduct of the husband.

Mr. C. de Villiers for plaintiff; defendant was in default.

Christine Isabel Seale, wife of the defendant's brother, was called, and gave evidence as to the misconduct of the defendant.

A decree of divorce was granted, with custody of the minor child. Defendant was ordered to contribute £3 a month towards the maintenance of the child, with costs.

CARTER V. HOWES BROTHERS AND CO.

On the motion of Mr. Searle, K.C., leave was granted plaintiff to attach 200 cases of butter to found jurisdiction subject to any rights which a third party might have. Leave was also granted to sue by edictal citation, the same being returnable on the 1st August.

RAYNER V. MUTZENBACH. { 1902.
May 12th.

Contract—Ejectment—Claim in Reconviction.

This was an action to recover rent due and for an order of ejectment of the defaulting tenant. The plaintiff was the owner of certain premises situated in Hanover-street, and leased at £6 10s. a month to the defendant. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant owed four months' rent, and he sued to recover £26, and also asked for an order of ejectment against the defendant. The defendant in his plea admitted that he was a tenant of the house, but said that he was a tenant not of the plaintiff, but of a partnership in which he and the plaintiff were partners. The defendant also said that the rent was £6, and not £6 10s. He admitted liability to the partnership—a partnership which the plaintiff denied to exist. That being so, the defendant refused to pay the plaintiff because he set up a claim against the plaintiff in reconvention. He contended that he and the defendant entered into a partnership for various building ventures, and in reconvention he claimed an order that the plaintiff should be called upon to give him a full account of the partnership transactions, and he also demanded £1,000 damages. The plaintiff admitted a partnership in regard to the building of a house at the corner of Hanover and Rutger streets for one Sass, but said that a settlement had been arrived at in regard to this, and the defendant was paid. He denied any partnership in regard to any other transactions as alleged by the defendant, which, he said, were carried out on his own account.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Currey), for defendant; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for defendant.

Nathan Rayner, builder, said he knew defendant at Johannesburg. Witness saw him in March, 1900, in Cape Town. He asked witness to give him a chance if he had any plans to draw. He drew witness a plan for certain property. There was a contract dated 18th September, 1900, between witness and defendant on one side and Sass on the other side to build a house in Hanover-street. There was no written agreement between witness and defendant in respect of that contract. Defendant agreed to put in £80 or £90, but on the contract being signed he declined to pay any money. Witness advanced all the money for the job. Witness gave defendant certain sums while the work was proceeding. They both supervised the work, and witness received the money from Sass. There was a contract for a second house for Sass, but that was abandoned. Witness paid defendant £141 18s. 3d. (by cheque) for his share of the profits under the Sass contract, and for drawing four sets of plans. Meanwhile witness had purchased a property in Eckardt, Cowling and Combrinck streets for the purpose of carrying on building operations. Defendant had nothing to do with that property. Defendant drew up plans for the buildings which witness put up in Eckardt-street. Witness paid defendant £18 for this, and engaged him as foreman. He continued in witness's employ as foreman of this and Hanover-street property work until the 20th October, 1901. Witness paid him £18 a month. There was never any statement on his part that he was interested as a partner in the matters. Witness bought property in Hanover-street in December, 1900. There was no contract of partnership in respect of this. Witness put up buildings on this Hanover-street property on plans prepared by defendant, and paid for by witness. These buildings were called "York Buildings." In one of the houses there defendant was now living. He agreed to pay witness rent at the rate of £6 10s. a month. Witness had entries in books (produced) for rent received from defendant, who came into the house on the 1st September. Witness dismissed the defendant on the 12th October. Up to that time he had been working as witness's foreman. Witness paid him wages weekly. When witness dismissed defendant the latter assaulted him, and said he could not turn him out, as there was iron there from Sass's building. Witness had given defendant a cheque for £20 for iron which had been brought from Sass's building. Witness had sold the Eckardt-street property, but still had the Hanover-street buildings. The transaction had been a profitable one. Witness sued defendant in the Magistrate's Court for rent, and an ejectment order, but defendant took the exception that he had a right, and witness had to come to this Court.

Cross-examined: Mutzenbach kept all the books connected with the Sass building. Witness returned from England on October 10, 1899, and began business about six or nine months after that. He had done work before January, 1900, but he kept no books in regard to that work. He did not propose to go into a partnership with Mutzenbach in the matter of some land at Salt River. All he did was to ask Mutzenbach to survey the ground and draw up plans. Witness did not know if the plans were prepared, and he knew nothing about their being shown in Messrs. Fairbridge and Arderne's office with the object of raising money to purchase the land. As to Mr. Miller's property, defendant said he had bought the ground, but could not get it owing to some condition, and witness only went with him to Mr. Van der Byl to explain matters. Witness did not remember saying anything about the land being transferred into their joint names. Witness ordered the goods both for the Sass and Eckhard buildings. The goods were on the same invoice, but Mutzenbach kept a separate account of everything that went into the Sass building. Mrs. Mutzenbach never spoke to witness about the partnership. Witness did not remember Mutzenbach warning him, at the time they had the row, not to do away with the books of the partnership. The old material from Sass's building witness used in the Eckhardt-street building, and perhaps he had used some of it in the Hanover-street building. He had bought all the old material, paying for it by the £20 cheque. Defendant himself had valued that old material. The cheque was not given by witness to defendant in connection with the various building transactions.

Re-examined: The Salt River land was never bought. He met the owner there, but they could not come to terms.

By the Court: Sass's building was just opposite the property witness first put up for himself. It was not on an adjoining piece of ground.

Mr. Schreiner said that was all the evidence he had on the claim in convention, and he submitted that defendant should now proceed with his claim in reconvention after which he (Mr. Schreiner) could call his witness on that claim.

Sir Henry Juta said that except in a case of libel, where justification was pleaded, he had never heard of the procedure Mr. Schreiner proposed being adopted.

Buchanan, J., said that the onus of proof of the partnership was now on defendant, the plaintiff having denied the partnership.

Gustav Mutzenbach, the defendant, said that in 1900 he had business relations with plaintiff, whom he had known before. They had negotiations in regard to some land at Salt River, which they proposed to buy, build upon, and then sell. Witness prepared the plans, and he and plaintiff together with the owner of the land, went to Mr. Arderne to try to raise the necessary money. They were not successful, and that transaction dropped. The next transaction they had together was in regard to some land in Hanover-street. Witness prepared the plans for plaintiff's own house, but he had no interest in that. Then witness took on the contract to build for Sass. As to the Eckhardt-street property, that was a partnership undertaking, he and plaintiff having agreed together to buy the land, and witness drew up the plans and submitted them to plaintiff. The buildings in Eckhardt-street were begun about six weeks later than Sass's buildings, which were begun in October, and which were finished in the beginning of January. Witness looked after both buildings all day, and kept the wages book. He kept the book produced. Witness started keeping a "proper" book, which was afterwards taken over to plaintiff's place, where witness used to go on Sundays and write the books up. Week by week witness drew the same money as plaintiff. Witness and Rayner used to meet at the latter's house at night to make up the accounts of Sass's and Eckhardt-street buildings. The Hanover-street buildings commenced in about May or June. Witness made the same agreement with Rayner in regard to that. After a bond had been raised on this property, there was about £250 for each of them to find. Witness left his profits on the Sass building to pay his part of this £500. On the 12th October last (when plaintiff alleged he gave witness notice), there was a row, and plaintiff said, "I am the boss." Witness said, "I say in the presence of these men (there were several persons there), do not destroy the books. They are my only proof." Witness had a lot of materials on Sass's building, and these were used in the Hanover-street buildings. Some old material, worth about £30, was bought from Sass and used in the Eckhardt-street premises.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: The Sass contract witness signed. Two other contracts were in Rayner's name. Witness did not agree to contribute any money towards the Sass contract. Wit-ness's contribution to the contracts was represented by the value of his experience. Plaintiff did not have much experience.

Henry Sass, called by Mr. Benjamin, said that while he and plaintiff were negotiating in respect of some materials, Raner told him that he and Mutzenbach were partners in the buildings, but not in the ground, which he said was his own property.

Hannah Mutzenbach, wife of the defendant, said she remembered a particular day in May last year, when her husband and Raner came to the house together. Witness heard them talking together, and in her presence her husband told Raner that the thing must be brought to a settlement. The Sass contract and the Combrinck-street building were then finished. Raner asked defendant whether he could not trust him, and said he would sign any of the papers in "our business." Mutzenbach said that what he wanted was to work in both their names. Raner would not agree to that, stating as a reason that Mutzenbach had debts. Raner had told witness that Mutzenbach was his partner, and witness had introduced him to people as her husband's partner.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Mutzenbach was also a partner in the William-street property. Witness was quite as sure of this as that he was a partner in the Eckardt-street buildings.

Daniel Bresler said he remembered a row between plaintiff and defendant in October. Witness was working on the Hanover-street building at the time. He had been working for Raner and Mutzenbach for 2½ years. After the row was over, witness heard Mutzenbach say to Raner, "Don't destroy my books."

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Rayner told Mutzenbach to go, and the latter said, "You can't chuck me out; I am a partner." Before the row Rayner said to witness and other men that he had told Mutzenbach to go, and that he did not like him any more as foreman. That caused the row.

Re-examined: When Mutzenbach said he was a partner, Raner said he was not. Mutzenbach replied that he would show that he was, and told Raner not to destroy the books.

Nathan Raner, the plaintiff, was recalled by Mr. Schreiner, and denied the allegation of Sass that he said he was in partnership with Mutzenbach. He might have made reference to the partnership in regard to the contract with Sass. The witness also denied the evidence of Mrs. Mutzenbach as to his saying defendant was a partner. No such conversation as that stated by Mrs. Mutzenbach to have taken place ever occurred.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin: He did not remember having spoken to Mrs. Mutzenbach about partnership, but he might have referred to the partnership in the Sass contract.

Mr. Benjamin was then heard in argument on the facts of the case.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiff in this action sues to recover rent from the 1st October to the 31st January last, at the rate of £6 10s. a month, a sum of £26 in all. The plaintiff is the registered owner of the property in which the defendant lives, and the defendant admits that he owes the rent for this period, but at the rate of £6, and not £6 10s. a month. The defendant's objection to pay to the plaintiff the rent sued for and to give up possession is based on his claim in reconvention. If his claim in reconvention is substantial, then the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment in convention; if his claim in reconvention is not substantiated, then the claim in convention must be allowed. In reconvention the defendant alleges that the plaintiff and he were in partnership, to share equally any profits or loss arising from certain specific ventures. In the first place, it may be remarked that it was not a general partnership, but a partnership which is set up, only in certain specific ventures. The defendant admits that while these ventures were going on he was earning other money from other work. It is therefore a partnership confined to specific ventures. These ventures are alleged to be three. The first is the building of a house for one Sass, the second is the profits to be derived from the purchase of the Eckardt-street property and the erection of buildings thereon, and the third is the profits to be gained by the purchase of a property known as the Hanover-street property. It appears from the documents put in that the plaintiff had employed the defendant as a contractor, and had entered into a specific contract with the defendant to erect certain buildings for him in Horstley-street and Blythe-street. This was in May, 1900. The work was performed, and is not part of this case, but the documents are useful, as showing that it was the practice of the parties not to go and make mere verbal agreements, but to make written contracts for their transactions. When this Blythe-street work was completed a second contract in writing was entered into, by which the plaintiff and defendant, as contractors, agreed to build certain premises for Sass, as proprietor. There is no dispute as to the claim on this contract by plaintiff and defendant, for the house was built jointly by them as joint contractors. As to the profits which arose from this transaction, there is also no dispute. The evidence agrees that the profits were about £140. On Sass's contract there were certain extras added, and they caused some dispute and a delay in obtaining a settlement, and, though the building was finished in January, the final payment in settlement of the account was made only some time about the middle of the year or a little later. The plaintiff produces a cheque which he gave to the defendant on the 17th September, and says that this cheque was made up as he alleges of half of the profits from Sass's contract, and also a payment of £72 for four plans at £18 each, which he engaged the defendant to make. The defendant, as far as I can understand, while agreeing that this cheque did include the profits from Sass's business, said that at the time it was given the Combrinck-street buildings had been erected, and they had considered the profits from it and Sass's at £783, and the cheque of £141 was simply the balance left after deducting £500, each partner leaving £250 in the venture, being the estimated amount of what the other buildings would cost. A most complicated transaction, very difficult to follow and very difficult to understand. The defendant Mutzenbach admits that the cheque included Sass's profits. We may therefore take it that the building of the house for Sass is out of this question, the profits having been paid. To come to the other claims in reconvention, the Eckardt-street and the Hanover-street properties may be taken together. It is a singular thing that though before this transaction was entered into when the defendant had attempted to buy some property, which he wanted plaintiff to join with him in the speculation, they told the attorney—Van der Byl—that the property was to be put in their joint names. That purchase did not go through, but when they came to the Eckardt and Hanover street properties, the plaintiff put those in his own name and received transfer, and no dispute or objection has been raised to this by the defendant at any time. Moreover the plaintiff alone became responsible for the money raised on bond for building purposes. The defendant did not enter into any liability in reference either to the purchase of the property or the loans raised thereon. In connection with the Eckardt and Hanover streets properties we have, further, certain contracts in the handwriting of the defendant, and in these very contracts without any explained reason, if the defendant was a joint partner, we find the defendant himself writing that the different contractors agreed to do carpenters' and other work for the plaintiff as owner, and no mention whatever is made of Mutzenbach as having anything to do with the property. The defendant not only wrote these contracts, but actually signed as witness to the signatures of the parties. Here, then, we have strong corroborative evidence that the property in Eckhardt and Hanover streets were bought by plaintiff on his own account, and that the buildings thereon were erected by him on his own account. In the absence of any written document to the contrary, we find it impossible to hold that the defendant has proved there was any contract between the parties that they were to buy the properties and erect buildings thereon in partnership and as a joint venture. There is not a tittle of written evidence to support the defendant's case, beyond the curious entry made by him in the small passbook put in. There are no figures or items given upon which the Court can trace any foundation for the entries therein made. It was simply a time-book. On the whole, the Court is forced to the conclusion that the defendant has failed to prove his claim in reconvention. Judgment therefore will be given for plaintiff in convention. As to the difference of £2, that is trifling, but if we have to consider this, there is a receipt, which shows that the rent was £6 10s., the plaintiff produces a counter, foil of this, and when we look at plaintiff's private book, we find an entry of £6 10s. for the first month's rent received from defendant. Judgment will therefore be given for four months' rent at the rate of £6 10s. a month, making £26. As plaintiff is the owner of this property and has given due notice to defendant to leave, the defendant must give up possession. Judgment will be given in convention for plaintiff as prayed, with costs, and judgment on the claim in reconvention for defendant in reconvention, with costs.

The Court ordered defendant to give up possession by the end of the month, defendant agreeing to pay the rent for the month.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY and a Jury.]

STANDARD BANK V. THOMPSON AND OTHERS. { 1902.
May 13th.

This was an action for the recovery of an amount due on a balance of account, with a claim in reconvention by the defendant.

The action was brought by The Standard Bank against Mr. Thompson, lately a member of the firm of Thompson, Ratcliffe and Co., and now carrying on business on his own account in Cape Town as W. Thompson and Co., to recover the sum of £104 11s. 9d. as the balance of an account. The declaration stated that in August, 1899, the defendant Thompson entered into an agreement with the bank, whereunder the bank agreed to allow him banking facilities up to £4,000 on condition that he pledged to them certain rice that he was importing into this country. An ordinary bank's pledge form was entered into with regard to this transaction. The late Mr. Alexander Mair, whose executors were also sued, was surety and co-principal debtor in this transaction for Thompson. Mr. Mair's executors did not enter appearance, and submitted to the judgment of the Court. The declaration went on to state that this transaction went through, and in December, 1900, the overdraft of Thompson was £1,205. The rice came to East London, being imported by Thompson, and portions were sold off, the overdraft was reduced, and £1,205 remained due in December, 1900. Thompson had been pressed by the bank for many months, time after time, to settle up the matter and sell the rice, and although the bank had the power to sell under the ordinary pledge form, it did not care to exercise that without Thompson's consent. After waiting a long time, the bank took judgment against him for £1,205. At that time there were 3,699 bags of rice at East London. These were sold with the defendant's consent. It was found that there was no good market at East London, and the rice had to be brought round to Cape Town. Thompson was quite willing that it should be brought round. The rice was sold to Messrs. Liberman and Buirski at 8s. 6d. a bag. After deduction of all expenses there remained a debit balance against Thompson of £164 15s. due to the bank. The defendant made objections to certain small charges for interest, etc., and he said that the account should stand at £104. There was, therefore, at that time a difference of £60 between the parties. The defendant also raised a further question. He drew a cheque on November 14 for £30 in favour of one Seale, and the bank dishonoured that cheque. There appeared to have been a mistake. The defendant had paid a certain bill into the bank which should have been credited to him. The matter was at once rectified. Seale paid the cheque into the African Banking Corporation, and it was presented to the Standard Bank, where it was dishonoured. Upon the same day the clerk who had made the mistake explained the matter, and the next day the matter was set right, and the cheque was paid into the bank. Many months after this Thompson claimed £500 damages for this. Then there was some correspondence on the matter, and the bank said that in order to satisfy the defendant they were willing to reduce their claim to what he said it ought to be—£104. The plaintiffs, therefore, claimed £104 11s. 9d.

The defendant in his plea said that he did not consent to the sale of the rice in Cape Town, but only consented to it being sold at East London at the ruling market price, and he said the ruling market price there was 10s. 3d. He denied that the plaintiffs were entitled to deduct the expenses of bringing the rice round to Cape Town, and he said there remained due to him from the bank in respect of this sale, after the satisfaction of the judgment and costs, an amount of £85 14s. 9d. The defendant made another claim for damages, being the difference between what the rice was actually sold for at Cape Town, and what it might have been sold for at East London. He claimed £321 13s. in respect of this, and he further claimed £500 damages in respect of the dishonoured cheque.

The plaintiff's replication to the plea was general.

As to the claim in reconvention, the bank (defendant in reconvention) denied that the said bags of rice were wrongfully and unlawfully sold at Cape Town, instead of East London, and also that the plaintiff in reconvention sustained any damage by their being so sold. It admits that a cheque for £30 was dishonoured by the bank, when there were funds belonging to plaintiff in reconvention in the said bank available to meet the same, but says that it is willing on that account to reduce its claim from £164 15s. 10d. to the amount now claimed, in order to compensate the plaintiff in reconvention for any loss he may have sustained in connection with such dishonour, and to settle any small items of account in dispute; but it does not admit that he has sustained loss to the extent of the difference between £164 15s. 10d. and the sum now claimed, or that he has sustained any substantial loss by reason of the dishonour of the said cheque.

The rejoinder and replication in reconvention were general.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) for the plaintiffs; Mr. Upington (with him Mr. C. de Villiers) for defendants.

John Whitfield Harsant said he was at present assistant general manager of the Standard Bank, but at the time of this transaction he was manager of the Cape Town branch of the bank. In January, 1899, a pledge form was entered into, and in July a fresh guarantee was signed. Under this pledge form the bank issued to defendant certain letters of credit against the purchase of certain rice. The amount due by defendant to the bank was reduced from time to time by the sale of the rice, which defendant had at different ports, including East London and Port Elizabeth. From time to time witness pressed defendant to settle up the transaction. There were a number of letters to that effect. Defendant had two accounts at the bank, viz., his ordinary account and a No. 2 account, which dealt with the rice transaction. As the rice was sold the proceeds were paid in to the No. 2 account. From June 30 to December 31, 1900, no reduction was made in that account, and on the latter date it stood at £1,205 9s. 9d. due by defendant to the bank. Witness had also numerous interviews with defendant, and urged him to settle as soon as possible. Witness urged defendant to sell the rice, but he objected. On December 12, 1900, the bank sued defendant in the Supreme Court for £1,205, and recovered judgment for that amount with interest against him. Witness had taken considerable trouble in trying to get offers for this rice. The object of getting judgment against Thompson and Co. was to enable them to force him to sell the rice. The offers they had received for the rice they had submitted to Thompson before they got judgment against him. The rice had, at Mr. Thompson's suggestion, been offered to the military authorities, but they refused it.

At this stage counsel put in a mass of correspondence, which had passed between the bank and defendant, and also between the attorneys in the case. Counsel read a number of extracts from these letters to show that defendant was cognisant throughout of the steps taken to sell the rice, and also to show that the bank had reason to believe that the rice was weevily, and that it was advisable to dispose of it without delay.

Examined on these letters, witness said there had been negotiations for the sale of rice in Cape Town long before it was actually sold here. Efforts had been made to sell the rice in Kimberley,

Port Elizabeth, and Cape Town. A reduction had been made in the interest, and defendant credited with the amount. All the steps taken to sell the rice were taken with the full knowledge and consent of the defendant. There was a question about the rice being affected by weevils. On February 18, 1901, defendant asked that the sale of the rice should be put in the hands of Mr. Brasch, a broker in Cape Town. As a matter of fact, Mr. Brasch eventually sold the rice. In a letter defendant intimated his willingness to accept Liberman and Buirski's offer of 8s. 6d. a bag net cash on a three months' bill at 8s. 6d., but said that he wished to have the arrangement of the freight left in his hands, as he might make something out of it. That letter was endorsed, "Approved and agreed to on behalf of Mair by his agent Riches." The terms of that letter were actually carried out, Liberman and Buirski buying the rice at 8s. 6d. a bag on a three months' bill. Proceeding, witness deposed as to the arrangements ultimately made for the delivery of the rice here. There was some question about a shortage, and the East London people allowed for this 10s. 3d. a pocket. That, however, Baker, King's people would show was not the market price of the rice at East London at the time, that having been the price at which it was insured when they received it for defendant. In the letter of March 23 defendant raised for the first time the question that the rice should have been sold at East London. Witness sent defendant an account showing a balance due by him of £117 odd, and defendant wrote back saying that that was incorrect, as there was an amount of £12 10s. 8d. for which he was not liable. This was an allowance they had made Liberman and Buirski for shortage. Defendant said that the East London people who had stored the rice had to account for that, and therefore it could not be charged against him, and that the correct account was £104 11s. 9d. The bank then sent him in an account for £104 11s. 9d. The account which should have been rendered in place of the one for £117 odd should have been for £164 15s., and the bank had forgotten to add the interest from December and certain items connected with the obtaining of judgment against defendant. Witness put in an account showing the correct amounts. Defendant had asked witness to allow him to go to East London and sell the rice.

Cross-examined: Judgment might have been obtained on January 12, and not December 12. Witness had had a stormy interview with Thompson. Witness wished to force the sale of the rice, and he would not give his consent to Thompson going to East London to sell the rice and the silk. Mr. Thompson was most rude and insulting, and witness might have used strong language too. At that time there was a considerable amount of apprehension in witness's mind as to the condition of the rice, and he considered that it was dangerous to keep it longer, as there were weevils in it. He did not inspect the rice when it arrived here, and did not know whether or not it was weevily. He was under the impression that Liberman and Buirski told him there were a few weevils. Throughout the correspondence, they had made a considerable point of the weevils. Cross-examined as to the dishonoured cheque, witness said he did not think defendant could have suffered any damage on account of that, because it was only known to two parties—Mr. Seale and the African Banking Corporation. The bank itself would not disclose an affair of that kind.

David John Griffiths, manager in the firm of Baker, King and Co., at East London, said that a considerable quantity of the rice was stored in bond in witness's firm's stores. There were 3,999 bags stored, of which 300 were sold. The balance was shipped to Cape Town in February. From June to August the rice arrived, and it was stored in Baker, King and Co.'s stores, until shipped in February. Some of the rice the firm condemned, and would not allow it to be taken into the bonded store, for fear it would damage the other goods there. This amounted to about 2,000 bags. These were stored in duty-paid sheds. The other rice also had weevils, but was not so badly affected. Witness made reports to the Standard Bank from time to time about the condition of the rice. In February and March, 1901, there was no market in East London at all; they had no Indian community there. At a forced sale, it might have fetched from 5s. to 6s. They had to re-bag from 100 to 200 pockets. Witness considered there would be some waste—siltage—in handling the bags in shipping to Cape Town. He thought £12 was a reasonable amount for shortage for delivery here. When handed over to witness, the rice was insured at 10s. 3d. a bag. They paid on this rate for the 23 bags short. A certain amount of shortage would be expected when the rice was kept such a time. The price realised at Cape Town at 8s. 6d. was very good.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness saw the weevils running about outside the bags. The ship's agent refused to take the stuff after examining it. Witness did not speak to the ship's agent about there being weevils. It was not on witness's instructions that the mate's certificate was endorsed "badly damaged by weevils." There was no market for any large quantity of rice at East London at that time, even if the rice were good.

Abraham Liberman, of Liberman and Buirski, said his firm purchased the rice in February, 1901, at 8s. 6d., as per broker's note. Fifty bags were sent as samples, and the rest was up to sample. The price was a very fair one. The rice was slightly weevily. They examined a part of each shipment, and considered that there were weevils in the whole lot. The weevils could not be seen. If the rice had been kept longer in that condition and in that season witness considered it would have deteriorated.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: Witness sold some of the rice for 9s. 3½d. per pocket. There was 5 per cent. discount off this. Witness's firm did not handle the rice so sold. Other bags were sold at prices up to 9s. 9d. per bag. Witness would not say the rice was full of weevils.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness's firm, broadly speaking, made about 5 per cent. profit.

Cecil White Harry, bill clerk to the Standard Bank, Cape Town in November, 1900, said that shortly before the 14th November there was a bill for about £70 drawn on Thompson by a firm in India in connection with goods imported by Thompson. After acceptance the documents were retained by the bank, and then Thompson attached the bills of lading for certain drafts and drew drafts on customers of his. As these bills were paid they were retained by the bank for a special account, and the documents sent to the purchasers of the goods. When these bills were made Thompson tendered his cheque for the original draft on the understanding that the proceeds of the three bills paid by his customers was transferred from the special account to his ordinary account. When the bills were paid witness placed two to his credit. In one case an amount of about £23 from Oliver's, of Kimberley, was not credited when it came in through an error of witness's. It might not have been credited for a week or ten days. It was placed to the special account and overlooked. On November 14 a cheque for £30 was drawn and presented, but was dishonoured. On the 15th Thompson came to witness and complained. Witness then discovered the omission to place the amount from Oliver to defendant's credit, and called on Mr. Seale and explained the matter. The cheque was in favour of Seale. Witness also called on the African Banking Corporation (Mr. Seale's bankers), and explained the matter to the accountant. Later on the same day Thompson came to the bank, and witness explained to him what he had done. Witness said that Seale and the African Banking Corporation were satisfied. Thompson appeared satisfied.

Cross-examined by Mr. Upington: The cheque came to witness's department in the course of business, and witness dishonoured it. It came in through the A.B.C. Witness had no funds, and passed it on. The action of passing the cheque on would mean that there were no funds to meet it. It may have been presented twice. At that time there were funds, and it was through an error on witness's part that it was not paid. Witness did not mark the cheque. He would not recognise the cheque. The ledger-keeper would mark the cheque.

Henry Francis Seale, jeweller, Cape Town, said that on the 14th November, 1900, Thompson paid witness a cheque for £30 for rent. Witness paid the cheque into the African Banking Corporation on the 14th, and early on the morning of the 15th it was returned through the African Banking Corporation. Witness instructed his book-keeper to advise Mr. Thompson that the cheque had been returned. A short time after that the last witness came, and explained the circumstances to witness. On the same day Thompson came in and showed witness his bank book, saying he had funds. Witness was satisfied. The affair did not injure Thompson's credit in witness's eyes. Witness knew nothing about the cheque having been twice dishonoured. Witness put the cheque through his bankers afterwards, and it was cashed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Uppington: Witness did not tell Mr. Thompson that the cheque was twice dishonoured. There was a law-suit pending between witness and Thompson. Witness had had considerable trouble with Mr. Thompson about the lease. There was not a good deal of personal feeling between witness and Thompson. Witness had had to protect himself.

Alexander Lipp, sub-manager of the African Banking Corporation, said that in November, 1900, he was an accountant in that bank. On the morning of November 15, 1900, Mr. Thompson came to witness in an excited state, and complained about some cheque of his being dishonoured. Witness told him that until he spoke of it he was not aware of the dishonouring of the cheque. Although witness signed this returned cheque, he did so as a matter of form, and took so little notice of the name that it escaped him. This incident did not affect witness's mind with regard to Thompson's credit.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Mr. Uppington called

William Thompson, the defendant in the action, who said he was a general commission agent, and at the time of this dispute carried on business as Thompson, Ratcliffe and Co. Witness had dealt with the Standard Bank since 1875. In 1898 witness entered into this rice business. The Standard Bank undertook to issue witness the necessary letters of credit, and the late Mr. Mair became guarantor for witness for £4,000. The first shipment of rice came to hand towards the end of January, 1899. Then they came in monthly, and the first three shipments were sold as they arrived. Then the market became restricted, and the rice accumulated at East London. In December, 1900, after realising shipments to Port Elizabeth and Cape Town, there was an overdraft at the bank of £1,205, against which there was Mair's guarantee, and the rice which had accumulated at East London. From September, 1899, onwards, the bank began to press witness, and witness disposed of the Port Elizabeth stock. In regard to the pockets of rice at East London, witness did not willingly consent to the rice being brought round to Cape Town, but the threat of selling it at a sacrifice by public auction was held over his head. Then the bank told him that the rice was full of weevils, while, as a matter of fact, it was not, as witness could state from personal observation when the rice was brought round here. If witness had known that this rice was sound, and in a marketable condition, he would not have sold at 8s. 6d., had it not been for the bank holding out the threat of selling the rice by public auction, under the judgment. He wanted to go to East London to see the condition of the rice, and try to sell it, but Mr. Harsant would not allow him to go.

[Hopley, J.: But, with your business experience, you know that Mr. Harsant could not prevent you from going?]

Witness: But I understood that, under the judgment, I could not handle the rice. Continuing, witness said he thought an undue pressure had been brought to bear on him to make him consent to the rice being brought to Cape Town from East London. As to the dishonouring of the cheque, when in reality witness had a balance to his credit in the bank, that action of the Standard Bank had injured him in his business. He knew from his own knowledge that the dishonouring of the cheque had become known publicly, and that that had damaged him in his business.

Cross-examined: When witness entered into this rice speculation he never contemplated that the business would have lagged on as it had done. The war had considerably hampered witness in this speculation. Owing to these circumstances, witness was practically in the hands of the bank. Witness knew the rice had been offered to the military and others, but that no sale could be effected. Witness did not want to sell at a loss, and he knew that if he was allowed to hold on it would come out all right. Witness did not think the best price possible had been obtained in Cape Town. It was true that he himself had accepted Mr. Brasch as the broker, but before that the bank had offered the rice to B. Lawrence for 8s. 6d., and as that had become known no one would offer a higher price. As to the dishonouring of the cheque, witness repeated that that had injured him in his business, although it was impossible to expect a third party to go into the witness-box and say that.

I cannot get people to come forward and give evidence against the Standard Bank. The dishonouring of the cheque and the taking of judgment against me undoubtedly injured my business. I did not take action against the bank on the dishonoured cheque at once, because that would have made the bank much more severe over the realisation of this rice.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for plaintiff): This is a very simple case. An account of £164 15s. 10d. against the defendant, taken from the bank's books, has been put in. Mr. Thompson contends that the true amount due is £104, but the whole dispute is about the £12 10s. 8d. claimed in reconvention in respect of the silting and waste of rice from the bags; but why should the bank suffer for this? Then, again, he asserts that the bank said they would not charge interest after January 15, but there is nothing to show this, though they were writing letters by the score. The bank could have sold defendant's rice in execution, but they showed him every indulgence, as he himself admits. That even granting a reduction in the rate of interest, I do not mean to say that in doing this they were actuated by philanthropic motives—a bank naturally wishes to nurse its customers. You can dismiss the £85 from your minds. It is arrived at by taking the £104 odd from £190. As to the cheque for £30, dishonoured in November, the question is: has defendant sustained any serious damage thereby? Then, again, it has been said that Searle and Thompson have a legal dispute. That is perfectly true, but that has nothing to do with this case. I can, of course, understand that a Supreme Court judgment for £1,205 must affect a man's credit, but we are not responsible for that. I would ask you to dismiss this claim in reconvention for £500, which was not made till the 29th of July, and I ask for judgment in favour of the bank for £104.

Mr. Upington (for defendant): I should like, first of all, to take the point that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the £104 11s. 9d. on the grounds stated in paragraph 5 of their declaration. A judgment of this Court was taken out in December, 1900, for a larger sum, and they cannot now come to the Court and ask for judgment for a portion of the amount which was then given. That could only be done if they had attempted to execute the former judgment, and the Sheriff had made a return of nulla bona.

[Hopley, J.: That exception should have been taken before. The judgment may have been novated at a certain stage in these proceedings; but what do you say, Mr. Searle?]

Mr. Searle: It may be that our plea in reconvention is not quite correct, but the whole thing is a pure technicality.

Mr. Upington (continuing): If the plaintiff were now allowed to amend his declaration, the whole course of our action would be changed. I submit that we can raise this objection now, and were not bound to except. In no case should this amendment be allowed.

Mr. Searle: I apply to have the words, "there is still due by the first defendant, £164 15s. 10d." struck out.

Mr. Upington opposed the application.

[Hopley, J.: I think that the amendment should be allowed. It would not be fair to bring parties into court and then to throw out the whole case on a technicality like this. The amendment cannot prejudice defendant on the merits.]

Mr. Upington (continuing): My previous remarks sufficiently dispose of the claim of £464, and now, after reducing this to £104, plaintiffs cannot claim the larger sum. People cannot be heard to say in an indefinite way, "we will reduce our claim to so much, and you ought to be very satisfied, and to pay the reduced sum without a murmur." The accuracy of Thompson's bank-book has never been disputed, and I do not admit that the bank showed him any consideration whatever. But be this as it may, the real question is, whether the bank has taken up any unassailable position? If so, Thompson would clearly have no case. But their position is quite illegal. The manager of the bank complained that the rice was full of weevils. This Thompson denies. Then they profees to shelter themselves behind their legal position; but the whole correspondence with Thompson shows that they have acted in a most unbusiness-like manner. They first say that he owes them £117, and then they say that there were other items, amounting to £164 odd. As to special damage in respect of the dishonoured cheque, it always damages a trader's credit to have a cheque dishonoured. The matter is sure to leak out. See Rollin and Another v. Stewart (2, Weekly Reporter, p. 467). In this case £500 damages were awarded for a dishonoured cheque, though no special damages were proved. A new trial was applied for on the ground of misdirection. It is true that the damages were then reduced to £200, but these damages were substantial. In this case plaintiffs have stood on their legal rights; these rights they have exceeded, and I therefore ask for substantial damages.

Mr. Searle (in reply): I deny that we have exceeded our legal rights. The bank could have had this rice seized by the Sheriff and sold in execution; but we wished to show every consideration. If it was not full of weevils, why does not the defendant come into Court to show that it was in a sound and merchantable condition? As to Rollin v. Stewart, the excessive damages were reduced very substantially. See Goldsmith v. The Bank of Africa (1 H.C., 53), in which special damage was proved, and yet only £50 damages were awarded. I submit that our tender is ample.

His Lordship directed the jury, who retired, and after an absence of ten minutes returned with a verdict for plaintiff on the claim in convention for £104 11s. 9d., and for defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) for £50 on the third claim in reconvention (that in connection with the dishonoured cheque).

His Lordship: You find for £50 beyond the amount foregone by the plaintiff?

The Foreman: Yes, my lord.

Judgment was entered for plaintiff in convention for £104 11s. 9d., with costs in convention, and in reconvention for defendant for £50 on the third claim in reconvention, with costs, such costs to include one-third of counsels' fees. Judgment was given against the second defendant with costs.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.

DA COSTA V. DA COSTA. { 1902.
May 14th.

This was an action by Abraham da Costa, a printer, for a divorce from his wife, Abigail da Costa, on the ground of misconduct.

Mr. Alexander, who appeared for plaintiff, said that the respondent, who was now in London, had been served by edictal citation.

The plaintiff stated that he was married to the defendant in December, 1894, at the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue, Bevis Marks, London. Shortly after the marriage he went to Johannesburg, and his wife followed him shortly afterwards. They lived at Johannesburg until 1897, when a child was born, and the defendant went to London for the benefit of her health. She resided at first with his mother, and afterwards went to live with her own parents. He sold up his home in Johannesburg, and came down to Cape Town in September, 1899. He sold his printing establishment in Johannesburg, and established himself in business in Cape Town as a printer. He corresponded regularly with the defendant until last December. He sent her money for her passage to South Africa, and she should have come by the Scot in September, but never came. He then received a letter from her brother, in consequence of which he instituted these proceedings. Up to this time he had sent his wife money regularly—about £10 a month. The little girl, who was with the mother, was now about five years of age. He had no letters from the defendant. He had destroyed them. The tone of the correspondence was most affectionate and loving, and gave him no suspicion of anything being wrong.

Evidence taken in London on commission as to the misconduct was read.

The Court granted a decree of divorce, and gave the plaintiff the custody of the child of the marriage.

BUCK V. BUCK.

In this case Edward Clark Buck petitioned for a decree of nullity of marriage, alleging that the defendant was already married when he went through the ceremony of marriage with her.

Mr. Benjamin appeared for plaintiff.

Plaintiff said that on July 14, 1898, he went through a form of marriage with the defendant at Perth, Western Australia. She gave the name of Grace Blake Green, and described herself as a spinster. Two or three weeks after marriage they came out to South Africa, and he got employment on the Grand Junction Railways. He afterwards went for a holiday to England, and whilst there he learnt something about his alleged wife. He taxed her with having been married before, and she admitted that there had been a marriage, but said that her husband had divorced her. He then came back to the Colony, and resumed his employment with the Grand Junction Railways. He continued to live with the defendant until he obtained certain information, after which he ceased to live with her. She said she wanted to go to Beaufort West, and he gave her money to go there. She admitted that she had committed bigamy, and that her husband, whose name was George Adams, was still alive. There was one child of the marriage, which died.

The evidence of George Adams, which was taken on commission at Geelong, Australia, was read. He stated that he was married to the defendant in 1884, and she deserted him about August, 1891, and went to Melbourne. The marriage was still in force. The defendant had been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for bigamy.

It appeared from the marriage certificates that at the time of the first marriage the defendant was seventeen. Fourteen years later, when she went through the form of marriage with the plaintiff, she gave the age of twenty-four.

The Court pronounced a decree of nullity.

[Before BUCHANAN and HOPLEY, J.J.]

MASTER OF THE "TERESA" { 1902.
V. PURCELL, YALLOP { May 14th.
AND EVERETT. " 15th.

Freight—Lost Cargo—Demurrage.

The "Teresa" had been chartered to load a certain cargo for Table Bay. One portion of the said cargo was to be a "deck cargo" and the other was to be carried "between decks." Two-thirds of the rate charged for the latter was to be paid per ton for the former. Half the entire freight was to be paid in cash on signing bills of lading, and the remainder on delivery of the said cargo at Table Bay. In the course of the voyage the deck cargo was lost.

The owners of the "Teresa" now claimed (1) the balance of the freight (including the half for the cargo lost), (2) certain charges for demurrage.

Held, (1) that no claim could be sustained in respect of freight for the cargo lost; (2) that as the custom of the port in respect of the discharge of cargoes of timber had not been sufficiently proved, the Court would grant absolution from the instance in respect of the second claim.

This was an action to recover money alleged to be due: (1) in respect of a certain charter party; (2) of demurrage suffered by plaintiff's vessel in Table Bay.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Gaetano Mastellone, master of the Italian ship Teresa, now in Cape Town Docks; and he sues in this action on behalf of the owner of the said ship; the defendants carry on business in Cape Town as timber merchants.

2. On June 19th, 1901, a charter party was entered into between the agent for the owner of the "Teresa" and the agents in London of the defendants for the conveyance in the said ship of a cargo of timber from Mo Umea, in Sweden, to Cape Town.

3. The defendants are the consignees of the cargo and holders of the bills of lading, which incorporated the terms of the said charter party, and the defendants are bound by all the obligations of the said charter party to which document the plaintiff craves leave to refer when produced.

4. The greater portion of the cargo was stowed below deck; but a certain portion was placed on deck; the freight of the cargo below deck was £4 7s. 6d. per standard hundred; and for the deck cargo $\frac{2}{3}$ of that sum.

5. In accordance with the terms of the charter party half the freight was paid in advance, less 6 per cent. to cover all charges. According to mercantile custom the words "all charges" cover insurance on advanced freight.

6. Bad weather was experienced upon the voyage, and it became necessary for the sake of all concerned to jettison the deck cargo, and this was accordingly done.

7. The defendants refuse to pay the balance of freight, to wit, half freight due on the cargo below deck, contending that they are entitled to deduct from the amount payable by them the amount of half freight advanced on the deck cargo; to wit, the sum of £92 19s. 8d., but the plaintiff claims that such deduction cannot be made, and that he is entitled to recover the sum of £577 19s. 3d., being the full half-freight on the cargo below deck, which cargo has all been delivered to the defendants, less advances made in Cape Town.

8. The said vessel arrived in Table Bay on December 3rd, 1901, but was unable to get into dock on account of the congested state of traffic, until February 22nd, 1902.

9. The charter party provided that the cargo should be discharged as fast as the custom of the port would allow, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said lay days at 4d. per registered ton per day.

10. According to the Harbour Board Regulations and custom of the port, the cargo should have been discharged at the rate of 150 tons per day, and calculating at this rate and allowing for Sundays, holidays, and non-weather working days, as provided for in the charter party, the lay days reckoned from the date of arrival in dock expired on March 22nd, and demurrage commenced to run thereafter.

11. The amount of demurrage due from March 23rd to the date of summons in this suit, reckoned at the rate of 4d. per ton per day is £362 5s. 4d.

12. All things have happened, all times have elapsed, and all conditions have been fulfilled necessary to entitle the plaintiff to claim from the defendants payment of the said sum of £577 19s. 3d. for balance of freight, and £362 5s. 4d. for demurrage, but the defendants neglect and refuse to pay the said sums.

The plaintiff claims:—

(a) The sum of £577 19s. 3d., with interest a tempore morae.

(b) The sum of £362 5s. 4d., with interest a tempore morae.

(c) Alternative relief.

(d) Costs of suit.

To this declaration defendants pleaded as follows:—

1. The defendants admit paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4, and they admit paragraph 5, down to the words "all charges," but deny the rest of paragraph 5, and say that according to mercantile custom the words "all charges" cover insurance on advance freight insured for the benefit and on account of the charterers and consignees.

2. As to paragraph 6, the defendants say the cargo was partly jettisoned and partly lost by perils of the sea.

3. Defendants say that they contend that they are entitled to deduct the advance freight paid on deck load not delivered; that they have tendered the plaintiff a statement showing that the balance due to him was £398 0s. 5d. They say that they have paid the plaintiff this sum which in all he is entitled to. Save as above, they deny par. 7.

4. As to pars. 8 and 9, defendants admit the dates alleged, and beg to refer to the charter party, and say that in addition to the provision in par. 9 of the declaration the charter party provided that charterers and consignees were not responsible for delays or demurrage caused by causes beyond their control. They say that the Docks, berths, quays, rate, landing and delivery were all, at the time the vessel was in dock, subject to the jurisdiction, control and regulations of the Harbour Board, and that the cargo in the said ship was discharged in accordance with the said regulations and control and the custom of the port.

They deny that by the Harbour Board regulations and the custom of the port the cargo should have been discharged at the rate of 150 tons. They deny that there was any demurrage; and they say that if the vessel was delayed, or not discharged as quickly as the plaintiff alleges (which the defendants do not admit) it was through causes beyond the control of the defendants and through no breach of duty or contract on their part.

5. Save as aforesaid, and save that they refuse to pay the sums claimed, defendants deny all the allegations in pars. 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12.

The replication was general.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), for the plaintiff; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for defendants.

Mr. Close read the evidence of the captain of the Teresa, taken on commission. The witness said that he commenced the discharge of the vessel on the 25th February. According to the Harbour Board Regulations the ship was bound to discharge 150 tons a day. It did not do this because the space on the quay was blocked by the timber, which was not being removed fast enough. He had repeatedly complained of this to the defendant. If the cargo had been removed as it was discharged, they could have discharged at the rate of 150 tons a day. The ship finished discharging on the 10th April. For some five or six days he was at a bow berth, where the discharging was slower.

Mr. Searle called

Edwin Alex. Eales, superintendent of the East Quay at the Cape Town Docks, who said the vessel came into dock on the 22nd February. The average discharge was about 80 tons a day. That was without counting holidays and non-working days. The vessel had two side ports. Witness thought the discharge would be easier through side ports than through bow-ports. Most ships used the bow-ports. Through the side-ports the cargo required less handling. The cargo was not taken away so quickly as it should have been. Witness' men sorted the goods where they were landed in front of the ship. That was the usual thing. The timber was taken away with wagons; they did not take it away very fast sometimes. When the timber was not taken away quickly after having been sorted, they could have discharged, perhaps, 100 tons a day. That would be a good day's work, taking the sorting into consideration. The order for sorting was given by the consignees. If the timber had been taken away quickly without being sorted the ship could have discharged, perhaps, 110 tons a day. The total cargo was slightly under 3,000 tons. The Abner Cobun and Teresa Castellano cargoes were also consigned to defendants, and there was another vessel, the "Hugo," also at the quay at that time with cargo for defendants. The captain of the "Teresa" complained to witness, who went up and saw one of the defendant's clerks. Witness asked him why they did not send the wagons back and why they did not off-load them quickly. The clerk said they were doing their best.

Cross-examined by Sir Henry Juta: The Docks were very congested at the time. Every ship complained of the slowness of the discharge. The Harbour Board delivered the cargo. Witness's complaint to the defendants was that they kept the wagons too long. The cargo had to be sorted; that was the custom. The vessel had no bow-port; and while at bow-berths she would be able to discharge, witness thought, about 50 to 60 tons a day.

By the Court: The cargo could have been discharged more rapidly if trucks had been used. The consignees ordered wagons to be used.

Re-examined by Mr. Searle: The "Abner Cobun" discharged about 110 tons a day. There was very little delay by sorting. There was delays some days through the wagons not coming back quickly from Purcell's stores, the timber having consequently to be stacked. The "Teresa Castellano" discharged faster than the "Teresa." She (the "Teresa Castellano") also was discharging timber. The captain sorted most of the timber in the "Teresa Castellano on board.

By the Court: If delivery was to be made to places about town, wagons were used, not trucks.

Sven Linblad, delivery-clerk to the Harbour Board said he had been employed by McKenzies for three or four years prior to the Harbour Board taking over the delivery. Witness made a list of the loads which came away from the "Teresa." Some of the cargo was delivered by truck to the railway stores and to the stores of a certain firm. The rest was delivered by wagon. There was delay in getting the wagons back quickly. If there had been no delay in getting the wagons back, and if the timber had not been sorted, witness thought about 50 loads (each load between 2 and 2½ tons) a day could have been delivered. With sorting, about 30 loads could have been delivered. The actual amount delivered averaged 24 loads a day. Witness had been ordered by his superiors to stop delivery in consequence of the wagons not coming back. While the "Teresa" was being discharged witness had seen wagons—about 20—waiting to be unloaded at the defendants' place.

Cross-examined by Sir Henry Juta: When a man kept a lorry or trailer, demurrage notes were sent, charging the consignees for keeping the wagons. Witness had nothing to do with this. Witness had complained to his superiors on several occasions of not having wagons back.

This closed the evidence for the plaintiffs.

Sir Henry Juta called

George Murray, contractor, who said he made a contract with defendants to receive cargo from the "Teresa." He employed about 70 men. There were three different stores. The quicker they delivered the cargo the better for himself. There was no unnecessary delay in off-loading the timber from the wagons. There was no delay of the wagons at Purcell's store. Witness had been to the Docks on several occasions to see why more timber was not being sent up from the "Teresa." He had spoken to officials at the Docks about it. At one time, when no wagons were coming to the stores from the vessel, witness went down and he then saw timber stacked on the quay.

Christian Degna said he was now in the employ of Small and Morgan, but was for many years previously in the employ of Phillip Bros., who were large importers of timber. It was customary to sort timber in the Docks. The different sorts of boards were divided on the quay. Witness did not know whether timber was sorted for different consignees. Phillip Bros. used to have shipments for themselves alone.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The sorting of the different descriptions of timber did not cause much delay.

Herbert S. Everett, member of the defendant firm, said the cargo of the "Teresa" was imported by his firm. There had been no settlement with the insurance company, and witness offered the captain that if the company paid, they (defendants) would pay the captain. The defendants could have insured for advance freight. Up to the 22nd March, when the firm wrote to defendants concerning the matter, the question of demurrage had not been raised. The defendants had nothing to do with the delivery; they could not even take delivery at the Dock-gates. The cargo of the "Teresa" had to be delivered to various places. This, witness considered, expedited the delivery, as, for several persons, there were more wagons. When delivered at different places, more wagons could be dealt with. The sooner the firm had timber, the better it was for them. They had sold a certain amount of the cargo before the ship arrived, and could not get the money until the timber was delivered to the buyers. There was no delay on Murray's part in regard to the off-loading of the wagon. Any ship, witness thought, could discharge faster than it would be possible for the Harbour Board to take away the stuff. The whole system of discharge had been altered since October. There was nothing reasonably within the firm's power to facilitate the discharge left undone. If the firm had detained the Harbour Board wagons, they would have been charged demurrage. The Harbour Board was "pretty smart" about that. No demurrage charge had been made in respect of this timber. If the timber had been left on the quay through the firm's default, they would have been charged rent. No such charge had been levied by the Board. Witness had never heard of a timber vessel discharging 150 tons a day.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: There were six vessels in the Dock containing cargoes of timber for witness's firm at the same time the "Teresa" was discharging. The cargoes of two of these ships were delivered to other people, and from one-quarter to three-quarters of the other four ships' cargoes was delivered to the firm's stores. The firm instructed Murray to engage sixty or seventy men. Witness considered this number to be sufficient. It was never brought to witness's notice that the Harbour Board complained of the firm detaining the wagons. The firm was put under great pressure at this time, owing to the large amount of timber they were receiving. They at one time offered to undertake the discharge and delivery of the whole of their timber cargoes, but that the Harbour Board rejected. They did not, however, offer to place any wagons at the Board's disposal on the occasion in question.

Re-examined: All the captains complained of the slow discharge at this port.

Witness never knew a master of a vessel who did not complain of this; it seemed a part of the contract.

Mr. Searle, K.C., for plaintiff: We have two points to consider. (1) The terms of the charter party, and (2) the circumstances under which the vessel was discharged. As to (1) the vessel had deck cargo and cargo below the hatches, but the defendants now say that the whole of the deck cargo having perished, they are entitled to take advantage of the freight we have paid on that. It is true that freight paid in advance cannot be recovered—Carver 637, 3rd Edit. They say that though they could not recover they may set off this amount; but see Scrutton, 248, Art. 137, and judgment of Esher, M.R. (18 Q.B.D. 77) and Allison v. Bristol Insurance Company (1 H. L. 203). It has been said that where separate freight has been paid on different portions of the cargo, the portion paid on the lost cargo can be recovered. But much depends upon the terms of the charter party. This case I have alluded to came before Brett, L.J. in C.P. It was taken to Ex. Ch., then to H.L., where there was great difference of opinion among the judges. That case, however, is already distinguishable from this. There, Esher, M.R., pointed out that in this way the owner might get more per ton delivered as freight than he had bargained for. As to the deck goods, it is true the freight is lower, but then the insurance is higher, and defendant is not entitled to be paid for 'tween deck cargo by reckoning in what he had been paid in advance for such cargo. Suppose that two charterers had insured, one for deck cargo and the other for 'tween deck cargo. If half had been paid in advance and half the cargo had been lost, you cannot apportion the insurance. In the case I have mentioned the cargo was a uniform cargo; here it is not. See Carver, Sec. 569. Here the deck cargo has been totally lost, so defendants cannot bring what has been paid into consideration.

[Buchanan, J.: The House of Lords was unanimous in Allison's case.]

Yes; but the majority of the judges called in to advise their lordships differed from the judgment of the House of Lords. Esher, afterwards M.R., was particularly emphatic. This case is not on all fours with that, and therefore that does not bind us. The Court never decided that all advanced freight could be brought into account if a portion of the argo in respect of which it had been paid was lost.

As to the second point, the words of the charter party are rather strong. "The ship is to discharge as far as the custom of the port will allow." If the ship had to discharge 150 tons a day she would have discharged by March 22nd. We admit that demurrage ran from April 10th at £27 17s. 4d. a day. As to the circumstances under which the vessel discharged the officials of the Harbour Board had to admit that the vessel was delayed in her discharge, and that this arose from sorting and from detention of the wagons by defendants. But we have nothing to do with neglect on the part of the consignee. In McAloney v. Spilhaus (11 Sheil, 509), it was shown that the onus of having shown no negligence was thrown on the consignee. If we once prove the custom of the port, it is for the consignee to disprove negligence. I gather that one defence set up will be that it is the custom of the port to delay delivery, but every custom must be reasonable. The clerk of the Harbour Board admits that 50 wagon loads of goods would have gone away had it not been for the sorting, and that would give from 120 to 150 tons a day.

[Buchanan, J.: Was the ship bow on to the jetty?]

We do not know how long she was allowed to lie bow on. Everett admits that the delay was due to the sorting and not to the fact that the ship was not discharging fast enough. Twenty-three of a crew were at work, and were often kept idle because the consignees could not send wagons fast enough. There was a block of goods in front of the ship, and on two occasions the Harbour Board forbade more cargo to be landed, until that already discharged had been removed. The captain frequently complained to defendants about these delays. The evidence shows that the consignees could have taken much quicker discharge, and it would seem that by the Harbour Board regulations sailing vessels of this class should discharge about 125 tons a day. Instead of that an average of only 80 tons was discharged. It was for defendants to take special precautions in order that the vessel should not be delayed.

[Buchanan, J.: What do you say about the last clause in the charter party, viz., that the charterer will not be responsible for delay?]

That point was discussed in McAloney v. Spilhaus. Defendants did not use due diligence in taking delivery.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for defendants: We cannot draw distinctions between the wording of various charter parties. Were we to attempt to do this we should have innumerable distinctions and innumerable cases. But we do not find that English cases make any distinctions of this kind. Freight is only paid on cargo delivered unless a lump sum is paid. We cannot draw distinctions between the wording of charter parties. Freight is only paid on the cargo delivered, unless a lump sum is paid. See Carrer (pp. 645 and 646, Sec. 569). Leggett on Charter parties (p. 194), after mentioning Allison v. Bristol Marine Insurance Co. ((L.B., 1 Apl. c. 208) case says that freight paid in advance cannot be recovered back on account of failure to deliver cargo. Maude and Pollock (v. 1, p. 365) quote the same case and refer to it in a foot-note. The only possible distinction is between the payment of a lump sum as freight and the payment on cargo delivered. Take the case of the Union-Castle Co., and suppose they give up a portion of the passenger accommodation on one of their ships to cargo, could they charge higher freight for that particular part of the cargo? In the present case no allocation was made of different parts of the cargo.

A contract of freight is a contract to pay the shipowner for goods carried and delivered. Why, then, should the owner be in a better position because he gets a portion of the freight prepaid?

[Buchanan, J.: Suppose the cargo consists of two kinds of goods?]

Then if two consignees prepay half on each kind, each would lose the half he had prepaid. It may well be that you cannot sue on a part on which there has been no consideration, but you can set off any payment which has been made. These principles are well established both in our law and in English law. The fact that different goods are carried at different rates does not involve an allocation of various proportions of the freight to different things. As to the demurrage, the history of that part of the case is very simple. The regulations produced were not in force when the captain came in. Under those regulations a ship of over 1,000 tons had to discharge at least 150 tons a working day.

[Mr. Searle: My copy of the regulations had certain interlineations in pencil from which I read.]

I cannot imagine that counsel's attorneys gave him a set of manufactured regulations. I do not admit that a ship of 1,000 tons was bound to discharge more than 75 tons a day. As to time charters, see Scrutton (Art. 131 and 133). He there contrasts time charters, and charters without time. As to demurrage, on what does the applicant base his claim? The captain draws attention to the Teresa Castelon, which was docked on February 27 and discharged on March 31st. She had 2,256 tons on board, so she discharged at the rate of 83 tons a day. In the new regulations a distinction is drawn between sailing ships, steamers with timber, and other steamers. According to Sec. 10 of the declaration, and to the port regulations, 150 tons a day ought to have been discharged. The captain says that the lay days expired on March 22nd; but what lay days? There could be no lay days save on the assumption that we were bound to discharge 150 tons a day, and that that is the custom of the port. That is the whole of plaintiff's case. If demurrage is chargeable, from when does it run. If Sundays, wet days, and non-working days are taken into account it is impossible to say when the demurrage began. There is no regulation to the effect that 150 tons a day must be discharged, and no one was called to prove the custom of the port. In case of a time charter, the consignee has to prove his case. In a non-time charter the onus of proving diligence rests on the ship. The Harbour Board has the whole control of discharging and of delivering in town. We cannot sue the Harbour Board for not discharging our ship; we can say nothing till the cargo is over the ship's side; then we might sue for negligent delivery.

[Hopley, J.: Is there any privity of contract between the owner and the Harbour Board?]

There is privity of law. The Harbour Board are the statutory agents of the ship, and they will not allow the public to interfere until six days after the goods have been landed. Again there is no proof that the Harbour Board was negligent. We have nothing to do with discharge; and as to delivery no attempt has been made to prove negligence on the part of the Harbour Board. What then caused the delay—was it want of wagons, the handling of the goods on the quay, sorting, or discharge over the bows? How can we apportion the demurrage? After plaintiff's counsel gave up the 150 tons, he said there were not sufficient wagons. There was no evidence of delay in sorting the cargo, and not a word of anything of the kind on the pleadings.

Mr. Searle (in reply): As to the freight, see Weir and Co. v. Girvin and Co. (Q.B.D., 1899, v. 1, 193). The case was taken to the Court of Appeal (Q.B.D., 1900, v. 1, 45), which affirmed the judgment of the Court below. Allison's case was quoted in the Court below by Russell, L.C.J. There a portion of the cargo was destroyed before freight had been paid. I do not agree with the defendant's counsel as to the rationale of advanced freight. See the judgments of Brett, L.J., and of Penzance, L.J., in Allison's case (p. 245 of the report). See also Carver's remarks on this case. From what he says in Section 569, he clearly does not think that the principles on which the case was decided should be further extended. They paid half freight on both classes of cargo, but the one part cannot be set off against the other. As to demurrage, we say that it was the custom of the port to discharge 150 tons a day, and we prove that by putting in the Harbour Board regulations. As to the regulations affecting a ship of less than 1,000 tons, these are divided into two classes, viz., timber ships and other ships. The regulations then proceed to provide for ships of over 1,000 tons, and it would be absurd to suppose that they had been forgotten. See Wright v. New Zealand Shipping Co. (4 Exc. D., p. 665). This and other cases were discussed in Hick v. Rodocanachi (2 Q.B.D., 1891, part 2, p. 626—(see also p. 635). The time taken in removing the goods from the quay showed negligence somewhere, probably on the part of the consignees. When we have once proved the custom of the port, that settles the whole case. See Carver (Sec. 614), who quotes Ashcroft v. Crow Orchard Co. and Keaton v. Pearson (31 L.J., Ex. 1), quoted in McAloney v. Spilhaus (11 Sheil, p. 509).

Buchanan, J.: This is an action brought on behalf of the owners of the ship Teresa against the defendants upon a certain charter party entered into on their behalf. Two questions arise under the charter party. One is the claim for balance of freight, and the second is the claim for demurrage. As to the freight, the ship was chartered to load certain timber for Table Bay, Cape Town, at a specified rate per standard for cargo placed below the deck, and two-thirds of that rate for cargo placed above the deck. The cargo placed above the deck was lost on the voyage from Sweden to the Cape, and only the cargo below the deck was delivered. Reckoning the amount of timber put on board the ship at the port of lading the freight according to the bill of lading for the cargo above deck would have been £185 13s. 6d., and the amount for the cargo below deck £3,096 16s. 6d. The charter party contracted that one-half of the freight was to be paid in cash on signing the bills of lading, less a certain percentage to cover charges, and the remainder in cash on right and true delivery of the cargo at the port of discharge. When the vessel came to be discharged, as only the cargo below deck was delivered, the freight earned by the ship on the cargo delivered was £3,096 16s. 6d. The amount of freight already advanced was £1,641, which left a balance of £1,455 16s. 6d. Defendants have now paid the whole of this sum. The plaintiff, however claims the further sum of £92 16s. 9d., which is equivalent to one-half the freight which would have been due on the deck cargo, had the deck cargo been delivered. The question in dispute between the parties is whether the whole amount of freight advanced at the time of lading can be deducted in settlement of account or whether the amount of the advance must be reduced by one-half of the freight for the deck cargo. The plaintiffs claim that the defendants are not entitled to take the £92 16s. 9d. into account, because advance freight on cargo lost cannot be recovered. Now, it is a settled principle in English law that freight advanced cannot be recovered, but this is not an action to recover freight which has been advanced. The question is one of settlement of accounts between the parties. Plaintiff has earned £3,096. He has been paid an amount in advance of £1,641, and the whole balance of £1,455 has been paid to him, and there is nothing more due by defendant to plaintiff on the contract to pay freight. That is the way in which I look at the contract between the parties. The technical rule of English law that freight once advanced cannot be recovered does not apply to this case at all. It is simply a settlement of accounts between the parties. The ship earned so much, and it has been paid so much before lading, and she is bound to be paid the balance. The question of insurance does not arise in this case. There is no doubt the owner of the ship could not recover freight which was not "at risk," but he could insure all that had not yet been paid, and if he had done so he would have recovered from the insurers the freight he had lost through the deck cargo being washed away. This was a ship entirely laden for defendants, and the fact that part of the cargo was stowed on deck and part below does not in this case make any difference to the principle which has been laid down. This being so in regard to the first claim, that of freight, plaintiffs must be held to have failed so far in their action, and judgment must be given for the defendants thereon. On the second claim, that for demurrage, the ship began to unload in dock on the 25th of February and finished on the 10th of April. This action, however, was brought on the 4th of April, before the days for demurrage expired. Demurrage is claimed under this clause of the charter party: "the ship to be discharged as fast as the custom of the port will allow." Now what is the custom of the port? The custom of the port at the time the ship had to discharge was for a ship to come into dock, and discharge there under the control and under the guidance of the Harbour Board. What the custom of the port is as to the rate the timber is to be taken out, there is very little evidence indeed. Some evidence is supplied by the regulations of the Harbour Board. On reading these, all one can find applicable to timber ships is that which says that vessels under 1,000 tons gross register shall discharge 75 tons a day. This ship discharged at the rate of about 80 tons per working day, and, consequently, if this regulation applied the custom of the port has been met. The ship was of larger tonnage, but the evidence is not clear whether that would make any difference in the rate of discharge. The authorities cited by Mr. Searle lay down that a condition like this would in a sense become certain if you could fix the time allowed for discharge by the custom of the port. If there was a hard and fast regulation which required a vessel of this size to discharge 100 tons a day, or 150, or even 200 tons, that might perhaps be taken as the custom of the port. But there is also another point which arises in this case. I don't mean to say that the charters would be altogether absolved, but it might be a question as to whether the delay is the fault of the charterers. The charter party says that the charterers are not answerable for delays occasioned by war or other accidents or causes beyond their control. I am not prepared to say that because it was the Harbour Board who discharged the ship it is a cause altogether beyond the control of the charterers, but still it is a question to be considered. As, however, it is not raised in this action, and as the custom of the port is not conclusively proved, and as the whole of the demurrage claimed is not included in this action, I think judgment on the demurrage claim should be absolution from the instance. On the freight claim, judgment will be for the defendants. On the claim for demurrage, judgment will be given for absolution from the instance, and as the plaintiff has altogether failed in his action he must pay the costs.

Hopley, J., said he was of the same opinion, and for the same reasons.

SALT RIVER CEMENT WORKS { 1902.
V. RABBICK { May 15th

Interdict — Action — Motion —
Costs.

Provisional interdict granted on motion to restrain the lessee of a quarry and sandhill from taking stones from land situated some distance from the quarry, but the respondent alleging that the portion from which he took the stones was within the boundaries pointed out to him by the applicant before the lease was made, the latter, who denied the allegation, was ordered to bring an action within a limited time, and the question of costs was reserved.

This was an application for an interdict restraining Richard Rabbick from removing certain stone on ground leased by applicants from the Glencairn Estates.

It appeared from the affidavits that the applicants leased to the respondent the right to remove stone from a certain quarry at Glencairn, near Simon's Town, and to remove sand from a sand-hill on the property. The plaintiffs claimed that the respondent was contravening the agreement of lease by removing stones from the surface of the property generally, instead of confining himself to the particular quarry and hill leased to him. The respondent alleged that the boundaries of the property were shown to him when it was leased to him, and he had never removed stone from beyond those boundaries. To this the applicants replied that only the quarry and the sand-hill were pointed out to the respondent, and it was clearly understood that the stone should be removed from the quarry only. No boundaries were pointed out, as alleged by the respondent.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for applicant; Mr. Schreiner, K.C., for respondent.

Sir Henry Juta K.C.: There is a trolley line to the quarry in question, and the limits of the quarry are well defined. This quarry the lessors (the present applicants) wished to develop. Surface boulders are not a quarry.

[De Villiers, C.J.: There is a direct conflict of evidence as to the facts on the affidavits.]

The respondent says that before he entered into the lease he was shown the boundaries of the property, and he claims the right to take stone from any part of it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is not that what the lease amounts to?]

No, the term "quarry" is well defined, and the fact that here a trolley line leads right up to it renders any doubt as to the locality impossible. If I lease a quarry on a farm, I am not leasing the whole farm.

[De Villiers, C.J.: May not a quarry be on the surface?]

Yes, but you cannot call untouched ground a quarry. Respondent wants to quarry anywhere, but his lease clearly speaks of "a quarry and a sand-hill." Another point is, that the evidence clearly shows that respondent has been selling us stone at the rate of 22s. per six tons. We should certainly not sell him the right to take this same stone for a royalty of 4s. 6d. per six tons.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for respondent): We have a three years' lease, and it cannot be said that in order to get stone we are bound to go deeper and deeper into the quarry and not to touch any stone on the surface. The space within which quarrying was to be carried on was neither defined nor pointed out. The respondent said that Mitchell pointed out the boundaries of the farm. Mitchell does not deny this, and Cran (who was present) does not deny it. The trolley line ran to the quarry, but did not define it. Our lease allows us to quarry on the estate, and that is what we are doing by removing boulders.

[Hopley, J.: But to remove surface stone is not quarrying.]

If once it is admitted that we may break fresh surface ground, my case is made. We only took the land for the sake of the stone. Davidson, the manager, knew where the stone we supplied came from; and as to the royalty, a royalty of 4s. 6d. on 22s. is a very high ore. Again, the company admit that they sold some of the sand, and yet they claim to have protected our rights. In this case there is no question of irreparable damage, and hence this is not a case for an interdict. No doubt, if this interdict were granted, the applicant's next step would be an ouster on the ground that we have not taken 16 trucks of six tons each per week from the quarry.

Sir H. Juta (in reply): We are not seeking to oust the respondent from the property he has leased, but to interdict him from coming on property which he has not leased. We are quite willing to allow him to work the quarry in the usual way, but we object to his working half a dozen quarries. If one of these holes is 50 or 100 yards from another nobody can say that they are the same quarry. If you hire a quarry you certainly do not hire the right to go all over the estate to look for stone. We only ask for a temporary interdict restraining the respondent from taking stone from any place, save the quarry, pending an action to be brought.

Mr. Schreiner remarked that the lease gave the lessee the right to take stone anywhere within the area pointed out to him. For anything they knew the whole property might have been pointed out.

[Buchanan, J.: You can hardly say that you were at liberty to go anywhere within an area of 116 morgen.]

There is nothing to show that we could not. I submit that this is not a matter which should be decided on motion.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the Court were to be guided by the lease alone, I think the applicants would be held to be right in their contention, and would be entitled to confine the respondent to a certain defined quarry and sand-hill, because I think the lease means that only the quarry worked by the applicants at the time the lease was entered into was to be worked by the respondent. I certainly do not consider that the respondent would be entitled to go over the whole of this farm of 118 morgen and take out stone anywhere; in fact Mr. Schreiner does not go so far as that. What he does contend for is that, inasmuch as the boundaries of the quarry were pointed out to the respondent before the lease was entered into, he is entitled, at all events, to work within these boundaries. Unfortunately on this point the evidence is very contradictory. The respondent said these boundaries were pointed out to him by Mitchell and Crann. This Mitchell denies, and while Crann does not deny it in so many words, he certainly does not admit it. Upon the affidavits, it is impossible to decide which is right, and it must be decided by action. But, in the meantime, great injury might be done to applicants if the respondent were allowed to go indiscriminately over this land, which he said was pointed out to him, and proceed to open quarries. Therefore, I think a case has been made out for a provisional interdict restraining respondent from working anywhere except on the quarry which had been worked by applicants themselves. A provisional interdict will be granted, and the applicants will have to bring an action for the purpose of having this interdict made perpetual. The interdict will therefore continue until the 15th of August, by which time action must be brought. As to the costs that question should be reserved pending the action. I am satisfied there cannot be much injury done the respondent in the meanwhile, because he will be entitled to take stone from the quarry from which, at all events, he can at present take stone, but if he suffers any injury from the interdict, he will be entitled to claim in reconvention any damages he may sustain. A condition of the interdict must be that the time for giving notice in writing be extended from the 1st to the 31st August.

Their lordships concurred.

EDGCOMBE V. HODGSON. { 1902.

Restraint of trade—Public policy — Consideration — Facts or covenants—Interdict.

In the absence of proof that the applicant is seeking to obtain an unfair advantage, the Court will, by interdict, enforce a covenant in reasonable restraint of trade if there is bona fide consideration for such covenant.

This was an application for an interdict restraining the respondent Hodgson and his wife from carrying on the trade or profession of a photographer in the town or division of Beaufort West, or from being connected with any such business or from selling or causing to be sold photographs or pictures in the said town or division.

From the affidavits it appeared that the respondent and his wife were engaged by the applicant under a contract, whereby they agreed not to set up business on their own account in competition with the applicant. In January last the applicant discovered that the respondents were secretly carrying on business for their own benefit, and he gave them a month's notice. In February he found that they had opened business as photographers in Beaufort West. The respondent alleged that he was not informed of the nature of the agreement when he signed it. He stated that the applicant consented to his doing work for himself in his spare time, and he ascribed the applicant's action to jealousy. He asserted that there was ample scope in Beaufort West for another photographer.

The Chief Justice asked Sir Henry Juta what he said was the consideration for respondents undertaking not to carry on business as photographers in the town or division.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for applicant): This is a very clear case. The first respondent does not deny the terms of the agreement entered into with the applicant. Possibly applicant wanted to monopolise the trade in Beaufort West. We have, however, nothing to do with that; respondent took service under applicant's conditions, and that service was good consideration for signing the contract.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The employer could give a month's notice.]

Still there was consideration. Respondent might have refused to enter our service; and when he did enter it Edgcombe clearly wanted to keep him on, but he would not keep to his agreement.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Can you say that if a man once signs such an agreement he is for ever debarred from competing?]

I must go that length, and as to the sufficiency of the consideration we cannot go into that as long as there was good consideration. The first agreement, made in September, 1897, bound respondent not to compete under a penalty of £200. That agreement was never annulled, and respondent remained in Edgcombe's employ for five years. Surely there was ample consideration.

[De Villiers, C.J., cited Story's Equity Jurisprudence as to the validity of agreements.]

Mr. P. S. Jones (for respondent): As to consideration, the argument for applicant is based partly on the first contract. That contract is void because it is in general restraint of trade. It fixes no limit either as to time or space. As to the second contract, there is no consideration.

[Buchanan, J.: Why should not £12 a month be a consideration?]

Because respondent got nothing which he had not before. He already had his £12 a month and was free to compete, the first contract being void. Hence the second contract must fail for want of consideration. Contracts in whole or even in partial restraint of trade must be very strictly construed. I submit that the Court will not grant the second portion of the prayer, because by doing so it would take the bread out of a man's mouth.

[Hopley, J.: What would there be to prevent him from opening a shop at Beaufort West and putting in a bogus manager?]

The 3rd clause of the agreement. I only ask that he should be allowed to take service with any photographer in Beaufort West. As to partial restraint of trade, see Bartholomew v. Stableford (7 Sheil, 14).

[Hopley, J.: Here there is no limitation as to place out of Beaufort West.]

That is so, but where the consideration is so very slight and so doubtful, I submit the Court will not grant the application.

Sir H. Juta (in reply): No authority has been quoted for the respondent in opposition to the ordinary principle that if any good consideration has been given a contract is valid. The views of jurists as to restraint of trade have changed very much since Storey's time. Here the consideration was retention in applicant's service and future wages. See Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Co., Ltd. (Ap. H.L., 1894, p. 535). There a contract was upheld by which a man bound himself not to practice his profession for 25 years. Now the Court will in such cases hold a man to his contract; formerly the Courts took a different view.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea May 20th.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The covenant or pact which the Court is asked to enforce is undoubtedly in restraint of trade, for it prohibits the respondents, after the termination of their engagement, from carrying on the trade or profession of photographers, either directly or indirectly, in the town and division of Beaufort West. The engagement of the respondents as assistants in the applicant's business as photographers was a monthly one, at a salary of £12 and £6 a month respectively, with liberty to either party to terminate it at one month's notice. The question does not now arise whether the Court would have enforced the covenant if the applicant had, without any fault on the respondents' part, put an end to the engagement by giving them a month's notice. In such a case it might have been justly contended that the applicant was taking an unfair advantage of the respondents by insisting upon the prohibition without giving them the full benefit of the employment upon which the prohibition was founded. In the granting or withholding of interdicts the Court possesses large discretionary powers, more especially where the applicant has his remedy for damages for the breach of the covenant or agreement. Where the Court is satisfied that the party asking for an interdict is seeking to obtain an unfair advantage, it would be quite justified in declining to interfere and in leaving him to his action for damages. In the present case, however, the evidence is clear that the agreement was entered into by the respondents with a full knowledge of its effects upon their prospects, and that during the subsistence of their engagement they broke their contract by indirectly carrying on the business of photography. The applicant thereupon gave the month's notice, and thereafter the respondents, in breach of their covenant, opened business as photographers in Beaufort West and advertised the fact by means of posters in the streets and notices in the local newspaper. The question has never been pointedly raised whether and to what extent the English doctrine relating to restraints of trade is applicable in this colony. Voet (2, 14, 15), in his enumeration of matters which may properly be provided for by means of binding pacts, excludes promises, the performance of which would be contrary to law or tend to the injury of the public. As an illustration, he points out in a later passage (2, 14, 21), that pacts in restraint of marriage are invalid, as being contrary to sound public policy for the encouragement of lawful marriages. He does not mention the encouragement of trade as a matter of public policy, but in our time it can hardly be doubted that any general restraint of trade must necessarily be detrimental to the community. If, therefore, in the present case the covenant had been that the respondents should be prohibited from carrying on their lawful occupation as photographers in any part of South Africa, or even in this colony, I should have refused to enforce a covenant which would be detrimental to the public without any corresponding advantage to the person in whose favour it has been made. But the restraint was a partial one, being confined to the town and district of Beaufort West, and therefore affords a reasonable protection to the applicant without entirely depriving the public of the Colony of the benefit of the respondents' services in their trade or profession. In regard to the consideration for the restraint, if there had been none, or if it had been merely colourable, I should have been prepared to hold that the restraint is invalid. But there had been a previous breach of an undertaking by the first respondent, who is the husband of the second respondent, and one of the conditions upon which he was employed was that the restraint in question should be imposed upon him. As to both respondents, I am satisfied from the evidence that the salaries to be paid to them were accepted as consideration, not only for performing their services during the subsistence of their engagement, but also for consenting to the restraint after the termination of the engagement. There are really no facts in dispute, and therefore there will be no necessity for granting a provisional interdict only. The Court will order that the respondents be interdicted as prayed, with costs.

Buchanan, J., said he fully concurred in the judgment.

Hopley, J., also concurred.

PENKIN AND GIN V. GIN.

Mr. Alexander asked that this matter be allowed to stand over until the last day of term.

Postponement allowed.

Postea, May 31st.

On the motion of Mr. Rowson, the rule was made absolute.

IMPEY V. HADJE.

Mr. B. Upington moved that the rule nisi, restraining respondent from alienating certain property, be made absolute.

Rule made absolute as prayed.

PETITION OF HELEN AND ARTHUR PARKES.

Mr. De Waal moved that an award of arbitrators be made a rule of Court.

Granted.

Re ESTATE OF THE LATE EDMUND TILLEY.

Mr. Upington moved for confirmation of the sale of certain land in the above estate to Mrs. Tilley, widow of the late Edmund Tilley. The petition set forth that Mrs. Tilley and Mr. C. Bruce Sellar were executors testamentary in the above estate, one of the principal assets in which were lands and buildings situated on the Kloof-road. This property was on August 13 last put up for sale by public auction, and knocked down to Mrs. Tilley as the highest bidder for the sum of £2,115. As the purchaser is one of the executors in the estate, an order was required from the Court confirming the sale, and authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer. There was a verifying affidavit from the auctioneers stating that the property had been put up for public sale and sold to Mrs. Tilley for £2,115, and that there was a fair attendance of buyers.

Order granted as prayed.

Re MINOR BUTLER.

Mr. P. S. Jones moved for leave to the father and natural guardian of the above minor to pay out certain moneys in which the minor was interested. The petitioner asked leave to raise money, for the education of the minor, on a life policy which the petitioner had ceded to his minor son.

The Master had recommended that the petition be granted.

Order granted in terms of the Master's report.

Ex parte MALAN.

Sir Henry Juta, K.C., appeared for the petitioner, who under a mutual will with his wife, now dead, bequeathed certain property to his sister and her children. This formed portion of other property which the testator wished to sell, but he could not do so without this portion, and, therefore, he proposed to substitute another piece of land in place of the piece which had been bequeathed.

The Master's report was favourable.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte HUMAN.

Mr. Buchanan moved for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass transfer of certain property. The petitioner in March, 1898, purchased for £21 certain land at Beaufort West which he had transferred to himself in trust for his minor son. At that time it was his intention to build on the said land, but he was now unable to carry out that intention, and as he could now sell the land for £40, he believed it would be more profitable to do so, and invest the money more beneficially.

The Master had reported that he had no objection to the application being granted, provided the proceeds of the sale be paid into the Guardians' Fund.

Counsel asked, however, that the father be allowed to invest the money in a way more profitable to the minor.

The Chief Justice: When the father gets an investment more profitable, he can apply again to the Master.

An order was granted in terms of Master's report.

Re ESTATE OF THE LATE LE ROUX.

Mr. Hull moved for leave to the executor to sell certain property belonging to the estate, the amount so realised to be applied to the reduction of a bond upon property in the estate.

Order granted.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

CRAIK V. ROBERTSON. { 1902.
May 16th.
" 22nd.

Pledge of movables — Sale of goods pledged.

Where respondent had pledged certain goods without making delivery thereof, and afterwards sold them by public auction; the Court granted a rule calling upon respondent to show cause why the auctioneers should not be restrained from paying over the proceeds of the sale to the respondent: the said rule to operate as an interim interdict, but with leave to any third person to apply for a discharge of the said rule.

Mr. Wilkinson applied, as a matter of urgency, for an order restraining the respondent from parting with the proceeds of the sale of certain furniture, which sale was to take place that morning. From the petition it appeared that the respondent, James Tindal Robertson, had been employed by the applicant, David Craik, provision merchant, Long-street, Cape Town, as a salesman, and drew money on a running account, which had become overdrawn. In March last the respondent owed the applicant £145, and an agreement was arrived at whereby the respondent consented to pass a mortgage bond on certain furniture at No. 7, De Lorentz-street, in favour of the applicant. The applicant alleged that the respondent was attempting to deprive him of his security by the sale of the furniture.

Mr. Wilkinson (for applicant): This is a matter of urgency, as the sale of these goods is advertised to take place this morning. No damage will result to respondent if the order is granted, but irreparable damage may be done to respondent if it is not. We do not seek to restrain the sale, but only to attach the proceeds in the hands of the auctioneer.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the use of your bond?]

It is valid as between debtor and creditor. Of course, it is of no value as against other creditors without delivery.

[Buchanan, J.: In the event of the insolvency of the pledger it would not give preference even over concurrent creditors.]

That is so.

[Buchanan, J.: Is this a voluntary sale by the debtor?]

We do not know, but we are not trying to restrain the sale, but only the delivery of the proceeds.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You have never taken delivery of these goods?]

No, but I submit that as between ourselves and the debtor the bond is valid. He is bound to make delivery. for a pledge to mortgage property implies an engagement to do everything necessary in order to make that mortgage effective.

[Buchanan, J.: A bond over movables is not made effective by registration.]

No, I do not argue that.

The respondent was in default.

The Chief Justice said: Prima facie there appears to have been some breach of faith on the part of the respondent, but it is by no means clear that the applicant would be entitled to succeed in the particular form of action mentioned by him. He will have to consider what action, if any, can be brought when the rule is made returnable. For the present, the Court will grant a rule calling upon the respondent to show cause on Thursday next why the auctioneers, Messrs. Stamper and Zoutendyk, should not be restrained from paying over the proceeds of the sale to the respondent, pending a further order of the Court, the rule to operate as an interdict in the meantime, with leave reserved to any third party concerned—there may be other creditors—to apply to the Court for the discharge of the interdict.

Postea, May 22.

Mr. Wilkinson applied to have the above rule made absolute.

Mr. Langenhoven (for respondent) applied to have the rule discharged. A letter was put in by respondent to show that the goods had never been pledged to the applicant.

Mr. Wilkinson (for applicant): The only use of this letter is to show that there was a partnership between these parties.

Mr. Langenhoven (for respondent): I wish to abtain as much as possible from arguing on the merits. The petition is not in agreement with petitioner's affidavits, particularly as to the amount of his overdraft. The applicant wishes the Court to believe that he had advanced, first, £137, and then a further sum of £12, to a man who used to try to get run over by tramcars, and in other ways did not act like a responsible being. That is very improbable on the face of it. There is no evidence of the existence of any partnership, and the affidavits tend to show that there is none. Assuming that the Court should refuse the interdict asked for, the applicant could sequestrate the respondent's estate. If the amount is due, he can sue for it, and if not yet due, he can sue to have a bond passed as security. He is, therefore, not without remedy; nor can he show any clear right. He has certainly no ius in rem over the goods pledged, since there was no delivery; and I submit that the Court will not grant an interdict in rem when applicant's only right is in personam.

Mr. Wilkinson was heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J., in giving judgment, said: When this application was made to the Court in the first instance I intimated that it was a matter of considerable doubt, and the Court refused to grant an interdict, but granted a rule nisi calling upon the respondent to show cause why an interdict should not be granted. The respondent has now come in, and denies that any such agreement as is alleged by the applicant was ever entered into. The applicant, in order to make himself secure, might have obtained delivery of the furniture, or he might have got a bond, but the whole thing is done in a very loose manner, and there was merely a verbal undertaking. The rule is discharged with costs.

DADA V. MUNICIPALITY OF 1902.
MAFEKING. (May 16th.

Municipalities — Regulations —
New buildings—Construction of Municipal Acts.

The 5th section of Act 22 of 1893 empowers municipalities to frame regulations for prohibiting the erection of objectionable buildings. The 4th section of Act 20 of 1896 greatly enlarges their powers. The later Act was not extended to the municipality of Mafeking until in 1897 and after its passing, but before it was so extended that municipality framed detailed regulations for municipal approval of the plans for new buildings. In 1901 the appellant, after obtaining municipal approval of certain plans, deviated from those plans in the construction of the building, and was convicted of a contravention of the regulations; but the summons did not allege and the evidence did not prove that the building as constructed was objectionable.

Held, that the liability of the defendant must be decided under the Act of 1893, and that the summons was bail.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Mafeking. The appellant was prosecuted by the Municipality for contravening section 10 (sub-section 5) of the Municipal Regulations, in that he unlawfully commenced certain new buildings on erf No. "L.C." before the plans thereof were approved by the Municipal Council, and, secondly, that he erected new buildings not in accordance with the plans and specifications approved. The regulations under which appellant was summoned provided that no new buildings or any excavations for the foundation thereof should be commenced without the consent of the Municipality; and that no new buildings should be built except in accordance with the plans or specifications approved of. The grounds of appeal were that the regulations were ultra vires, and that the evidence recorded did not show that the buildings in question were objectionable in terms of the power which the Municipality had to prohibit objectionable buildings. The evidence for the Municipality was to the effect that three rooms (not shown on the plans) were built by defendant at the back of premises approved by the Council, and that certain rooms in the premises approved had been constructed in a manner not in accordance with the plans. It was contended for the appellant that the regulations were ultra vires of the power given by Act 22 of 1893, which prohibited the erection of objectionable buildings, and that if the Municipality had acted intra vires of the authority given them by that Act, the buildings were not objectionable in terms of that Act.

Mr. Buchanan said that Act 20 of 1896 was not promulgated in the Municipality at the time of the offence. New regulations had been made subsequent to the alleged offence, these being made in pursuance of the powers conferred upon the Municipality subsequent to the promulgation in the Municipality of the Act of 1896. The objection in regard to the rooms built in the premises approved by the Municipality was that they were lower than specified in the plans approved.

Mr. Buchanan (for appellant): We appeal on three grounds: (1) These building regulations have been promulgated in an incorrect form; (2) the regulations are ultra vires; (3) the buildings were not objectionable. The powers given under Act 20 of 1896 differ from those given by Act 45 of 1882. The new regulations purport to be made under Act 23 of 1893. The alleged offence had been committed before the new regulations were promulgated, and the section under which we were prosecuted was framed under Act 22 of 1893. This Act must be read with Act 45 of 1882. My point is, that under Act 22 of 1893, the Council had no power to make the very wide regulation they have made in section 10. That section even gives them power to pull down buildings. It is true that this question is not before the Court now, but I instance it merely to show how far they have gone beyond their powers. In this country municipalities often try to do by regulation what in England they would never think of attempting without an Act of Parliament. No doubt, some of the powers assumed by these regulations may have been given by Act 20 of 1896, but they were made under Act 22 of 1893.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Does not the power to prevent the erection of objectionable buildings imply the obligation to submit plans to the Council before buildings are erected?]

[Hopley, J.: Do you say that the Council must keep a man on the spot to say when a building begins to become objectionable?]

They can very soon ascertain whether a building is objectionable or not. Then again, these regulations have never been promulgated, as required by Act 45 of 1882. Act 20 of 1896 gave larger powers than were given by previous Acts, but not the power to demand that plans should be lodged with the Municipal Council. See Lumley on Bye-laws (p. 25). Parliament cannot delegate its powers unless it does so expressly.

[Hopley, J.: It is doubtful from the context whether the word "objectionable" in these regulations is used in a moral, a sanitary, or an architectural sense.]

Quite so, but even if these regulations are intra vires, they must be strictly interpreted. The latest regulations were promulgated on January 22, 1902, and the offence was prosecuted in December, 1901. The only evidence we have is that these buildings are unsightly, but an aesthete might hold that half the buildings in Cape Town are unsightly. My contention is: (1) That these regulations are ultra vires; (2) that the buildings in question are not unsightly.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for respondents): I do not admit that we cannot take advantage of Act 20 of 1896. If an offence is committed at a date when the Act is in force, and the regulations thereunder made, though not promulgated, it is the merest technicality to say that these regulations were not made under that Act. Should, however, the Court uphold this technical objection, I am prepared to argue that the Council could have made these regulations under Act 22 of 1893. I must admit that section 13 of the regulations would have been ultra vires before the passing of Act 20 of 1896, but I submit that the Court will not object to acts valid under one Act being done under another.

[Hopley, J.: It is rather a dangerous doctrine that you can shake into vitality some illegal bye-law, as soon as subsequent legislation validates it.]

I admit that we must prove the building objectionable, and that the fact that it is so should be stated in the summons; but the Magistrate found, as a fact, that the buildings were objectionable, because they were unsightly. I do not admit that section 5 (b) refers only to buildings which are objectionable on sanitary grounds. See Claremont Municipality v. Hudson (9 Sheil, 390) As to these kitchens; they were erected without any permission, the inspector reported strongly against them, and I submit the Court will not readily overturn the decision of the Magistrate or-facts. The fact that it was not stated in the summons that the buildings were objectionable, is not fatal to the summons.

Mr. Buchanan (in reply) was not heard.

De Villiers, C.J.: I am of opinion that upon the summons as it stood the appellant could not be convicted of a contravention of section 10, sub-section 5, of the regulations. The only Act under which appellant could have been convicted was that of 1893, and the 4th section provides that the Council of any Municipality, under Act 45 of 1882, may from time to time make, alter, and revoke byelaws or regulations for the purposes of prohibiting brothels, the overcrowding of houses, dwelling-places and rooms, and the erection of objectionable buildings within such Municipality. Now I quite agree that the only way in which objectionable buildings can be prevented would be by the requirements on the part of the Municipality that plans or specifications or buildings shall be submitted to the Council. But when there is a prosecution for a contravention of such a regulation under the Act of 1893, I am of opinion that the Council should allege as a matter of fact that the plans which were submitted would be a contravention of the section. In this case there is no allegation whatever that the building was an objectionable one. It is no doubt true there is some evidence on the point, namely, that the buildings were unsightly, for which reason the Magistrate seems to think they were objectionable; but in my opinion there ought to have been an allegation in the summons that the buildings were objectionable. I cannot in any way agree with Mr. Searle's contention that the regulations may be read as if they had been made under the Act of 1896. That Act had not been extended to the Municipality of Mafeking when the regulations were made. Subsequently fresh regulations were made under the Act of 1896, but the prosecution took place in regard to regulations made under the Act of 1893. I am of opinion that the appeal should be allowed.

APPEAL CASE.

WEBB V. ST. LEGER. } 1902.
} May 16th.

Collision on road—Negligence—Presumption.

A horse, driven by defendant's servant, having bolted, ran from behind into a bicycle which the plaintiff was riding and injured it.

Held, on appeal, that there was prima facie proof of negligence, and that such proof not having been rebutted by satisfactory evidence that the horse bolted without negligence on the part of the groom, the Magistrate was justified in finding for the plaintiff notwithstanding that the horse was proved to be a quiet animal.

This was an appeal by Mr. Frederick Luke St. Leger against a judgment of the Resident Magistrate of Wynberg in a case in which appellant was sued for damages caused through the alleged negligence of his servant.

In the Magistrate's Court the appellant was sued for £20 damages, which plaintiff (now respondent) alleged was due to him for damages sustained. It was alleged in the summons that on the 23rd January last the plaintiff was cycling along Lansdowne-road, Claremont, on the left side, when a cart and horse, the property of the defendant, and at the time in charge of a driver who was a servant in the employ of the defendant, ran into his bicycle, damaging the same. Plaintiff alleged that the damage was caused by the negligence of the driver, who had lost control of the horse, and failed to keep on the proper side of the road. The record of evidence adduced in the Court below was read by counsel. The plaintiff stated in evidence that the horse was not under the control of the driver. The vehicle was a four-wheeler. The defendant had offered to pay half the cost of the machine, and said he would see about getting the other half from the groom. Jacob Fratz said he was driving a Scotch cart in Lansdowne-road at the time. The vehicle driven by defendant's groom came along at a very fast pace, and when it got to the witness's cart, it swerved to the right and collided with the bicycle. The vehicle was forced to go to the right of the witness's cart. For the defence, Mr. St. Leger said that the horse was a quiet one, and the driver competent, steady, and reliable. He had made an offer to plaintiff to pay half, and had told him that the affair was an accident. The driver stated that the horse bolted. He never knew the animal to have done so before. He could not account for the horse bolting. The Magistrate gave judgment for £18, with costs, and against this decision defendant now appealed. The Magistrate, in his reasons, stated that he found that the damage resulted as alleged, the plaintiff having in no degree contributed thereto. The onus was on defendant of proving that it was an inevitable accident. In the absence of any explanation why an ordinarily docile horse should behave in this way, the Court was bound to presume negligence in its management.

Mr. Langenhoven, for appellant; Sir H. Juta, K.C., for respondent.

Mr. Langenhoven: If the count in the summons in the Court below alleging wilful negligence were proved, there could be no question of liability for the damage done by the horse; but if a man alleges negligence, he must prove it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is it clear that if a horse bolts, it is not for the owner to show that there has been no negligence?]

I submit that the onus is not upon him. In cross-examination, plaintiff admitted that the horse bolted. If an accident raises a presumption of negligence, that would apply no less to an accident caused by a cycle than to one caused by a horse; people have not as much control over a cycle as over a horse.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the driver comes behind a rider and runs him down, is it not presumed that the driver is negligent?]

If your lordship holds that negligence is presumed on the part of the driver, the question is, whether he has discharged the burden of disproving negligence. The Magistrate only finds negligence because he presumes it. He reasons from an imaginary case, which is quite different from the present case. The evidence of the driver and of the owner is not contradicted, and it needs very little uncontradicted evidence to rebut a mere presumption, and here we have a good deal of evidence. If the driver was not at fault, it would be going very far to hold a man liable for the act of his animal. See Cowell v. Friedman and Co. (5 H.C., 22) and Grotius (3, 38, 10).

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for the respondent), was not called upon.

De Villiers, C.J.: It is not necessary to hear Sir Henry Juta in this cause, because the Court is satisfied that the Magistrate's judgment ought not to be interfered with. It is quite clear—it is not denied—that there was no contributory negligence whatever on the part of the plaintiff. He was riding a bicycle, when the defendant's cart came from behind and knocked his bicycle over, injuring it to such an extent that it is wholly useless to him. Now that fact in itself is sufficient to throw upon the defendant the burthen of proving that there was no negligence on his part. Without such proof, the Court would be justified in assuming that the driver was at fault and guilty of negligence. Whether the defendant has discharged the onus upon him of proving that there was no negligence is a point best judged of by the Magistrate who decides the case. If a case of this sort came before a jury, the Court would not interfere with the decision of the jury. The Magistrate in the present case discharged the functions of a jury. He was not satisfied, from the explanation given by the groom, that there was not negligence on his part. Now in the cases which counsel has referred to, there has always been something to account for the sudden behaviour of animals which have caused injury, like a sudden noise, or the sudden appearance of an unaccustomed object. In the present case, here is a horse which for eight years has been in the possession of the defendant, and has been described as an animal which has never caused any trouble, and suddenly, on this occasion, it causes this accident. Well one would expect some explanation of it. It is clear that the Magistrate did not accept the explanation given by the groom. He saw the demeanour of the witness, and he was better able to consider whether the explanation is sufficient. I am of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed, with costs.

Their lordships concurred.

MEYER V. ESTATE MEYER. { 1902.
" May 16th.
" 20th.

Collation—Will—Construction—
Fidei-commissum—Bequest—Inheritance.

In the absence of a direction to the contrary in a will, legacies and prelegacies are not brought into collation.

A testator by his will appointed all his children as his heirs, and by codicil gave prelegacies to several of his children, and burdened the inheritances of his sons, save and except the bequests of money, with a fidei-commissum. By a clause in the codicil he directed "that the sum of £1,000 already advanced by me to my son N. shall be brought into my estate and be deducted from his inheritance, and that the land F shall form part of his fidei-commissary inheritance, but that his present wife shall upon his death have the rent or occupation of the said property so long as she shall remain unmarried." On the death of the testator N. took possession of the land, but as expensive repairs became necessary which he was unable to pay for, the land was, with his consent, ordered by the Court to be sold for £1,040. The sum of £250 was awarded to him as his share of inheritance of the rest of the estate. After his death his wife claimed the right to the interest on the proceeds of the sale of the land for her life without deduction of the £1,000 advanced.

Held, that this amount should be deducted from N.'s inheritance, but that according to the true construction of the codicil, no deduction should be made from the proceeds of the farm specifically bequeathed.

This was a special case brought for the decision of the Court as to the construction of a clause in a certain will. The plaintiffs were Elizabeth Cornelia Meyer (widow of the late Nicholas Wollessen Meyer, jun.), Anna Judith Meyer, widow, as guardian of the minors Nicholas Wollessen Meyer, Mary Ann Alice Meyer, and Constance Ann Meyer, and John William Walsh (married in community of property to Elizabeth Adriana Walsh, born Meyer) and Nicholas Wollessen Meyer, and the defendants were William Edward Moore and William Arthur Currey, in his capacity as the secretary of the General Estate and Orphan Chamber, in their capacity as executors testamentary of the estate of the late Nicholas Wollessen Meyer, sen.

The special case stated was as follows:

1. The plaintiffs are the widow of the late N. W. Meyer, jun., to whom she was married in community of property, who has not remarried, and who was at the date of the hereinafter mentioned will and codicils the wife of the said Meyer, and Anna Judith Meyer, the widow of the late L. C. B. Meyer, a son of the said N. W. Meyer, jun., in her capacity as guardian of her minor children, Nicholas Wollessen Meyer, Mary Ann Alice Meyer, and Constance Ann Meyer, also John William Walsh, married in community of property to Elizabeth Adriana Walsh, a daughter of the said N. W. Meyer, jun., and also Nicholas Wollessen Meyer, a son of the said N. W. Meyer, jun. The defendants are the executors testamentary of the estate of the late N. W. Meyer, sen., hereinafter called the testator.

2. The testator executed a certain will and codicils, to which the parties crave leave to refer.

3. By his said will the testator appointed his children his heirs of the residue of his estate, and by codicil he directed as follows: I will and direct that the sum of £1,000, already advanced by me to my son N. W. Meyer, jun., shall be brought into my estate and be deducted from his inheritance, and that the property at Salt River belonging to me, called Fresh Water Valley, shall form part of his fidei-commissary inheritance, but that his present wife (i.e., the first-named plaintiff) shall, upon his death, in case she shall survive him, have and enjoy the rent or occupation of the said property, so long as she shall remain unmarried, and in the same codicil thereafter the testator directed that he burdened the inheritance of his sons (save and except certain money bequests) with the burden of fidei-commissum, so that they should receive only the interest or profits thereof, and upon the death of my said sons the capital of such inheritance shall devolve upon their lawful issue.

4. The testator died in February, 1880, and the defendants thereafter filed accounts of their administration of the estate at four various periods between 1881 and June, 1901, and no objection thereto has been filed or taken. The parties crave leave to refer your lordships to the said accounts.

5. In none of the said accounts did the defendants bring up £1,000 due by N. W. Meyer, jun., as aforesaid, as an asset of the said estate, and in the said accounts the defendants awarded to N. W. Meyer, jun., the following sums, to wit: (a) Legacy of part of amount settled by antenuptial contract, £85 17s. 8d.; (b) share of residue (second account), £86 8s. 4d.; (c) share of residue (third account), £38 19s. 7d.; (d) share of residue (fourth account), £38 16s. 5d.; and the following sums are in the defendants' hands as portion of the fidei-commissary inheritance of N. W. Meyer, jun., to wit: (e) Amount received from Colonial Government on expropriation of a portion of Fresh Water Valley, £40; (f) amount received upon sale of remainder of Fresh Water Valley, with authority of Supreme Court, £1,000—amounting in all to £1,290 2s.; and the defendants did, under the authority of the Supreme Court, expend sums amounting to £138 17s. 11d. in repairs of the said property known as Fresh Water Valley, and did pay to the said N. W. Meyer, jun., during his lifetime, interest upon the sums awarded, and upon the said sum of £40, amounting in all to £106 7s. 11d.

6. In March, 1900, the said Fresh Water Valley having fallen into disrepair, the defendants applied to this Honourable Court for authority to sell the said property, and thereupon the Master of the Supreme Court reported as follows: "The testator in the codicil to his will directs that the property at Salt River, belonging to him, called Fresh Water Valley, shall form part of the fidei commissary inheritance of his son, Nicholas Wollessen Meyer, jun., but that his present wife shall, upon his death, in case she shall survive him, have and enjoy the rent or occupation of the said property so long as she shall remain unmarried. If the consent of Mrs. Meyer be obtained I see no objection to the property being sold, the proceeds invested by the administrator, and the interest paid as directed above." And the Court made an order in terms of the said report. The record of the said application is taken to be portion of this case.

7. Thereafter the said property was sold in terms of the said order of Court for £1,000.

8. Thereafter in August, 1900, the said N. W. Meyer, jun., died, having during the period between his father's death and his own occupied and enjoyed the use of the said property until it was sold.

9. After the death of the said N. W. Meyer, jun., the first-named plaintiff applied to the defendants for payment of the interests accruing from the said sum of £1,000, but the defendants refused, and still refuse to pay the same.

The first-named plaintiff contends that having survived her husband she is entitled, so long as she remain unmarried, in terms of the aforesaid will, to the interest accruing from the said £1,000.

The other plaintiffs contend: (a) That upon the death or remarriage of the first-named plaintiff they are entitled to the said sum of £1,000. (b) That they are entitled to the capital of the fidei commissary inheritance other than the aforesaid £1,000 bequeathed to the late N. W. Meyer, jun., under the said will and codicils, executed by the said N. W. Meyer, sen., without deduction of the £1,000 in paragraph 5 referred to.

The defendants' contentions are the following: (1) That the capital amount of the said debt of £1,000 must be deducted from the several sums awarded to and held by them as aforesaid for the said N. W. Meyer, jun., and also the amount of £138 17s. 11d aforesaid. (2) That the balance of the said amount of £1,290 2s., after such deductions, to wit the sum of £151 4s. 1d., should, together with such further sums as may in their distribution of the amounts so deducted be awarded as N. W. Meyer, junior's inheritance, be administered, subject to a life interest in favour of the first-named plaintiff (so long as she remains unmarried), as part of the fidei commissary inheritance to which the children of N. W. Meyer, jun., are entitled.

Wherefore the parties pray for judgment upon their respective contentions or for such other directions as to this Honourable Court may seem meet, and also for an order as to the costs of this suit.

Sir H. Juta, K.C., for plaintiffs; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers) for defendants.

Sir Henry Juta, K.C.: Our contention is that the will shows that the testator intended that Mrs. Meyer should enjoy Fresh Water Valley for life quite independently of any legacy left to her. There is not one word in the codical about a fidei-commissum. The testator intended that there should be two inheritances, the one unburdened, and the other fidei-commissary. It is clear that the testator intended his daughter-in-law to have a life interest in this property. The expenditure on the property took place during his life, and possibly this should have been deducted from Mr. Meyer's inheritance, but the executors had no right to subsequently spend so much money on the property, and then saddle the fidei-commissary heir with the debt. Now the property has been sold, and the interest on the price realised has been handed over to the fiduciary.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Is that quite clear?]

Nobody else can have got the money. It is a mere matter of calculation to analyse the account, if we once establish the principle that the fiduciary cannot take all the benefits of property, and then saddle the fidei-commissary with the expenses. These expenses were incurred for repairs in 1888 and 1896. The usufructuary was in very poor circumstances and was receiving the income from the property. Mrs. Meyer holds that the testator intended her to have the occupation of the property. Children who succeed by representation are bound to collate the debts owing by their father to their grandfather. But the case is different with regard to children who are fidei-commissary heirs. In their case there is no collation, and hence the £1,000 was never intended to be deducted from Freshwater; that would have left nothing for the fidei-commissaries. As to the children, the difficulty begins with the creation of the fidei-commissum in the latter part of the codicil. In the first place is that fidei-commissum to affect Freshwater Valley? I contend that the testator never intended the £1,000 to come out of Freshwater. The estate was valuable, as the accounts showed, and the testator evidently thought that there would be enough to pay off the £1,000 without touching Freshwater or the fidei-commissum. It turned out that the fund from which this £1,000 was to have been paid was non-existent, but that did not justify the executors in deducting this sum from the fidei-commissary inheritance. I submit that the contention of Mrs. Meyer is fair and reasonable, as is also the contention of the children as regards Freshwater. The testator intended the £1,000 to be deducted from the son's unencumbered inheritance: the Salt River property was to be unburdened, and Freshwater to be burdened with fidei-commissum.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for defendants): The codicil affords the whole key to the will, and it clearly contemplates only one inheritance, viz., the fidei-commissary inheritance, which was the only inheritance out of which the £1,000 could come. If the executors did not take a right view of their duties that cannot prejudice the heirs. Freshwater was not specifically bequeathed. No doubt it was intended that the son should have it as a part of his fidei-commissary inheritance, but not as a specific bequest. There is nothing to show that Nicholas Meyer was intended to be preferred to the other children. If plaintiff's contention is right, the eighth branch of the family is to take £1,000, and each of the other seven, only £250.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The farm was not directed to be sold or valued, how can you deduct £1,000 from a farm?]

That is a part of my case. My contention is, that you must follow the presumption of equality among the children. The estate did not realise as much as the testator expected, and the result was that the son who got the farm, got far more than his share. In their first distribution, the executors clearly regarded the farm as a specific bequest. They no doubt did so bona fide, but the question is, is it now possible to rectify their mistake? I submit it is. Throughout the testator uses the words, "I give and bequeath," both in respect of what he gives to his wife and what he gives to his sons. If a testator gives express directions, there can be no question of inheritance. Jooste v. Jooste's Executors (8 Juta, 288). Plaintiffs now contend that the will showed an intention to place one branch of the family in a specially advantageous position, but surely such an intention ought to be expressed very clearly. Here there is no such clear expression of intention. N. W. Meyer was not entitled to a single penny unless he could put his £1,000 into the estate. And yet under the first account he got over £600, and then a balance of £250 odd was carried over to him, while the other heirs got nothing. We might go further than we do, and contend that the widow of N. W. Meyer should have nothing.

Sir H. Juta (in reply): It is sought to give the words "give and bequeath" the effect of constituting a pre-legacy. If they have this effect, either Freshwater Valley is a legacy or there is no bequest of this property at all. Both the executors and the other heirs understood that this property had been specially bequeathed, and that therefore it was not subject to the deduction of £1,000. It has been argued that the widow (Mrs. Meyer) was only entitled (if to anything) to that part of the farm which was left after paying off the £1,000; but there can be no doubt that the testator intended her to have the usufruct of the whole farm. The executors therefore have no right to take her interest in order to pay off N. W. Meyer's debt to his father. The testator would never have said, "I bequeath the life usufruct of this farm to Mrs. Meyer, but then £1,000 must be paid out of it." It is quite another question, whether, after her death the corpus of the estate can be taken to pay off the debt; but clearly her life interest is not available for this purpose.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea, May 20th. The Court gave judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: The testator by his will appointed all his children or their lawful issue to be the heirs of the residue of his estate, and by codicil he gave prelegacies to several of his children, and burdened the inheritances of his sons, save and except the bequests of money, with fidei-commissum. By a clause in the codicil, preceding the clause imposing the fidei-commissum, the testator directed "that the sum of £1,000 already advanced by me to my son Nicholas shall be brought into my estate and be deducted from his inheritance, and that the property at Salt River called Freshwater Valley shall form part of his fidei-commissary inheritance, but that his present wife shall, upon his death, in case she shall survive him, have and enjoy the rent or occupation of the said property so long as she shall remain unmarried." The testator died in 1880, and the defendants, who are the executors testamentary, have filed four accounts of their administration. From these accounts, it would appear that they awarded to Nicholas, as part of his fidei-commissary inheritance, the sum of £250, paying him the interest on that amount, and allowed him to remain in possession of Freshwater Valley. They also expended sums amounting to £138 17s. 11d. on repairs of that property, and subsequently, with the consent of Nicholas and his wife, they sold the property, by order of the Supreme Court, for £1,000, which, in addition to £40 received by them for the expropriation by Government of part of the property, made £1,040 in all, as the proceeds of the sale of the property. Nicholas has since died, and the question has now arisen whether his wife is entitled to the interest on the proceeds of the sale without deduction of (1) the sum of £1,000 advanced by the testator to Nicholas; and (2) the sum of £138 17s. 11d. for repairs; and whether, after her death, the children of Nicholas will be entitled to the capital without such deduction. It is clear that the construction of the will cannot be affected by the circumstance that, after the death of the testator, it was found to be advisable to sell the entailed property. The rights of the parties must be ascertained, as if the property had never been sold, and were now in the possession of Mrs. Nicholas Meyer, as the first fidei-commissary heir after her husband's death. The codicil directs that the sum of £1,000 advanced to him shall be deducted from his inheritance. It does not appear from the case stated whether the sum so advanced was at the time of his death a debt still owing by him. If it was, it would, of course, be deducted from his inheritance, and if it exceeded the inheritance, Nicholas would have been liable to the executors for the balance. If it was a debt, but prescribed by lapse of time, his inheritance would still have been subject to collation, as was decided by this Court in the case of Jooste v. Jooste's Executor (8 Juta, 288). But such a collation would only affect the inheritance coming to him as one of the heirs, and would not affect any legacies given to him over and above the amount of his inheritance. Such prelegacies could not—independently of the terms of the will or codicil—be brought into collation, nor could they be reduced by reason of advances made by the testator during his lifetime to his son Nicholas. The question to be determined is whether, under the terms of the codicil, the proceeds of the sale should be reduced by the amount advanced. The codicil, after directing the deduction from the inheritance, directs that Freshwater Valley shall form part of the fidei-commissary inheritance. By this direction, however, I understand that Nicholas is to be fiduciary legatee of that property, in addition to being one of the fiduciary heirs of the residue of the estate. The words, "deducted from his inheritance," would hardly be applicable to the specific bequest of land which the testator did not intend to be sold, and which, until sold, could not be subject to deduction. In my opinion, therefore, the deduction was to be made, not from the value of the farm, but from the share of the inheritance which, by a clause of the will, was given to Nicholas and, by a clause of the codicil, was entailed in favour of his children. If this view be correct, it would follow that the whole of the inheritance of £250 would disappear, and the children would receive nothing as fidei-commissary heirs of such inheritance. But in regard to the land, the wife would be entitled to her life interest after her husband's death, and his children would take it after her marriage or death. The question still remains whether the expenses of the repairs should be borne by the estate or by the fidei-commissary legatees. In my opinion, the expenses of those repairs should be borne by those who are beneficially interested in the property. If the property had not been sold, and the parties so interested had been unable to bear the expense, the Court would, according to its usual practice, have authorised them to mortgage the property for the purpose of paying the necessary expenses. The interest on such mortgage would have been borne by Mrs. Nicholas Meyer, so long as her life interest lasts, and after her death the capital would be a debt owing by the children. The property having been sold, the amount of the expenses of repairs must be deducted from the proceeds, and the interest on the balance, viz., on £901 2s. 1d., must be paid to Mrs. Nicholas Meyer, and after her death or marriage, the capital sum of £901 2s. 1d. must be paid to the children of Nicholas Meyer. Costs to be paid by the testator's estate.

Buchanan, J., in concurring, pointed out that there was no dispute as to the law applicable to the will; the whole question turned upon the construction. He was very strongly impressed by Mr. Schreiner's contention that there was only one inheritor.

Hopley, J., also concurred.

VIVIERS V. JUTA AND CO. { 1902.
May 18th.

Agent—Mandatory—Negligence —Liability of bailee to insure against fire.

A declaration alleged that the plaintiff delivered certain books to the defendants for sale, that they failed to insure the same, that a fire occurred which destroyed the books, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value from the defendants. Held, on exceptions, that the declaration disclosed no cause of action. There is no rule of law imposing on a bailee the duty of insuring goods intrusted to his care or custody.

This was an argument on exceptions.

The plaintiff was David Johannes Viviers, a resident of Maitland, and the defendants were J. C. Juta and Co., who carried on business as booksellers, etc. Plaintiff alleged in his declaration that he was the author of a certain book which was published for him by Messrs. W. A. Richards and Sons. He made an agreement with defendants for the latter to sell copies of the book at 2s. 6d. per copy, defendants to receive commission at the rate of 6d. for each copy sold. On the 25th July, 1901, 1,300 copies were delivered to the defendants. On or about the 11th October, 1901, the books were destroyed in a fire which occurred at the defendants' establishment, and were totally lost to the plaintiff, owing to defendants' not insuring the books while they were in their possession, which they were legally bound to do. To this declaration, defendants excepted that there was no legal duty on them to insure the books, and that hence the declaration disclosed no cause of action.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Buchanan) for the exceptors. Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers for the respondent.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C.: The plaintiff's declaration discloses no cause of action, as defendants deny that they were bound to insure these goods. A usufructuary even is not bound to insure the usufructuary property. Meyer v. Meyer (1 Juta, 377). There is no general duty to insure another man's property; we had no special instructions to insure, and no custom of the trade has been alleged. But people may insure who are not bound to insure. Van der Keessel (Th. 715) citing Bykershoek Quest Jur. Priv. (Bk 4, C, 50, p. 524), and Porter on Insurance (p. 57) who refers there to some four or five cases. Bunyon on Fire Insurance (p. 26), Evans on Principal and Agent (pp. 258 and 259), Smith v. Lascelles (2 Term, Rep. 187), Evans (p. 271), Bowstead on Agency (p. 146), Storey on Agency (sec. 111), Storey on Bailments (sec. 446). In the absence of instructions to that effect, an agent is bound not to insure.

J. E. de Villiers (for the respondent): I will argue that our law differs from English law on the subject of negligence, and hence that the English authorities cited do not apply. In the present case the contract between the parties was not locati-conducti, but mandatum. See Thomas v. Benning (8 Buch., 16), particularly the remarks of De Villiers, C. J., at page 25. A man does not cease to be a mandatory because he receives a remuneration. Voet (17, 1, 2 and 17, 1, 9), and a mandatory is bound to diligentia boni patrisfamilias.

[Buchanan, J.: Is non-insurance a question of neglect or of contract?]

Of negligence, and I press this point to show the measure of diligence required in a mandatory. See Cod. (4, 35, 13, and 4, 35, 21), Voet (17, 1, 9), Juta's Van der Linden (p. 147). Roman law exacts more from a mandatory than English law. He is liable for culpa levissima and diligentia exacta is required from him. To apply these principles to the present case. The exceptors were bound to take the same care of the books entrusted to their charge that they take of their own books. They insure their own books.

[De Villiers, C. J.: There is no evidence of that.]

I do not see how we can bring the fact before the Court that they insured their own stock; so I can only go on the ground that it would be the action of an ordinarily prudent man to insure them.

[Buchanan, J.: Then why did not you insure?]

They received our books, and it was for them either to insure or to suggest to the respondent to insure.

[De Villiers, C. J.: We do not know that they did not do so.]

Then that question may stand over till the trial.

[Buchanan, J.: Does not your argument run to this: that they were bound to insure?]

No, I rather go on the high standard of diligence which our law requires in a mandatory. The books have disappeared, and it is for the exceptors to show that by no possible care could they have been preserved, Dig. (19, 2, 25, 7). As to the exceptors not having insured their own books, they may still have been under a duty to insure ours, for they were bound to that high standard of diligence known as exacta diligentia.

Mr. Schreiner was not heard in reply.

The Court upheld the exception.

De Villiers, C. J.: I assume for the purposes of this case that the defendants were mandatories in regard to these books, but, even so, there is no allegation in the declaration of such negligence on the part of the defendants as would render them liable in this action. The authorities cited would apply if there had been proof in the present case that the fire occurred through the negligence of the defendants, but the plaintiff now asks the Court to go further, and to hold that, because the defendants had not insured the books, because they had not done something to recover an indemnity in case there should be a fire, however careful they may have been to prevent a fire, they are to be held liable. There is no authority in English, Dutch, or Roman law to support such a contention. The Roman law knew nothing about insurance, but in Holland insurances were well established at the time the latest text-books were written, and in none of those cited was there stated to be liability in such a case as this. There are many prudent persons who do not insure their own goods against fire, and it cannot therefore be said to be conclusive proof of negligence if a person does not insure the goods of another entrusted to his care. Beyond the bare statement that the defendants did not insure the plaintiff's books, there is no allegation of negligence, and the exception against the declaration must therefore be allowed, with costs.

Buchanan, J., said he concurred, and his reason for doing so was the agreement set forth in the declaration, the third paragraph of which said that the defendants agreed to store and sell copies of the plaintiff's book at 2s. 6d. a copy, receiving 6d. per copy as commission for storing and selling such book. There was no allegation that would imply that by contract, or by the custom of the trade, they should do anything more than store and sell the books. If they had stored the books negligently, and loss had occurred through that, then they would have been answerable, but the question of negligence was not raised on the pleadings at all.

Hopley, J., also concurred.

REX V. RADAS. { 1902.
{ May 16th.

Public Health Act—Government
Notice No. 854 of Oct. 1st, 1901—Native Location—Certificate of residence.

This was an appeal from a decision given by the Assistant Resident Magistrate at Uitvlugt, in a case where Radas was charged with contravening one of the regulations, framed under the Public Health Act, for establishing and governing the Uitvlugt Native Location. The appellant had been charged in the Court below with contravening section 7 of Government notice 854 of October 1, 1901, which was framed under paragraph 15 of Act 23 of 1897, in that on or about February 7, 1902, and at Uitvlugt, in the Cape district, the appellant (Arthur Radas), being an inhabitant of the Uitvlugt Native Location, did wilfully and unlawfully fail or neglect to take out a certificate of residence, after being required to do so by the Acting Inspector in terms of the said Government notice.

The appellant pleaded "Not Guilty," but was found "Guilty" and fined £2, or seven days' imprisonment. From this sentence he now appealed.

The evidence showed that appellant had lived in the said location for four months, that he had duly received a notice calling upon him to take out a certificate of residence, and had said "it would be all right"; that he had reported himself to the inspector of the location, and that "an identification card" has been issued to him by the said inspector, but that, having never paid his rates, appellant had not received a "certificate of residence"; that the only complaint against appellant was that he had not paid his rent. The evidence for appellant showed that he was a Fingo, and had been ordered by a Government official, in May, 1901, to live in the location. He admitted that he had paid no rent there, but said that he was able to provide a house for himself and his family. He objected to the condition of the hut assigned to him in the location and to the invasion of his privacy therein by police officials. He was willing to take out a "certificate of residence," but objected to pay for the same. For appellant it was contended in the Court below: (1) That the "identification card" aforesaid was the "certificate of residence" according to the regulations par 5 of Government Notice 430, of May 6, 1901, and (2) that if par. 7 of Government Notice 854 of October 1, 1901, refers to rent, it is ultra vires.

Mr. Wilkinson appeared for the appellant.

Mr. Howel Jones appeared on behalf of the Crown, and said that he did not oppose the appeal, as he thought the evidence did not support the conviction.

Mr. Wilkinson said that then he need not say anything.

The Chief Justice: I am not quite sure. A rather important question is involved, and I don't think the case should be decided only on the particular facts in this case. It is a question how far these regulations can be supported at all. (To Mr. Jones) On what account do you admit that the Magistrate was wrong?

Mr. Jones said that the applicant was charged under the 6th section, and the evidence did not support the allegation that he contravened that section.

The Chief Justice: I will tell you how it strikes me. The appellant was forced to live in this location. He said, "I am quite prepared to live elsewhere," but he was told "No, you must go and live there." He goes and lives there, and then they try to force him to take out a certificate of residence, which he refuses to do.

Mr. Jones said appellant was ordered there like other natives at the time of the plague outbreak, but the question did not now arise as to whether or not he was rightly there. He was charged with failing to report himself in terms of a certain paragraph of the regulations, and with having failed to take out the necessary certificate of residence. As a matter of fact the evidence showed that he had reported himself, although he had not taken out the necessary certificate of residence. As far as he (counsel) could see the certificate of residence should have been given to him when he reported himself. It appeared from the record that he was quite willing to take out the certificate of residence, but that he objected to pay the rent, and the superintendent of the location refused to give him a certificate of residence until he did pay such rent. But the question as to his not paying his rent might be another case.

The Chief Justice said that in reading over the case it struck him that they might like the general question decided.

After hearing Mr. Wilkinson, the Court allowed the appeal and quashed the sentence.

De Villiers, C. J.: It would be very advisable that the legality of these regulations should be decided, but it is not clear to the Court that the present is a case for that purpose, seeing it is admitted on behalf of the prosecution that the facts proved in this case do not justify the conviction. After that admission the Court cannot well go into the legal question, because that is a fatal admission for the prosecution. Upon that admission we must allow the appeal and quash the sentence. If the parties wish for the opinion of the Court on the legal question they should raise a case in which that is involved.

EXECUTOR OF HITE V. JONES. { 1902.
May 20th.
" 29th

Sale of land—Lease—Right of renewal—Executor — "Hire goes before sale."

During the absence from the Colony of H., his wife, under his general power of attorney, purchased certain premises, part of which had to her knowledge been leased to the defendants for a year at a monthly rental, with a right of renewal at the expiration for 7, 14 or 21 years, and the land was duly transferred to H. Notice was then given by the seller to the defendants to pay the rent to Mrs. H., to whom the written agreement of lease had been given. H. died in England, and the plaintiff took out letters of administration in this Colony as executor. He allowed Mrs. H. to remain in possession of the premises as the usufructuary of the estate under H.'s will, and she continued to receive the rent of the leased portion from the defendants. Before the expiration of the first year the defendants, who believed Mrs. Hite to be the owner, and had never heard of her having a husband, gave her notice of their intention to renew for 21 years, and she raised no objection. No renewal was executed, but the defendants remained in occupation as tenants and paid the monthly rent as it fell due to Mrs. H. After her death the plaintiff, as executor, sought to eject the defendants.

Held, (1) That the rule "hire before sale" applies only to leases in existence, and which, if unregistered, do not extend beyond ten years and not to a right to renew; (2) That if, however, the purchaser adopted the lease and accepted the lessee as his tenant, the purchaser may be compelled to execute a lease for such renewal, which if it exceeds ten years must be duly registered; (3) That under the circumstances of the present case the notice given by the defendants to Mrs. H., whom the plaintiff as executor had allowed to appear as the ostensible owner, and whom the defendants believed to be the real owner, was a sufficient notice to the plaintiff of their intention to renew the lease.

This was an action for declaration of rights, brought by George William Steytler, secretary to the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Company, in his capacity as executor testamentary of the estate of the late John Hite, against John Davies Jones, carrying on business under the style or firm of J. D. Jones and Co.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is the secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Company, and as such is the executor testamentary of the estate of the late John Hite, and the defendant carries on business in Cape Town and elsewhere under the style or firm of J. D. Jones and Co.

2. The said John Hite in his lifetime purchased from one Herbert John Edmed, and on the 2nd October, 1895, received transfer of certain land, with buildings thereon, situated at Claremont, hereinafter referred to as the said premises.

3. Theretofore the said Edmed had let and the defendant had hired the said premises for a term or period of one year, reckoned from the 1st day of August, 1895, and expiring on the 31st day of July, 1896.

4. The said John Hite died in November, 1895, and by his last will and testament, executed jointly with his wife, one Sophia Hite, their children and a certain grandchild were instituted heirs of their entire joint estate, subject to a usufruct in respect of the said estate in favour of the survivor of the testators, the said estate to be divided among the heirs after the death of the survivor.

5. The widow, the said Sophia Hite, adiated and accepted benefits under the said will, and enjoyed the usufruct of the entire joint estate during her lifetime, and she died on the 26th day of February, 1901.

6. The said Sophia Hite permitted the defendant to continue in possession of the said premises after the 31st day of July, 1896, and throughout the remainder of her life, and received from time to time rent from the defendant as lessee thereof, but the plaintiff, in his said capacity as executor testamentary of the estate of the late John Hite, or any other capacity, at no time consented or agreed to any continuation of the lease or relocation of the said premises to the defendant.

7. The lease aforesaid contained a clause empowering the lessee, the defendant, to renew the said lease for a further period of either seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years, and the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully contends that by reason of having notified to the said Sophia Hite, on or about the 21st July, 1896, his wish to renew the said lease for twenty-one years from the 1st August, 1896, he is entitled, notwithstanding the death of the said Sophia Hite as aforesaid, and notwithstanding that no notice of renewal was given to the plaintiff, and that no consent to renewal was at any time given by the plaintiff, to a renewed lease of the said premises for a period extending to the 1st August, 1917.

8. The plaintiff denies the said contention, and contends that the defendant is legally bound to deliver up to him possession of the said premises, either forthwith or after such reasonable notice as this Hon. Court may fix, and has notified his willingness to permit occupation until the end of the present year, but the defendant refuses to either forthwith, or at the end of the present year, or after reasonable notice to deliver up possession.

9. In the alternative, if the above contention be held incorrect, but not otherwise, the plaintiff contends that the defendant is, at any rate, bound to deliver up possession of the said premises on the expiration of seven years, reckoned from the 1st August, 1896, but this contention the defendant also disputes.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for an order declaring his rights as executor testamentary of John Hite as aforesaid in regard to the said premises, and compelling the defendant, either forthwith or at the end of the present year, or after such period as this Hon. Court may fix, to deliver up quiet possession of the said premises; or that he may have such alternative relief as to this Hon. Court may seem meet, together with costs of suit.

The defendant's plea and claim in re-convention was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraph 1, and has no knowledge of and does not admit the allegations in paragraphs 2, 4, and 5.

2. On the 26th July, 1895, the defendant entered into an agreement of lease in writing of the said premises in the declaration mentioned with one H. J. Edmed for the period of one year commencing on the 1st of August, 1895, and in which it was agreed that at the expiration of the lease the lessees should have the right to renew the same for a further period of either 7, 14, or 21 years, as they, the lessees, may desire, at the same rental, and upon the same terms, as set forth in the said lease, provided that should they, the lessees, not wish to renew the lease after the termination of the first period of one year, that they shall be obliged to notify their intention of such to the lessor in writing at least one month before the expiration thereof.

3. On the 30th of October, 1895, the defendant received notice from the said lessor Edmed that he had sold the said premises to Mrs. Hite, Bedford Lodge, Westerford, Newlands, to whom the rent was to be paid, and the defendant thereafter paid the said rent to the said Mrs. Hite, who received the same and has continued to do so. The defendant received no notice or intimation from the late John Hite, the plaintiff, or the said Mrs. Hite, the wife of the said John Hite, that the property had been sold to or was vested in the estate of the said John Hite, except as hereinafter stated.

4. On the 31st of July, 1895, the said John Hite gave and signed a general power of attorney to and in favour of his said wife, the said Mrs. Hite, who had full knowledge of all the terms of the lease, of which power of attorney the plaintiff was and became aware, but the said fact was not known then or thereafter until now to the defendant.

5. On the 19th May, 1896, the defendant gave due notice in terms of the said lease to his said lessor Edmed, and to the said Mrs. Hite, that he exercised his right of renewal under the said lease for a further period of 21 years, and the said Edmed and the said Mrs. Hite duly received the said notice. The plaintiff was aware of the terms of the said lease, and was aware of the fact that the defendant was continuing in occupation of the said premises and was continuing to pay the rent stipulated for in the lease to the said Mrs. Hite, in terms of the renewal under the said lease.

6. On the 6th October, 1896, a formal renewal of the said lease was drawn up to the knowledge of the said Mrs. Hite, and it was not until the month of January, 1898, that the defendant received any intimation or notice that the said premises were vested in the estate of the said late John Hite, or that the plaintiff was the executor thereof.

7. The defendant says that owing to the failure and neglect on the part of the said John Hite and the plaintiff to give him any notice or intimation that the premises were vested in the said John Hite or in his estate, they being fully aware that he was the lessee thereof in terms of the lease, and on failure of any notice or in-termination whatsoever that the premises were so vested, that due and proper notice in terms of the lease given by him to the said lessor and to the said Mrs. Hite was a valid and legal notice of renewal, and that the defendant is not bound to give up possession of the said premises except in terms of the said renewal of the said lease.

8. Save as aforesaid the defendant denies the allegations in paragraphs 3, 6, 7, 8, and 9.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

For a claim in reconvention:

1. The defendant begs to refer this Honourable Court to the pleadings in convention.

Wherefore he claims: (a) An order declaring the defendant to be entitled to possession of the said premises in terms of the said lease for a period of 21 years from the 1st of August, 1896; (b) alternate relief; (c) costs of suit.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner) appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin) appeared for the defendant.

Mr. Schreiner called

George Wm. Steytler, secretary of the Colonial Orphan Chamber and Trust Co., and as such executor testamentary in the estate of the late John Hite. Witness said he did not personally know Hite, who died in England on November 6, 1895, witness taking out letters of administration on December 5, 1895. Witness saw Mrs. Hite, and ascertained her position. From that time onwards Mrs. Hite took the benefit of usufruct up to her death. He did not hear from her or anyone else about any lease being on the property at Claremont. Early in 1898 Mrs. Hite saw him about the question of a sub-lease, and before that time witness had no knowledge that there was such a lease. Mrs. Hite carried on a partnership with a person called Kennedy, and she drew the rents from the Claremont property during her lifetime. After her death witness communicated with defendants, and said that they should pay the rents to him, which they agreed to do in the future. The estate was getting £15 a month rent for the property next door to the one occupied by defendant. Witness thought the lease would be very detrimental to the realisation of the property.

Cross-examined: John Hite was a Namaqualand trader. Mrs. Hite did not consult witness on all questions connected with the estate. The rent of the property was £8 a month; at that time this was a fair figure, but rents had since gone up. Witness thought Mrs. Hite had no right to bind the estate. Kennedy and Mrs. Hite became insolvent, and witness was one of the trustees in the estate.

Mr. Searle called

Herbert John Edmed, a Seventh Day Adventist minister, now a resident of Uitenhage, who stated that in 1895 he lived at Claremont, and built the premises now in dispute. Witness subsequently sold the property, the whole transaction being negotiated with John Kennedy, to whom witness showed the lease, Kennedy purporting to act on behalf of Mrs. Hite. Witness obtained the lease from the office of Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, and Kennedy asked permission to show the lease to Mrs. Hite. Kennedy accordingly took the lease, and on his return Kennedy said they thought the lease would be renewed for 21 years. On October 30, 1895, witness wrote to the defendant Jones stating that he had sold the property, and asking him to pay the rent to Mrs. Hite, to whom he (witness) had given the lease. Witness never saw John Hite. Kennedy and Mrs. Hite went to Mr. Syfret's office to make the declaration of purchase, but witness did not observe John Hite's name in the declaration. On May 19, 1896, witness received a letter from Messrs. Silberbauer, stating that Messrs. J. D. Jones and Co. had given notice that they would require the lease to be renewed for 21 years; the letter added that this notice was being given to witness, as the former owner of the property, so that he could communicate with Mrs. Hite, to whom notice had also been given.

Cross-examined: Witness could only account for the fact that he signed the declaration of sale to John Hite, instead of, as he thought, to Mrs. Hite, through the name escaping his notice. He knew nothing about John Hite at all. Witness was satisfied with the rent of £8 a month paid by defendant, and had no idea that the value of property would go up so much as it had since done. At the time the property was sold, he handed the lease to Kennedy, who was Mrs. Hite's agent all the time.

John Davies Jones, the defendant, said that in 1895 he entered into an agreement of lease with the last witness. Since the sale by Edmed to Mrs. Hite witness had always paid the rent regularly to Mrs. Hite. Witness had no knowledge of John Hite being the owner of the property. Kennedy and Mrs. Hite occupied a portion of the premises for some time. Witness thought £8 was a very good rent for the premises.

Cross-examined by Mr. Schreiner: Kennedy and Mrs. Hite were not in occupation at the time of the insolvency.

James Adams Low, bookkeeper to the firm of J. D. Jones and Co., said that Kennedy and Mrs. Hite occupied the premises at Claremont for about three years. The rent for the first few months was £3 10s. After that it was £3.

Johannes S. le Sueur, conveyancer of the Supreme Court, said that he was formerly a partner in Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller. Previous to that he was a clerk in the office from 1895 to 1898. Witness had charge of the correspondence in this matter. Witness deposed to having, in 1896, written and received a number of communications, to and from Mrs. Hite and Kennedy, in reference to a lease. He forwarded Mrs. Hite a draft lease, and there were letters in Kennedy's handwriting. He never got the lease back.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for the plaintiff): This case must be determined on the principle "hire goes before sale," otherwise it can scarcely be held that there was any contract between the parties. I take it that our law adopts this principle, and it would be quite applicable had there been no particularis successor to Hite. I cannot, however, find a single case in which the Court has upheld a right to renew a one year's lease for a long period, and in this respect the present case differs essentially from those of Maynard v. Usher (2, Menz, 170) and Green v. Griffiths (4 Juta, 346). In the present case there was a mere executory agreement that the lessee might possibly get a renewal for 17, 14, or 21 years. Unless such a right is endorsed on the title deeds, I submit it would not bind a particularis successor. The principle of registration must be strictly adhered to. The law on the whole question was very fully discussed in Green v. Griffiths. With us it is not necessary (as in English law) that all leases for a longer term than one year should be in writing, and hence unless we insist upon registration anybody might come in, after all who can contradict him are dead, and say that he has made an agreement for a renewal of his lease. The question of the position of the successor of a lessor was also considered in Maynard v. Usher, and reference was made to Groenewegen ad Cod. (4, 65, 9) quoted by Loenius Decis (p.p. 10 and 11). Voet (19, 2, 1) denies that a lease is binding on a particularis successor, though it no doubt is upon a successor universalis. See Neostadius Decis, 70, of S. C. Holl and Matthaeus, Paroem, Belg. Jurise. (Paro, 5, n. 13.) Even if this were a lease, it could not bind for more than ten years without registration. If a man may buy a right to a 21 years' renewal without registration, registration is useless; registration is required for any lease over 10 years. Notice must in such a case be given by registration. It was the duty of Mr. Le Sueur to find out in whose name the property was registered, and who was the trustee, and then to give that trustee notice.

[Buchanan, J.: You say that notice was not given to the proper person?]

Two notices are required: (1) Of the right to a renewal; (2) of the exercise of the right. We say that the first notice must be by registration.

[De Villiers, C. J.: If a purchaser had bought the property with a knowledge of the lease, would it not be fraud for him to repudiate the lease, because it was not registered?]

Every man is supposed to know the law, and therefore there can be no fraud in insisting on one's legal rights. A usufructuary can lease only during the term of his own life, Voet (19, 1, 16). See also Parkin v. Leppert (12, S.C.R., 179). Mr. Steytler had nothing to do with either Kennedy or Hite. No notice was given to Mr. Steytler till long after May, 1896, but then it was too late, as the year expired in July, 1896. Mrs. Hite could give no rights beyond her lifetime, for she was only a usufructuary, and if defendants want to make a case they must argue that, though a usufructuary cannot only let the property during his lifetime, he can give an option for a 99 years' lease. We are entitled to say: (1) That there has been no notice of lease; and (2) that the lease cannot be valid for more than ten years on account of non-registration.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendant): Two points arise for consideration in this case: (1) What is the true construction of the lease? (2) assuming that the lease was only for one year, can plaintiff eject us? As to the first point, section 1 of the lease says that that lease is for a year, but section 7 says that the lease is to run on. It was for the lessee to give notice only if the lessee wished to terminate the lease.

[Buchanan, J.: For how long was the lease stamped?]

For a year, because we wished to be able to terminate the lease at the end of the year, but if no notice is given the lease runs on for 7, 14, or 21 years.

[De Villiers, C. J.: How long would it in point of fact run on?]

At least for seven years, but possibly for 21 years (see section 9 of the declaration). Defendant has a right to hold on for seven years, unless he gives notice of his intention of giving up the lease. It may even be argued that it should run on for 21 years. I wish first to argue the general question of the construction of the lease, irrespective of its length. If defendant gave no notice, he was bound by his lease for at least seven years, and was entitled to it for that term.

[De Villiers, C. J.: The clause does not say what is to follow if he gives no notice.]

It is quite a logical deduction that such a clause binds the lessee.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Then you say that this clause was the benefit of the lessor?]

Yes, but it binds him for at least seven years.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Is he then bound to take a benefit if he does not want it?]

The clause was for the mutual benefit of both parties. One must take the lease as a whole. The lessee has a right to renew, and, if he does not wish to do so, he must give notice. These seven years have not yet expired, as they run from July, 1896.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Mr. Schreiner urges that the lease cannot run for more than ten years.]

We are entitled to ten years at all events. The Court will give us as long as the law allows, and will not stop at seven years. As to the second point, viz., the question of notice, defendant's case is founded on the equitable doctrine of notice. The only object of considering what occurred after the purchase by Mrs. Hite is to infer what had occurred before the sale. The only question is, "Did she purchase with notice of the lease?" There is no distinction in this matter of notice between executors, administrators, and assigns. They are all in the same position. A lease runs with the land, and in English law a right of renewal runs with the land. See Botha's Executors v. De Ploy (14, S.C.R., 414), and the judgment (p. 428) where Voet (19, 2, 19) is cited; also Van der Byl v. Findlay (9, Juta, 178). Personal rights bind a purchaser if he has notice of them, just as much as a servitude registered on the title deeds binds him, Richards v. Nash (1, Juta, 312), Judge v. Fourie (2, E.D.C., 441), Van Wyk v. Van Wyk (2, E.D.C., 462), Jansen v. Fincham (2, Shiel, 230). If John Hite knew of the lease when he purchased the property he would be bound by the lease. Mrs. Hite had her husband's power of attorney, and she commissioned Kennedy to purchase. Hence, if he had notice she had, and so had her husband. Options of renewal would be valueless if they did not bind unless the principal was notified. Surely a lessee is not bound to examine deeds and find out what burdens there are on the lands leased: it is for the purchaser from the lessor to find out what burdens are on the property.

[De Villiers, C. J.: But must not notice be given to the purchaser?]

It was given, because it was given to Mrs. Hite, thus John Hite bought with knowledge of the lease, and is therefore bound.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Notice should have been given to the executor, just as if he had been the original purchaser.]

There would be much force in that contention were it not for the seventh clause of the lease. Edmed says that Mrs. Hite was the purchaser. He did not know Hite in the transaction.

Mr. Steytler never took the trouble to find out whether there were any mortgages on the property. No doubt Mr. Steytler ought to have known about the lease, but in point of fact he did not know. It would be unreasonable to oblige all purchasers to inspect the titles in the Deeds Office. It is quite immaterial that Hite died a few days after we gave notice. Mrs. Hite's knowledge was that of her husband. She knew what had been done as to the lease, the rent was paid to her, and notice to her agent Edmed was notice to her. Lastly, as to the third point, to cite some English authorities, see Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (16th edition, p. 173, chap. 5, section 8 sub-sec. (a), Brook v. Bulkeley (2, Vesey, sen., 498), Roe and Bamford v. Haley (11, Rev. Rep., 458, and also 12, East, 464), Encyclopædia of the Laws of England (Vol. 9, p. 189, Art. "N. C. S."). The only other point is the length of the lease. It has been argued for the plaintiff that no lease is good for more than ten years, unless it is registered, and Green v. Griffiths (4, Juta, 346) has been cited in support of this opinion. But there the question was not between lessor and lessee, as in the present case, but between the lessor and his creditors, so that that case is not in point. The whole raison d'être of the rule is to protect the creditors: but here there is no question of creditors. In Maynard v. Usher (2, Menz, 181), a 99 years' lease was upheld, but I admit it had been registered. On the construction of leases, see Woodfall (p. 116), Fergusson v. Cornish (2, Burrows, 1032), Woodright d. Doe v. Richardson (3, Term, Rep., 462).

[De Villiers, C. J.: In none of these cases was there any question of a one year's lease.]

No, but in the case of this lease we must read section 1 and 7 together.

[Hopley, J.: On what notice do you rely?]

On that given to Edmeds.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Mr. Schreiner, may it not be said that if the notice given to Edmeds reached you, you were bound by it?]

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): The notice given was not given to any person interested, because then Edmeds had transferred the property to Hite. In November, 1895, the rent was paid to Mrs. Hite, and therefore the notice to Edmeds in May, 1896, came too late. We rely upon the absence of notice.

[De Villiers, C. J.: That is a mere technicality; may it not be met by another technicality, viz., that the lease required that notice must be given to the lessor, and it was given to him?]

As Jones knew that Edmeds had ceased to have any interest in the property, he could not give notice to Edmeds. Edmeds was no longer lessor, Gronewegen ad cod. (4, 65, 9). It has been repeatedly laid down in this Court that no lease is valid for more than ten years, unless executed coram lege loci, Fergusson v. Cornish. There the lease was held good for seven years because that was the original term agreed upon, but here the original term was one year.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea, May 29.

De Villiers, C. J.: On the 8th of October, 1891, John Hite and his wife made a mutual will, by which they appointed their children as heirs, directing, however, that the survivor of the testators should enjoy the usufruct of the joint estate during his or her life, and they appointed the plaintiff as executor of their will, administrator of their estate, and guardian of their minor heirs. It does not appear that they had executed an ante-nuptial contract, and the Court must therefore assume that they were married in community of property. Some time after the execution of the will, but at what date does not appear, John Hite went to England, and before leaving left his general power of attorney with his wife, who remained in this colony. The power is in the widest possible terms, and among other things authorises Mrs. Hite to buy or sell immovable property in South Africa, to let houses, collect the rents, and to execute all such instruments as may be necessary as fully and effectually as John Hite himself might have done. Under this power Mrs. Hite purchased certain premises at Claremont from one Edmed, and on the 2nd of October, 1895, transfer of the premises was effected in favour of John Hite. Before the date of the sale, namely, on the 26th of July, 1895, Edmed had leased part of the premises to the defendants. The agreement of lease was in writing, and provided, among other things, that the tenancy should be for the term of one year, commencing on the 1st of August, 1895, and that the rent should be at the rate of £8 per month, payable monthly. The seventh clause, which forms the subject of the present dispute, is as follows: "At the expiration of this lease the lessees shall have the right to renew the same for a further period of either seven years, fourteen years, or twenty-one years, as they, the said lessees may desire, at the same rental and upon the same terms as are set forth in the lease, provided that should they, the lessees, not wish to renew the lease after the termination of the first period of one year, they shall be obliged to notify their intention to the lessor, in writing, at least one month before the expiration thereof." It is abundantly clear from the evidence that at the time when the lease was entered into it was considered a very favourable one for the lessor, and that before Mrs. Hite purchased the premises she was made fully acquainted with the terms of the lease. She had the written agreement in her possession for some time, and, according to the evidence of Edmed, which I see no reason for discrediting, "it was the lease which really induced the sale." He was not aware of the fact that Mrs. Hite was purchasing the property for her husband, and indeed did not know that she had a husband, although, if he had carefully read the declaration of seller before he signed it he might have ascertained that the purchase was on behalf of John Hite. On the 30th of October, 1896, Edmed wrote to the defendant as follows: "Having sold my property, which you occupy at Claremont, I would kindly ask you to make your rent payable to Mrs. Hite, to whom I have given your lease." Accordingly, when the current month's rent fell due the defendants paid it to Mrs. Hite. A few days, however, before this John Hite had died in England. The defendants, who knew nothing whatever, and had no reason for knowing, of the existence of John Hite, continued thereafter to pay the rent as it fell due to Mrs. Hite, who had been indicated by the lessor as the person to whom the lease had been given, and to whom the rent was payable. In 1896 the plaintiff took out letters of administration as executor of John Hite's will. He filed an inventory of the estate, which included the premises in question, but he allowed Mrs. Hite, as the usufructuary, to remain in possession. He admits that he knew that part of the property was let at £8 a month, and that he did not inquire for how long it was so let. He did not, however, know of the existence of the written agreement of lease until the year 1896, when Mrs. Hite first informed him of it. I am satisfied, however, that if he had made inquiries from the defendants, to whom the property was let, he would have ascertained the terms of the lease. He allowed Mrs. Hite to deal with the property as her own, and gave no notice whatever to the defendants of the fact that she, having accepted the benefits of the will, was now only a usufructuary instead of part owner of the joint estate, and that he was the administrator thereof. The consequence was that, when, before the expiration of the first year of the lease, the defendants wished to renew the lease, they made no communication to the plaintiff; but on the 19th of May, 1896, gave notice to the only persons whom they knew in the transaction, namely, Edmed, their lessor, and Mrs. Hite, the person whom they believed to be the purchaser, and whom the plaintiff had left to deal with the premises as the ostensible owner. The notices were to the effect that the defendants would renew the lease for a further period of twenty-one years from the 1st of August, 1896. Edmed, in his answer, of course, referred the defendants to Mrs. Hite, and she, in her answer, raised no objection to the renewal, but promised to call on the defendants' attorneys. For some reason or another the renewal was never executed, and Mrs. Hite continued to receive the monthly rent as it fell due. She died in February, 1901, and on the 19th of June, 1901, the plaintiff notified to the defendants that they should in future pay all rents on the leased property to him, and to this course the defendants assented. The first payment was made on the 2nd of July, when a clean receipt was given on behalf of the plaintiff, but the receipts for subsequent payments contained the words, "without admitting any right under lease granted by Mrs. Hite." The plaintiff, as the executor of Hite, now seeks to eject the defendants from the premises, and they, relying upon the 7th clause of the agreement, claim to be entitled to remain in possession for a period of twenty-one years, from the 1st of August, 1896. Upon these facts, I am clearly of opinion that the defendants cannot be ejected from the premises, and that they are entitled to claim that a lease for twenty-one years be executed by the plaintiff, reckoned from the 1st of August, 1896. I fully concur in the view, contended for by Mr. Schreiner, that the rule "hire goes before sale" applies only to leases actually in existence, and not to a mere right of renewal. I agree also that even in regard to leases actually in existence at the time when the land under lease is purchased, the rule giving a real right to the lessee, as against the purchaser, does not extend to terms exceeding ten years, without notarial registration of the lease upon the title-deeds of the property. If, therefore, Mrs. Hite had not, during her husband's lifetime, done acts which placed her husband in the same legal position as if he had himself been the lessor of the premises, I would not have enforced the 7th clause of the lease as against his executor. But the evidence clearly shows that Mrs. Hite not only had full knowledge of the terms of the lease before she bought the land, but after she had bought, she accepted the defendants as her tenants, under the lease and subject to all the provisions thereof. The plaintiff, therefore, as executor has no greater rights as against the defendants than he would have had if John Hite had himself been the lessor by whom the agreement was made with the defendants. The plaintiff's counsel does not seriously dispute this position, but he contends that after John Hite's death, the defendants could acquire no legal right of renewal, under the 7th clause of the lease, without due notice to the plaintiff himself, as executor, and that the notice given to Mrs. Hite was not sufficient. In my opinion, the notice given to her must be deemed, under the circumstances of this case, to have been given to the executor. He allowed her to remain as the ostensible owner of the premises, and although he knew that the premises were let, he took no pains to ascertain from her or from the defendants, as lessees, upon what terms they were in occupation. It is true that, as usufructuary, Mrs. Hite was entitled to possession of the premises or to the rents thereof during her lifetime, but the plaintiff, as executor, and more especially as administrator, was bound to inform himself as to the nature of the property which he was to administer. The defendants having hired the premises from Edmed, had no reason for knowing or even suspecting that Mrs. Hite, to whom they had been directed to pay the rents, was a married woman, or that a certain Mr. Hite, whose death they might, if they had examined the death notices, have seen advertised, was the husband of their landlady. The plaintiff, on the other hand, knowing that a part of the premises was let, ought to have inquired whether they had been so let during the husband's lifetime, and, if so, whether there was a written agreement of lease in existence, and what its terms were. If Mrs. Hite would not give him the information, inquiry by letter or by word of mouth from the defendants would have given him all the information he needed. Having made no such inquiry, and having left the defendants under the impression that Mrs. Hite was the owner, he cannot now avail himself of the somewhat technical objection that the notice was not served on him also. I call it a technical objection, because the consent of the plaintiff was not required at all to perfect the defendants' absolute right of renewal. Formal notice of the defendants' intention to exercise their right may have been requisite, but no possible injustice could be done to any one if that notice was directed to the only person whom the defendants knew in the matter, namely, Mrs. Hite. It may, indeed, be a question whether, if the notice so given was not in order, the notice given by the defendants' claim in reconvention is not a sufficient notice to the plaintiff of the defendants' intention to avail themselves of their right of renewal. In England the agreement would probably be construed as keeping the right of renewal in operation after the expiration of the terms of the lease, so long as the tenancy continues. In the case of Buckland v. Papellon (L.R., 2, Ch. A.C., 67), the owner of a long term had agreed to let it for three years, seven years, or the whole term. The tenant continued in the occupation beyond the three years, and became bankrupt. The assignee sold the bankrupt's estate and interest in the leasehold to a purchaser. It was held by Lyndhurst, L.C., affirming the decision of Romilly, M.R., first, that the option of the tenant to take a lease was not gone at the end of the three years; secondly, that it passed to the assignee in bankruptcy; and, thirdly, that the option had passed to the purchaser. In that case there was no limitation of the time within which the lessee was to perform his option, nor is it clear that there is such a limitation in the present case. It is only in case the defendants did not wish to renew the lease "after the termination of the first period of one year" that they were obliged to give notice to the lessor before the expiration of the lease. It is not necessary, however, to decide to what extent the English rule of construction is applicable to the present case. The plaintiff admits that a notice, given to him at the time when notice of renewal was given to Mrs. Hite, would have entitled the defendants to such renewal. For the reasons which I have already stated, the notice given to Mrs. Hite as the person whom the plaintiff allowed to appear as the ostensible owner, and whom the defendants, without any fault on their part, believed to be the owner, was a sufficient notice to the plaintiff. The Court will therefore give judgment for the defendants, and declare that they are entitled to have a lease for a period of twenty-one years executed by the plaintiff, as executor of John Hite, and duly registered in the Deeds Office against the title deeds relating to the premises in question, such period to be reckoned as from the 1st of August, 1886. The plaintiff to pay the costs, with the exception of the costs of the day on 25th February, which are to be paid by the defendants.

Buchanan, J., said that in this case he was not concerned as to whether the rule of law in regard to hire going before sale was applicable or not, because he founded his judgment upon the fact that Mrs. Hite purchased the property with the knowledge of and subject to the lease. There was distinct notice given to her of the lease, and she accepted the property with that lease. Although she transferred the property into the name of her husband, instead of her own, she had her husband's power of attorney, and her knowledge bound her husband. As to the argument founded on the question of a contract running with the land, the husband might, no doubt, be considered as a particular successor to Edmed, but the executor in the husband's estate stood in no better position than Hite himself would have done. However, these technical distinctions need not be considered under the circumstances proved. Hite bought the property subject to the lease, and was bound by the conditions of the lease. That lease did not contain any clause limiting the time within which notice had to be given by the lessee of his intention to exercise his option of renewal. If there had been such a condition there would have been great force in the contention that the notice, not having been given within the specified time, the right of renewal was lost. Here the executor had himself knowledge of the lease as far back as 1883, and had allowed the defendant to continue in possession until 1902 before taking any action. It would be highly inequitable to allow the executor, owing to any technicality founded on the fact that the lessee had given notice to Mrs. Hite, instead of to him, to cancel the lease. His Lordship thought that, under the circumstances of the case, the executor having allowed the defendant to continue in possession, could not now refuse to allow the lessee the option of renewal. The executor might have called upon the lessee at any time to state whether he meant to renew the lease, and for what period, but he did nothing of the kind. He concurred in giving judgment for the defendant in the terms stated by His Lordship the Chief Justice.

Hopley, J., also concurred.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Sir JOHN BUCHANAN, the Hon. Mr. Justice MAANDORP, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

REX V. SASCHOLSKY. { 1902.

Resident Magistrate — Jurisdiction—Act 13 of 1886.

Where a charge of contravening sec. 2 of Act 13 of 1886 had been tried by a magistrate, and he had imposed a fine of £25 with an alternative of three months' imprisonment, which sentence was within the limit of punishment fixed by the Act the fine was reduced to £10 as the charge had been tried under the ordinary jurisdiction of the magistrate.

This was a case which came before Buchanan, J., as judge of the week, where the defendant was charged under section 2 of Act 13 of 1886 with having injured a person through negligent driving. The Act fixes the maximum penalty for this offence at £100 or two years' imprisonment, but this case was tried under the Magistrate's ordinary jurisdiction, and consequently the Magistrate was limited to the ordinary sentence, which is £10 or three months' imprisonment. In this case the Magistrate fined the defendant £25 or three months' imprisonment and this fine must be reduced to £10. I would point out that the Magistrate himself, after giving judgment, discovered his error, and brought it to the notice of the Court.

Abusive language—Act 27 of 1882, sec. 5, sub-section 18—Public place.

This was a case which came before Hopley, J., for review from a Special Justice of the Peace in the district of Mossel Bay, in which a man was charged under the 18th section of the Police Offences Act, in that he wrongfully and unlawfully insulted a man called Klaasen by saying, "You thief, you have stolen my bee-hive." On turning up that section, his lordship had found that it had really nothing to do with any such offence, but provided for the arrest of persons under certain circumstances. Obviously the section mentioned was an entirely wrong one, but probably what was meant was the 18th sub-section of section 5, which provided for the offence of using abusive language towards any person in a public place. In the present case the charge did not allege in any way that the offence was committed in a public place, but even if that could be got over it did not, from the evidence, seem to have been committed in a public place, but on a farm. On both those grounds it seemed to his lordship that the conviction was bad and accordingly it must be quashed.

Interdict—Account of profits—
Damages.

Where an applicant sought to interdict the respondent from performing certain plays within Cape Colony and failed to satisfy the Court of his exclusive right to such performances; the Court refused either to grant an interdict or to order respondent to keep an account of profits, as respondent was known to be a man of sufficient means to satisfy the applicant in any action for damages he might be advised to bring.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C., mentioned as an urgent motion an application by George Edwardes for an interdict restraining Frank de Jong from producing a certain play ("A Gaiety Girl").

Sir Henry Juta, K.C., appeared for the respondent, and drew the attention of the Court to the fact that some of the affidavits had only been served upon them that morning, and time would be required to answer these. The respondent had replied to the first affidavit, but to these supplementary affidavits he had had no opportunity of replying.

Mr. Schreiner said he had thought the respondent might take up that position, and he would suggest that the matter stand over until two o'clock that afternoon, by which time respondent could reply to the supplementary affidavits.

Sir Henry Juta said he could not give the assurance that they would be able to reply by two o'clock.

Buchanan, J., said that they might reply if they could by two o'clock, and if they could not, he did not suppose there would be any great damage if the application stood over for a day.

Mr. Schreiner said that the respondent was producing the play again that evening.

Buchanan, J.: Even so, it will be merely a matter of account.

Mr. Schreiner said the difficulty was that great damage would be done by the production of the play.

The Court decided that the matter should stand over until two o'clock, and suggested that an endeavour be made in the meantime to get the replying affidavit prepared.

At 2 p.m. the application was heard, upon notice given, calling upon the respondent to show cause, if any, why an order should not be granted interdicting him from playing and performing in any part of the Cape Colony, either personally or through any agents or company, and more especially by means of a certain company known as Mr. Frederick Mouillot's Musical Comedy Company, the play known as "A Gaiety Girl," the sole right of performing the said play being vested in the applicant. The respondent was also called upon to show cause why he should not be ordered to pay the costs of the application.

The petition of the applicant, George Edwardes, was as follows:

1. That your petitioner is a theatrical manager, resident in London.

2. That your petitioner has acquired the sole right of performing in this colony a certain play, known as "A Gaiety Girl."

3. Frank de Jong, the respondent, has given notice in the papers that the company known as "Mr. Mouillot's Musical Comedy Company" will perform the play "A Gaiety Girl" in Cape Town this evening, and until further notice.

4. That your petitioner has, through his attorneys, given notice to the respondent of his rights, and has warned him not to perform the said play. In reply to this letter, of which a copy is hereto annexed, the respondent called on your petitioner's attorneys and stated that he intended playing "A Gaiety Girl," and did not intend to withdraw the notice, as he had full right to play that piece.

5. That your petitioner is in the habit of organising companies for the purpose of performing plays in South Africa.

6. That your petitioner will suffer serious damage if others not authorised by him are allowed to perform the said play in the Colony.

7. Your petitioner annexes hereto a letter received from your petitioner's business manager in London by your petitioner's business manager in South Africa.

Wherefore your petitioner humbly prays that your lordships may be pleased to grant an interdict prohibiting the respondent or any company brought out by him from performing in Cape Town or elsewhere in the Cape Colony the said play known as "A Gaiety Girl" and also order the respondent to pay costs of this application.

The following is the letter referred to in the petition: "Daly's Theatre, Leicester-square, London, W., April 16, 1902.—My Dear Frank, — I have arranged definitely for the "Lady Slavey" for us, or it would have fallen into the hands of the opposition. We can play it with the next company. I understand that Mr. Livesey has assigned some imaginary rights, he thinks he has got, in the "Artist's Model," and "Gaiety Girl" to Mr. De Jong. Of course, you quite understand Mr. Livesey has no power to do this, and if Mr. De Jong attempts to play either of these two pieces you must stop him.—Yours faithfully,—J. E. Malone."

The replying affidavit of Frank de Jong was as follows: I, Frank de Jong, the above-named respondent, make oath and say: That I am a theatrical manager, carrying on business in this colony and in London. That I have read the notice of motion and petition, and annexures therein referred to, which were served on me this afternoon. I admit the allegations of paragraphs 1 and 3 of said petition. That save that the letter referred to in the fourth paragraph was written on behalf of Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler, I admit the allegations of said fourth paragraph. In reply to paragraph 2 of the said petition, I deny that the above-named respondent has the sole right to perform in this colony certain play known as "A Gaiety Girl." That on the contrary, I have acquired the sole right to perform the said piece in South Africa, including the Cape Colony, all which I am prepared to prove.

The following further affidavit on behalf of the applicant was read:

I, Alfred Wyburd, make oath and say:

1. I am the manager in Cape Town for Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler during their absence.

2. Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler are the South African representatives of Mr. George Edwardes.

3. I know that Mr. George Edwardes has the sole right of playing "A Gaiety Girl" in South Africa.

4. I have seen the copyright which was sent to Pretoria just shortly before the outbreak of war for the purpose of interdicting the Lilliputian Company from playing "A Gaiety Girl" and other pieces.

5. On instruction from me, my solicitors have written and telegraphed to Pretoria to have the copyright sent down. It has not yet arrived. Some other copyrights have been forwarded on, but they are not the ones telegraphed for.

6. I annex a power of attorney by Mr. George Edwardes, the applicant, in favour of Benjamin Franklin Wheeler, a partner in B. and F. Wheeler, in which it is clearly stated that Mr. George Edwardes has the sole right to "A Gaiety Girl," as well as other pieces, and in which he instructs Mr. Wheeler to take action against anyone infringing his rights.

7. About the end of 1898, or the beginning of 1899, this Honourable Court was petitioned to interdict one Pollard and a Mrs. Lester from performing amongst other pieces "A Gaiety Girl." The record of the proceedings are filed with the Registrar of this Honourable Court.

8. The letter from Mr. Malone, the joint manager for Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler and Mr. George Edwardes in England, addressed to Mr. Frank Wheeler, and which letter is attached to the petition, confirms my opinion that Mr. Edwardes still has the sole right to "A Gaiety Girl."

9. In any case, he still has the same rights now as he then had.

10. The play is George Edwardes' own property. It was originally produced at the Gaiety Theatre by him.

A further affidavit of Frank de Jong, dated May 21, was read as follows:

I, Frank de Jong, make oath and say that I have perused the affidavit of Alfred Wyburd, as sworn to this day.

In reply to paragraph 3, I deny that George Edwardes has the sole right to "A Gaiety Girl" in this country. In reply to paragraph 4, I say that on the 19th March, 1902, I acquired the sole right to perform the play in question in South Africa, including this colony, from one Reginald Livesey, of Daly's Theatre, Leicester-square, London, in terms of the agreement hereunto annexed, to which I crave leave to refer this Hon. Court.

I further annex hereto an affidavit, made by Frederick Mouillot, on the 13th May instant, which my solicitors obtained from him prior to his departure for England on the 14th May. I requested him to make the said affidavit in connection with this case, which I was led to believe was being brought by Messrs. B. and F. Wheeler.

In reply to paragraph 6, I beg leave to refer this Hon. Court to the said power of attorney which is dated the 12th January, 1899.

In reply to paragraph 7, I crave leave to refer this Hon. Court to the record of the proceedings therein referred to. In the petition the present applicant applied for an interdict restraining one Pollard from performing inter alia the said play, "A Gaiety Girl." This Hon. Court, while granting an interdict restraining the performance of certain other plays, did not include "A Gaiety Girl" in the final order.

I cannot of my own personal knowledge say what rights the said Edwardes had in the year 1899, but I deny that he has the sole rights to said play as alleged in paragraph 10 of said affidavit.

The following is the affidavit of Frederick Mouillot, dated May 13:

I, Frederick Mouillot, of 4 and 5, Broad Court Chambers, Bond-street, London, at present in Cape Town, make oath and say:

That I am a theatrical proprietor and manager of fourteen different theatres in Great Britain and Ireland, and am proprietor of twelve travelling companies.

That the repertoire of the various companies owned and managed by me is a very extensive one.

That I have had large dealings with George Edwardes, of London, and have at various times obtained from him the right to play in England, among others, such pieces as the "Shop Girl," "Circus Girl," "Runaway Girl," "My Girl," "My Friend the Prince," "Greek Slave," and "The Geisha."

That in each case I have paid the fees or royalty for the right to play the above pieces direct to George Edwardes, or to his company called the Gaiety Theatre Company, of which he is the managing director.

I have, with some of my said companies, also at different times during the last four years, in England played certain piece called the "Gaiety Girl," but I acquired and obtained the right to do this from one Reginald Livesey, of Daly's Theatre, Leicester-square, London, to whom I have paid all fees and royalties for the right to play said piece as aforesaid.

The custom in England is to pay all fees and royalties direct to the owner of any play which you have obtained the right to perform.

The affidavit, dated May 21, of James Nelson, was as follows:

That I am a theatrical manager, and have been engaged in the theatrical profession in this colony and England for upwards of twenty-three years.

I have read the affidavit of Alfred Wyburd, sworn to on this day. I know of my own personal knowledge that Frederick Mouillot, theatrical proprietor and manager, has with his companies been performing the play called the "Gaiety Girl," and that he acquired the right to play same from one Reginald Livesey, who for some years past has been the recognised owner of the said play, and to whom all fees for the right to perform said piece have been paid.

In reply to paragraph 10 of the said affidavit, I say that the said Alfred Wyburd is mistaken in asserting that the said piece was originally performed at the Gaiety Theatre. It was first performed at the Prince of Wales Theatre, London.

I lastly say that the custom in the theatrical profession is always to pay fees direct to the owner of any play.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicant): In the case of Edwardes v. Pollard and Chester (9, Sheil, 31), Mr. Searle, K.C. (for applicant Edwardes) said they had the right to perform, but he had no proof of the right, as far as some of the plays were concerned. In that case a rule nisi was granted as to some of the plays, but those to which no title could be shown were excluded from the rule. The proofs of our right to "The Gaiety Girl" are in Pretoria. We have wired for them, but they have not yet arrived, but we are in possession of the right to perform this play in South Africa. Possibly we may not be entitled to an interdict, but I would ask that an account be kept. An order such as I ask for was granted in Serelle v. Bonamici (3, Sheil, 171). This play was originally produced at the Gaiety Theatre, in London, by Edwardes. Livesey has no right to the play. Our case is that we have a strong presumption in our favour founded on possession since 1899. Respondents cannot be prejudiced by keeping an account and I would ask that the Court should make an order to that effect. The order to relate back to last night.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for respondent): This is an application for an interdict. In such cases the first thing the applicant has to show is a clear right. Here, however, no clear right has been established. Van Zyl spoke only to the best of his knowledge. Wyburd could only speak as to what happened "before the war." There is nothing before the Court to show what rights the applicant has in this country. Wyberg knows nothing about Livesey's rights. Then there is the letter annexed to applicant's petition, in which it is said that if they had not secured the "Lady Slavey" it would have fallen into the hands of the opposition, and yet in 1899 they said this was Edward's own property. But let applicant show his title. He could not do so in 1899, and he cannot do it now. In the "Magda" case we got a postponement, and then produced our copyright, but there is nothing of the sort here.

Mr. Schreiner (in reply): The absence of our document is easily explained, because the war interposed difficulties in the way of postal communication, and prevented us from getting it down. Livesey may have rights in England, but that does not prove that he has rights here. The case heard in 1899 was substantially the same as this as to documents of title. No muniments of title were produced as to any of the plays then. Ours is a stronger case than that, and we ask for less than was granted then.

The Court refused the application.

Buchanan, J., in giving judgment, said: The applicant Edwardes in this case alleges that he is the owner of a certain play, known as "A Gaiety Girl," and in the notice of motion he applies for an interdict restraining the respondent De Jong from playing this, either personally or through any other company, in Cape Colony. The question of the ownership of the right to perform this play in this country has been before the Court on a previous occasion, and on that occasion it was not clearly established that Edwardes had the sole right to the play. On this occasion also Edwardes, the applicant, has not been able to establish his title to the play by the production of the copyright or any other muniment of title, but he alleges that he had certain documents, which he sent to the Transvaal before the war, and that he has not been able to recover these documents. As far as the case put before the Court is concerned, Edwardes's right is founded solely upon a power of attorney signed by himself, in which he alleges that he is the sole owner of the play. This power of attorney is dated January 12, 1899. The respondent De Jong produces a contract entered into between him and one Reginald Livesey, of Daly's Theatre, London, by which contract Livesey grants to the respondent De Jong the sole right of producing this play in South Africa. Here we have the simple allegations, one by Edwardes, the other by Livesey, that they are the owners of this play. There is no information as to how either of them became owners, and neither of them has produced any muniment of title or any copyright to settle this question. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that no such clear right has been established as would entitle either the applicant or the respondent to any order, either temporary or otherwise. Mr. Schreiner, however, is willing to forego the interdict if an order is given ordering the respondent to keep an account of the profits he makes by the performance of this play, but it is admitted that the respondent is a man of means, and therefore would be answerable for any damages which applicant might recover from him. As the interdict cannot be granted, I am not inclined under the circumstances disclosed to grant the order for an account in the dispute which has arisen in this case as to who is the owner of the play. If the applicant hereafter succeeds in proving his ownership, and if the respondent has infringed his rights, the respondent would be answerable for any damages, and the Court assessing the damages would probably take a liberal estimate of the wrong which has been done by the respondent in this matter. The applicant has not proved his title, and is therefore not entitled to an interdict, but he is not without remedy if he establishes his right hereafter. The only question is as to whether the application should be refused, with costs.

Mr. Schreiner said it might be taken as prejudicial in the principal case if applicant had to pay the costs now. He suggested that the question of costs should stand over for a month, and then, if no action be taken by the applicant, the respondent to be entitled to his costs.

Sir Henry Juta said that if the Court gave them their costs now, and the applicant hereafter succeeded in showing that they had infringed his rights, the Court, in assessing the damages, would take the costs into account.

The Court decided that the application would be refused, with costs, but leave would be given to the applicant to include these costs in an action, if he should bring one.

Hopley, J., said it might be prudent of the respondent to keep an account as suggested, although not ordered by the Court, because if applicant afterwards proved his right to the ownership of the play, damages would be assessed on the takings.

MALCOLMESS AND CO. V. { 1902.
A. R. MCKENZIE AND CO. { May 21st.
Costs—Shortage of goods delivered.

This was originally an action for the recovery of certain goods or their value, but it now came before the Court on the question of costs only. It appeared that Messrs. A. R. McKenzie and Co. had agreed with the plaintiffs to deliver on their behalf certain 500 cases of sheep dip to the Colonial Government, the defendants undertaking to store, look after, forward, and take receipts for these cases. From what could at first be ascertained, it appeared that receipts had been obtained for 414 cases delivered, but there were none for certain other 86 cases, although it had since been discovered that these cases also had been delivered, and Malcomess and Co. had obtained payment for them. Accordingly the only question was as to the costs of the action, counsel for the plaintiffs intimating that he would forego any claim with regard to one case, which it was stated had been short-delivered.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), appeared for the plaintiffs; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Buchanan), appeared for the defendants.

Mr. Searle called

Charles Dennison who said that in April last year he was a clerk in the employ of Van Ryn and Company, who were instructed by Malcomess and Co. to make inquiries regarding this sheep dip. Witness went to McKenzie's, and asked for the receipts for the eighty-five or eighty-six cases that were missing. Witness did not know the name of the gentleman he saw at the office, but that gentleman said he would look into the matter and telephoned down to the Docks while witness was present. He then told witness to call next day, and they would look out the receipts. Witness called next day, and got the same answer. The last time witness called, they said they could not trace the receipts. They admitted having received all the goods except five cases which they afterwards traced. Witness said he must have the matter settled some way, and the gentleman said: "The only way you can do is to send in a claim to McKenzie for eighty-five cases." That was the last time witness called—between the 19th and 25th April.

Cross-examined: Witness could not remember whether he produced at McKenzie's office the letter his firm had received from Malcomess.

Louis Bertie Jacobsohn, an article clerk in the employ of Walker and Jacobsohn, attorneys, said that in consequence of a letter his firm had received from Silberbauer, Wahl and Fuller, he went to see Mr. Boyes in regard to the cases of dip, but could get no particulars. He went again on a second occasion, but did not get what he wanted. On the 1st or 2nd August, at a time he had the particulars, witness went to the Agricultural Department. After that the money for the dip was paid.

William Boyes, Yard Superintendent at the Railway Stores at Woodstock, said that they received instructions to receive and store for the Agricultural Department certain cases of dip. Certain dip was received from McKenzie in January and February. The practice was for McKenzie to send two tickets with each lot of dip. One ticket was signed by witness's men and taken back by McKenzie's people as a receipt while the other ticket was retained by witness. They had got receipts for 414 cases of dip. In addition, one morning, at half-past six o'clock, when witness went down to the stores, he found there a trailer which had been brought there by a traction engine the night before. There were eighty-five cases of dip on the trailer, and nobody in charge of it. The dip was taken into the store. That must have been early in February. About a couple of months afterwards McKenzie's people came and said that there were eighty-five cases of dip for which they had no receipt. Afterwards Mr. Hamilton came and said they wanted a duplicate receipt, and witness said one had been given already. Witness referred the matter to Mr. Knipe, who was a foreman in his yard.

Cross-examined: The Agricultural Department knew about the eighty-five cases of dip the same day, and that they were received. Witness remembered seeing Mr. Sexton one day at the end of February or beginning of March, and telling him that the man who had charge of the receiving of the dip was away sick. There never was a moment's doubt that the Government had received delivery of the eighty-five cases.

Re-examined: It was the practice when they gave receipts that someone was in charge of the wagon.

Charles Richard Knipe said that he was employed under Mr. Boyes at the Railway Stores, Woodstock. It was his duty to receive this consignment of sheep dip. When the wagons came with dip, the drivers brought two tickets, one of which witness signed as a receipt for the goods and the other he retained. For the trailer with the eighty-five cases mentioned he did not give a receipt at the time because there was no one in charge of the trailer. Some time afterwards a gentleman came from McKenzie's and demanded a receipt for the 85 cases. He was referred to witness, who gave him a receipt on a railway service forwarding note. That would be a month or two after they had received the goods. The day Mr. Jacobsohn called about the dip, witness was sent by Mr. Boyes to McKenzie's. There he was told that they wanted a lot of duplicate receipts. Witness asked what receipts they were looking for, and on their turning up the receipts he pointed out the one for 85 cases on the railway service form. Thereupon witness would not give another duplicate receipt, as he did not feel himself justified in doing so. They took witness's name and address, and said they would write to him if they required him further.

Cross-examined: Witness believed that it was Mr. Hamilton he gave the receipt to. Witness never had any doubts about the 85 cases being delivered.

This closed the case for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Schreiner called

Warren B. Sexton, who said he was the manager of the baggage and claims departments of McKenzie and Co. Witness went to Boyce twice for the receipts in respect of Malcomess's goods. Witness went after receiving instructions from Malcomess. Witness did not remember Boyes saying anything about a receipt having been delivered. Information had been given to plaintiff's representative. Witness instructed two clerks to make further inquiries. Witness had no receipt for the 85 cases at the railway store. There was a note (produced) brought back by the waggoner, but this was not a receipt. Very often the receipts from the railway stores were two or three days late. Witness asked Boyes to sign a duplicate. Boyes said he was not in a position to give a receipt. He did not say that witness had had a receipt.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: The document produced was a memo. from the railway stores that no receipt had been given. The document was brought to witness by one of the clerks in April last.

By the Court: Witness did not reply to Malcomess when the latter telegraphed and wrote about the 86 cases, because witness had already given the information to Cadoe.

Alfred Hamilton, clerk to McKenzie, said he had made inquiries about the cases on the instructions of the last witness. Knipe refused to give witness a further receipt, taking up the position that he had already given a receipt. In regard to the note produced in connection with the delivery at the railway stores, witness had this note handed to him in May or June by one Brittain, a clerk in the defendants' claims departments. Boyes told witness that he remembered the dip being delivered, but he could not recollect whether it was delivered by McKenzie or Divine, Gates and Co.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Some time in June witness took the document produced to Knipe and asked him for a receipt, saying that this document was not a receipt at all. Knipe said it was a receipt.

In reply to the Court, witness said he did not know where this document had been since June to the present.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for plaintiff): The whole point in dispute is, are defendants liable for the costs of this action or not? We could get no information from them till July 5, and we issued summons on June 4. The correspondence shows that we applied in vain for information. The defendants were bound to get receipts for our goods; it was a part of their contract, and their only defence is that they told Mr. Cardow, a clerk, that our goods had been received. Even in July we could not get proof of the delivery of our goods, and as McKenzie would give us no receipt, we could not get payment from Government. There was a shortage of 85 cases, and Malcomess would not have written so many letters had the information demanded been given. Even on July 5 the Government doubted whether they had received the goods from McKenzie, and the receipt for the 85 cases was only produced in Court by Knight. McKenzie should have taken the informal receipt, and insisted on getting a proper receipt from the Railway Department. McKenzie and Co. failed to carry out their contract, and were, therefore responsible for costs. It took us from February till July 10 before we could give Government the dates of delivery.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for defendant): Plaintiff's counsel has argued very clearly on the pleadings. He has dwelt on the summons, but in the declaration nothing is said about defendant's duty to take receipts. The Replication shows that we had delivered everything save one case. Early in March we told Malcomess's representative that we had received and delivered 499 cases, though we had receipts for only 414. The replication sets up quite a new case, and not the case set up in the declaration. Why then, it may be asked, did we not except to this replication. Simply because it did maintain a part of the case set up in the declaration, viz., the claim to £412 ts.

Mr. Searle (in reply) was not called upon.

The Court gave judgment for the applicants for the costs of the action.

FIELD AND CO. V. KAPLAN.

Mr. P. S. Jones moved for the final adjudication of defendant's estate as insolvent.

Order granted.

EPSTEIN V. CARTER.

Mr. C. de Villiers moved for a decree of civil imprisonment on an unsatisfied judgment of £30.

Defendant appeared in person, and offered to pay the debt by instalments of £3 per month. She was a boarding-house keeper, and £3 per month was all she could offer, as she had been very ill.

Mr. De Villiers thought she could pay more, as she had been paying rent at the rate of £30 per month.

The Chief Justice: But the more rent she pays the less able she must be to pay the debt.

Mr. De Villiers said he would like defendant to go into the witness-box, so that he could put a few questions.

The Chief Justice said that if they did so plaintiff might get nothing if defendant stated that she had no means.

Mr. De Villiers said that in that case he would accept the offer made by defendant.

Decree of civil imprisonment was granted, but execution stayed pending payment of debt by instalments of £3 per month, the first instalment to be paid on June 1, with leave reserved to the plaintiff to apply for an increase of the instalments if it could be proved that the defendant could pay more.

SAVAGE V. GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Rowson moved for provisional sentence for £255, due on a promissory note, together with interest and costs.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed.

MARAIS V. JOUBERT.

Mr. Nightingale moved for provisional sentence for £450, due on mortgage bonds, with interest less £17 10s. paid in reduction of interest. The bonds had become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. It was also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed, and the property declared executable.

EQUITABLE ASSURANCE COMPANY V. LA GRANGE.

Mr. Close moved for provisional sentence for £48, being interest in a mortgage bond.

DREYER V. ERASMUS.

Mr. Upton moved for provisional sentence for £100, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent., due upon a mortgage bond. The bond had become due by reason of notice given on non-payment of interest. He also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Provisional sentence granted and property declared executable.

ROUX V. CLEWS.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence for £15, being six months' interest at the rate of 6 per cent. on a mortgage bond for £500.

Provisional sentence granted.

ROUX V. CLEWS AND OTHERS.

Mr. Alexander moved for provisional sentence for £30, being six months' interest at the rate of 6 per cent. due on a mortgage bond for £1,000. The bond was originally for £1,500, but was subsequently reduced to £1,000, and it was then agreed that the rate of interest should be 6 per cent., instead of 5 per cent., as mentioned in the bond.

The Chief Justice pointed out that there was nothing on the face of the bond to show that the rate of interest had been increased, and accordingly provisional sentence could be given for interest at the rate of 5 per cent. only.

Provisional sentence was granted for interest at the rate of 5 per cent., viz., for £25.

LANGE V. SHORTLE.

Mr. Russell moved for provisional sentence upon four promissory notes, for £6, £22, £6 10s., and £5 5s. respectively.

Defendant appeared in person, and said that he only got as consideration for the notes £12 10s. in cash and some cheques, which on being presented to the bank were dishonoured. The cheques were drawn by one Reid in favour of defendant. Reid was a partner in business transactions, and a great friend of Mr. Lange. Defendant asked that the matter might be postponed for a fortnight, so that he might have an opportunity of being represented by counsel.

The Chief Justice said it was a very small amount to have all that litigation about, and if what defendant stated was true, applicant might consider whether it was advisable to go on with the case.

The Court granted a postponement of the case until the last day of the term.

STEER V. HAIRBOTTLE.

This was an application for provisional sentence on a mortgage bond for £154 1s. 5d. The bond had become due by reason of the non-payment of interest. It was also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Provisional sentence as prayed and property declared executable.

EVANS AND DICK V. R. D. ELLIOTT.

Mr. Buchanan moved for a decree of civil imprisonment upon an unsatisfied judgment for £50, with £9 12s. 5d. costs.

Decree granted.

HANSEN AND SCHRADER V. GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS

Mr. Buchanan moved for provisional sentence on the six bills of exchange, for sums of £284 1s., £104 16s. 9d., £586 15s. 11d., £930 14s. 6d., £420 0s. 9d., and £383 1s. respectively. There was also included in the summons a claim for £134 19s. 5d. upon another bill of exchange, but as there appeared to have been no acceptance of that bill, he could not ask for provisional sentence on it, but would ask for judgment on it as an illiquid claim.

The Chief Justice pointed out that in the summons the bill of exchange was set forth as the cause of action, and therefore without any other cause of action being disclosed, judgment could not be given in it.

Provisional sentence was given on the six bills of exchange against two respondents only, viz., Frank Hills and John Walker, counsel having stated that it appeared from a letter received that the other two respondents named as being partners in the Grand Junction Railways, viz., John Walker, jun., and T. Cameron Walker, were not, and never had been partners.

Mr. Buchanan also moved for judgment, under rule 329d, as follows: For £150 16s. for storage of certain sleepers, for £6 8s. 8d., amount due for off-loading and reloading certain sleepers; for £36 10s., for storage of and £17 13s. 4d., for off-loading and reloading certain other sleepers, with interest a tempore morae, and costs of suit.

Judgment granted as prayed.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

PHILIP BROTHERS V. GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. P. S. Jones moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £119 10s., for goods sold and delivered, with interest and costs of suit.

Judgment granted as prayed.

OHLSSON V. WEIDNER.

Mr. Alexander moved for judgment, under Rule 329d, for £450, being money lent.

Judgment granted as prayed.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the rehabilitation of the insolvent, Frank Wium, whose estate was sequestrated on February 23, 1887. The liabilities were brought up in the schedules at £110 10s., and the assets at £52. The debts proved amounted to £45, being rent of a farm, while the assets only realised £16 11s., which went towards the expenses of sequestration, so that there was no dividend to creditors. There was nothing unfavourable in the trustee's report.

Order granted.

Deed of assignment—Duplicate original.

This was an application for an order declaring that the duplicate original of a certain deed of assignment in the above estate might be treated and dealt with as the original thereof; such original having been lost or destroyed.

The petition of the applicant stated:

1. That by a certain deed of assignment, dated March 12, 1900, and signed at Port Elizabeth, petitioner was appointed sole assignee in the estate of Marcuse Behr Fischer and Herman Hendenreich, trading together at Pampoenpan, in the district of Hope Town, and at Douglas, in the district of Herbert, in this colony, under the style or firm of Marcuse Heydenreich and Co.

2. That at the signing of the aforesaid deed of assignment, a duplicate original thereof was also signed by all the parties concerned, and which duplicate original bears a certificate signed by the Civil Commissioner of this town, as follows: "I hereby certify that the original of the deed of assignment, of which the within written is a duplicate, has been stamped with a stamp of £1 sterling, which has been cancelled by me, as by law required."

3. That on 18th of February, 1901, I went to Hope Town, and left the original deed in my safe at Pampoenpan aforesaid.

4. That about a week after that date I returned to Pampoenpan, and found the safe broken, and all documents extricated and thrown about, presumably by the enemy, who during that interval had visited Pampoenpan.

5. That notwithstanding a thorough search having been made by me, I have been unable to find the aforesaid deed of assignment.

6. That by virtue of the aforesaid deed I am empowered to give transfer of all or any landed property belonging to the estate of Marcuse Heydenreich and Co.

7. That a portion of a certain farm De Kalk, belonging to the aforesaid estate, has been sold by me to a certain Louis de Jager, of which portion I am unable to give transfer, by reason of the Registrar of Deeds refusing to accept the aforesaid duplicate original in lieu of the original deed of assignment, which has been lost as aforesaid, without an order of Court authorising him to do so.

8. Wherefore petitioner prays for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to pass the aforesaid transfer under and by virtue of the duplicate original deed of assignment.

There was a verifying affidavit attached.

On the motion of Mr. Buchanan, an order was granted as prayed.

[Applicant's Attorney: G. Trollip.]

ESTATE OF NAUDE V. HALL AND CO.

This was an application in which Frederick Lindenberg, executor dative in the estate of the late Jacobus Stephanus Naude was the applicant, and William Ashworth Hall, trading as Hall and Company, and Frederick Lodewyk Lindenberg individually and in his capacity as the trustee in the insolvent estate of the late Jacob Stephanus Naude were respondents.

The notice called upon the respondents to show cause, if any, why,

(a) You, the respondents Hall and Company, shall not be ordered to pay the costs in connection with a certain application by you, heard on the 12th of October, 1901, for the convening of a meeting for the election of a trustee in the insolvent estate of the late Jacobus Stephanus Naude.

(b) The appointment of you, the respondent, Frederick Lodewyk Lindenberg, as trustee of the insolvent estate of the late Jacobus Stephanus Naude, shall not be recalled in pursuance of section 40 of the Insolvent Ordinance by reason of your misconduct in the said trust in regard to the proceedings before the R.M. on the 7th day of April, 1902, in a suit between Levy and Beiles and the estate of the late Jacobus Stephanus Naude or otherwise.

(c) The proceedings instituted by you, the respondent, Frederick Lodewyk Lindenberg, on the 10th of January, 1902, shall not be declared abated, and the argument on exceptions pending for hearing by this Hon. Court be barred with such order regarding the costs thereof, and of the said action, as the Court shall think fit.

(d) The applicant should not be authorised to administer and close off the estate of the late Jacobus Stephanus Naude as the executor dative thereof, in pursuance of the order of this Hon. Court on the 12th day of October, 1901, and make such provision regarding the costs incurred in connection with the abortive proceedings consequent upon the order of the 12th day of October, 1901, as the Court shall decree.

(e) The costs of this application, and consequent upon the order of the 12th day of October, 1901, and the appointment of the trustee, shall not be paid by either or both the respondents.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Searle, K.C.), for the applicant; Mr. Currey for the respondents.

Mr. Schreiner said that the motion arose as follows: In 1883 the late J. S. Naude became insolvent, but at the meetings called, no creditors appeared, and no trustee was appointed. It appeared that a certain piece of land in the neighbourhood of Worcester, which at that time was of little value, but which had since become valuable, was not brought up in the schedules. Naude having died, an executor dative was appointed, and an application was made to have the estate rehabilitated, but the Court did not entertain the application favourably. The executor dative asked leave to have the Master joined with him in passing transfer of the piece of land mentioned, and the Court granted this, and the land was sold for £1,300. Transfer, however, was not passed, as in the meantime Hall and Co. and Maritz, creditors in the insolvent estate, had taken steps to have the insolvency proceedings awakened, so to speak, and a trustee appointed in the insolvent estate, and thereupon the Master would not join in passing transfer. On October 12, 1901, Hall and Co. obtained an order authorising the calling of a meeting to appoint a trustee. This was done, and Hall and Co. and Maritz proved their debt, and F. L. Lindenberg was appointed trustee. The executor dative took up the position that the debts in question could not be proved, the rule of prescription applying, and that therefore F. L. Lindenberg, as representing two creditors whose claims should not have been admitted, had no right to the £1,300 or the land in question. The matter came before the Supreme Court by way of motion, and the Court ordered the proofs of debt to be struck out. Counsel contended that the executor dative having succeeded in getting the proofs of debt struck out, the respondents should pay the costs of the application, and that the estate should not be called upon to do so.

Mr. Currey (for the respondent) said it would shorten the proceedings if he stated at once that he was instructed to say that in view of their lordships' decision on the last motion, when it was held that the claims were prescribed, the respondent felt that the ground on which he based his action had been completely cut away, and counsel was prepared to admit that the respondent could no longer hold the position of trustee. He would therefore consent to judgment so far as order (b) was concerned, but he asked that it be done under section 40, and not on the alternative order under section 52. Therefore the only question would be as to costs. As to the question of further proceedings to be taken, in which the respondent as the plaintiff had taken exception to the defendant's (applicant in this motion) plea, his client having no locus standi, it followed that these proceedings must be abated.

Mr. Currey: We contend that the election of the trustee was unduly made, because it was made by persons who had no right to vote, inasmuch as their claims had been prescribed. I quite admit that respondent has no locus standi in this matter, in the face of the former decision of the Court. I would ask that Lindenberg should be removed, under section 40 of the Insolvent Ordinance, and not under section 52.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicants): If the trustee is removed, all his acts should be set aside, and the action previously instituted by him must abate. As to costs, Mr. Hall has forced these proceedings upon us, and we ought not to be called upon to pay costs. We only want to preserve the estate. The affidavits of respondent do not answer to the merits of the case. Respondents' counsel admits that they have no locus standi, and the action should abate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If the case is abandoned, the whole thing falls to the ground.]

There is, however, the question of costs. We are entitled to costs. In The Standard Bank v. Jacobson's Trustee (9 Sheil, 365) counsel's advice was taken, but yet the trustee had to pay costs de bonis propriis. When Mr. Justice Maasdorp gave respondents leave to call a meeting of creditors on October 12 last year, he did so at their own risk. The motion then made was quite sufficient to determine the whole case, but the respondents have fought it till the last. I submit that an order for costs should be made against Hall, though none can be made against Lindenberg. We are clearly entitled to the costs of the motion. As to the costs of the action, there is nothing in the estate.

[De Villiers, C.J.: The only point is with regard to the costs of this application.]

Mr. Currey (in reply): I submit that as a formal application would have had to be made for the removal of the trustee, costs would have been incurred in any case, but if a formal application for the removal of respondent had been made on April 12, we should have consented, and further expense would have been saved. The costs which have been incurred have been incurred owing to applicant's own negligence.

De Villiers, C. J.: I am quite willing to believe that until the Court gave its judgment upon the motion for expunging the proofs of debt, the respondents were acting in good faith, but I think that after that judgment it was hopeless for Mr. F. L. Lindenberg to take up the position that he could remain a trustee in the estate and when the application was made, to have his appointment recalled, he ought to have consented at once, but instead, by entering an appearance, he incurred all this expense. The Court will now order that this appointment be cancelled, and will also order that the costs of this application be paid by F. L. Lindenberg de bonis propriis. As to Hall and Co., I think that no order should be made in regard to their costs. First of all, they are asked to pay the costs of an application made on October 12, for convening a meeting for the election of a trustee in the insolvent estate. In my opinion Hall and Co. acted in perfect good faith, and there was a very important question to be decided. The property was in the name of Naude, and he had omitted to bring it up in his schedules, and I think that Hall and Co. had every reason to make that application, and until the Court found that their claim was not a valid one, I think they acted in perfect good faith. As to the costs therefore of that application, the Court will make no order. The result will be that the applicant will be entitled to have his costs out of the estate that he is administering. Then we have been asked to give costs against the respondent Lindenberg in the action, but I think that no order should be made upon the question of costs. If the applicant has incurred any costs he will be entitled to recover them out of the estate which he is administering, and the result of making no order will be that the respondent Lindenberg will have to pay his own costs.

In reply to Mr. Schreiner the Chief Justice pointed out that by the cancelling of Lindenberg's appointment as trustee, the action now pending would be abated, and would fall to the ground.

The order made by the Court was that the appointment of F. L. Lindenberg as trustee be recalled; that he pay the costs of this application de bonis propriis, and that the action be abated, each party to pay his own costs thereon. No order as to costs in the matter of Hall and Co.'s application.

PEDERSEN V. OFFICIAL RECEIVER IN ESTATE WENTZEL.

This was an application for an order compelling the said receiver to admit as a proof against the said estate the claim of the applicant.

Mr. Gardiner appeared for the applicant, and Mr. Searle, K.C., for the respondent.

It appeared that in an action for judicial separation, Mr. Maynard Nash was appointed official receiver in the estate of Mr. and Mrs. Wentzel. The applicant sought to have a claim for £600, alleged to be due on promissory notes, admitted as a proof against the joint estate.

Mr. Searle said the respondent was not satisfied that value had been given for these notes, and suggested that there was collusion between Mr. Wentzel and the applicant in regard to them, the object being to prevent Mrs. Wentzel receiving any of the money.

Mr. Gardiner (for applicant): In this matter facts are in dispute, and it is suggested on the affidavits that there has been collusion between Wentzel and Pedersen, with the object of defeating the claims of his wife.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for respondent) was not prepared to consent to the matter being tried by action. Applicant had gone to Sweden a few days after he gave notice of motion. Counsel ultimately consented to an action, provided it could be brought next term.

Mr. Gardiner (in reply): We could apply for a commission to take the applicant's evidence in London, and the case might be heard next term. It could not well be decided on motion.

The Court postponed the matter until the last day of next term, and reserved leave to the applicant to bring an action, but directed that he must bring such action before the end of next term, the notice of motion to stand as summons.

BEALE V. CARRE.

{ 1902.
{ May 22nd.

Notice of motion—Costs.

A notice of motion to deliver up an agreement of lease was served on the respondent, but before such service he had sent the agreement by post to the applicant, who did not receive it until after the notice of motion had been issued and served.

Held, that if there was such a delay as would justify the motion at the time it was issued, the respondent should pay the costs.

Mr. Gardiner (for applicant): Since notice has been served on respondent, he has given up the lease. He had no right to retain it, and cannot complain that he did not get sufficient time where-in to return it. We gave him two months at first, and then he had from May 12 to May 16. There were disputes between the parties; we gave ample time, and, I submit, are entitled to our costs.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (for respondent): No demand was made for the lease until the applicant sent Dr. Carre a peremptory notice to deliver it up on May 12. Another letter was sent on May 14, and by some accident the respondent received both of these letters at the same time. The lease had been handed to Dr. Carre, that he might have it stamped, but there is nothing before the Court to show that there was any great urgency in the matter.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Should not respondent pay the costs to the date of the summons?]

I submit not; we never refused to give up the lease.

[De Villiers, C.J.: You did not tender to return it.]

We could not do so, as it was at Simon's Town. Applicant was simply courting a law suit. Dr. Carre gave a satisfactory reason for not returning the lease. Mrs. Beale insisted on his having it stamped, and he tried to get that done. He only wanted a reasonable time, and it would seem that Mrs. Beale was quite willing to grant this, until a quarrel had taken place between the parties. The respondent had never set up any claim to the lease, and it was left with him for two months; then in a great hurry he was ordered to deliver it up by noon the next day. Under the circumstances, this was not a reasonable demand.

Mr. Gardiner was not called upon in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The only question in this case is whether there was such a delay on the part of the respondent at the time of the notice of motion which justified the notice of motion being issued. The evidence shows that this lease had been in the possession of the respondent for a couple of months, and there had been communications about it, and a request that this lease should be handed over. There was some delay in answering, and in consequence of this delay, this notice of motion was issued. It seems that the respondent got the notice, and he wrote a letter. I am of opinion that that letter was not such a clear promise to forthwith send this lease as would make it an improper thing on the part of the respondent to issue this notice of motion. There is no distinct promise that at such a time this document will be sent. It is true that he admits that he is not going to keep the lease, but there is no definite statement that he is going to deliver it. The respondent will have to pay the costs of the notice of motion, but I think that the costs of the supplementary affidavit should not be included in the costs. The Court will order the respondent to pay the costs of the motion, excepting in respect of the supplementary affidavit.

BENDLE V. BENDLE.

Mr. Russell, for the petitioner, applied for leave to sue in forma pauperis in an action brought by the wife against her husband for a judicial separation.

The respondent appeared in person, and stated that he was willing to pay for a room for his wife, but he declined to stay with her.

The Court granted the application.

SOLOMON V. SOLOMON.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared for the applicant; Mr. Benjamin for the respondent.

This was an application for a postponement of trial, owing to the defendant's abstinence from the Colony, owing to ill-health.

The Court ordered a postponement of the trial till the next term, to a date not earlier than August 20, the question of costs to stand over.

ANDERSON V. MCKENZIE.

Mr. Benjamin applied for leave to sign judgment against plaintiff for not proceeding in an action against McKenzie for the delivery of a portmanteau and its contents, valued at £30.

The Court granted the application.

SIGALOWITZ V. SIGALOWITZ.

Mr. Wilkinson asked for an extension of the terms of a certain order of the Court in the above case, mentioning that it had been found that defendant was living not in Maritzburg, as was originally understood, but at Durban.

Leave was given to serve the intendent and notice of trial along with the citation.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Chief Justice (the Right Hon. Sir J. H. DE VILLIERS, P.C., K.C.M.G., LL.D.), the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORF, and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

EPSTEIN V. EPSTEIN. { 1902.
May 23rd.

This was an action for divorce, brought by Rosa Epstein against her husband on the ground of adultery. Mr. Alexander appeared for the plaintiff; the defendant was in default.

In the November term the petitioner asked for a decree of divorce from her husband, the only evidence before the Court being that of two witnesses who on one occasion saw respondent coming out of a house of ill-fame. The Court ordered the case to stand over until the beginning of the February term for further evidence, which could not be obtained, so the case was withdrawn from the roll, a subsequent application being made for leave to plead in forma pauperis.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Are you suing in forma pauperis now?]

Mr. Alexander: No, my lord. The declaration set forth that the parties were married in 1894 at the Jewish Synagogue, Belfast, and that subsequently respondent committed adultery with a woman unknown. The summons in that case had been served at the place where respondent resided, but he was out, and the summons was left with his landlady.

Respondent was then called, but did not appear.

The petitioner, Rosa Epstein (born Cohen), stated that after the marriage they went to live at Dublin, her husband subsequently coming out to South Africa, petitioner following him twelve months ago. She lived with him for three months, during which time respondent ill-treated her, and she left him.

Evidence having been given in proof of the allegation of misconduct against the husband,

A decree of divorce was granted, with costs.

VAN DER BYL V. ESTATE OF FAURE.

This was an application for the transfer of certain property.

Mr. McGregor and Mr. De Waal were for the plaintiff; and Mr. Upington and Mr. Goch for defendant.

Mr. Upington applied for a postponement, one of his witnesses being unable to come down that day; he was instructed that the witness in question was a material one.

Mr. McGregor consented to the application.

A postponement was granted, defendant to bear the costs of the day.

THOMPSON V. SEALE.

Mr. Upington mentioned this case as a matter of urgency, and applied for a commission to sit in Cape Town to take the evidence of a witness who was leaving on the 28th inst.

The Court granted the commission.

ROSENZWEIG V. SEARIGHT. { 1902.
May 23rd.

This was an action for the delivery of a certain case of goods deposited by plaintiff with defendant, who traded as James Searight and Co. This case contained trousers; defendant had delivered a case which they said was the one in question, but it contained overcoats.

The declaration set forth that on November 9, 1900, plaintiff stored with defendant a case containing 340 pairs of trousers, on condition that it was delivered on demand. In June plaintiff demanded the delivery of the case, but delivery was not made. The trousers were of the value of £56 8s. 8d., and damages to the extent of £20 had been suffered by plaintiff through their non-delivery.

Defendant, in his plea, admitted having received from plaintiff six cases in November, 1900, the contents of which they had no knowledge of. On May 11 1901, defendant delivered four of the cases to plaintiff, and three days later the remaining two, plaintiff accepting delivery. Plaintiff subsequently returned a case marked "SR 200," denying that it was his property, and defendant was compelled to store the case in his warehouse.

In replication, plaintiff admitted having deposited six cases with the defendant, five of which were duly delivered, but the sixth case returned by defendant was not his (plaintiff's).

Mr. Buchanan (with him Mr. Alexander) for plaintiff; Mr. Upington for defendant.

Mr. Buchanan then called Siefried Rosenzweig, the plaintiff, who stated that he was carrying on business as auctioneer and wholesale clothing importer in Cape Town. On November 8, 1900, he deposited three cases with defendant, and on November 9 he stored another case with defendant.

He never had receipts for the cases from defendant, who sent him back a case containing overcoats instead of one containing trousers. The case of overcoats was not plaintiff's property, but belonged to a Durban firm named Isaacs and Koutner. Plaintiff informed Mr. Stewart, of the defendant's firm, of the wrong delivery, and as overcoats were in demand in Cape Town at that time, plaintiff negotiated with Isaac and Koutner for the purchase of the overcoats, but there being a difficulty about delivery, the sale fell through. The missing case was marked in ink, "S R 200." The trousers cost plaintiff 3s. 4½d.

each; if he had had delivery of them he might have disposed of them at a profit; he generally sold them wholesale for 4s., 4s. 6d., or 5s. per pair. Disposed off retail they would fetch a much higher price.

Cross-examined: Plaintiff did not buy the trousers from Isaacs and Koutner, but from different people. At the time of the purchase, Koutner was in Cape Town; he was dead now. The disputed case was delivered on May 11.

By the Court: Isaac and Koutner were in the habit of sending cases for storage at Searight's.

Cross-examination continued: Plaintiff kept no copies of his letters to Isaac and Koutner regarding the negotiations for the sale of the overcoats. He had lost one letter he had received from Isaacs on this subject.

By the Chief Justice: Witness did not always give instructions for the marks to be examined before cases were opened, because he had never had any trouble before. When delivered to him, the box was not marked "S R 200."

Re-examined: When witness opened the case and saw that it contained overcoats, he closed it up again, as he knew it was not his.

Morris Cohen said he carried on business in Cape Town as a wholesale merchant. He knew the plaintiff, and he knew Isaacs. Witness remembered giving plaintiff some cases marked A.M.C. Witness did not of his own knowledge know what plaintiff did with those cases. Isaacs came to witness's place, and got a case from him in which to pack the overcoats in question. Witness saw him packing those overcoats in the box. Witness saw the overcoats in the box on Thursday, but he could not say if it was the same case, as he did not examine it carefully. Isaacs imported those overcoats from London, and kept them in bond in Searight's. It might be the same case with a different lid, because witness believed he did not give him a lid with the case. It would be impossible to get 340 pairs of trousers in the case witness saw on Thursday. It would be possible to get about 200 pairs in it.

Cross-examined: Witness gave Isaacs the case about twenty months ago at witness's private house in Primrose-street. The overcoats were at witness's house, having been brought there from Searight's. Witness did not have a store at that time, but carried on his business at his private house.

Mr. Buchanan closed his case, after reading a letter from Isaacs to plaintiff, in which the former said that the overcoats were his, and Searight ought to have known that.

Mr. Upington called

Emile Malzer, who said he had charge of Searight and Co.'s store, and had been in their employment for nearly twenty-five years. He recollected plaintiff depositing goods in their stores. It was witness's custom to note any marks on cases put in the stores and to give receipts for the cases. In the book produced there was an entry to the effect that case 200 was delivered to them on November 9, 1900. Witness was present when that case was delivered. Plaintiff brought it down himself. Witness saw it put on the wagon, and told his foreman to put it along with plaintiff's other three cases in the store in Chiappini-street. Plaintiff pointed out the number on the case (200) to witness in the presence of his two boys. Witness afterwards saw the case in Chiappini-street several times. Some time in May the plaintiff wanted to have the case marked 200 back. The four cases were delivered by Mr. Ireland to Adam, and sent to plaintiff on May 11, for which they had a receipt. Mr. Stewart was the manager of Searight's during Mr. Watson's absence. As far as witness knew, Stewart was now in Johannesburg. He managed the general business, and had nothing to do with the stores, of which witness had the control. At least ten days after the case was delivered plaintiff came down to the store, and Mr. Stewart told witness he had better take the case back, because plaintiff had said something about it being Isaacs'. On June 15 plaintiff brought the case back. It was then in a different condition, having a new lid, with no number whatever on it. About three weeks ago, as nobody claimed the goods, witness, to identify the case at any future time, put on it the number 200 and Rosenzweig's name. He did that in the presence of Mr. Watson. When the case was first received there was only the number 200 on the lid and nothing else. There were no letters "S.R." on it.

Witness had stored cases for Isaacs, but they were stored in the Waterkant-street store, while Rosenzweig's were stored in Chiappini-street. They had the case in question still, and were quite prepared to hand it over at any time upon payment of the charges due upon it.

Cross-examined: They stored at that time for a good many other people besides Isaacs and Rosenzweig. They gave receipts for all such goods. If the goods came direct from the customer they gave the receipt to the customer, but if the goods came from the Docks, they gave the receipts to the shipping agents. The stores in which these goods of Isaacs and Rosenzweig were stored did not have their floors taken up during the plague, and it was not necessary to remove any of the goods in these particular stores. When the box was brought back witness asked Rosenzweig where the lid with the number 200 on it was, and Rosenzweig said the lid had broken to pieces in taking it off, so he had put it in the backyard, and put on another lid. Defendant's case was that this was the case stored by Rosenzweig, and that Isaacs had not at present any case in their stores.

Adam said he had been twenty-two years in the employment of defendants. He remembered plaintiff coming to the store with a case marked 200. There were no other marks on it. On Mr. Malzer's instructions witness took it to the Chiappini-street stores, where there were already three cases belonging to plaintiff. Witness placed that case on top of the other three cases, and afterwards, when two more cases of plaintiff's came, he placed them in front of the others. In May witness put the case marked 200 and two others on the wagons, and the other man, Dannie, took them up to plaintiff's house. Witness saw the box after it was brought back. The case was the same, but three planks of the lid had been changed, and the number 200 was gone. Mr. Malzer pointed that out at the time.

Cross-examined: Witness paid particular attention to this number 200, because Mr. Malzer told him to take box 200 to the store.

By the Chief Justice: He could not remember the number on the other boxes, but he could remember this box.

Daniel Johannes van Niekerk said he was in the employment of defendants, and remembered the case in question being brought to them in November, 1900. Witness saw the number 200 on the case, and he and Adam took it to the Chiappini-street store, where it was placed along with other cases belonging to plaintiff. In May witness took the same case to plaintiff's place, where it was delivered to plaintiff himself, and they received the receipt which had been put in. Plaintiff never said anything about it not being his case. Witness saw the case when it was brought back four weeks later. It had then a different lid, with no marks on it. Mr. Malzer was present at the time, and witness heard him talking with plaintiff about it.

Cross-examined: Witness did not remember the numbers of any other case he had handled. The three new planks which had been put in the lid were quite different from the others, so that anybody could at once see the difference.

Mr. Buchanan (for plaintiff): The first question in this case is, whether the plaintiff or the defendant is bona fide. As to the value of the goods and damages: the trousers cost 3s. 4d. a pair, and this works out for 120 pairs at £20.

Mr. Upington (for defendant): The issue is, have defendants returned the same case which they received? The assistant who returned the box has not been examined. Malzer saw that the case was marked 200, and he told his men to take it to the Chiappini-street store. It is now suggested that these men are mistaken, and it is certainly very singular that they should remember the number of this case, and of no other. That, however, is easily explained (1) because this is the only case in regard to which there has been any difficulty; (2) because their attention was specially directed to it. It has been suggested that the case delivered was not plaintiff's property, but it must be remembered that all his goods were stored in this Chiappini-street store; and those of other persons in the Waterkant-street store.

Mr. Buchanan (in reply).

De Villiers, C.J.: In this case the plaintiff seeks to recover the value of a case and its contents, which he says he delivered to defendant. It is common cause that a case numbered 200 was, amongst other cases, delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant's stores, but the defence is that this case was returned to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, on his side, admits that with the other cases a case was returned to him on the day mentioned by the defendant, but he says that on opening that case it was found that, instead of containing 340 pairs of trousers—which he said he had put into the case—it contained about 30 overcoats. It is quite clear that if this statement be true it could not be the same case as the one he handed to defendant. It is not alleged in so many words that there is any fraud, but if defendant's case is correct, then there must necessarily be fraud on the plaintiff's part. He either must have put these overcoats originally into the case, or he must have taken the opportunity when the case came back to him to take out the trousers and put in overcoats. I do not see how the defendant can escape this conclusion, but I think the evidence goes to disprove anything of that kind. I think the correspondence between plaintiff and Isaacs clearly shows the bona fides of the plaintiff in this matter. There seems to have been an honest attempt on his part to purchase these overcoats from Isaacs, because he says at the time there was a sale for overcoats in Cape Town, and he was prepared to purchase them, but by so doing he did not give up his right of claiming his particular case from defendant. It is unnecessary to go into the whole of the evidence, but I am satisfied that plaintiff's evidence is correct. With regard to the evidence of the defendant's two storemen, it seems to me extremely unlikely that these men, having so many cases to deal with, could have remembered this particular case. It seems to be such an objectless affair; if the whole thing was done by plaintiff with the object of fraud, the utmost he would have gained by it would have only been £20 or £30, and for so small an amount plaintiff would not have practised such a complicated fraud as would have been involved in this exchange of one case for another. I think judgment must be for plaintiff. If we decide against plaintiff, we practically decide that he was guilty of fraud, but by deciding against defendants we say there is a mistake—an honest and bona fide mistake. Mr. Malzer may have been mistaken, having so many cases to deal with. Judgment will therefore be for plaintiff for £56 8s. 8d., the value of the trousers. As to damages, there must have been damages, but upon the whole, the Court thinks £10 a fair amount to award.

Judgment was then ordered for plaintiff for £66 8s. 8d., and costs.

Pounds Act, 1892 — Rescue — Proprietor — Crown Land — Occupier.

A native in the occupation of a plot of Crown land which has been allotted but not yet transferred to him may, under the 25th section of the Pounds Act, 1892, impound cattle trespassing on such plot, and any person rescuing cattle so impounded is liable to prosecution under the 30th section of the Act.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Assistant Resident Magistrate of King William's Town.

At the Court held at Middledrift on January 24 last, the accused was charged with contravening section 30 of Act 15 of 1892, by wrongfully and unlawfully receiving 35 goats, lawfully seized for the purpose of being impounded. Accused was found guilty, and sentenced to pay a fine of £5, or in default, undergo one month's imprisonment, with hard labour.

The Magistrate's reasons for his judgment were as follows: I am quite satisfied that the goats did trespass upon the land in question, and that accused rescued them from Georgena. The defence appears to be: (1) That accused drove the goats out before Georgena arrived; (2) that the seizure (if any) by Georgena was unlawful, in that the cultivation was on the commonage. I have already disposed of the first point. With regard to the second, I may state that about October, 1889, 408 garden and a corresponding number of building lots were surveyed, and the allotment was proceeded with, but has not been completed, on account of a number of applicants having failed to pay survey expenses. Orders were issued in October, 1899, 1900, and in July, 1901, to the effect that, in consequence of the incomplete state of the allotment, the people should plough as they did when in a tribal state. The Surveyor-General, being anxious that some of the letters should be issued sent 188 for that purpose about October 1901. The natives were assembled in the Court-room here, and it was fully explained that for this season only, it would be absolutely necessary that they should cultivate the same ground as before, that the 188 titles could not be issued unless they "touched the pen" to that condition. This was cheerfully done, and the 188 titles issued. It appears that all have adhered to the agreement, except Stock (Stokwe) and Bobain. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that the cultivation of the land in question was by lawful authority, and Stokwe's goats had no right there. I may state that the allotment will be completed within a month from this date (February 2).

The grounds of appeal were: (a) That the verdict was contrary to the evidence adduced at the trial, and (b) the evidence did not disclose any offence on the part of the accused, under section 30 of Act 15 of 1892, inasmuch that the goats in question were not shown to have trespassed upon private property.

Mr. Buchanan (for the appellant): It is very irregular for the Magistrate himself to give evidence in a case he is trying, as he has done here. Then it is said that the cultivated land was a part of the commonage. Apart from the Magistrate's evidence, it appears that this was the case. Hence the cultivator was the trespasser. The appellant had a right to the use of the commonage, and it was for the plaintiff in the Court below to show that the cattle were lawfully impounded. Sec. 15 of Act 25 of 1892 does not apply to Government land but to private land. So also does section 30, under which this prosecution was brought.

[De Villiers, C.J.: If a man squats on Government land and cultivates it, could he not impound your cattle if they come on his land?]

I submit not. The Act speaks only of private property. Possibly the cultivator might have some rights under the Common Law, but not under this Act. See also section 50. As to whether a head note forms a part of the Statute to which it is prefixed, see Lang v. Kerr, Anderson and Co. (3 Ap., Cases 529 and 536); also Maxwell on Statutes (p. 71) who refers to the above case. So whether the words "Private Property" are to be regarded as limiting the Act or not, section 50 shows that animals on Government ground cannot be impounded under section 25 of this Act. In such a case as this the complainant really represents the Government, and if the Government does not protect its own interests it is to blame. See Act 40 of 1879, section 1. In this case, even taking the Magistrate's evidence, the condition that "people should plough as before" was not a valid condition. These people used the commonage as of right, and if they had a good title thereto, they could not be trespassers. As soon as a man signed his papers, he had a right to commonage, and could not be made to wait till some 497 out of 498 lots had been paid for. The only evidence, save that of the Magistrate, only shows that these animals were on the commonage when impounded.

Mr. H. Jones (for the Crown): Counsel for the appellant wishes to exclude the evidence of the Magistrate, but if that be excluded, there is nothing on the record to show that these animals were on the commonage when impounded. The Magistrate decided the case on the facts, using his own knowledge of those facts. Titles, it is true, had been issued, but subject to the condition that they were not to be used till a certain date.

Mr. Buchanan was not heard in reply.

De Villiers, C.J.: The only question to be decided is whether the goats had been lawfully impounded, because if they were lawfully impounded the defendant was guilty of contravening section 30 of Act 15 of 1892 by seizing them. The 25th section of the Act was very general in its terms, and gave any owner who found animals trespassing on his ground the power to send such animals to the pound. The interpretation clause includes under the term "proprietor" a lessee as well as an occupier of land. It is said that, as the heading to the 25th section is "trespass on private property," and as the land in question has not yet been transferred by Government to Saul, he had no right to impound cattle on the portion allotted to him. The term "private property" seems to me, however, to be used in the same general and popular sense as the term "proprietor." The land occupied by him is certainly not vacant Crown land in terms of the 50th section. It is quite clear from the defendant's own evidence that the prosecutor Saul was in lawful possession. He said: "This commonage was surveyed three years ago. Saul was allotted a land, surveyed three years ago," and throughout the land was spoken of as the land of the prosecutor. In my opinion, Saul was in lawful occupation of this land, with the consent of the Government, and he must be treated as the occupier in terms of the Act, and therefore was entitled to impound the goats. The defendant, having seized those goats, which were properly impounded, was properly convicted, and the appeal must be dismissed.

SUPREME COURT

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice MAASDORP and the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY.]

BREEST AND ZIMMERMAN V. { 1902.
SMART. May 26th,
" 27th.

Lease—Option—Fraud—Exceptio non numeratæ pecuniæ.

This was an action for the return of a sum of £400, alleged to have been paid by plaintiffs to defendant in respect of the purchase of certain property, which sale was afterwards cancelled by mutual consent.

The declaration stated that the plaintiffs carry on business as general dealers in partnership at Maitland, while the defendant, Mrs. Smart, married without community of property, and assisted in this action by her husband, G. H. Smart, resides at Sea Point. On November 11, 1901, the plaintiffs purchased from the defendant, through her husband, acting as broker, a certain piece of land, with buildings thereon, situated at Maitland, for the sum of £1,000, and in terms of the broker's note plaintiffs paid £400 on account, the balance of £600 to be paid on December 15, when transfer was to be taken. That note was signed by Brest, the defendant Mrs. Smart, and her husband, G. H. Smart, as broker. The £400 was paid and a receipt for the same obtained, but the plaintiffs did not take possession of the property, and did not pay the balance of £600, the contract being cancelled by mutual consent. Therefore plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled to demand back the £400 paid on account.

The plea admitted the formal paragraphs of the declaration, and also that the broker's note was made out as stated, but said that the true purchase price was £600, and that the sum of £1,000 was fraudulently inserted, at plaintiffs' suggestion, in the broker's note. Defendant denied that the plaintiffs paid the sum of £400 or any other sum on account. She admitted that the sale was cancelled by mutual consent, but denied that the plaintiffs were entitled to demand back the sum of £400, such a sum not having been paid.

On these pleadings issue was joined.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Alexander), for plaintiffs; Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Benjamin), for defendant.

Mr. Searle called

Isaac E. Brest, a partner in the firm of Brest and Zimmerman, who said they carried on business at Maitland as general dealers, and were still in the premises in question in this action. The property was originally four cottages, but witness had altered it to two shops and two houses. In May last year witness leased the property for a year from defendant's husband. The latter had told witness that the property belonged to him. There were two copies of the lease drawn up, but witness's copy was stolen in August last. Under this lease witness had power to make alterations in the property at his own expense, and the option to purchase for £600. Witness did not get possession of the property until June, having first to eject some tenants. The Smarts went to England, but returned in October last, and came to witness's place at the beginning of November. In the meantime wit-

ness's cash-box, containing his copy of the lease, had been stolen. When the Smarts came to see witness the latter said he was prepared to buy the property, and Mr. Smart referred him to his wife. The latter said she would not sell for £600, and, further, that as she was married out of community of property, Mr. Smart had no right to give an option of purchase. She said she would not sell for less than £1,000, and that if plaintiffs would not purchase for that amount she would give them notice; and when witness referred to the lease, she asked to see it. Witness then asked for time to consider the matter. At this time witness had expended a sum of about £100 on alterations to the premises. Witness's partner was present at the discussion referred to, and after consultation with his partner, they decided to buy the property for £1,000. Witness then took a Mr. Yates to see the property, and arrange about a loan. Witness saw the Smarts after that, and offered £800 or £900, but they would not accept that. On the morning of November 11 witness went to the Smarts with £400 (£300 of which he borrowed that same day from Mr. Yates), and then the broker's note was made out and signed by witness and Mrs. Smart, and also by Mr. Smart, as broker. Witness had taken £400 with him, because they had previously told them they wanted £400 cash and the remaining £600 when transfer was taken. The receipt for £400 produced was made out by Mr. Smart and signed by Mrs. Smart, and dated November 11, 1901. Witness paid the £400 and went away. Mr. Smart promised not to hurry witness up with the transfer, and witness tried to arrange a mortgage. He could get £600 easily, but he wanted to raise £700. He arranged to raise £600, but then after November 15 Mr. and Mrs. Smart came out to witness, and said that as he had not taken transfer on a date mentioned in the broker's note, the sale would be cancelled and the money he (witness) had paid lost. Witness said there was nothing to that effect in the broker's note, and afterwards saw his attorney. Mr. Smart got possession of the receipt and broker's note from witness's broker, but after some correspondence he got them back. When the broker's note was made out and the receipt given at Mr.

Smart's house there were only present witness, Mr. Smart, and Mrs. Smart. Witness never suggested that £1,000 should be fraudulently inserted in the broker's note, instead of £600.

Cross-examined: Witness lost his lease in August, and he remembered going after that to Mr. Gretz, a broker, and getting him to write a letter to Mr. Smart. (Sir Henry Juta read the letter, dated August 13, in which plaintiff said that he would exercise the option given in the lease, and asking Mr. Smart to forward the necessary power of attorney, authorising transfer, etc.) Witness never had a reply to that letter, and consequently never showed a reply to Mr. Gretz. When witness went to the Smarts on November 11 he had the £400 all in gold in his pocket. He denied that in the presence of the two Reynhoudts and the two Cardinals, who were specially called in for the purpose, Mr. Smart said to him that he gave him the receipt in order that he could raise money on the property, but that they were to witness that no money had been paid.

Sir Henry Juta: Mr. Smart then said that he had not got any money from you?

Witness: No, he never said a word about that.

But he called these people in for that very purpose, and you replied, "All right, I won't do you?"—I never mentioned such a word.

Then, if three of the persons mentioned say that they were actually present when Mr. Smart said this in your presence, what would you say?—I should say it is a lie.

Did you not arrange that Mr. Smart should make out the arrangement to be a sale for the £1,000, and give you a receipt for £400, so that you could go and raise money on a sale of property at £1,000?—There is not a word of truth in it.

And that no £400 was ever paid by you, and that it was simply a receipt given to you, so as to reduce the price to the original purchase price of £600?—No, I paid £400 cash.

Further cross-examined, witness said that after the sale was concluded he went to several brokers, among them Steyn and Serrurier, Freeman, and Gliddon, to try and raise £700 on the property. He went to several others, but he could not remember the names.

Re-examined: The £400 transaction passed through witness's books. He had no other transaction of £400 about that time.

By the Court: His books were made up every month by a Cape Town book-keeper from a small book that witness kept during the month. Witness had not now got that small book with the original entries.

Sir Henry Juta: After the Smarts refused to have anything to do with you and the transaction, do you remember going out to where they were camping out at Oudekraal?

Witness: Yes, I went to ask in a friendly way if they would give me transfer, as I had a buyer for a place.

Who was the buyer?—It was a man I met in the street. Further questioned, witness said the man's name was Gross. Witness offered him the property for £1,100, and Gross went out to Maitland to see it. He did not know where Gross lived, and only knew that he dealt in property. He was not sure whether he had seen the man since. Witness did not go to the Smarts about a lease. Witness had destroyed the small book from which his books were made up.

By Mr. Searle: He met Gross in January.

Max Zimmerman said he was one of the plaintiffs, having entered into partnership with Mr. Brest in the beginning of June last year, in the premises at Maitland. After they entered upon the premises they spent about £100 in alterations. It was a good business stand. When the Smarts came out to Maitland, in the beginning of November, Mr. Brest said to Mr. Smart that he was prepared to buy the property, but was referred to Mrs. Smart. Witness corroborated as to Mrs. Smart refusing to recognise the lease and the option to purchase, and to an agreement being arrived at for the sale of the property for £1,000. Witness knew about the £400, they having borrowed £300 from Mr. Yates on a promissory note, while of the other £100 £60 came from a private account. Witness was not present when the money was paid. At the beginning of January he saw Smart with regard to transfer, which Smart refused to give.

Cross-examined: When witness entered into partnership with Brest he (witness) knew of the lease in which he claimed an interest. There was no deed of partnership. He had only met Gretz, and had never spoken business with him; he had not asked Gretz to enclose the lease showing that he (witness) had an interest in it. He saw the lease in June, when he went into the partnership with Brest, but he took no steps to make it clear that he had an interest in it. The stand was a good one for business purposes. The purchase price was £1,000, and they could at that time have got £600 on mortgage, but they wanted £700. The sellers sent them a letter on January 14, in which they said they could have the property for £600 by taking transfer within 48 hours. A couple of days after the receipt of the letter, witness saw Smart, and said he was willing to purchase the property if he had transfer given him. Witness never said a word on this occasion about the £400. Smart said he would not give transfer as the time had expired—the time for taking the transfer was December 15. He did not remember whether Mr. and Mrs. Smart came to see him before or after the letter of January 14. Subsequently witness said the date of the visit was in January. They said the time having expired, the sale should be cancelled, but Brest did not agree to this. Witness did not know whether Brest saw his attorney on the subject. Brest told witness that he was going to get back the £400. Witness and Brest did consult together on receipt of the letter of January 14, but witness could not remember all the details of the transaction as he had nothing to do with matters outside the shop.

Re-examined: Witness left the matter in the hands of Brest.

Joseph Yates stated that at present he was residing at Simon's Town, but last year he had an office at 120, Long-street, Cape Town. At the beginning of November witness met Brest, and in consequence of some conversation they went out to Maitland to see the place where Brest was carrying on business. Witness lent Brest some money on November 11, for which he received a promissory note. The utmost value of the property about the time was about £900. Witness agreed to advance £300, which he gave to Brest entirely in gold. The interest was 8 per cent. for six months, witness deducting this from the amount advanced. Witness was in the habit of lending money.

Cross-examined: The money was not lent on the security of the property, which witness understood Brest was going to buy. Witness had no security beyond the promissory note, the money not being lent on the security of the property. Witness went to Maitland to see the amount of the business turnover and also the property, but he did not look at the books. He did not know the price of the property.

By the Court: Brest told him that £1,000 was the price of the property.

Cross-examination continued: Brest could have got £700 on mortgage on the property, which witness valued at £900. Witness very frequently lent money without security.

By the Court: Witness kept no books; he was no scholar.

Sir Henry Juta at this stage called attention to the fact that the promissory note was not stamped.

Cross-examination resumed: Witness kept no banking account. The £300 he lent Brest was the result of the sale of some property a couple of years ago. He always kept about £700 or £800 in his possession. Witness could only write his signature, and Brest wrote out the promissory note.

Re-examined: Witness had considerable monetary transactions. He gave Brest a receipt for the interest.

Abraham Solomon, a bookkeeper in the employ of a Cape Town firm, stated that he had made up Brest's books for some months past. The books were kept at witness's place, and were made up at the beginning of each month. All the entries were in witness's handwriting. The November entries were made in the middle of December.

Cross-examined: Witness commenced to keep the books in August or September, several months after Brest commenced business. He made up the books from vouchers, cheques, and slips of paper, but not from books, though sometimes Brest gave him a small memorandum book, from which he made entries.

Mr. Searle closed his case.

Sir Henry Juta called

Max Gretz, who said that Brest came to him and said he had a dispute with his partner Zimmerman about certain rights to an option contained in a lease, that he (Brest) insisted that Zimmerman had no right to that option, but that Zimmerman had taken the lease from a box, in order to claim that he had some thing to do with the option, seeing that he had the lease in his possession. Witness advised Brest to go and complain at the Police-station, and put a notice to that effect in the newspapers. Afterwards, some time in August, Brest and Zimmerman came together to witness, bringing with them a lease which they had from Mr. Smart. Witness made an endorsement on that lease. The lease he had seen that morning—that put in by Mrs. Smart—he had at first thought was the one then shown to him, until he saw that his endorsement was not on it. That endorsement was made in consequence of instructions given by Brest and Zimmerman together. Witness received instructions from them to draw up a deed of partnership, which he did at the same time as the assignment was made. He had only seen Zimmerman once, viz., at the time the assignment was made. Brest had spoken to him again after the New Year, but witness had an objection to stating what he then told him.

Mr. Searle objected to witness stating what Brest then told him, as the witness was then acting as Brest's legal adviser.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp said that the witness had not yet said that he was acting as Brest's legal adviser.

Sir Henry Juta said that was just the question he was about to put to witness.

Continuing, witness said that after Brest had seen him once or twice in connection with the subject matter of this action, he understood that Brest had retained Mr. Friedlander as his legal adviser, and declined to have anything further to do with the matter. Witness was not his attorney, as he did not practise in this country. Brest thought he was talking to witness as his legal adviser, and that was the ground upon which witness declined to state what he then said. As to the letter of August 13, witness had written that on Brest's instructions, and Brest had shown him an answer purporting to come from Mr. Smart. The contents, as far as witness recollected, were to the effect that Mr Smart expected to be in this country soon, and would leave the matter (the sale of the property) in abeyance until his return.

Cross-examined: Brest had come to witness for legal advice. Witness was not enrolled as a law agent here, but he was an attorney of the Transvaal Courts. Witness kept no records of the fees he charged. Anything relating to court work he passed over to Messrs. Silberbauer, Wahl, and Fuller. He had only been asked at ten o'clock that morning if he knew anything about the correspondence in the case.

Re-examined: Witness was practising as an attorney in the Transvaal, and came down here before the war.

Charles Frederick Reynhardt said he had a brother on active service, who left some time ago for up-country. In November last year witness and his brother were boarding with Mr. and Mrs. Smart at Sea Point. On November 11, between five and six o'clock in the afternoon, witness was called into the parlour. At that time there were present in the parlour witness's brother, the two Cardinals, Mr. and Mrs. Smart, and Mr. Brest. Mr. Smart then said that he had written out a receipt, and was giving it to Mr. Brest, but that he had received no money, and he wanted them to bear witness to the fact that he was just giving the receipt to Mr. Brest, to enable the latter to get some money on the bond. That was said in Mr. Brest's presence, and Mr. Smart spoke loud enough for them all to hear. There were pens and ink on the table when witness went into the room. Witness had no interest in the matter. After he had given the receipt, Mr. Smart said to Mr. Brest, "I hope you are not holding this against me," and Brest replied, "I would not do such a mean thing." That was all witness heard Brest say.

Cross-examined: Witness was still boarding with the Smarts, and he had discussed the case with them from time to time. The broker's note had already been drawn up, and it was also read, but witness did not pay particular attention. He was not asked to bear witness to that also.

By the Court: Mr. Smart spoke in a loud voice.

Christopher North Cardinal said he remembered one afternoon in November being called into a room by Mr. Smart (his stepfather). There were present in the room witness, his mother (Mrs. Smart), his brother, Mr. Smart, the two Reynhardts, and Brest. Mr. Smart then produced the receipt, and said that he wanted them to witness that it was a receipt, but that no money had passed. Mr. Smart said to Brest that he hoped he would not hold that against him, and Brest said no, that he would not do such a thing.

Cross-examined: Witness did not think there was anything wrong in the transaction.

By the Court: Mr. Smart called in the two Reynhardts and witness to witness that the receipt had been given, but no money passed.

Percy John Cardinal said that he remembered Mr. Brest coming to their house on November 11, last year. Witness showed Mr. Brest into the house, and Mr. Brest asked Mr. Smart if he would give him a receipt to enable him to raise some money, as a friend had promised to lend him some. Mr. Smart said that he would have to call in witnesses to the fact that the receipt was given without any money passing. Then the others were called in to witness that.

Mrs. Smart, the defendant, denied that she ever told Brest that her husband had no authority to make the lease. She knew about it, and was satisfied. She knew about the option. She and her husband went to England in May, and returned in October. She never told Brest after her return that her husband had no authority to give the option, and that unless he (Brest) paid her £1,000 she would give him notice. She had called at his place on her way from the cemetery, but that was just to see how things were going. Mr. Smart spoke to Mr. Brest, and said he had heard he was raising a loan on the property. That was after the giving of the receipt on November 11. She was positive she had not been there before November 11. On November 11 Brest came to her house in the afternoon. Her son showed Brest into the parlour, and witness and her husband were there all the time. Mr. Brest said he had not got the money in cash, and asked if they would mind giving them a receipt to make it appear that he had paid £400. They did not like doing so at first. They afterwards consented, but no money whatever was passed. The others were called in, and Mr. Smart called upon them to witness that although the receipt had been given, it was just to enable Brest to raise a loan, and no money whatever had passed. The putting in of £1,000 in the broker's note and the giving of the receipt was done on Mr. Brest's suggestion to enable him to raise a loan. She did not on an occasion after that tell Brest that as he had not taken transfer, the sale would be cancelled, and he would lose his £400. About the second week of January they called on Brest, and told him that the sale would have to be cancelled. They asked him for the papers, and he said they were at Gliddons. He did not want at first to come in with them, but afterwards drove in with them in their trap. At the Early Morning Market he jumped down, saying he wanted to see a friend, and witness and her husband went on to Gliddons's office, where they got the receipt and the broker's note. Brest would not come in with them, but they met him afterwards. He wanted the receipt and the note, but they refused to give them to him, as they did not belong to him. Witness had money coming in from property, and all money she received was paid into the bank for her by her husband. She never had £400 in the house in November or December, and there was nothing on which she spent anything like that amount at that time. After the dispute about the papers, Brest came and said that, if they would give him a three years' lease, he would give up the papers, and let the whole matter drop. Witness would not consent to any such arrangement. Zimmerman came on one occasion, and made a similar proposal, but witness and Mr. Smart would not consent to anything of the kind. If witness had got the £500 in terms of the lease, she would have been perfectly satisfied, as she had never repudiated the lease. Her husband transacted all her business.

Cross-examined: Witness could not remember any other case where her husband had let her property in his own name. She believed, however, that she could produce other leases of her property made out in her husband's name. Witness got a copy of the broker's note. It was similar to that put in by Brest. At the time the receipt was given witness did not realise that it would be a fraud on the public. She did not then see so clearly through the thing as she did now.

By the Court: Brest knew that they went to Gliddon's to get the documents. He remained downstairs, but they had tried to get him to enter Gliddon's office with them, to witness the handing over of the documents.

George Smart, the husband of the defendant, said they had been married a couple of years. Mrs. Smart owned certain houses, and witness always managed her business for her. In May last year he made out the lease to Brest in his own name. He had leased other properties belonging to Mrs. Smart in his own name. Mrs. Smart was aware of the terms of the lease in question. Witness and Mrs. Smart left in May for England, returning in October. In the meantime he received the letter of August 13, and wrote in reply that he would be returning about the end of October, and would see Brest personally. When he returned Brest called on him, but did not speak about the option, saying that he would see witness later on about business matters, which he did on November 11. Witness and Mrs. Smart never called on plaintiffs at Maitland before November 11. When Brest called on November 11 he was shown into the parlour by Percy Cardinal. Brest then proposed that witness should give him a receipt for £400, although no money was passed, to enable him to raise money on the property. He also suggested the insertion of £1,000, instead of £600, in the broker's note. Witness's idea was that Brest wanted to bring the price to the original figure of £600, taking into consideration the receipt for £400. He proposed the insertion of £1,000 at the same time as he made the proposal about the receipt for £400. Witness at first objected to giving such a receipt, saying that Brest would probably hold it against him. Brest said he would not, but witness said he wanted witnesses, and called in the two Cardinals and the two Reynhardts. Witness explained to them in the presence of Brest that he had sold the property to Mr. Brest for £600, and was giving him a receipt for £400, but was getting no money, and that was clearly understood. Witness never received that £400, or any portion of it. All the rents witness received were paid into his banking account, and he paid his debts by cheques. This £400 never passed through witness's banking account. Some time in January Brest came out to their place at Oudekraal. At that time witness had received a letter asking him to hand over the title-deeds to Mr. Gliddon, to enable him to raise money on the property. Witness went to Gliddon, and ascertained that Brest was endeavouring to raise a loan of £700 on the property. Witness, along with Mrs. Smart, went straight to Brest, and asked the meaning of his trying to raise £700 on the property, when the property had been sold to him for £600. Witness said that it was not the correct thing to do, and that he wished the sale cancelled at once. Witness wanted Brest to go in with them to Gliddon's to get the receipt and the broker's note. Brest had some objection at first, but eventually came in the trap with them. He would not go upstairs to Gliddon's office, and witness went alone and got the documents. When he came downstairs he had some words with Brest, and told him he wished this matter to drop, owing to his action in regard to the loan. Brest said he would allow witness to retain the papers if he were given a lease for three years, with the same option to purchase for £600. Witness would not do so, because the papers really did not belong to Brest. No money had been paid, and witness thought he had a right to have the papers. On January 14 Mrs. Smart's attorneys wrote saying they were ready to transfer the property on payment of £600, and that a decision must be come to within 48 hours. On February 19 a letter was received from Brest's attorneys, saying that they were willing to cancel the sale. After that, Brest came and asked if they could come to some arrangement, saying that if witness would again give the option and a lease for three years, the whole matter would drop. Witness said that he would do nothing of the sort, and that, according to their attorneys' letter, the sale was cancelled. After that Zimmerman came, and made the same proposal, but they would not accede to it.

Cross-examined: On November 11 Brest never told witness anything about having lost his lease, and made no reference to the fact that property leased by witness really belonged to Mrs. Smart.

By the Court: Before witness married he had a dairy at Sea Point, and recently he had again started a dairy.

Cross-examination continued: Witness never was a broker, and he could not explain why he signed the note as a broker. Witness had the duplicate original broker's note made out so as to have proof that there was a sale. He could not explain why the true purchase amount was not inserted in that duplicate note, seeing that he was not going to raise money on the property. He could understand now why Brest suggested the insertion of £1,000 in the broker's note. Witness had not been in a broker's office before. He had seen broker's notes. Witness had one in the room at the time. Witness was annoyed that Brest was trying to raise £700 on the property, and he went out and brought him in. They went to Mr. Gliddon's office. The papers were not given to witness on the understanding that he returned them to Brest. Brest was standing at the bottom of the stairs. Witness took the papers away. Witness considered that Brest had no right at all to the papers, not having paid. Witness, when he asked Gliddon for the papers, told him that they were cancelling the sale. Gliddon may have understood that witness was going to give the papers to Brest. Witness considered the property to be worth £700; he did not agree that it was worth £900. Property was going up only slightly there.

Re-examined: Witness bought the property for £360.

By the Court: Brest told witness he wanted to raise money on the property, and that he wanted witness to assist him. He said that if witness gave him a receipt he would be able to raise money. Witness would give a false receipt.

Mr. Justice Maasdorp: The only ground upon which you cancelled the sale was because he wished to raise £700 instead of £600?

Witness: Yes, my lord.

Mr. Justice Hopley: When did you first see Brest?

Witness: On the 1st of May.

You saw him for the first time on the 1st of May; and you gave him the lease on the 1st of May. Then you went to England, and you saw him again when you returned on the 3rd of November. And on the 11th of November you had this conversation, and he suggested this swindle to you?—Yes.

Do you wish the Court to believe that at the suggestion of a man, almost a stranger to you, you went into this fraud?

The witness did not reply.

This concluded the evidence for the defendant.

The plaintiff Brest, recalled by the Court, said that he took the money to Smart's house at Sea Point between eleven and twelve in the morning. He would swear it was not in the afternoon. Witness carried the money in his pocket, and put it on the table.

After counsel had been heard in argument on the facts, judgment was given for the plaintiffs as prayed, with costs.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff sues the defendant for the recovery of £400, which he alleges he paid on account of the purchase price of certain property in respect of a contract of sale which was entered into between plaintiff and defendant, and which contract of sale the defendant is not now willing to perform. The plaintiff claims, and alleges that he entered into a contract with the defendant for the sale of certain property for the sum of £1,000, and he alleges further that he paid on account of that purchase price an amount of £400. In proof of these allegations he puts in a contract, which appears to be in the form of a broker's note, and he also puts in a receipt signed by the defendant. The defendant admits that she did sign the document which contains the terms of this contract, and she also admits that she signed the receipt. Well, if the case ended there then it would be said that plaintiff had given satisfactory proof of his case. He would then have proved the written contract signed by defendant, and he would have proved the admission of the receipt for £400, and if these documents stood unaffected by further evidence, the plaintiff would have been entitled to succeed. Now, the question is whether any evidence has been given in this case to impugn the validity or truth of the documents put before the Court by the plaintiff. The case for the defendant is that these documents were signed, but were so signed for fraudulent purposes. She alleges that the contract put in is not the true contract, and that the receipt which she gave was given for money which had never been received by her, and that it was given for a fraudulent purpose, and the defendant is therefore placed in this dilemma at starting, that either she must be successful in her defence upon the ground that she has been a party to a fraud, or that she must be unsuccessful because she is now attempting by fraudulent means to withhold from the plaintiff the payment of moneys due to him. If it were necessary to decide upon whom the burden of proof lay, if the Court were compelled to find that upon the evidence it is impossible to say upon which side the truth has been spoken, then I would say that the burden of proof lies upon the defendant that these are not genuine documents, and if she fails in proving that, then the documents stand against her. It is, however, necessary to glance at the evidence, and see how far the statements of the parties are supported. The plaintiff alleges that he held this property under a lease, which gave him the option of purchasing the property. That lease has been put in. Now it appears that subsequently, according to his own statement, he purchased that property for £1,000, and not for £600, consequently there would seem to be a discrepancy between his evidence and one document which has been put in. His explanation is that the defendant repudiated the authority of her husband to grant him that option, and that she refused to allow him to use that option, and threatened to eject him from the property unless he entered into an agreement with her to take the property at £1,000. That is his explanation as to how the subsequent contract was entered into. Then we find that this document of the 11th November is made out by the defendant's husband, and in that, the plaintiff says, the contract is truly set forth. He says that on another occasion he also got another document put in, which alleges, over the signature of the defendant, that he actually paid the sum of £400 to the defendant. That, plaintiff says, was also a true document. After that there appeared to be some difficulty in regard to his getting the £600, and there was an interview, in reference to which there is a strong conflict of evidence. The defendant says that the cancellation was on the ground of the plaintiff's failure to take transfer and to pay the price on 15th December, and plaintiff says that she told him that under the circumstances the contract having been cancelled by his default, he must forfeit the £400. The plaintiff objected, and said she answered him with these very suggestive words: "My husband was a law agent; I know something of the law in these matters, and it is the case that not having paid your purchase money on the 15th December, you now forfeit your £400." We have the plaintiff's case that there was a genuine sale, as set forth in the document, and that there was payment on account of the purchase price, as set forth in the document, and that it was afterwards cancelled, with the statement that the £400 was forfeited. All the documents that bear upon the case are in favour of the plaintiff. Now the question arises whether the £400 has been paid, and whether there is anything to support the plaintiff's statement in that respect. He said he went to the defendant's house prepared with the £400 in cash, and that he had raised that money by the assistance of friends. We have the evidence of Mr. Yates and Mr. Zimmerman to corroborate the statement that plaintiff had that morning been going about trying to get assistance to pay a portion of the purchase price, and that they assisted him. Mr. Yates said he advanced plaintiff £300, and Mr. Zimmerman said he had advanced him £40. Here we have evidence given by, at any rate, one clearly disinterested person, Mr. Yates. But we are not left there upon this point. It appears that at the time a promissory note was given by Brest to Mr. Yates, and that promissory note for £300 is produced. There is also a receipt for the interest which was deducted, to the amount of £12. Consequently we have here documents in the hands of a disinterested person, showing that part of the purchase price had been borrowed by plaintiff. It may be said that all these documents have been fabricated. On this point I may refer to the book, which was entered up at certain periods. There are entries in the book showing the business done with Mr. Yates and Zimmerman. These may also be false, but they are certainly strongly corroborative of the statements of the plaintiff and of Yates and Zimmerman. Now it may be said that these may all be true, that this money was raised from these people, but that, on leaving Mr. Yates's place and arriving at Smart's, the plaintiff determined to fraudulently deceive Mr. Smart, and instead of paying over the money so borrowed, kept it in his pocket, and used it for other purposes. All that is possible, but to my mind it is extremely unlikely. It is quite possible all this evidence could be upset by defendant, who might produce very strong proof, which would destroy the weight of the evidence given for plaintiff. What is the evidence produced by defendant? Defendant says that at this time, when the £400 was alleged to be paid, she received no money from the plaintiff, but that at the time there was a suggestion made by plaintiff that they should enter into some fraudulent arrangement by which plaintiff should be enabled to raise money with which to pay the purchase price to the defendant. Now in the plea it is alleged that the sum of £1,000 was falsely and fraudulently inserted in this broker's note. Well, by whom was it falsely and fraudulently inserted? The plea avoids stating this. The fraud which was contemplated seemed to be this: That there should be a document which placed a fictitious and enhanced value on the property, and that this should be used to induce people to give a higher sum of money than they would advance if the real price had been stated. Who are the parties to this alleged fraud? When we have their evidence, it appears that defendant and her husband admitted they were parties to that fraud. That they understood that it was a false document. If the receipt is false, it involves fraud on their part, as well as on the part of the plaintiff; but if the receipt was fraudulently made, the fact that the defendant had been a party to the fraud would not have enabled the plaintiff to succeed, if he also were a party to the fraud. When this alleged fraud was contemplated, a document passed into the hands of the plaintiff which contains proof that he paid £400 to the defendant. The defendant says that she did not wish to put herself into the power of the plaintiff. Well, what was done? One would say that, under these circumstances, defendant would produce witnesses on whose evidence a Court of Justice could rely, and who could substantiate fraud. Has she produced such witnesses? Has she produced, in the first place, disinterested witnesses, and has she produced in the second place witnesses regarding whose evidence the Court could have no doubt? For my own part, I would say she has failed to do so. Two boarders and two sons are called. We find that the most important witness, if he could be believed, is the younger son, and he says he was present during the whole of the conversation. The conversation would be mainly about the terms of the contract, but he knows nothing about this. His evidence has a bearing on nothing else than this receipt. It is impossible for me to accept his evidence about this receipt when he knows nothing of the circumstances connected with the execution of the contract itself. As to the other two men there is a discrepancy in their evidence. They do not satisfy me that the evidence they give is true. But the most extraordinary evidence is that of the husband. He tells us it was suggested that he should give this receipt. Then it was suggested to him, "Why did you put £1,000 into the contract?" As to that, he was unable to give any explanation. He does not say now it was done at the suggestion of the plaintiff. When asked what was said about that £1,000, he is unable to give any evidence upon that point. He is unable to explain why he put the £1,000 into the document, and all that he must have had in his mind. Under all the circumstances, I come to the conclusion that at that particular interview what took place was what was told to the Court by the plaintiff, that there was no fraud, that these documents were quite genuine, that the money was paid, and that the account given by plaintiff is the correct one. The case for the defendant is this: That the plaintiff had prepared his case to show that he purchased the property for £1,000, and not for £600; that for that purpose he has invented a story, and that he hunted about getting people to swear to a false promissory note. I am not satisfied that the evidence of the defence is of such a character as to convince this Court that the document which was signed by the defendant and the receipt which was signed by the defendant are false documents, and that the plaintiff should not succeed upon them. I may just refer shortly to some other evidence where discrepancies arise, and where, on the whole, one is inclined to think that the truth lies with the plaintiff. He says that when the contract was cancelled the cancellation was on the ground that he had not taken transfer, and had not paid the balance of the purchase price. Now, we have this extraordinary statement upon the part of the defendant's husband; that he cancelled the contract, not because the plaintiff was using this document to get a loan of £600, but because he was trying to get £700. Now, it would not have mattered at all how much plaintiff could have raised if defendant had once given him a false document to enable him to raise money. Plaintiff says that after cancellation Smart went off, saying he would get these documents. Smart says that at that interview it was arranged that plaintiff should go with him, and get these documents. One would expect the plaintiff would either consent to or prohibit the documents being given to the defendant. He says he was never asked to go. Defendant's statement is that plaintiff was in such a state of fear that he was afraid to go to Mr. Gliddon. Why should he be afraid? Why should he not be prepared to give up the document if it were of no value to him? One could quite understand his being unwilling to give them up if he had paid the £400, and wanted to protect himself by the document. In that case, again, I find that it is impossible where there is a conflict between the statements of the plaintiff and defendant to come to any other conclusion but that plaintiff's statement is right. Plaintiff has produced documents signed by defendant. He bases his claim on these documents. The question is whether that written contract put in has been shown by the defendant to be bad and invalid, and I come to the conclusion that the defendant has wholly failed to do so, that the contract was a good one, that it was cancelled, that £400 was paid, and that, as the contract was not subsequently performed by the defendant, plaintiff is entitled to recover the £400 paid on account.

Hopley, J., concurred. He had not the slightest doubt as to which way the judgment of the Court should go. He was entirely convinced that the case set up by the defendant was not the true one. All the documents in the case supported the plaintiff's account.

BISHOP V. LYONS. { 1902.
May 26th.

Mr. Benjamin mentioned this case, which had been set down for hearing. He appeared for the defendant, and he understood that the plaintiff had withdrawn from the case. There was, however, a claim in reconvention, in which the defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) claimed certain damages, and also a sum for rent. To obviate the calling of evidence, the defendant would forego the claim for damages, and only claim now for the rent, so that the Court could now give absolution from the instance on the claim in convention, and for the defendant for the rent only in the claim in reconvention.

The plaintiff, Helena Bishop, was called, but did not appear, and the Court then said that Mr. Benjamin could mention the case again.

VAN DER SPUY V. VAN SPUY. { 1902.
May 27th.

On this case being called, Mr. Wilford, who appeared for the plaintiff, asked for a postponement. It was the third case on the roll, and at one o'clock his attorneys understood that there would be no possibility of it being heard to-day, and that his client had left town. The case arose out of a disagreement between two farmers in the Malmesbury district as to £70 rent, the plaintiff alleging that defendant owed him that amount as rent.

Maasdorp, J., asked: What about the costs of the day?

Mr. Wilford submitted that costs should follow the event, as they could scarcely foresee that the case would be taken that day.

Mr. Gardiner, who (with Mr. C. de Villiers) appeared for the defendant, submitted that the defendant was entitled to costs of the day, as the defendant and his witnesses were waiting there, and had not assumed anything about the case not coming on.

Maasdorp, J., said the postponement would have to be granted, and the case set down for some other day when the roll was being rearranged, the question of costs of the day to stand over until the trial.

Hopley, J., said that prima facie defendant would be entitled to costs of the day, unless some cause was shown to deprive him of these costs when the case was tried.

COREN V. SCHIEBE. { 1902.
 May 27th.
 " 28th.

Right of pre-emption—Notice— Agent.

This was an action for a declaration of rights in connection with an option of purchase contained in a certain lease.

The declaration set forth that the parties to the action resided in Cape Town, and defendant was the registered owner of a house and shop situated in Waterkant-street, Cape Town. On June 28, 1899, a contract was entered into in writing, whereby the defendant, Mrs. Schiebe, let to the plaintiff, for valuable consideration, the said shop and fixtures on certain conditions, inter alia, that the tenancy was to exist for four years, beginning June 1, 1899, and the lessee (the plaintiff) to have the first refusal of the said shop and house, should the lessor wish to sell during the term of the said tenancy. It was alleged that recently, while the said tenancy still existed, the plaintiff had, in breach of the agreement, sold the house and shop for £3,500 to a third party, without first offering it to plaintiff. The plaintiff said that at the time of the sale he was ready and willing to exercise the option, and buy the house and shop for £3,500, and that he had tendered to do so, but the defendant refused to transfer the property to the plaintiff. The value of the property was now considerably more than £3,500. Plaintiff asked for an order compelling the defendant to transfer the said shop and house for £3,500, or in the alternative for £1,000, as damages sustained by plaintiff through defendant's breach of the agreement.

Defendant's plea admitted the lease, but said that in or about the month of September, 1900, the defendant had certain offers to purchase the shop and adjoining house for the sum of £3,500, and as she was desirous of selling for the said sum, she offered to sell it to plaintiff for £3,500, which offer was not accepted. Thereafter, about the month of December, 1901, the defendant, as she was lawfully entitled to do, sold the house and shop.

Sir H. Juta, K.C. (with him Mr. Russell), for plaintiff; Mr. B. Upington (with him Mr. Bisset), for defendant.

Sir Henry Juta called

Leopold Cohen, the plaintiff, who said that in June, 1899, he entered into a lease with defendant for the occupation of certain premises in Waterkant-street. Defendant lived next door. In October, 1899, witness, as a member of the D.E.O.V.R., was called out on active service, and before going away, he called while in uniform on defendant, and said good-bye to her. Witness left a man called Siev in the shop, but Mr. Woodhead, of Woodhead, Plant and Co., was to look after all his business matters. Witness came back on leave in February, 1900, and Siev having left his service, witness recommended one Mehl to Mr. Woodhead to fill Siev's place. Witness had a week's leave, and while he was here, Mr. Woodhead engaged Mehl. The latter's instructions were that he was only to be there as a salesman, and all letters which came to the shop he was to hand over to Mr. Woodhead. Witness came back from active service in December, 1900. While he was away witness received no communication from Mrs. Schiebe, nor from anyone on her behalf. The movements of witness's corps were known in Cape Town. Mrs. Schiebe said nothing to him about the sale of the property in December, 1900, or January, 1901. He saw her nearly every day during that time. In February, 1901, she came to witness, and said she had been offered £3,500 for the property, and asked if witness would buy it. Witness said yes, but she would have to give him some time to make arrangements. She said she would, and witness set about making arrangements to get the money, going to Mr. Woodhead about the matter. He arranged a part of the necessary loan. A week later Mrs. Schiebe came to witness, and said that her husband did not wish her to sell, and thought of rebuilding and making another shop. Witness said "All right, Mrs. Schiebe." Mr. Mehl was present during that conversation. The first time witness heard about the property being sold was three months ago. Defendant had not in December, 1900, or before then, said anything to witness about this sale. He was quite prepared in December to buy this property, and was still willing to do so. The property had increased £500 in value since December, because two months ago Mr. B. Cohen, under the belief witness had the option to buy the property, offered him £4,000 for the property. Mr. Levy had also made witness an offer before December last year. He offered witness £3,800. Mr. Levy had the Tramway Hotel, next door to the property. It was very important to witness to have the stand there. Defendant knew that witness was a Volunteer, and that he had gone on active service as such. Witness still occupied the premises under his lease.

Cross-examined: Mr. Woodhead had witness's power of attorney while he was away, and had full authority to act for him. Witness had never received a letter in terms of one now put in. Witness could have raised the £3,500 for the purchase of the property. He could have got £3,000 on a bond, and of the remaining £500 he could have got some hundreds from Woodhead, Plant and Co., who had assisted him.

In reply to the Court, Mr. Upington said their case was that they served a written notice upon Mehl, who was managing plaintiff's shop, and who transmitted that notice to Mr. Woodhead, plaintiff being then away on active service.

Max Mehl said that in February, 1900, he was engaged as salesman of Mr. Cohen's business in Waterkant-street. His instructions were to hand over to Woodhead, Plant and Co. all the letters he received, which he did. He did not open closed letters before handing them over. While plaintiff was away witness saw defendant nearly every day. Witness knew nothing of any letter offering plaintiff the property for £3,500. If any such letter came, it would be handed over to Mr. Woodhead. Defendant never said anything to witness, either in December or before plaintiff came back, about her having offered the property to plaintiff. Until plaintiff came back, witness knew nothing about defendant wanting plaintiff to buy the property. One day after plaintiff came back witness heard defendant telling him that she had an offer for the property, and asking if plaintiff wanted to buy it. Plaintiff said he did, and would arrange about the money. A few days later witness heard defendant saying that she would not sell the property, as her husband wanted her to alter it. From then, until witness left in August last, he never heard anything more about the sale of the property. In June witness heard defendant say, "Why does Cohen want to take in a partner? I would give him £1,100 for the lease."

Cross-examined: Witness did not remember on the 6th September, 1900, receiving an envelope from Messrs. Berrange and Son, addressed to Cohen. Witness did not show Mr. Berrange, jun., the envelope next day—the unopened letter. Witness did not remember Mr. Berrange then showing him a letter calling on Cohen to exercise the right of first refusal. Witness did not deny that this might have occurred. He could not remember. Witness did not then know Cohen's address. He handed over letters to Mr. Woodhead. Witness had the management of the business. He did not offer to sell the business. Witness paid the rent two or three times after Cohen came home. Cohen left the money. This was in June, July, and August.

Re-examined: Witness paid no rent while Cohen was away. Witness knew Cohen had the option. If witness knew Cohen was called upon to buy, he would have seen Mr. Woodhead about it.

Lawrence Woodhead, partner in the firm of Woodhead, Plant and Co., said plaintiff went to the front in October, 1899, and witness undertook to supervise his business when he was away. Mehl was put in, and was instructed to deliver letters to witness. He was not allowed to open letters. While Cohen was away, witness received no letter from Berrange and Co. Witness had found Mehl very reliable, honest, and methodical. It was easy to communicate with Cohen's regiment—the Dukes.

By Mr. Upington: There was a private arrangement between Cohen and witness. Witness was not certain whether he had a power of attorney. The arrangement was not advertised.

Jacobus Marthinus Theunissen, broker, who said he valued the premises in question at £4,000. Witness believed he could sell at that figure within 48 hours. About twelve months ago Mrs.

Schiebe offered witness to sell for £3,500, with the lease on the property. Witness's buyer wanted the property for £3,500, with the lease cancelled. Witness saw Mr. Woodhead.

By Mr. Upington: Mr. Woodhead had told witness that he had an interest in the property. Witness knew this three or four months before he approached Mrs. Schiebe. Witness did not tell Woodhead that he had a buyer for the property. He did not ask Woodhead for his consent to the sale. The sale fell through because witness's client was not willing to take the property with the lease.

Sir Henry Juta, having put in correspondence, closed the plaintiff's case.

Mr. Upington called

Margaretha H. E. Schiebe, the defendant, who said that in February, 1901, she had offers of £3,500 for the property. She went to see Mr. Berrange about the matter, and the latter wrote on the 6th September, giving notice to Cohen that witness had had an offer for the property, and asking him to advise whether he was going to exercise the right of buying. There was no reply. Witness afterwards went to see Mr. Berrange again. Another similar letter was written on the 7th, and served by a clerk on Mehl. Witness had no knowledge that Mr. Woodhead was acting as Cohen's agent. Witness sold the property in December for £3,500 to Messrs. Parry and Joachim, who agreed to take over the lease. Witness had offered the property to Cohen several times, and he had been unable to buy. Witness's daughter was present at some of the interviews at which witness offered the property to Cohen. Witness had no reason why she should sell to Parry and Joachim in preference to Cohen. From September, 1900, up to the date of sale, the property was in the hands of Mr. Berrange to sell. Anyone who had offered witness £3,500 in February, 1901, for the property, could have had it. The Town Council valuation of the property was £1,300; formerly it was £700.

By Sir Henry Juta: Witness did not know that Cohen was away. By direction of Mehl, witness had sent to Woodhead for the rent. It never struck witness that Mr. Woodhead was Cohen's agent, or that he had anything to do with the property.

Daniel Frederick Berrange said he was an attorney of the Supreme Court, and this property belonging to Mrs. Schiebe was in his hands. In September, 1900, Messrs. Parry and Joachim offered £3,500 for the property. Acting upon Mrs. Schiebe's instructions, witness wrote the letter of September 6 to plaintiff. On September 7, it having been brought to his notice that plaintiff was not in Cape Town, witness wrote a second letter in identical terms, and specially sent his son with it, with certain instructions. He did so to make sure that notice had been given. Subsequently a number of people wanted to purchase the property, but the negotiations dragged on with Parry and Joachim as to how much was to be paid in cash and how much should remain on mortgage, and so forth. That was the only objection. Parry and Joachim wanted Mrs. Schiebe to leave £3,000 on mortgage, and take £500 in cash; while witness advised her to get £1,500 in cash, and leave only £2,000 on mortgage. In December, 1901, the property was sold to Parry and Joachim, the parties who had made the offer in September, 1900. They were giving to defendant the whole of the purchase price. The property was a very small and old one, and witness thought the price, £3,500, to be a very handsome figure, otherwise he would never have advised defendant to sell. It was an old-fashioned place, and it would take a lot of money to convert it into a modern business place. There were several people after it besides Parry and Joachim.

Cross-examined: Parry and Joachim were the only people willing to give £3,500 for the property with the lease on it. When witness sent the letter of September 6 he knew that Cohen was not in town, but he did not know he was on active service. Witness never sent down to his business place and asked where he was. He certainly made no attempt to find him. He had asked his client if she knew the address of the man, and she said that she did not. He did not know how long Cohen had been away, and he did not inquire. It was rumoured that Cohen had gone to the front. His client told him that.

By the Court: If Cohen had been here he would have expected him to decide in the forty-eight hours given in the notice.

John Christopher Berrange said he was now a lieutenant in the D.E.O.V.R., but in September, 1900, he was in his father's office. He got certain instructions from his father in regard to the letter of September 7. He went to plaintiff's place of business, and learned that he was at the front. He inquired who was managing plaintiff's affairs, and the man in the shop said he was. The man then showed witness the unopened letter, which had been sent by witness's firm the previous day. Witness showed him the facsimile letter he had, and read the contents to him. He then made an endorsement of the circumstances on the letter.

Cross-examined: Witness had signed the letter of September 6 himself. Witness might have asked what corps plaintiff was in. He could not remember, but it was possible he did ask. Witness was informed by the man that he thought plaintiff would return for the Jewish holidays—on the 24th of that month. Witness might have told his father that the plaintiff was at the front. He might have considered the endorsement to that effect on the letter as sufficient, as that would be telling him. Witness did not remember whether the rents were paid direct to Mrs. Schiebe. It was only natural that the endorsement had refreshed witness's memory.

Maggie Emily Schiebe, daughter of Mrs. Schiebe, said she remembered Mr. Cohen coming back. He had a conversation with her mother about the property. Her mother told him she had several offers for the property, and asked if he would buy it. He said he had no money, and that if she could sell it she should do so.

Cross-examined: Witness did not know when Mr. Cohen went away, nor when he came back. She did not know he was a Volunteer. She could not say what year, day, or hour the conversation took place. It was a long time ago. She could not remember whether that was the only time she had seen him in her mother's house. Witness was in the doorway at the time of the conversation referred to, but she could not remember what she was doing there.

Eal Parry said he resided at Cape Town, and was a partner of the firm of Parry and Joachim. In September, 1900, they were in treaty to buy a property, with the lease on it, for £3,500. There were long negotiations as to how they were to pay the money, and so on, and they did not buy the property until December, 1901. In March, 1901, before they took possession of the property, they wanted to let the house, and asked Cohen if he would allow them to let it, as he had the option to lease the house for £10 a month. Cohen said he had nothing to do with that, and that it was Mr. Goldman who had the say in the matter. On another occasion, after they had closed the bargain, Cohen said they had paid quite enough for the property.

Cross-examined: Witness might have asked £4,500 for the property, but he was not prepared to sell. He did not buy for speculation, but because he needed the property. He had erected a new building close at hand about the beginning of December last. He would not now sell the property for £4,500, as he needed it himself, and could not get an other property in the neighbourhood. But for that he would not pay the price he was paying. Witness had bought the premises he was now in after he had made the offer to Mrs. Schiebe. He had been prepared to buy the property from Mrs. Schiebe at any time, and all she said was that she would let him know. They first spoke about the terms in the month of October. Witness had not got transfer of the property yet. He had asked for transfer to be passed on several occasions, but there was nothing to press for, and they could take their time.

Re-examined: Witness's offer of September, 1900, remained open until they actually purchased in December, 1901.

This concluded the evidence, and after hearing counsel on the facts, the Court gave judgment for the defendant with costs.

Maasdorp, J.: In this case the plaintiff sues defendant for the sum of £1,000, as damages sustained by plaintiff by reason of a breach of contract on the part of the defendant in having failed to enable plaintiff to use the right of pre-emption with reference to the property in question. The plaintiff complains that the defendant has been guilty of a breach of contract in having sold this property in December, 1901, for £3,500 without having given him the opportunity of exercising his right of the first refusal of buying. The action is based upon the 6th clause of a lease which was then in existence between plaintiff and defendant, which reads as follows: "The lessee shall have first refusal to buy the said shop and adjoining house when the lessor wishes to sell during the aforesaid term," and the plaintiff alleges that in December, 1901, the defendant disposed of this property without having given him notice that an offer had been made for the property, that she was willing to sell, and that he could exercise his option of purchasing the property for the sum offered by the proposed purchaser. Now, it appears to be quite clear that the defendant, in whatever she did in this matter, was very well advised by her legal adviser. She was very well aware of the existence of this clause in the lease and of her legal liability under this clause, and there is no doubt that she entertained all along the intention of abiding by and observing this clause. In September, 1900, it appears that an offer was made by Mr. Parry for this property, and I think, upon the evidence given by Mr. Berrange, and Mr. Parry, and by the defendant, it is clearly proved that this was a bona-fide offer, and what might be called a firm offer, of £3,500 for this property. The details of the agreement were not drawn up. In fact, the parties could not have proceeded without having first intimated to the plaintiff that such an offer had been made, and that he himself could become the purchaser on the same terms. It was only after he had exercised his option in the matter that the parties could proceed further, and make some detailed arrangements. Here then is an offer made for the property, and there is no doubt that the defendant was willing to sell. It then became her duty to inform the plaintiff of this, and the plaintiff could then exercise his right, under clause 6 of the lease. The defendant communicated with her attorney, and her attorney then took the transaction in hand, with the result that he wrote a letter on the 6th September, and posted this letter to the place of business of the plaintiff. It appeared that on the following day, when some information had been received that the plaintiff himself was not at his place of business, the attorney, to make doubly sure that the intimation contained in the letter should come to the notice of the person in charge, sent an open identical letter to be brought to the notice of that person, who, in this case, appears to be Mr. Mehl, the salesman. Now this notice undoubtedly, enclosed in an envelope, came into the possession of Mr. Mehl, and I think, if Mr. Mehl was the person who had power to receive on behalf of his principal such letters, that as soon as the letters came into his hands, they, in law, came into the hands of the principal himself. Now Mr. Mehl had received instructions to receive all letters at the place of business, and see that they came into the possession of the plaintiff, through the instrumentality of Mr. Woodhead. Mr. Mehl was therefore the authorised person to receive this communication, and when it came into his hands, it, in law, came into the hands of the plaintiff. Here, therefore, there was a notice given that the plaintiff was called upon to exercise his right of refusal to purchase the property. I may say that this decision of the legal point is not really of much importance in this case, because of what happened subsequently between the parties. It appears that subsequently to this the facts contained in the letter of the 6th September were personally communicated to the plaintiff himself by the defendant on more than one occasion. It is said that when such intimation was made the effect of it was to cancel the communication of the 6th September, but to my mind, as a matter of fact, it merely amounted to this: that this communication having been delivered, and plaintiff having been informed that he must decide by the 8th, the subsequent communications had the effect of simply extending the time, and if, when this offer was again made to the plaintiff by the defendant to exercise his right of refusal, he had then acted upon it, he would not have been foreclosed by the communication of the 6th September. Now the plaintiff states in his declaration that the property was sold without any intimation to him, and without giving him the opportunity of using the option contained in clause 6. As a matter of fact, not only was this letter written to him on the 6th September, but on several subsequent occasions, as defendant states, she again offered the property to him at the price which Mr. Parry had offered her. We have most clear proof that defendant, when she became willing to sell, offered the property to the plaintiff, but the answer of the plaintiff to that is that she withdrew that offer; that after she had given him the right to consider the matter for some short period, she withdrew the offer, and said that she no longer intended to sell; and that, consequently, he could not make use of any rights he had under this clause. The whole case therefore turns upon that part of the evidence as to whether the option was ever withdrawn by common agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant. The plaintiff states that in February the property was offered to him, and that he asked for some little time to consider the matter, which was granted; that a week after the defendant informed him that she had changed her mind, and no longer wished to sell. Well if that was true, I think that if the defendant again changed her mind, and again had an offer for this property, she would have had to give him a renewed option in the matter. However the defendant gives a different version. She says that, upon her offering this property to the plaintiff, he informed her that he was wholly unable to purchase it, and that she could proceed with the sale to the other purchaser. The question therefore arises: who are we to believe in this case—the plaintiff or the defendant? Now it seems to me that if the plaintiff had said that he was not in a position to purchase the property, he would have said what was perfectly true. Here we have the plaintiff, a man all whose property seems to have been taken as of a total value of £250—all second-hand clothes. He was indebted to Woodhead for over £100, and all he had in this world was a sum of over £100, and I think it would have been absolutely impossible for the plaintiff at that time to have exercised any option to purchase this property, and I believe that that was communicated by him to the defendant. But we are not wholly dependent upon the evidence of the defendant in this case, because Mr. Parry has come forward, and he says that about the time he closed with the defendant, he informed plaintiff of this, and that plaintiff then said to him that he had given a very good price for the property. The only thing the plaintiff could have meant by that was that Parry had given a high price, that he had given a price which plaintiff himself would not have been willing to give, and which plaintiff himself was not in a position to give. But it proves a good deal more. It proves that there was no option in the mind of the plaintiff at the time when the sale of this property to Parry and Joachim was brought to his notice in December, 1901. Under these circumstances, I think that if we were to decide solely upon the question as to whether the option which had been granted was ever withdrawn during 1901, up to the time when this sale was closed, I myself am forced to the conclusion that if at any time during the greater part of that year the plaintiff had come forward and had offered £3,500, there would not have been the slightest objection on the part of the defendant to accepting the money. I think there has been no breach of contract on the part of the defendant, and the plaintiff must fail.

Hopley, J., said he was thoroughly of the same opinion, and had come to the same conclusions as those stated by his brother Maasdorp in his judgment. Nothing had arisen throughout the case to in any way shake his opinion of the entire bona fides of the defendant throughout the whole of this transaction. So far as this business was concerned, she was in the hands of her legal adviser, and it was perfectly clear that she made no move without consulting him. Under these circumstances, it was extremely unlikely that she would do anything not strictly in accordance with the terms of the lease, while, on the plaintiff's side, there was considerable temptation to lie by and do nothing, until eventually the property was sold for a good price, to wait then for a time to see if the property was rapidly going up in value, and to then come forward and say that he had not been given a chance to exercise his option, and to claim damages. As to the manner in which the notice had been given, his lordship thought that defendant had served that notice in the best manner possible under the circumstances. There was no other agent than Mehl that anyone knew of, there being no notification by advertisement or in any other way to the outside public that Mr. Woodhead was in charge of plain-tiff's affairs. His lordship reviewed the evidence, and said that he was of opinion that even after he came back plaintiff had an opportunity of exercising his right of pre-emption had he wished to do so.

BATTEN V. BATTEN. { 1902.
May 28th.

This was an action for divorce by the wife. The respondent, Harry Batten, a carpenter, formerly residing at Observatory, did not appear.

Mr. Benjamin, who appeared for the petitioner, said that personal service had been effected.

The petitioner, Elizabeth Ellen Batten, said she was married to defendant on the 21st May, 1891. They first lived in England, and her husband afterwards came to the Cape, witness following him in 1895. He was employed as a carpenter on the C.G. Railways until the end of that year, then going to Johannesburg. Witness went to England, and defendant returned to Cape Town in 1897, when he was employed at the Royal Observatory. They lived there until November last year, when witness heard something concerning her husband. She charged him with having lived with a woman at Johannesburg. He admitted the truth of this. Witness then refused to live with him, and a deed of separation was drawn up, defendant agreeing to pay £50 and £1 5s. a week for the maintenance of the children. Witness subsequently obtained further information, and instituted proceedings. Her husband, who was then living at the Observatory, wrote a document, in which he pleaded with her to stay proceedings until May, and in the meantime to consider whether she would forgive him. He confessed that he had misconducted himself with a coloured woman, named Rosina Roberts. Witness agreed to stay proceedings until May, and wrote a document, in which she promised to communicate with her husband informing him of her decision. Witness then went to England, and while there she wrote to her husband, who had come to London, saying she could not forgive him.

Mr. Benjamin put in a letter written by the defendant on the 6th February, 1902. Therein he said: "You told me you had done things you are ashamed of, and I know them, but I have never taxed you with them, nor do I intend to; but you thought I knew nothing."

Witness (continuing) said she had never been guilty of any impropriety. There were three children of the marriage, aged ten years, eight years, and nine months respectively. Witness wanted the custody of the children. In the separation agreement defendant undertook to pay £1 5s. a week, but he subsequently told witness he could not afford to pay more than 15s. a week. Witness was satisfied with that.

Evidence taken on commission in regard to the adultery was read.

A decree of divorce was granted, plaintiff to have the custody of the three children of the marriage. Defendant was ordered to pay £1 a month for the maintenance of each child until it attains the age of sixteen, and leave was granted to plaintiff to apply again if further maintenance could be paid; defendant to pay costs.

ILLIQUID ROLL.

BISHOP V. LYON. { 1902.
May 29th.

This was an action for the return of certain furniture or payment of its value, viz., £68, and for £70 damages for breach of contract.

Mr. Benjamin, for defendant; plaintiff in default.

Counsel asked for absolution from the instance, with costs, the plaintiff not appearing. There was a claim in reconvention for two items, viz., a claim of £17 for rent and £8 for damages. With regard to the damages claim, the defendant (plaintiff in reconvention) abandoned it, and as the amount of rent admitted in the replication was £16 10s., he was prepared to take judgment for that with costs.

The Court granted absolution from the instance in the claims in convention, and judgment for £16 10s. for rent in the claims in reconvention.

SMART V. ISAAC E. BREST.

Mr. Benjamin moved under Rule 319 for judgment on a declaration for £39 for rent, and for an order for ejectionment. There was a claim for £50 for damages, but that would not be proceeded with now.

Judgment as prayed.

CAPE TIMES LIMITED V. BUCHNER AND MEDLICOTT.

Mr. P. S. Jones moved for judgment under Rule 319, in default of plea, for £74 16s. for advertising.

The defendant Buchner appeared in person, and in answer to the Chief Justice, said that his defence was that his partnership with Medicott had been dissolved, and that the plaintiffs had agreed to take over Medicott as being solely responsible for all debts. Medicott had carried on business for two months after the dissolution of partnership, and continued to advertise in the paper, and witness had never been asked for a fraction in the meantime.

The Chief Justice pointed out that the debt was incurred before the dissolution of partnership.

Defendant said that was so, but the plaintiffs took it over. He believed that Mr. Shaw, who acted for them, but was now in England, had that in writing.

The Chief Justice said that in a document defendant had handed in he had offered to pay £30, by instalments of £2 per month, in full satisfaction of the debt.

Defendant said he made that offer without prejudice to avoid trouble and worry. Further questioned, defendant said he was at present secretary of the South African Immigration Employment Bureau. He had put £150 in the partnership business, and on its dissolution he had left Medicott the furniture and everything. If a verdict was given against him, he would have to go insolvent.

The Court gave judgment against Medicott, and a postponement in regard in the case against Buchner, until June 12.

ROBERTSON AND CO. V. GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Buchanan appeared in this matter, but as it was in the same position as that mentioned by Mr. Benjamin, where the same defendants were sued, he asked that it be allowed to stand over until June 12.

Postponement allowed.

REHABILITATION.

Mr. Nightingale moved, under section 117 of the Insolvency Act, for the rehabilitation of James Catto, trading as Catto and Co. The usual certificate from the Master was put in.

Order granted.

ADMISSIONS.

Ex parte HOYTEMA. { 1902.
May 29th.

Mr. J. A. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Johan Pieter Renaud van Hoytema as an advocate of the Supreme Court.

Order granted, and leave given for the oaths to be taken before the Registrar of the District Court at Johannesburg.

Ex parte MCLEOD. { 1902.

Attorney—Admission.

Where an Attorney of the High Court, who had been enrolled in 1895, applied to be admitted as an Attorney of the Supreme Court, the Court granted the order prayed for with costs against the Law Society, which had opposed.

Mr. J. A. R. de Villiers moved for the admission of Arthur James McLeod as an attorney of the Supreme Court. The petitioner stated that he was admitted as an attorney of the High Court of Griqualand West in 1895, and was still enrolled as such, and was under no disabilities to practise. He was also an attorney of the Natal Court, and was now desirous of being admitted an attorney of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Searle, K.C., appeared on behalf of the Law Society to oppose the application. He had no affidavit, and as he had only received the brief the previous day, he had not had time to look into the matter, but he was instructed that the admission of petitioner as an attorney of the High Court must have been under the proclamation of 1871. Counsel asked that the matter be allowed to stand over until Saturday. The proclamation of 1871 allowed to be admitted as attorneys persons similar to those who might be admitted as attorneys of the Supreme Court, and also attorneys of Natal, as being attorneys of Natal. The objection of the Law Society was that one who had been admitted an attorney of the High Court, as an attorney of Natal, was not entitled ipso facto to be an attorney of the Supreme Court.

The Chief Justice said that the Annexation Act (No. 39 of 1877) seemed to provide for that, and once the man had been admitted under that Act, they could not inquire into what grounds there were for his admission.

Mr. Searle said the section of the Act in question (section 21) seemed to lay that down, and that was the reason he wished for a postponement, so that he might look into the matter. On looking at the petition, however, Mr. Searle said that it appeared that the petitioner was enrolled in October, 1895, and he did not think the Annexation Act was intended to cover persons admitted after the date of that Act.

De Villiers, C.J., said he had assumed that the petitioner was admitted before that, otherwise it was a clear contravention of Act 30 of 1890, which provided under what circumstances Natal attorneys could be admitted to practise in the Supreme Court. The matter wanted looking into, and therefore it would be allowed to stand over until Saturday.

Postea, May 31. Mr. J. E. R. De Villiers renewed the above application, and stated that the applicant was not an attorney of Natal, but of the High Court of this colony. He now wished to be admitted to practice in Natal as an Attorney of the Supreme Court of that colony, but under the rules of that Court his admission as an Attorney of the High Court of this colony did not qualify him for admission. As, however, Attorneys of our Supreme Court are entitled to admission as Attorneys of the Supreme Court of Natal, the petitioner now sought to be admitted as an Attorney of this Honourable Court, in consideration of his having already been admitted by the High Court.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for the Law Society), explained that the Society had opposed this admission, as they had incorrectly supposed the applicant to be an Attorney of Natal, and to have applied as such to be enrolled as an Attorney of the Court. See Rule of Court, 362. He would submit to the judgment of the Court.

De Villiers, C.J., said that the applicant having been admitted as an attorney by the Griqualand West High Court, this Court was bound to suppose that everything had been rightly done. It was competent for the Law Society to give evidence to the contrary, but they had not done so, and the applicant would be admitted. He thought the costs should be paid by the Law Society.

Leave was given to the applicant to take the oath before the Registrar of the Supreme Court of Natal.

PROVISIONAL ROLL.

COLONIAL ORPHAN CHAMBER V. C. M. DANTU.

Mr. Uppington moved for provisional sentence for £1,900, due on a mortgage bond, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from November 1, 1901. The bond originally provided for interest at the rate of 5 per cent., but under an agreement annexed to the bond the rate of interest was altered to 6 per cent. It was also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed, and the property declared executable.

S.A. BREWERIES V. GRAND JUNCTION RAILWAYS.

Mr. Benjamin said he had been instructed to move for provisional sentence on certain bills of exchange, but as a provisional order of sequestration had been granted against the Grand Junction Railways, returnable on June 12, he would ask that the application be allowed to stand over until June 12. If the provisional order was then made final, the application would, of course, fall to the ground.

Postponement allowed.

COLONIAL ORPHAN CHAMBER V.
FREDERICK J. GOCH.

Mr. C. de Villiers moved for provisional sentence for £250, due on a mortgage bond, with interest from January 24, 1901. He also asked that the property specially hypothecated be declared executable. The bond had become due by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed, and the property declared executable.

VAN DER SPUY, IMMELMAN AND CO.
V. SPENGLER.

Mr. Goch moved for provisional sentence on a promissory note for £209 3s. 9d., less £140 paid on account.

Provisional sentence granted as prayed.

GENERAL MOTIONS.

FILMALTER V. FILMALTER. { 1902.
May 29th.

This was an application for leave to the applicant to sue his wife in forma pauperis for divorce, on the ground of her adultery. The matter was before the Court last provisional day, but no order was made, as the applicant was not present.

Mr. Langenhoven stated that the plaintiff was now present.

The plaintiff, in answer to the Chief Justice, said that he lived at Caledon. He was a day labourer, and got £2 10s. per month, without food. His wife also lived at Caledon. She had left him, and he was suing her for divorce on the ground of adultery.

The Court directed that Mr. Langenhoven take the reference.

Re THE ESTATE OF THE LATE THOMSON.

Mr. Rowson moved for leave to mortgage certain property in the above estate for £400. In the estate there was a certain piece of land, on which two houses had been erected at a cost of £1,600, and the application was to raise £400, in order to complete the buildings. The Master reported that no minors were interested, and he had no objection to the application being granted.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte CENTLIVRES.

Mr. Currey moved for an order declaring a certain ante-nuptial contract between J. S. van Wyk and H. van Wyk to be valid, although actually entered into after the marriage, to which it referred. It appeared that owing to the unsettled state of the country the power of attorney in connection with the ante-nuptial contract did not reach the notary at Ladismith until after the marriage had taken place, and therefore the contract was void ab initio. This power of attorney was in identical terms with the contract. The matter was previously before the Court, and an order was granted for the registration of the contract, but it appeared that the facts were not quite as set forth in that petition.

The Court granted confirmation of the previous order.

Re THE ESTATE OF THE LATE JOOSTE.

Mr. Hull moved for confirmation of the sale of certain property in the above estate to the executor dative. The property had been sold by public auction in terms of the will of the testator, and the Master was of opinion that the sale should be confirmed.

Order granted as prayed.

Ex parte BELL.

Mr. Langenhoven moved that the rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act be made absolute.

Rule made absolute as prayed.

Ex parte MURRAY.

Mr. Benjamin moved that the rule nisi granted under the Derelict Lands Act be made absolute, with certain small amendments which had been published.

Rule made absolute as prayed.

Ex parte HUNTER AND OTHERS.

Mr. Close moved for an amendment of an order of Court in regard to the sale of certain property. It appeared that there was another minor interested in the property, whose name had in some way been left out when the former application was made.

Amendment allowed as prayed.

Ex parte RUTHERFORD.

Mr. J. E. R. de Villiers moved for an order authorising the amendment of certain records in the Deeds Registry by inserting the petitioner's right name, Charles Thomas Rutherford, in place of Charles Rutherford.

In answer to the Court, counsel said that there were mortgages on the property in question, and no notice had been given to the mortgagees.

The application was granted, subject to the consent of the mortgagees being filed with the Registrar.

FOX V. HOFFMAN.

Mr. Searle, K.C., applied for the discharge of a notice of appeal. Counsel said that on the 31st October, 1901, judgment was given in the Magistrate's Court in a case between Fox and Hoffman, and an appeal was noted by the attorneys, but nothing had been done in the matter. After notice of this application was given, the attorneys wrote stating that they had withdrawn the appeal. He (Mr. Searle), therefore, only asked for the costs of this application.

NEWDIGATE V. REGISTRAR { 1902.
OF DEEDS. { May 29th.
June 12th.

Foreign executor—Mortgage bond—Cession.

A mortgagee of land in this Colony was domiciled in England where he died. His English executor, after obtaining cession in his own favour, ceded it to the mortgagor's wife. The land having been sold she consented to the cancellation of the bond.

Held, that although the bond was in England at the time of the death of the mortgagee, the debt was an asset of his estate situated in this Colony, and that the Registrar of Deeds could not be ordered to cancel the bond without the consent of an executor appointed or confirmed by letters of administration granted in this Colony.

Eaton v. Registrar of Deeds (7 Juta, 249) followed.

This was an application for an order authorising the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond. The bond was passed to the late Colonel Newdigate, who had no domicile in this country, and who died in England, where his executors resided. There were no executors in this country, there being nothing to administer here. There was a certificate from the authorities in England that executors in the estate had been appointed in England. Counsel, in argument, referred to the case of Eaton (7 Juta, p. 249).

The facts sufficiently appear from the judgments.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicant): In this case the executor is domiciled in England, and there is no property in this country for him to administer. See Eaton v. Registrar of Deeds (7, Juta, 249), particularly the judgment (p. 254). A mortgage bond is a movable, Mobilis sequuntur personam. Technically, the bond is therefore in England. It is true that by Act 8 of 1888 the Master may stamp foreign letters of administration, and they will then have full force in this colony. But that provision applies only to cases in which there is an estate of some kind within the Colony to administer; here there is nothing to administer, and I submit that Your Lordships have no control over the Acts of a foreign administrator. If an executor consents to the cancellation of a bond here, that consent would be good. If a bond had been paid a few days before the mortgagee died, and he had not consented to its cancellation, it would be a great hardship were such mortgagor to be left without a legal remedy.

[The Master: The bond is an asset in the estate here.]

In Eaton's case it was held that a bond is a movable, and I submit, that that case shows that an executor should not be appointed to administer an estate in this colony unless there is immovable property here.

[Maasdorp, J.: What would you say if there were movable property in the Colony?]

Mobilis sequuntur personam. The Master could not claim succession duty if the deceased were domiciled in England. We represent the estate of the mortgagor, the donee of the bond. No succession duty is chargeable here in respect of estate in England.

Cyr. Adv. vult.

Postea, June 12.

De Villiers, C. J.: The petitioner asks for an order to compel the Registrar of Deeds to cancel a bond which was passed by the petitioner's deceased husband in favour of Colonel Newdigate, who was domiciled in England. Colonel Newdigate died in England, and his son, F. Newdigate, took out probate as executor under his will. He obtained cession of the bond to himself and afterwards ceded it to petitioner, in fact, made a present of it to her. She, as executrix of her husband, has sold the land under mortgage, and, in her individual capacity, has consented to the cancellation of the bond, but the Registrar of Deeds refuses to cancel the bond without the authority of an executor of Colonel Newdigate confirmed, as such by the Master of the Supreme Court. The process for obtaining such confirmation is simple and inexpensive, but, of course, if the Registrar is not entitled to insist upon this requirement the Court would order him to cancel the bond upon the petitioner's written consent alone. A similar question was fully discussed in this Court in the case of Eaton v. Registrar of Deeds (7 Juta 249), and it was there decided that the confirmation of the executor in this colony is necessary. In that case the bond was in the Colony at the time of the mortgagee's death, whereas in the present case the bond was in England at the time of Colonel Newdigate's death. This circumstance cannot, however, affect the result. The important facts are that in both cases the debtor resided in this Colony, the land was situated in this Colony, and the Deeds Office is an institution for registering transfers and bonds passed in this Colony. Even if the bond be treated as a moveable asset, it was an asset in this Colony at the time of the mortgagee's death, because the debtor lived in this Colony, and could not be sued here except by an executor whose appointment had been confirmed by the Master of the Supreme Court. It is not necessary to repeat the reasoning upon which the decision in Eaton's case was founded, and it is sufficient to say that the Court sees no reason for departing from it. The application must, therefore, be refused.

Buchanan, J., said he concurred in the judgment. The question was fully considered in the case of Eaton, and in that case it was clearly laid down that the Courts of this Colony could not recognise foreign administration unless there was ratification in this Colony.

COLONIAL GOVERNMENT V. VOS.

Rebel—Attachment of property ad fundandum jurisdictionem.

Mr. Howel Jones moved for leave to sue by edictal citation, and to attach certain property ad fundandum jurisdictionem. The respondent had lived in the district of Carnarvon, and it was alleged that he was an absconded rebel, at present with the Boer forces.

The application was granted, the citation being made returnable on the 1st August. Personal service was ordered to be effected, failing which, service by publication once in the "Government Gazette" and once in the "Victoria West Messenger."

Re THE PROVISIONALLY SEQUESTERED ESTATE OF MAY.

Mr. Buchanan moved for the appointment of a curator bonis, with power to sell certain perishable articles which had been attached.

The Court pointed out that the estate had not been finally sequestered, and that May might object to the sale of the goods if he had notice.

Mr. Buchanan said that the goods were perishable, being apples shipped to this country.

The Chief Justice asked if the goods were becoming bad.

Mr. Buchanan said that he was not instructed that this was so, but the applicants wished to sell, in order to prevent them from becoming bad and unsaleable. He submitted that May, under the circumstances, would not object to the sale.

The Chief Justice said that May might be able to show that they should not be sold.

The matter was ordered to stand over until the 12th June, applicants being given leave to apply in the meantime if May's consent were obtained.

Ex parte TRUSTEES OF BOYS' MISSION SCHOOL, SIMON'S TOWN. { 1902. May 29th.

Alienation — Prohibition of — School Property.

Where certain parties interested in certain property which had been left for the purpose of a mission school, subject to a prohibition against alienation, asked for leave to sell or mortgage the said property and to devote the proceeds towards the acquisition of other property to be applied to the same uses: the Court granted a rule calling upon all concerned to show cause why the said application should not be granted.

This was a motion for leave to sell or mortgage certain premises at Simon's Town which had been bequeathed by one, A. Vincent (now deceased) for use as a mission school. The bequest had been made subject to a prohibition against alienation. The petitioners stated that their object was to raise money either to enable them to purchase a more suitable site for the said mission school, and erect a new building thereon or to repair the existing premises.

In support of the application, it was stated that the premises were now in disrepair, and further, they are now in the centre of the town, and are unsuitable for a mission school.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for applicants): The only three parties interested in this matter are: (1) The congregation of the church at Simon's Town; (2) the congregation of the mission church; (3) the public of Simon's Town. All and each of these several parties have consented to the sale. It is true that under the trust deed there is a prohibition against alienation, but this is a general prohibition which is quite inoperative. Mr. Steytler declines to join us in this application, because he says that in some remote eventuality some heirs or other might have claims.

[Maasdorp, J.: Is the property in a perishing condition? Because if it be the Court will order a sale, the prohibition against alienation notwithstanding.]

I cannot say that it is in a perishing condition, but it certainly is in disrepair. Something must be done to it, and all interested parties have consented to the sale. All we ask for is permission to sell, subject to the condition that we must purchase other property subject to the same trusts.

De Villiers, C. J.: I think the utmost that the Court can do for the applicants is to grant a rule calling on all concerned to show cause on the 12th June, 1902, why the applicants should not be allowed to sell the land, for the purpose of buying other land, which is to be subject to the same conditions; the rule to be published once in the "Cape Times," and to be served on the executors of the late A. Vincent.

IN THE ESTATE OF THE LATE THOMAS F. FALKINER.

Mr. Jones moved, on behalf of the petitioner, who is the wife of the late Thomas F. Falkiner, for authority to the Master to pay out certain moneys. There was a sum of £273 11s. 5d. in trust for the minor daughter, and the petitioner asked for an order authorising the Master to pay out the sum of £70 in order to enable the minor to complete her education in France. The Master's report was favourable.

An order was granted in terms of the Master's report.

DE BEERS MINES V. MCCARTHY. { 1902. May 29th. " 30th. June 6th.

Mining facilities.

The plaintiff, by agreement with the L. & S.A.E. Company, acquired from the said Company certain mining claims at some distance from Du Toit's Pan Mine, and the L. & S.A.E. Company undertook to give him "ordinary mining facilities."

Held, on appeal, that this undertaking did not entitle the plaintiff to claim from the E. Company, in derogation of the rights of claim-holders in that mine, any portion of the reserve of that mine outside the statutory reserve as a depositing site for ground from his claims, although the only other available land tendered to him for that purpose was two miles distant from his claim.

At the time of the agreement the defendant Company held claims in the Du Toit's Pan mine and after the date of the agreement purchased all the assets of the E. Company, and became liable to fulfil its obligations.

Held, that the plaintiff had no greater rights against the defendant Company than it had against the E. Company, notwithstanding that the defendant Company was the chief claim-holder.

This was an appeal from a decision of the High Court of Griqualand West in a case in which McCarthy sued the appellants (De Beers Consolidated), and in which the Court granted judgment for the plaintiff with costs, to the effect that he was entitled to the use of a certain area on the Du Toit's Pan Mining Reserve as a hauling, washing, and depositing site. There was litigation in 1893, when the L. and S.A. Exploration Company sued De Beers for the right to go on their depositing site to ascertain whether certain ground was diamondiferous, and in 1899 the London and South African Exploration Company made a contract with McCarthy, on which litigation took place in 1900, between him and De Beers, after the latter had bought all the rights of the London and South African Exploration Company, and McCarthy was given an extension of time and certain facilities. McCarthy then appeared to have asked for twenty-five claims of the 100 which by his agreement with the London and South African Exploration Company he was entitled to. The present action arose in connection with the form of lease which the defendant company should grant to him for the twenty-five claims which he got under the contract. A form of lease was tendered to him, to which he took exceptions, and eventually a form of lease was drawn up which he accepted, with certain reservations. He admitted that he had been tendered twenty-five acres as a depositing site, but alleged that this was insufficient, and not in compliance with the contract between him and the London and South African Exploration Company. The judgment appealed against was given on April 15, and it was against that judgment that the appeal was made.

The plaintiff filed the following declaration in the Court below:

1. The plaintiff is a prospector, residing at Beaconsfield, and the defendants are a joint-stock company, duly incorporated within this colony, and carrying on business in Griqualand West.

2. On or about the 18th January, 1899, the plaintiff entered into an agreement in writing with the London and South African Exploration Company, Limited (then the registered owners of the farm Dorstfontein, in the division of Kimberley), their successors and assigns, whereby the plaintiff obtained from the said company the sole right, for twelve calendar months, dating from the 2nd of January, 1899, to search for diamonds upon the said farm by underground working from a certain spot thereon, known as the Alice Syndicate ground, which ground was part of a certain depositing floor in the occupation of the defendants, but was surrendered by them to the said Exploration Company by order of the Supreme Court, dated the 6th of September, 1893.

3. Under the said agreement the plaintiff had the further right, in terms of paragraphs 3 and 9 thereof, of obtaining, at any time within the twelve calendar months aforesaid, or any extension thereof, a lease for five years, renewable from time to time, of an area upon the said farm in one block equal to any number of claims of 30 feet square each, not exceeding in all 100, at a rental of 30s. (thirty shillings sterling) per claim per month, which claims the plaintiff was at liberty to select and locate by means of trial pits.

4. At the time of making the said agreement, and subsequent thereto, it was further agreed upon and understood between the plaintiff and the said Exploration Company that, in the event of the plaintiff taking out the lease of claims as in the last paragraph hereof described, he should obtain the use of sufficient ground in the vicinity of such claims for hauling, washing, and depositing sites upon the said farm, as well as for all necessary easements for the proper working of such claims.

5. Subsequent to the date of making and during the currency of the said agreements, the defendants purchased and took over the assets and undertakings of the said Exploration Company, including the said farm Dorstfontein, with the full knowledge of the existence and terms of the agreements, whereof the plaintiff also gave them due notice before transfer of the said farm to themselves; and the defendants are liable for the fulfilment of the obligations undertaken by the said Exploration Company in the said agreements.

6. The plaintiff, by virtue of the rights conferred upon him in the said agreements, proceeded to dig and search for diamonds upon the said farm by underground working, and at divers dates during the year 1899 discovered diamondiferous ground and diamonds both in the said Alice Syndicate ground and also in certain tunnels made by him under certain depositing floors upon the said farm, which were in the possession of the defendants, and of which they then had only the superficial right for depositing and other mining purposes.

7. By an order of the Hon. the Supreme Court, dated the 27th November, 1900, the plaintiff was permitted to make trial pits within a certain defined area upon the said depositing floors, for the purpose of selecting and locating the claims mentioned in the agreement "A," and such claims were to be selected and located within a period of six months from the 14th of September, 1900, to which period the operation of the said agreements was by the said order extended.

8. Thereafter the plaintiff proceeded to make certain trial pits within the defined area upon the said floors, and on or before the 13th of March, 1901, applied to the defendants for a lease, in terms of the said agreements, of 25 claims selected and located by him upon the said floors, and for the allotment of hauling, washing, and depositing sites in the vicinity of the said claims, and for other easements necessary to the proper working of the same.

9. The defendants, however, did and do neglect and refuse to grant the plaintiff a lease of the said claims upon equitable, reasonable, and proper terms, and insist upon his signing a certain lease, which the plaintiff says contains unusual and inequitable conditions, such as the defendants are not justified in imposing, especially in clause 6 of the proposed lessee's covenants, clause 4 of the lessors' covenants, and in the proposed general provisions.

10. The defendants also neglect and refuse to allow the plaintiff the use of suitable or sufficient ground, in the vicinity of the claims applied for by him, for hauling, washing, and depositing sites and refuse to grant him the usual and necessary easements required for the working of the said claims.

By reason of the premises, the plaintiff claims: (a) That the defendants may be ordered to execute a lease to him of the said twenty-five claims upon fair, proper, and equitable terms, having regard specially to the terms of his said agreements with the defendants' predecessors in title; (b) that the defendants may be ordered to grant him the use of sufficient and suitable ground in the vicinity of the said claims as hauling, washing, and depositing sites, and generally to give him all the mining facilities and easements necessary to the proper working thereof; (c) a declaration of his rights as against the defendants in connection with the said claims; (d) general relief; (e) costs of suit.

The defendants' plea was as follows:

1. Defendants admit paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, and 8 of plaintiff's declaration, but deny so much of the remaining paragraphs thereof as is not hereinafter expressly admitted.

2. Defendants deny the allegation as to vicinity contained in paragraph 4, and say that it was not in the power of the London and South African Exploration Company at the time of the contract or afterwards to have given plaintiff sufficient ground nearer than that offered by defendants and herein after more fully referred to.

3. Defendants admit paragraph 5 of the declaration save that they deny any agreement or knowledge of it on their part to give plaintiff sufficient ground nearer than that offered by defendants to him.

4. As to paragraph 9, defendants deny the allegations therein contained, but have tendered and hereby again tender him an amended lease, with costs to date of tender.

5. As to paragraph 10, defendants have tendered and hereby again tender plaintiff the nearest available twenty-five acres of ground as a depositing site with all facilities for hauling, tramming, and washing.

6. Defendants specially say that at the time of the plaintiff's agreement with the London and South African Exploration Company all ground nearer to plaintiff's so-called claims than that tendered by defendants as a depositing site, was let or given out by the said London and South African Exploration Company to various mining companies having claims in the Du Toit's Pan Mine for depositing floors, or other purposes and such ground and rights have never been abandoned by the said mining companies or their cessionaries or reverted back to the owners of the soil.

Wherefore defendants pray that plaintiff's claim, save as to the lease and ground tendered, may be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was as follows:

1. The plaintiff admits that the defendants have tendered him a lease of which copy is annexed to the pleas and marked "A," and the plaintiff accepts such lease subject to paragraphs 2 and 3 hereof.

2. The plaintiff admits that the defendants have tendered him 25 acres of ground as a depositing site, with such facilities for hauling, tramming, and washing as appears from the annexure "B" to the pleas, but says that such tender is insufficient and bad, and not in compliance with the terms of the agreement between the plaintiff and the London and South African Exploration Company (Limited).

3. The plaintiff says that the defendants have sufficient ground nearer to the plaintiff's claims than that referred to in the said tender, which they could, and under the said agreement are bound to allot to him for hauling, washing, and depositing sites.

4. Except as aforesaid, the plaintiff joins issue with the defendants upon their plea, except in so far as the same contains admissions, and again prays for judgment with costs.

After hearing evidence, the High Court granted judgment for the plaintiff with costs, declaring him entitled to the use of an area in the direction indicated, on the Dutoitspan Mining Reserve, unless otherwise arranged between the parties, of not less than 5 acres in extent, as a hauling, washing, and depositing site, with all reasonable facilities for its use for those purposes, on his executing the amended lease tendered by the plea. The plaintiff to have further right, during the currency of his lease, or of any renewal thereof, of claiming, when required, an additional area not exceeding 20 acres, as a depositing site, either on the spot indicated on the defendant's plan or elsewhere, as the parties may agree.

Against this judgment the defendants appealed.

[Mr. Schreiner K.C., (with him Mr. Sampson, K.C., and Mr. Buchanan), for the appellants. Mr. Burton (with him Mr. Close) for the respondents.]

Mr. Schreiner, K.C.: The order of Court of November 27, 1900, was, I submit, somewhat indefinite as to the locality within which respondent was authorised to sink his trial pits; but admittedly it was in the direction of the reserve. The question then is, could the De Beer's Company be bound to anything to which their predecessors in title, the London and South African Exploration Company were not bound? I submit not.

[De Villiers, C. J.: It was held that the De Beers Company were bound to give a convenient depositing site; are they not then bound to do all they can to meet the requirements of the appellant?]

No the Court would never impose more upon them than the London and South African Exploration Company were bound to. As to "ordinary mining facilities," see section 34 and 35 of Act 19 of 1883, and De Beers v. Colonial Government (9 Juta 101). A reserve is necessary for the efficient working of a mine, and these reserves were established to relieve the great inconvenience caused by the accumulation of debris in the vicinity of the mines. The reported cases show that the Bulfontein and the Du Toits Pan mines have always had more depositing ground than they were entitled to under the statute. The Court will never compel the De Beers Company to do what their predecessors were not bound to. It is impossible to give the respondents a depositing site nearer to their claims without cutting off other claimholders from their depositing floors. They are entitled at least to a via necessitatis to these. The Court has decided in former cases that our depositing site cannot be interfered with, and now it is asked practically to reverse this decision. Bulfontein Mining Board v. Armstrong (6 H.C., 57, and 8. Juta, 236) showed that as the Mining Board were not owners of the debris they could not claim to control the mining area as the representatives of the claim holders. L. and S.A. Exploration Company v. Bulfontein Company (8 Juta, 55) referred to the extension of a mine, and shows that claim holders may not erect machinery on ground not within the mining area.

[De Villiers, C. J.: How do you define the limits of your mine?]

Its extent is proclaimed by Government, and the proclaimed area is the joint property of the claim holders De Beers Mines v. Colonial Government (9 Juta, 101). Even the Governor has no power to restrict these areas, though he may extend them. The L. and S.A. Company had no power to resume any portion of either the depositing site or of the reserve and give it to an outside miner, De Beers Mines v. Lilley (6 H.C., 55). This case has never been appealed against. See also De Beers Mines v. Colonial Government (9, Juta, 108). The distinction which respondent wishes to draw between the wasting of "yellow ground" and that of "blue ground" is not founded on any intelligible principle. The site we have offered is the only one legally available, and to get from respondent's claims to the other site suggested it would be necessary to cross the ground of the Griqualand West Company, and this we can neither do ourselves nor give anybody else a right to do.

Mr. Burton (for respondent): I will first discuss this matter from the point of view that the De Beers Company are not bound to do more for my client than the L. and S. A. Company. McCarthy's contract is set forth in the pleadings, and he claims that there was a special contract with Currey that he (McCarthy) was to have ordinary mining facilities. The plea only denied that the washing ground was to be given in the vicinity of respondent's claim. "Mining facilities" include ground required for hauling, washing, depositing, site, etc. In the previous case (before the High Court) Currey was called, and the Court found as a fact that there was proof that the L. and S.A. Company had bound themselves to do "the best they could." That company fostered the opening of new mines, and the view taken by the High Court is fully supported by the evidence. Now let us suppose that the L. and S.A. Company was still in existence. McCarthy would have found his diamonds and located his claims, and then he would have gone to the L. and S.A. Company to ask for mining facilities, and they would have bound to do all they possibly could. De Beers are under the same obligation to give ground conveniently situated for washing purposes. If McCarthy could only get ground two miles away he would have no alternative but to abandon his claims. The owners of the soil of a depositing site could resume the ground if it proved diamondiferous.

[Buchanan, J.: But could they take possession of this ground for hauling?]

Yes, or for any other purpose connected with mining. If we are entitled to a hauling site appellants cannot prevent us from washing our yellow ground there. Again, McCarthy requires a depositing floor. Where, then, could the L. and S.A. Company have conveniently given this? He does not ask to go on the De Beers depositing site, but he does object to go two miles away for the purpose. He left the selection of an alternative site open. The "reserve" was only for the accommodation of the claim-holders collectively. They had no individual ownership. I found my argument on Bulfontein Mining Board v. Armstrong (1. Sheil, 192), and in view of that the L. and S.A. Company never divested themselves of the ownership of the soil: as long as the permission did not interfere with the exercise of rights granted to other people they could allow these sites to be used for any purpose.

[Maasdorp, J.: Take the case of a commonage; may anybody appropriate a part of that to his own exclusive use.]

No, that would interfere with the rights of other people.

[Buchanan, J.: It is on evidence that it might be very inconvenient to the other claim-holders to give the respondent a part of the depositing floor.]

I would suggest that the whole policy of the De Beers Company is to keep other people out and to restrict the output of diamonds.

[Buchanan, J.: Your claim comes to this, that the L. and S.A. Company must keep every inch of their ground till you tell them what you require. Suppose they had given the De Beers leave to sink a shaft, do you say that they must now withdraw that permission?]

If the L. and S.A. Company had retained their ownership this dispute would never have arisen. Again, it has been argued for the appellant company that if they are not bound to grant a depositing site a fortiori they were not bound to grant space in the reserve, but these are totally different questions. Claim holders have only a right of access to the reserve, and a right to move about freely therein. As to the depositing ground they are tenants who pay rent. I quite admit that when there were some hundreds of claim holders in the one mine, a holder might be prejudiced by a grant such as I contend for; but that state of things no longer exists.

[De Villiers, C. J.: How does that affect the question? The De Beers Company have absorbed the other companies, including the L. and S.A. Company, and have stepped into their shoes.]

I quite admit that now, practically speaking, the only claim holders are the De Beers Company. Another point is that the expression “Mining Reserve” is by no means obsolete. Yellow ground has been given out to wash (according to Nind’s evidence) on the mining reserve. It is most unusual for yellow ground to be taken two miles to wash. The case of De Beers v. Colonial Government (9 Juta 101) cited for appellants does not apply in this case. I base my argument on Armstrong’s Case. Further, can we only demand from the De Beers Company what the L. and S.A. Company had bargained to give us? From the latter company we could not have demanded specific performance, but only damages; but now that the two companies have amalgamated the De Beers Company can give, and is bound to give much more than the L. and S.A. Company could have done. Suppose that some of these depositing sites had reverted to the owner of the soil, could the L. and S.A. Company have then resisted our claim to depositing sites. We look to the L. and S.A. Company, to fulfil their contract, and by the action of the appellants and merger of interests they now stand in the position of that company. They are in a position to grant what we ask, and they are bound to do so.

[De Villiers, C. J.: When the De Beers Company purchased from the L. and S.A. Company were they aware of the obligations of the latter company?]

I think that is admitted on the pleadings. If the De Beers Company take over the rights of the L. and S.A. Company they must also accept their liabilities.

[Maasdorp, J.: Can the reserve ever fall vacant?]

I am not prepared to argue that.

Mr. Sampson, K.C. (in reply): In paragraph 4 of his declaration, the plaintiff (now respondent) said he was entitled to ground for hauling, washing, and other purposes in the vicinity of his claim. But the evidence in the Court below does not support this claim. There is no evidence that Currey promised to do the best he could. His letter of page 37 of the evidence is inconsistent with any such general promise. All that he promised was that he would endeavour to procure an extension of the time granted for prospecting. See letter No. 1 of December 23, 1898. That letter disclaims any power to give surface rights, unless the ground proved diamondiferous. Even in that case the L. and S.A. Company could not give surface rights for depositing purposes. The respondent’s tunnel extends in the very direction in which Currey said he could not give surface rights. In the Court below that disposed of the plaintiff’s claim to ground in the vicinity of the mine. Currey promised nothing save ordinary mining facilities: and what were these, what did Currey give plaintiff a right to expect? Plaintiff knew that he could not get a depositing site, and if the reserve was contemplated, why was it not mentioned? The limits of the mining area of the Du Toit's Pan mine were defined by a Government Proclamation issued in May, 1895.

[Buchanan, J.: The whole question turns chiefly on the mining area.]

Yes, but I want to show how this works out. In practice and by contract the mining reserve was over 200 yards from the edge of the mine. Respondent's counsel admitted that the contractual reserve could not be interfered with, but that the statutory reserve could.

[De Villiers, C. J.: Where is the contract?]

That point was never raised, or we should have gone over the whole ground covered by Armstrong's Case. Lastly, if a man places his house, etc., in a position where he must expect disadvantage to accrue he cannot complain: and so with a mine. If a man locates his mine in an inconvenient site he has no right to complain of the inconvenience, and yet the Court below grants him five acres of ground to help him out of his difficulty. As to this, compare the evidence of the case with the judgment. The Court granted a portion of the reserve, and this grant was wholly illegal and constituted a serious infringement on the rights of previous miners.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea, June 6th.

De Villiers, C.J.: The question to be determined in this appeal is whether the London and South African Exploration Company would have been bound under its agreement with the plaintiff to give him a portion of the "reserve" of the Du Toit's Pan mine as a depositing site for yellow ground, to be taken by him out of certain twenty-five claims in the neighbourhood of Du Toit's Pan mine. It is admitted on both sides that the obligations of the Exploration Company have been taken over by De Beers Consolidated Mines. One of these obligations was that the Exploration Company should give the plaintiff ordinary mining facilities for the purpose of working certain claims leased to him. Those claims did not form part of the Du Toit's Pan mine, and he could not, therefore, claim any portion of the depositing sites attached to that mine for the purpose of hauling, depositing, or washing the ground taken out of his claims. The defendant company offered him twenty-five acres of land outside the Du Toit's Pan depositing sites, but as that land is situated about two miles from his claims, he objected to it as not giving him the "ordinary mining facilities" that had been promised. The High Court of Griqualand West appears to have considered that the plaintiff could not object to the land they offered, so far as the blue ground from his claims was concerned, but as to the yellow ground, awarded to him, five acres of land falling outside the statutory or inner "reserve" of the Du Toit's Pan mine, but inside the outer reserve. The inner reserve is referred to in the 35th section of Act 19 of 1883, which enacts that to every licensed claim there shall be attached the right to an acre of ground as a depositing site in the neighbourhood of such mine, "but so as not to encroach on a reserve of two hundred yards around the margin of such mine." In regard to the outer reserve, Mr. Justice Solomon, in the case of Bultfontein Mining Board v. Armstrong (8, Jura. 326), has given an instructive account of its origin. That judgment referred to the Bultfontein mine, but it has been accepted by counsel on both sides as a fair statement of what took place in regard to the Du Toit's Pan mine also. In that case, the Exploration Company, as the owners of the farm on which Bultfontein mine is situated, had given leave to Armstrong, who was not a claimholder, to erect washing machinery in the reserve outside the inner reserve and wash débris, which had been abandoned by the claimholders who had taken it out of that mine. It was held by the High Court—and that judgment was affirmed by this Court—that in the absence of proof that the washing would prejudice the claimholders in the mine, the Mining Board had no right to restrain Armstrong from washing the débris. "The trespass," said Solomon, J., "in the present case complained of is situated outside of the original reserve of 300 feet round the mine, but within the extension of the reserve. Some point was made of this fact by the defendants"—namely, Armstrong and the Exploration Company—"but if Kilgour's evidence with regard to the extension is correct, the fact seems of no importance. For I take it that when Kilgour extended the reserve he intended to give to the Depositing Sites Committee exactly the same power of control over the extended areas as he had already given to them over the original reserve. Mr. Curry, the manager of the Exploration Company himself says that he considers that the Depositing Sites Committee had power of control over the outer zone as well as over the inner zone. . . . It appears to me, therefore, that the plaintiff has established that the alleged trespass was committed within a certain area round the mine, which area was set apart by the Exploration Company for the use of the claim-holders of the mine, and was placed by the said company under the control of the Depositing Sites Committee." He then proceeds to discuss the question whether the Mining Board had acquired all the rights and powers of the Depositing Sites Committee, and comes to the conclusion that, although the Mining Board had a general power of control over the reserve analogous to that of a Municipal Board over a municipal area, it had not such extensive possession and control over the reserve as to enable it to bring an action for trespass against persons entering upon the area. He adds that "this case does not decide that the owner of the soil has the right to enter upon the mining area to the prejudice of the claim-holders in the mine; it merely decides that the Mining Board is not the body to restrain him from entering upon the area." The judgment of this Court was based, among other things, on the distinct ground that the washing of debris which has come from the mine is a mining operation connected with the Bultfontein mine, which ought not to be restrained without proof that the rights and privileges of the claim-holders are affected thereby. That case, therefore, is no authority for the view that the Exploration Company would have been justified in using any portion of the outer zone for purposes unconnected with the Bultfontein mine. The washing of debris taken out of that mine by claim-holders is clearly an operation connected with that mine, although the person allowed to wash it might not be a claim-holder. In the present case the plaintiff, to whom the High Court has awarded a depositing site for yellow ground on the outer reserve, proposes to deposit and wash on that site yellow ground not taken out of Du Toit's Pan mine, but from land outside that mine. In my opinion that was not such an "ordinary mining facility" as was contemplated by the parties to the agreement between the plaintiff and the Exploration Company. The claim-holders might have reasonably objected to such a use of an area reserved by tacit agreement for mining operation in connection with Du Toit's Pan mine. The fact that the defendant company at the time of the plaintiff's agreement with the Exploration Company held, or subsequently acquired the greater number of the claims in the mine, cannot add to the obligations which the defendant company took over from the Exploration Company. Those obligations must be judged of as if the claims were still held by the original claim-holders. Such claim-holders might not have been entitled to object to the washing of debris from the Du Toit's Pan mine taking place on the outer reserve, but they would certainly have been entitled to object to a portion of such reserve, situated between the mine and some of their depositing sites, being used as a depositing site for yellow ground from another mine. It would appear, in the present case, that the proposed depositing site is so situated that it would have prevented some of the original claim-holders from having access for depositing purposes to the sites which they held by virtue of their claims in the mine. The defendant company, by its plea, has tendered to the plaintiff a site about two miles distant from his claims, and the Court will vary the judgment of the Court below by giving judgment for the plaintiff, in terms of the tender, with costs up to the date of tender, but the plaintiff will have to pay the costs in the Court below, subsequent to the tender, as well as the costs of appeal.

Buchanan, J., and Maasdorp, J., concurred in the above judgment.

SUPREME COURT

FIRST DIVISION.

[Before the Hon. Mr. Justice HOPLEY and a Jury.]

THOMPSON V. SEALE. { 1902.
May 30th.

Landlord and Tenant — Sub letting—Mala fides—Damages.

This was an action for damages for breach of contract brought by William Thompson, against Henry Francis Seale. There was a claim in reconvention that a certain lease be declared cancelled.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff, William Thompson, carries on business as a general commission merchant at Cape Town, under the style or firm of William Thompson (late Thompson, Ratcliffe and Co.). The defendant is a retail jeweller, carrying on business at Cape Town.

2. On or about the 14th day of December, 1898, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement of lease, copy of which is hereunto annexed, whereby plaintiff hired from the defendant certain three floors of certain premises situate at the corner of Adderley-street and Longmarket-street, Cape Town, and hired by defendant from one Mcritz Pickler, the then owner thereof.

3. The said agreement of lease was for a period of three years, reckoned from the 1st day of January, 1899, and on the 9th day of February the said period was further extended until the 1st day of January, 1903.

4. Prior to and at the time of entering into the said agreement of lease, the defendant had full notice and knowledge that the plaintiff required the premises so let and hired for the purpose of dividing the said floors into rooms and offices by means of partitions and sub-letting the said rooms and offices for his (the plaintiff's) profit.

5. On or about the 1st day of January, 1899, the plaintiff entered into possession of the said premises, under the said agreement, and at considerable cost subdivided the said floors into thirteen rooms and offices as aforesaid, and thereafter sub-let the said rooms and offices to divers persons with the knowledge and consent of the defendant.

6. Thereafter, in or about the years 1900 and 1901, the plaintiff submitted to the defendant from time to time the names of divers persons of good standing and respectability who were willing and had agreed to hire the said rooms and offices from the plaintiff, but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully, unreasonably and vexatiously, refused to allow the plaintiff to sub-let the said rooms to the said persons or at all, in consequence whereof the said rooms and offices became vacant, and have so remained, and the plaintiff has thereby been deprived of all profit and benefit from the said rooms and offices.

7. By reason of the premises the plaintiff has suffered damage to the extent of £2,000, particulars whereof have from time to time been supplied to defendant.

Wherefore the plaintiff claims: (a) £2,000 as and for damages as aforesaid; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

For a plea the defendant says as follows:

1. He admits the allegations in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3, and denies those in paragraph 4 of the declaration, and begs to refer this Hon. Court to the written lease which constitutes the contract entered into by the parties.

2. He admits that on certain occasions he gave his approval to the sub-letting by the plaintiff of certain rooms and offices to certain persons as is alleged in paragraph 5.

3. As to paragraph 6, he admits that during 1900 and 1901 the plaintiff has from time to time asked his approval of proposed sub-leases of parts of the property hired by the plaintiff, and he admits that he has refused to grant his approval, but he says that such refusal has been in all cases lawful and in accordance with his rights, as reserved in clause 6 of the written lease, but save as aforesaid, he denies the allegations in the said paragraph.

4. He denies all the allegations in paragraph 7.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed with costs.

For a claim in reconvention the defendant (now plaintiff) says as follows:

1. In terms of clause 10 of the written lease entered into between the parties it is provided as follows: "That the rent of the premises hereby leased is payable monthly, and should the lessee fail to pay any one month's rent within twenty-five days after it falls due, or commit any breach of this agreement, the lessee shall have the right to cancel this lease and take possession of the premises hereby let."

2. The rent for the month of January, 1902, fell due at the end of that month, and the plaintiff (now defendant) failed and neglected to pay the same within twenty-five days after it fell due—wherefore the defendant (now plaintiff) was entitled to cancel the lease.

3. Thereafter the defendant (now plaintiff) gave lawful notice to the plaintiff (now defendant) that the lease was cancelled under clause 10 for his afore-said default in the payment of the said rent, and demanded possession of the said premises, but the plaintiff (now defendant) wrongfully and unlawfully refused and still refuses to quit the said premises and give up possession thereof, and wrongfully and unlawfully remains in possession thereof.

4. The defendant (now plaintiff) is entitled to a decree of ejectment.

Wherefore the defendant (now plaintiff) prays for: (a) An order of ejectment, compelling the plaintiff (now defendant) forthwith to deliver up possession of the leased premises; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

For a replication to the defendant's plea, the plaintiff says as follows:

Save for admissions he denies all and singular the allegations of fact and conclusions of law in the plea contained, joins issue with the defendant thereon and again as before prays for judgment with costs.

And for a plea to the claim in re-convention the plaintiff (now defendant) says as follows:

1. He admits paragraph 1, and craves leave to refer to the terms of the lease.

2. As to paragraph 2 he admits that the rent for January fell due at the end of that month, and that it was not then paid, nor within twenty-five days thereafter, but he says that in or about the month of February, 1902, and prior thereto, the parties were negotiating for a cancellation of the said lease, as will more fully appear from the correspondence annexed to an application to this Honourable Court by the plaintiff in re-convention for ejectment, to which the defendant in re-convention craves leave to refer when produced at the trial.

3. The defendant in re-convention does not admit that the plaintiff in re-convention is entitled to claim a forfeiture of the said lease without notice to the defendant in re-convention of his intention so to do and without affording the defendant in re-convention an opportunity of paying the rent; and says further that the plaintiff in re-convention by his conduct in and about the said negotiations and offers in relation thereto waived any right he might otherwise have had to claim any such forfeiture.

4. As soon as defendant in re-convention became aware that the plaintiff in re-convention intended to claim a forfeiture of the said lease, to wit, on or about the 28th February, 1902, he tendered to the plaintiff in re-convention the amount of rent then due; but the plaintiff in re-convention refused to accept same. Save as above he denies paragraphs 3 and 4.

5. The defendant in re-convention hereby again tenders to pay the rent now due to the plaintiff in re-convention.

Wherefore the plaintiff (now defendant) prays that the claim of the defendant (now plaintiff) may be dismissed with costs.

For a replication to the plea of the defendant in re-convention, plaintiff in re-convention admitted that after the 25th February, 1902, he did, in connection with the correspondence referred to in paragraph 2 of the plea in re-convention, consider a request by defendant for a cancellation of the lease, but the plaintiff in re-convention in so doing gave express notice that he reserved all his rights under the lease. He admitted in regard to paragraph 4 that the defendant in re-convention did on the 28th February tender the amount of rent which was then due for January, and that plaintiff in re-convention refused to accept the same.

(Clause 6, referred to in the pleadings, was as follows: The lessee is not entitled to sublet the premises or any part of them except to such tenants and for such purposes as the lessor may approve.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Upington) for plaintiff; Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Close) for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner said the lease was an absolute prohibition of sub-letting without the approval of the landlord, and there were no qualifying phrases providing for such approval not being unreasonably or arbitrarily withheld. There were many cases in the English Courts which showed that a distinction was made between the absolute prohibition without the approval of the landlord, and such approval with the qualifying phrases. Therefore he would object to any evidence being put before the jury as to whether the persons whom Mr. Seale refused to approve of were respectable or not. Mr. Seale was not called upon to give any reasons for his refusal to approve of the proposed sub-tenants, and counsel submitted that that was an absolutely legal defence.

[Hopley, J.: You say this is a matter of law that the jury shall have nothing to do with?]

Mr. Schreiner said that was so.

Mr. Searle said the proper course would be to ask the jury certain questions, and then if there was a question of law it could be reserved. He was quite prepared to take it upon the point of law that the only proper construction must be that the man must exercise some discretion, especially when he knew that the object of the letting was to get tenants. Therefore he could not come forward and say, "I am not going to approve of any sub-letting at all." Proceeding, counsel said he must put a strong case to show that the defendant did not exercise the discretion which he ought to have done in the matter, and they could not decide that until they heard the evidence. He submitted that it was a mala fide, and not a bona fide refusal at all.

[Hopley, J.: You go so far as to say that you can prove that he would not allow any tenant in at all.]

Mr. Searle said that was the position they took up, and he submitted they were entitled to put that case before the jury.

Mr. Schreiner said they must take the lease as it stands, and in it there was an absolute prohibition as to sub-letting without the approval of the landlord being obtained. Their case was that the giving of approval was entirely in the hands of the landlord; and evidence which would go to vary the lease or evidence as to the respectability of the persons proposed as tenants could not be called.

Mr. Searle said that the clause about the partitions showed that it was contemplated that the premises should be sub-let. The evidence as to respectability of the persons was only intended to show that the defendant would not allow sub-letting at all.

Mr. Schreiner said that Mr. Seale took up the position that there were occasions when the windows were left open, and when the police had to come late at night and see the property, and in January, 1901, he took up the position that he was not going to allow any more sub-letting.

After hearing counsel, Mr. Justice Hopley said it might be better to reserve the legal point as to absolute prohibition of sub-letting without the approval of the lessor for the decision of the full Court, and go on now with the proof of the damages. There would be some way of bringing the legal point before the Court.

William Thompson said he was a commission agent in Cape Town, and had carried on that business for about nine years. In 1898 the premises now in question were advertised as to let. Witness was then the lessee of the Mercantile Chambers, Myburgh's Buildings, St. George's-street. There he had an office for himself, and let the other four offices. He knew Mr. Seale, who was carrying on business in his present premises, and also in Church-street. Witness received a letter opening negotiations in regard to the lease.

Mr. Schreiner said he would at once raise the objection that this letter was anterior to the lease, and therefore not admissible.

Mr. Searle said the letter had an important bearing on the subject, as it was the letter which opened the negotiations. He asked that it be taken down that he tendered the letter to prove the allegations in paragraph 4 of the declaration.

This was noted.

Witness was proceeding to state the object for which he was leasing the premises, of which Mr. Seale had knowledge, when

Mr. Schreiner objected to this evidence, and the Court held that it was inadmissible.

Examination continued: A lease was entered into, and witness immediately proceeded to put up the partitions. He got possession on December 31, and on January 1 he commenced to put up these partitions, dividing the three floors into thirteen rooms. That cost altogether between £200 and £300. Work was commenced on the first floor at the Adlerley-street end. The partitions were finished towards the end of January. During 1899 and 1900 the offices were occupied. During 1899 the actual amount of rent witness received was £710 10s., and he paid rent £360, and therefore the first year's profit was £350 10s. During January, of course, most of the rooms were unfinished, and therefore unoccupied, and during February and March also some of the rooms, principally on the top story, were vacant. During the latter half of the year, however, all the rooms were occupied, and he had to turn people away. During 1899 and 1900 the rooms on the top floor were used as bedrooms, it having been found that it was difficult to let them as offices. Witness received verbal permission from Mr. Seale to let these rooms as bedrooms. About the end of 1900, however, Mr. Seale objected to the bedrooms, and the tenants were given notice to quit, which they did by January 31, 1901. By that time the premises had become known as offices, and therefore witness had no difficulty in letting these rooms as offices and getting a higher rental than he received for them as bedrooms. The gross rental in 1899 was £732, and the gross profit £428. Up to that time no exception had been taken to the tenants, and anyone was allowed to come in. In January all the rooms were let, and the rental was £69 15s. After January 14 Mr. Seale refused every application until the place gradually became empty. Witness had applications for all the rooms, and could have had them all let during 1901. There was a good demand for offices in 1901. On March 23 witness began to send accounts to Mr. Seale showing the loss witness had sustained by the refusal to accept the tenants. Witness charged Mr. Seale in those accounts with the rent of the rooms vacant. Since January last witness could have let all the rooms to desirable tenants. He did not submit the applications in January and February to Mr. Seale on account of the action pending. The rooms could easily have been filled up. The offices could have been let for higher rentals than the two previous years. He first had negotiations with Mr. Seale in regard to the cancellation of the lease on December 31, 1900. Mr. Seale came to see witness, and mentioned that he was in treaty with the executors of Pickler to purchase the premises, and as he wanted to remove all his business from Church-street, he asked if witness would consent to the cancellation of the lease. Witness said to Mr. Seale that he knew he had taken the rooms with a view to making revenue from them, and he asked Seale to come again after New Year. Mr. Seale came again on January 3, 1901, and witness showed him a statement he had drawn up, showing the rentals he had received, to convince him that he had made between £400 and £500 the previous year out of the lease. The partitions alone had cost witness between £200 and £300, and all that Mr. Seale offered was £300 for the lease, which had two years to run with the option of four years' renewal. Witness said that if he got £1,000 he was willing to cancel the lease at once. Mr. Seale then looked at the top floor, and asked how much witness would let him have it for, as he thought of putting his workmen there. Witness said he would let it for £15 a month, which was less than he was getting for it. Seale wanted it for £10, but witness told him he must make something out of it. Witness subsequently had his offer of £1,000 to cancel the lease, or £15 a month for the hire of the top floor, put in writing. In May, 1901, Mr. Seale bought the premises from Pickler's executors and offered witness £350 to cancel the lease, but witness said that he would not take less than £1,000. On February 25 he saw his attorney (Mr. Tennant), and a letter was written offering to cancel the lease and agreeing to pay the rent up to March 1, but without prejudice to his action for damages for breach of contract. A cheque for the rent was sent on February 28, but the position taken up by defendant's attorney was that the lease was cancelled owing to non-payment of the rent on February 25. Witness had no notice or idea that the de-defendant would take up that position. He understood that the matter of rent would remain in abeyance pending the litigation.

Cross-examined: Witness asked Mr. Berrange to allow the rent for the time being to remain in abeyance. He did not remember Mr. Berrange saying that he could do nothing apart from his client, and that whatever proposition witness had to make must be put in writing. From September to December, 1901, witness only drew £19 a month from the rooms, for which he was paying £30 per month. Witness occupied one office himself. He was still in possession, remaining there to take care of the place. Witness saw Mr. Berrange on January 8, and then said he was going to sue for damages. He did not say he was going to sue for cancellation of the lease. Witness asked if that matter could be arranged pending the action that was to be brought. The impression witness gathered from what Mr. Berrange said was that the rent would be in abeyance until then. Witness remembered something about seeing Mr. Berrange on February 25. Witness was suffering from an attack of influenza at that time and could not remember any particulars in connection with that interview. Witness had threatened to take action in June, 1901, but had waited until the end of the year until the amount of the loss he had sustained through Mr. Seale's action should exceed the £350 offered by the latter. Witness was further cross-examined in regard to complaints which Mr. Seale had made.

Re-examined: Throughout the whole of his tenancy witness had made every effort to take care of the premises and secure proper tenants. Every objection Mr. Seale made was attended to at once. With regard to a window in the front door having been broken when witness discovered that he had it at once repaired. The window had been broken by one of the tenants, Miss Bell, who had forgotten her key and foolishly broke the window to get at the catch-lock. Witness put in plate-glass instead of common glass so that the property was actually improved to that extent. In a letter of January 8, 1901, there was a reference to windows left open. That was after Mr. Seale had had the conversation with witness about the cancellation of the lease. All the complaints culminated in January, 1901. There was no connecting door between the premises witness leased and those occupied by Mr. Seale. In 1899 and 1900 witness had silk goods, etc., of the average value of £1,000 in his office.

By the Court: Mr. Seale occupied the premises on the ground floor where he entered into the lease.

William Lambert Kidney said he was a broker and general commission agent, and was well acquainted with the letting value of chambers in Cape Town. The prices fixed by plaintiff for the chambers could be got now as well as last year. The premises were good, and the rents were reasonable.

Cross-examined. He did not think £7 10s a month was too much for a room on the third floor. It was a good room and the stairs were easy to go up. Adderley-street chambers would always be sought after.

Harry Lambart deposed that he was one of the applicants for one of these chambers on January 24, 1901. He applied to Mr. Thompson in answer to an advertisement. Witness was managing a manicure and chiropody business. He was willing to lease a room on the top floor for £7 10s. Mr. Thompson gave witness a letter to Mr. Seale. Witness saw the latter, who said on learning witness's business that he would stop Mr. Thompson's little game. Witness asked Mr. Seale if he could let him know then, and Mr. Seale told witness to come back at two o'clock, and he would let him know, as he was going to see his solicitor. He then started to enter into some particulars regarding a personal quarrel he had with Mr. Thompson, but witness informed him that he was a perfect stranger to both, and had nothing to do with their private affairs, and simply wanted the office. At two o'clock witness went back to Mr. Seale, and the latter told him he could not have the office. Witness asked Mr. Seale if he had any objection to the respectability of the business, and Mr. Seale said "No." Witness now had an office in the Board of Executors' Buildings.

John William Wood deposed to applying for two of the rooms from Mr. Thompson, viz., one room at £15 a month and another at £5 a month. He wanted the rooms for twelve months certain. His offer was not accepted. He was perfectly surprised when he was declined as a tenant.

William Cowling, late of the firm of Skead and Cowling, Percy M. Rosemont, optician, and Henry Horace Knox, architect, also gave evidence to the effect that they applied for some of the chambers in question, and were refused.

George Hankinson gave evidence as to the value of the partitions erected for plaintiff.

Alfred King Hiller said he was a builder, living in Cape Town, and hired one of the rooms on the third floor in 1899 for nearly a year. He occupied it as a bedroom, and during the time he was there he never saw anything objectionable in the way the place was conducted.

After reading the evidence of a witness who had wished to hire one of the rooms, taken on commission, Mr. Seale closed his case.

Mr. Schreiner called

Daniel F. Berrange, defendant's attorney, who said that on January 8 Mr. Thompson came to him and said that he had just called next door on Mr. Tenant, but found he had gone to Colesberg, and would not return until the 23rd. He said he would like to know if there would be time to bring his action next term against Mr. Seale. Witness asked him what action, and he said, "For the cancellation of the lease and for damages." Witness said, "I have you asked Mr. Seale whether he would refuse to cancel the lease?" Thompson said "No," and witness said that it might be done just for the sake of asking. Witness gave Thompson no ground for inferring that the rent for December, then unpaid, nor the rent for January, was to remain in abeyance. That was never mooted. If it was witness would have given the same reply as he gave in February, when Thompson came again. Witness's affidavit made in the previous application was absolutely correct.

Cross-examination: Witness was positive that on January 8 nothing was said about the rent remaining in abeyance. Witness would impute no bad motives to Mr. Thompson whatever.

Mr. Schreiner closed his case, saying that there was no use in calling Mr.

Seale, as he could not give any evidence as to the damages.

Counsel then addressed the jury on the facts of the case.

Hopley, J., in directing the jury, said that his opinion in regard to the sixth clause of the lease was that, where a lessee allowed such a clause to stand against him, and put himself at the landlord's mercy for any such sub-lessee as he tried to get, unless there was mala fides, malice, or such entire bad faith as to cause the Court to interfere, it seemed to him that the Court was bound by the wording of the lease, and that the lessor might without any explanation refuse to approve of any sub-tenancy. If he (Mr. Justice Hopley) were right in his contention, then Mr. Thompson had suffered no damage at all, and if the jury took the same view they must bring in a verdict of no damages. But supposing the jury were not inclined to be so directed, they could find damages and the legal point could come before the full Court, which would perhaps be a useful thing to do, because although he felt so in the matter, he had not had time to consult authorities or to think over this case, and he might be wrong, in which event it might be possible that the full Court would not support him in his first impression. The jury might find damages if they liked, and if so, they must be careful in assessing the damages. After referring briefly to the evidence as to the damages, his lordship said that the jury might consider that there was another element which should enter into their minds beyond the question as to whether the premises could have been let for the whole period or not, and that was whether the plaintiff had behaved in a reasonable way. Did the jury think that Thompson should have come to the Court in order to have the contract construed when the first tenant was rejected? If the matter had come before the Court on that point the whole case would have been decided. It was for the jury to consider whether Thompson acted as a man reasonably should in sitting down writing letters. After all, what was Seale to do? He could not come before the Court and ask for a declaration of rights, because he was being threatened with an action for damages. The question was whether a man who had been damnified should not have come to the Court, and the matter which the jury had to decide was whether Thompson should have allowed the damages to go on accumulating, or should have come to the Court at once. What damages did the jury think should be awarded to Thompson if he should have the legal right, and was entitled to say he had been improperly kept out of possession of these premises? That was a question for them to consider. His lordship then dealt with the claim in reconvention for the cancellation of the lease, and after reviewing the evidence on that point said that if the jury found that the conduct of Mr. Seale was such as to mislead Thompson in regard to the rent being left in abeyance, then they would find that Seale did as a matter of fact for the time being waive his right to cancellation, and it was not possible for him to go back on that, and put on the final screw, and say, "Out you go, because you did not pay in time." If they found that, and also that there was an absence of notice on the part of the lessor, such as to disentitle him to judgment, they would find that the lease had not been cancelled.

The jury retired, and after an absence of twenty minutes, returned with the following verdict: "On the claim in convention, if Seale acted legally, there were no damages, and if he acted illegally in prohibiting sub-tenants from taking possession, we find that the amount of damages due to Thompson is £400. On the claim in reconvention, we consider that the lease should not be cancelled, and that Thompson is still legally in occupation of the premises."

After hearing counsel,

His Lordship said: His opinion being that Seale had acted legally in regard to withholding approval of sub-letting, he would enter judgment for the defendant in the claim in convention, and for the plaintiff (defendant in reconvention) in the claim in reconvention. The plaintiff in convention could bring the matter before the full Court, by way of motion, under rule 35, if he wished to do so. As to costs, His Lordship said that as both parties were in fault, each would have to pay his own costs.

BENNETT V. SHAW. { 1902.
{ May. 30th.

Hotel-keeper—Traveller.

A hotel-keeper, who has let a room to a traveller, is not justified in turning him off the premises without lawful cause.

This was an action by Jacob Bennett against George Hamilton Shaw, for delivery of certain articles of stock and clothing, which it was alleged defendant had illegally detained, and also for damages for having been thrust out from the defendant's hotel, and for the profit which might have been made from the stock detained, and for having had to buy certain articles of clothing on account of the personal clothing of the plaintiff being detained. Plaintiff was a trader and a general dealer, carrying on business at Cape Town and elsewhere, and defendant was a hotel-keeper at Victoria West. It was alleged in the declaration that on the 9th March plaintiff made arrangements with the defendant to obtain accommodation for a week at his hotel. Plaintiff conveyed goods to the value of £112 to his room at the hotel, but on the night of the 11th March, the defendant, in breach of his duties, under Act 28 of 1883, and in breach of contract, removed the goods from the room, and denied plaintiff access thereto, and threatened him with personal violence if he did not leave the hotel. Plaintiff had to sleep on a bench at the railway-station that night. He had been deprived of his means of livelihood, owing to the detention of the stock. He claimed £150 as damages, and the delivery of the stock and effects, or payment of their value, £112. In his plea, defendant said that plaintiff unlawfully, and without consent, placed his goods and chattels in a room in the hotel. He (defendant) removed them from the room, and contended that he was justified in so doing, the room having been lawfully let to a third person, as the plaintiff well knew. He denied that he had agreed to let the room for a week. He had always been ready and willing to deliver the plaintiff's goods.

Mr. Buchanan for the plaintiff, Mr. Benjamin for the defendant.

Mr. Buchanan called

Jacob Bennett, the plaintiff, who said he carried on business as a trader in curios, feathers, etc., up-country. In February last witness went to the defendant's hotel and occupied room No. 4. Witness on that occasion made arrangements with the defendant's manageress (Mrs. Berry) and the defendant to take the room for a week at £3 10s. a week. There was no other hotel or boarding-house in the place. Witness went to Deelfontein, and on Sunday, March 9, at 12.30 a.m., he returned to Victoria West. He went to the hotel and took his personal baggage with him. Witness saw Mrs. Berry, who said he could have room No. 4. Witness went to that room. A gentleman named Pearson—a military captain—was in the room, which contained two beds. Witness asked Captain Pearson whether he had any objection to witness sharing the room with him, and he replied that he had not. Witness saw defendant in the morning, and told him he had come back to the hotel for a week. He tried to get defendant to give him a cheque for cash in order that he could post to Port Elizabeth. Witness had his meals in the house, and obtained the cheque from defendant on the Monday, giving defendant cash for the amount of the cheque (£30). Captain Pearson left on Monday morning. Witness slept there on Monday night, and on Tuesday afternoon, after having gone into the village, he returned and found that some of his goods had been placed outside the room. He put them back into the room. At about nine o'clock witness found Shaw in front of the door of his (witness's) room. Witness's goods were all outside the door. Shaw told him he could not go into the room as it had been commandeered by the Commandant. Witness went to see the Commandant, and on returning to the hotel he told defendant that the Commandant said he had not engaged the room. The Rev. Father Glynn was then in the room. Defendant refused witness access to the room, and said that if he did not go he would get his Kafirs to turn him out. Defendant appeared to be excited, and seemed to have had a drink or two. It was a wet night. Witness got permission from an officer to sleep on a bench at the railway-station. He borrowed a blanket from a soldier. Next day witness got a permit to come to Cape Town, as he knew that if he stayed he could not get any room in which to sleep. Witness's attorney had written to defendant asking for the delivery of the goods, and defendant had replied stating that he had tendered personal delivery at the time to witness, and had had the goods stored at his cost. The value of the goods was £116 8s.

Cross-examined by Mr. Benjamin:

On the morning of the 9th defendant did not tell witness that a Captain Pearson was occupying the room, and that the witness must give it up. There was never any such conversation. On the evening of the 9th witness did not occupy the room unknown to defendant. Shaw said witness could have the room for a week. Witness did not refuse to take possession of the goods. Defendant refused to give him possession. He refused to give witness his overcoat. Mr. Shaw was not sober at the time. During the week that witness was at the hotel previously witness had not seen Shaw in liquor.

Re-examined: The Commandant, Captain Wedgwood, told witness that he had not commandeered the room, and that witness was justified in retaining it. Witness told that to Shaw.

Mr. Benjamin called

George Hamilton Shaw, the defendant, who said he reserved four rooms in the hotel for visitors. The room in which plaintiff slept was 12 feet by 8 feet. Witness put two beds in the room for use when there was a crush in the hotel. Witness first saw plaintiff on the Monday morning—the 10th, and told him the room had been engaged for Captain Pearson, who wanted it for himself. Witness said that he (plaintiff) could not use the room. Nothing was said by plaintiff about engaging the room for a week. He slept in the room that night without witness's knowledge. Captain Pearson also occupied the room that night. Witness received a telegram from Father Glynn on the Tuesday afternoon, and told plaintiff that he must leave as Father Glynn wanted the room. He asked plaintiff to leave without any bother. Father Glynn was a military chaplain, and witness had had a letter from the Commandant warning him that preference must be given to military people in the matter of accommodation, and that if necessary the hotel accommodation must be reserved entirely for military lodgers. On the Tuesday afternoon witness found Bennett's things in the room, and told a servant to take them out. That evening plaintiff said he would refuse to take possession of the goods. Witness at no time refused to give the goods up. Bennett used to sell goods in his room. Bennett did not tender to pay his account. He told witness nothing about having seen the Commandant.

Cross-examined by Mr. Buchanan: Plaintiff did not say he wanted the room for a week. The witness generally denied the allegations of the plaintiff as to what occurred on the Tuesday.

The Rev. Father Glynn was called, and said that he heard plaintiff refuse to take his goods. Witness's impression was that Shaw wished Bennett to take the goods. The room was a small one, and in witness's opinion there was not room for two. Shaw said that he had told plaintiff to go on the previous day.

Edward W. A. Young, postmaster at Victoria West, said that on the night of the 11th March, plaintiff told him that he had been turned out of the hotel, and had refused to take his goods, which had been placed in the passage. He said he was going to Cape Town, and would make Shaw pay for it.

Corroborative evidence was given by a clerk at the Post-office.

Mr. Buchanan (for plaintiff): This is an action to recover damages for the illegal retention of goods, and for unjustifiable extrusion from a hotel. Defendant admits that he was a hotel keeper, and as such he was bound to supply accommodation both by Common Law, and also by section 67 of Act 28 or 1833. Defendant admitted that he had 4 rooms.

[De Villiers, C.J.: How many rooms is he obliged to have by the terms of his licence?]

I do not know, but he admits that he has 4, but says that he reserves them for military travellers. A hotel keeper is bound to provide reasonable accommodation. Plaintiff (with the manager's consent) occupied a room in common with the Rev. Father Glynn on the Sunday night, and twice thereafter. On the morning following the last of these occasions defendant said to plaintiff: "What, are you back again?" and asked for a cheque. Defendant had confirmed the letting of the room, and he must have known that plaintiff was there. I submit that the contract of letting and hiring has been fully proved. Defendant says that he tendered delivery to plaintiff of his goods, and that plaintiff refused to accept: that is a most improbable story. What is certain is that defendant thrust out his lodger at a time when he could not get other accommodation. Even if the Court should hold that the £150 claimed are excessive damages, I submit that the plaintiff is entitled to substantial damages of some kind.

Mr. Benjamin: Burge (Vol. 3, 695 (who refers to Bell's Commentaries) is against the contention of plaintiff's counsel. As to whether the defendant ever really accepted plaintiff as a lodger, there is considerable conflict of evidence, but apart from this there is really nothing to support the plaintiff's contention that the hotel-keeper is bound to provide accommodation for all comers, even though he may have to put two or more travellers in the same room in order to do so. As to the goods, we tendered delivery, but the plaintiff refused to accept them. I submit that on the pleadings the defendant is entitled to judgment.

De Villiers, C.J.: If the only question in this case were relative to the delivery of the goods I doubt if the Court would have given judgment in favour of the plaintiff, because I think that the weight of the evidence shows that there was a willingness on the part of the defendant to deliver up the luggage belonging to the plaintiff at the time when he left the premises. The important question in this case is whether there has been any breach of contract on the part of the defendant in turning plaintiff out of the premises as he did on the occasion in question. Now, on this point plaintiff has given his evidence, and he has stated that on his arrival at the defendant's hotel he saw Mrs. Berry, the manageress of the premises, and asked for a room, and that she showed him to No. 4 room. On his arrival at No. 4 room he found it already occupied by Captain Pearson, but there was another bed, and, with the consent of Captain Pearson, he occupied the other bed, and slept in that bed for two nights. He goes further, and says that on the following morning he saw the defendant himself. The defendant then said: "Hullo! are you here?" and the plaintiff replied: "Yes, I have come here for a week." Plaintiff says he clearly understood that the engagement was for a week. But the evidence given on this point is denied, and I prefer to give my judgment on the undisputed facts in the case. Mrs. Berry has not been called to deny the statement that she showed the plaintiff into the room. The case is, therefore, one of a traveller coming to an hotel, engaging a room, and being shown into a room. In my opinion, whatever the civil law may be in regard to the liability of the hotel-keeper who refuses to give any room at all, that law is not applicable to the present case, because the plaintiff had engaged a room, and, in my opinion, he was entitled to remain in that hotel so long as he behaved himself, and so long as there were no reasons of necessity why he should be turned out of the premises. The plaintiff alleges that the defendant is an hotelkeeper, and this allegation is not denied by the defendant. We may take it, therefore, that he is an innkeeper or an hotelkeeper, and I am of opinion that by our law if once a traveller engages a room the hotelkeeper is not justified in turning him out of the premises without lawful cause. Mr. Benjamin has referred to a passage in Burge. Unfortunately, neither counsel has gone into this question of the civil law, but I am not at all prepared to accept the statement of Burge as a correct statement of the civil law. He refers, amongst others, to Bell's Commentaries, but see Digest (47, 5, 1), and Van Leeuwen (4, 2, 10, and 4, 39, 3). This authority is sufficient to me not to accept the statement of Burge as an accurate statement of the civil law without further consideration. I say, therefore, nothing about the law as to the right of an innkeeper to accept or reject a traveller, but I say this: If once he accepts a traveller he has no right to eject that traveller, who had engaged a room, without sufficient reasons. I am of opinion that in this case there was not sufficient reason. The defendant had had a communication from Father Glynn, and he thereupon told the plaintiff that he must leave his room. There were two beds in the room, and no attempt was made by the defendant to ask Father Glynn if he objected to the plaintiff sleeping in the same room. Father Glynn candidly says that although he objects, as most people do object, to having another traveller, particularly a stranger, in the same room, still under the circumstances of this case he would not have objected if his permission had been asked, knowing that this gentleman had been there before him and had occupied the room. But defendant did not ask the permission of Father Glynn, and I am therefore unable to hold that there was necessity in obliging the defendant to tell the plaintiff, whom he had received as a traveller, to leave his premises. There has therefore, in my opinion, been a breach of contract, and under the circumstances we are of opinion that damages to the amount of £10 should be given in favour of the plaintiff. The £10 will, of course, only include the personal annoyance and personal breach of contract. In regard to the goods I do not think plaintiff can claim for detention, because I am of opinion that he could have had the goods at the time. I think that he is bound to receive the goods at Victoria West. Judgment will, therefore, be that the defendant deliver the plaintiff's goods at Victoria West Station, and that he pay the plaintiff £10 damages with costs.

Buchanan, J., concurred.

REHABILITATIONS.Ex parte MERCER.

Mr. Buchanan, on behalf of the insolvent, moved for his rehabilitation.

Rehabilitation granted as prayed.

Ex parte DE KLERK.

Mr. Uppington, on behalf of insolvent, moved for his rehabilitation, Mr. C. de Villiers opposing on behalf of the trustee and principal creditors.

Mr. Uppington stated that the estate was surrendered at Queen's Town on February 5, 1897. The liabilities, according to the schedules, were £238 19s. 11d. and the assets £74 9s., including outstanding debts amounting to £3, there being a deficiency of £214. Two creditors proved against the estate, their total claims being £162 8s. 7d.; there were no preferent creditors. A dividend of 1s. 4d. in £ was paid, the accounts being confirmed on December 30, 1896.

Mr. De Villiers opposed the application, on the ground that in the winding-up of the estate the insolvent rendered no assistance, and gave no information, so that the estate could not recover from his father, who was a debtor.

In an affidavit insolvent attributed his bankruptcy to assisting his father with funds from time to time, which the latter was unable to repay; also to the failure of his crops, and loss on sale of live-stock. His father owed him about £200, and this insolvent considered a bad debt.

The application for rehabilitation was refused with costs, but leave was given to apply again within three months.

other photographs and all copies should be returned to him. The respondents were said to be away on active service. The attorneys who acted for defendants when the case was originally before the Court had not at first refused to accept service in the present matter, but subsequently they had written, stating that they refused to have anything further to do with the case.

The Court granted an order calling on the respondents to show cause by August 1 why they should not be compelled to return the photographs to the applicant.

KANNEMEYER V. HAVINGA AND OTHERS.

Mr. Searle, K.C., moved that the award of the arbitrator in this case be made a rule of Court.

Re ESTATE LATE HARDING. } 1902. May 31st.

The petition stated that it had become necessary to liquidate the said estate, and to sell the landed property therein. That the said sale was duly advertised. That the said property had been sold at a public auction to two of the petitioners in their individual capacity at the highest terms offered, and that the heirs of the late Stephen Harding (all being Majors) were satisfied with the prices obtained. Hoogendoorn, and the executor testamentary of the estate of his mother, the late Alida Hoogendoorn. That the above-named property, part of the said estate, had been purchased by petitioner for £2,300. All the major heirs of the late W. T. Hoogendoorn and of Alida Hoogendoorn, had consented to this sale at the price aforesaid. There were, however, three minors interested—children of Willem Joshua Johannes Hoogendoorn, the petitioner's brother. That it would be for the benefit of the estate to sanction the sale to the petitioner.

The Master recommended that the sale should be confirmed.

The Court, on the motion of Mr. Russell, granted an order as prayed.

Re ESTATE OF LATE DE } 1902. WITT. } May 31st.

Mortgage bond—Cancellation.

This was an application for the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond. The petition showed that the said bond had been passed by De Wit to one Willem du Plooy for £375 in part settlement of the purchase price of the farm Springfontein, within the division of Beaufort West, C.C. That thereafter one Vincent Rice, on behalf of the said Du Plooy, ceded and transferred the said bond to James Christie, of Beaufort West. That the said James Christie endorsed notice of various payments on account of the capital and interest of the said bond on the cover thereof, and on January 7, 1862, endorsed a receipt in full for the same, and thereafter the said bond was returned to the said Michiel for de Wit by the petitioner. M. J. de Wit, however, neglected to have the said bond cancelled in the Deeds Registry of the Colony. Petitioners have disposed of the said property, and wish to effect transfer to the purchasers; but are unable to do so, owing to the said bond remaining uncanceled and particularly owing to the fact that there is no proof of the qualifications of the said V. Rice to effect transfer and cession of the said bond on behalf of the said Du Plooy. The said Rice appears to have acted from Records in the Deeds Office, as agent of the said Du Plooy, but the petitioners are unable to trace the power under which he acted in effecting the said cession. Owing to the lapse of time, all parties whose names appear in connection with the transaction are now dead.

Wherefore the petitioners pray for an order authorising the Registrar of Deeds to cancel the said bond.

On the motion of Mr. Bisset the Court granted a rule nisi, calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on June 12, 1902, why the bond aforesaid should not be cancelled. The Rule to be published once in the "Beaufort West Courier."

Mortgage bond—Cancellation—
Trustees of insolvent mortgagee.

This was an application for the cancellation of a certain mortgage bond.

The applicant was one Abraham Phireas Velenski, whose petition showed that on or about December 13, 1883, he had passed a bond in favour of Herbert Wilman and Johan George Leeb, in their capacity as trustees of the Western Province Administration and Trust Company, Ltd., for £225 upon mortgage of a certain Lot C with the buildings thereon situated at Beaufort West. That the said sum of £225 has now been paid, and that the bond was returned to the petitioner, but, by an oversight, no consent to cancellation was endorsed thereon, nor were any steps taken to have the same cancelled at the date of repayment. The said Trust Company went into liquidation in or about 1893, and is no longer in existence. That the trustees of the said company at the time of liquidation were Pieter Gerhard Wege and Johan Carl Smith. These trustees now state that as the company no longer exists, and as they are no longer in possession of the books and papers thereof, they are not in a position to perform any duties in connection with the same. Petitioner has sold the said property, and the purchaser is pressing him to give transfer. He therefore prays for an order directing the Registrar of Deeds to cancel the said mortgage bond.

On the motion of Mr. Bisset, the Court granted a rule nisi calling upon all persons concerned to show cause on June 12, 1902, why the bond in question should not be cancelled.

Postea, June 19, on the motion of Mr. Bisset, the petition was amended by the substitution of Peter George Leeb for Johan George Leeb, and the rule was made absolute.

The day after her arrival in Table Bay the plaintiff, as master, gave notice to the defendant, as charterer, that he was ready to unload, and thereupon the defendant ordered the master to proceed to a suitable berth in the only dock in Cape Town. Owing to the crowded state of the shipping there was considerable delay in obtaining a berth.

Held, in an action for demurrage that the charter party should be construed as if the Alfred Dock had been named therein as the place of discharge, and that the lay days commenced on the day the vessel was berthed.

This was an action brought by Oluf Ellefsen, master of the Norwegian ship Sterling, against Hendrik Rudolph Stephan, carrying on business under the style or firm of Stephan Brothers, for the recovery of the sum of £1,069 15s., as demurrage payable under a charter party.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is Oluf Ellefsen, master of the Norwegian barque Sterling, and sues on behalf of the owners thereof. The defendant is Hendrik Rudolph Stephan, trading in Cape Town under the style or firm of Stephan Brothers.

2. On or about August 12, 1901, one Fred. H. Howe, of Newport, Monmouthshire, Wales, acting as agent for defendant, chartered the said ship Sterling to convey a cargo of coal from Newport aforesaid to Cape Town; the said cargo was consigned to the defendant, and the terms and exceptions contained in the charter party, which was dated August 12, 1901, are incorporated in the bill of lading held by the defendant, who is bound by all the obligations of the said charter party.

3. Under the terms of the said charter party, it was provided that the vessel should proceed to Cape Town, and there discharge alongside any craft, store, wharf, pier, arsenal, steamer, or depot ship, or elsewhere, as ordered, and it further provided that the cargo was to be discharged, weather permitting, at the rate of not less than 100 tons of coal per working day, from the time of the vessel being ready to unload and reported at the Custom House abroad; and that if the said vessel was not discharged within the time stipulated, the charterers should be at liberty to detain her any days on demurrage, over and above the said lay days or time, at 4d. per register ton per day.

4. The said vessel arrived at her destination on or about December 4, 1901, and on that day the plaintiff gave written notice to defendant that he was ready to unload the cargo, and that the lay days would commence from that day; the said vessel was reported at the Custom House on arrival, and the notice was a legal notice, in terms of the said charter party.

5. In accordance with the said notice, the lay days expired on December 31, 1901; the defendant not having discharged the cargo of the said vessel or any portion thereof during the period between December 4 and December 31, thereafter demurrage at the rate specified in the charter party commenced to run against the defendant, who was from time to time supplied with a detailed account thereof.

6. The amount of the said demurrage up to the date of summons in this suit is the sum of £1,069 15s., but although the said sum has been demanded from the defendant, he has refused to pay the same or any portion thereof.

The plaintiff claims: (a) The sum of £1,069 15s., with interest a tempore morae; (b) alternative relief; (c) costs of suit.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits the allegations in paragraphs 1 and 2 of the declaration.

2. As to paragraph 3 of the declaration, the defendant begs for greater certainty to refer to the charter party when produced, and says that in reply to a notice received on December 4, 1901, in writing, he ordered the plaintiff to proceed to the Alfred Docks, Cape Town, to a suitable berth there, where the defendant would receive the cargo.

3. According to the charter party, the defendant was entitled to order the plaintiff to discharge at a berth in the Alfred Dock, which is a dock in the port of Cape Town, having the necessary piers and wharves at which the discharge of the said cargo could be properly effected.

4. Until the said vessel was in its berth in the said Alfred Dock, the lay days and the time stipulated according to the charter party did not commence to run.

5. Owing to the congested condition of the shipping in the port of Cape Town, and to circumstances over which the defendant had no control, and despite all efforts on his part to secure for the said vessel earlier admission to the berth, she was not admitted to the berth till the 22nd day of February, on which date, and not before, lay days commenced to run, according to the charter party, and the plaintiff was ready to unload.

6. In the meantime, without abandoning his right to insist on discharge in the said Alfred Docks, the defendant made all reasonable efforts to aid the plaintiff in obtaining discharge of, at any rate, a portion of the cargo by lighters while lying at anchor in Table Bay.

7. The defendant admits that the plaintiff has from time to time claimed demurrage in detail, as alleged in the declaration, and admits that he has refused to recognise such claims or to pay any portion of the amount demanded, and says that his refusal is justified according to the charter party, under which no demurrage is payable by reason that the vessel was discharged before the expiration of the lay days and time therein stipulated.

8. The defendant also admits that the said vessel was reported at the Customs-house on arrival.

9. Save as aforesaid, the defendant denies all allegations in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of the declaration.

Wherefore he prays that the plaintiff's claim be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff's replication was as follows:

1. He admits paragraph 2.

2. With regard to paragraphs 3 and 4, he admits that the defendant under the said charter party had a right to order him to discharge the cargo alongside any craft, store, wharf, pier, arsenal, steamer, depot ship, or elsewhere where the vessel could discharge always afloat, and that the Alfred Dock is a place within the meaning of the above, if and when access thereto can be obtained, but he contends that the lay days commenced as soon as the vessel was ready to unload in Table Bay, and had been reported at the Customs.

3. He admits paragraph 5, save that he denies that the lay days did not commence to run till February 22, and that plaintiff was on that date, and not before, ready to unload.

4. He admits paragraph 6, and says that it was possible by reasonable efforts for the defendant to have obtained lighters wherewith to discharge the cargo, and, further, that the defendant had vessels of his own by means of which the discharge could have been effected in the Bay.

5. Save as above, he denies all the allegations in the plea, except in so far as the plea admits any of the allegations in the declaration.

The charter party mentioned in the pleadings, after dealing with the manner of loading at Newport, proceeded as follows: "And being so loaded, the vessel shall therewith proceed to Cape Town, and there discharge the cargo alongside any craft, store, wharf, pier, arsenal, steamer, or depot ship, or elsewhere, as ordered, where the vessel can always discharge afloat. . . . Cargo to be discharged, weather permitting, at the rate of not less than 100 tons of coal per working day at —, from the time of her being ready to unload, and reported at Customs-house abroad. And if not discharged within the time herein stipulated, the charterers shall be at liberty to detain the ship any days on demurrage, over and above the said laying days or time, at fourpence per register ton per day."

Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), for plaintiff; Mr. Sobreiner, K.C. (with him Sir H. Juta, K.C.), for defendant.

Mr. Searle, K.C., in regard to the question whether, in terms of the charter party, the lay days commenced when the ship had given the notice mentioned to the Customs-house and while she was still in the Bay, or whether the lay days began only after the ship had been berthed as contended by the defendant: —

The Chief Justice said that it appeared from the pleadings that the only question was one as to the construction of the charter party. He asked if there was any evidence as to questions of fact.

Mr. Searle said that although not pleaded definitely, he took it that, if admitted, evidence might be brought to show that it was impossible to discharge this vessel by lighters, and the only evidence he had to put before the Court was to prove that it would have been possible to discharge the ship in the Bay by lighters. He did not know whether there was any dispute as to the figures or as to the lay days, if the plaintiff's contention were correct, commencing to run on December 4 and expiring on December 31, thus allowing twenty-one working days and a few days for Sundays and other times, when, through weather, etc., they could not work.

Mr. Schreiner said there was no dispute as to the number of lay days and the figures. He would certainly have taken exception to the declaration if the charter party had been annexed to it at first. As it was, they pleaded construction of the charter party, and pointed out that it was the main issue in the case, and only added that they had done all they reasonably could do on their part, apart from their legal rights.

The Chief Justice said the better course would be to hear the argument on this legal question, and then they might possibly find it unnecessary to hear evidence.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for plaintiff): We base our contention on the construction of the charter party. The whole question at issue turns on the construction of this document. My contention is that under this charter party the consignees were bound to discharge the vessel within 20 days after her arrival was reported at the Custom House of this port. If a charter party says that so many tons are to be discharged a day, that amounts to the same thing as if it were agreed that the ship should be discharged in so many days. This charter party is not in a very usual form. A condition usually expressed is that if the ship is not discharged within so many days, demurrage shall run; but in this case defendants say they were not bound to discharge within a given number of days. But see Hick v. Tweedie (63, L.T.N.S., 765), particularly the judgment of Charles, L. J. To be sure that was a case of loading and not of discharging, but the principle is the same. The condition: "The ship being ready to discharge," means that the ship is in, not that the Dock people are prepared to give facilities for discharge. In Nelson v. Dane (12 Ch. D. 568) one month was considered an unreasonable time for a ship to await discharge. In this case the ship was detained 2½ months. No doubt that where the clause "as ordered is inserted in a charter party, much more latitude is allowed. See Tharsis Sulphar Co. v. Morell (Q.B., 1891, V. 2, 647). The option of the charterer amounts to this, that he must chose a berth for the ship which will be vacant within a reasonable time. See the judgment of Bowen, L.J., in the above case. He thought one month an unreasonable delay, but now we are claiming from January 1 up to the date of summons.

[De Villiers, C.J.: But here there is only one dock.]

Nelson v. Dahl covers such a case. See the judgment of Esher, M.R. I admit that this case is not precisely on all fours with that, but here the charterer took a risk, and said that if he did not discharge within 20 days he would be liable for demurrage.

[De Villiers, C.J.: Was not the ship bound to wait until a suitable berth was pointed out?]

No, see Tapscott v. Balfour (8, L. Rep., C.P., 46). There the lay days did not commence till the vessel was in dock; but the charter party was not in the same terms as in this case. See also Bullman and Brother v. Fenwick (1, Q.B., 1894, 179), where at p. 183 the case of the Tharsis Co. was quoted Nelson v. Dahl (C., Apl. 12, Ch. D., 568, and H.L., 6 Ap., 38). See particularly the judgment of Brett, L.J. (12, Ch. D. 582.)

[De Villiers, C.J.: In that case what guide had the Court as to their rule of law?]

I am not prepared to say.

[De Villiers, C.J.: In deciding what is reasonable, must not the Court be guided by the circumstances of the case?]

Yes, but if the Charter party allows discharge by lighter, why should not the captain have a right to insist upon that mode of discharge?

[De Villiers, C.J.: But what is to guide us here, the state of the weather of the Docks, or what?]

They certainly could not put us at a quay, where they knew that we should not be able to discharge for months.

[At the request of the Court, Mr. Searle read the report of Nelson v. Dahl (12 Ch. D., 568), and again called attention to the judgment of Brett, L.J.]

[Maasdorp, J.: Do you say that the ship was ready to unload while she was lying in the Bay?]

Yes, she was ready to unload whenever she came to anchor, and the question of reasonable time only comes in from that moment. No doubt the vessel was discharged within 21 days after she came into dock. We do not say that defendants were guilty of any want of diligence in berthing the vessel in dock, but we do say that she ought never to have been brought into dock at all. See Scrutton on Charter Parties (Art 131, p. 242, of 4th Edition; also Art 31.) In this case no exceptions are made in the Charter Party.

[De Villiers, C.J.: An option must be exercised reasonably. Suppose there is only one dock at a port, and that dock overcrowded?]

There are other ways of discharging, viz., by lighter in the Bay, and these are usual at this port. McAloney v. Spilhaus (xi., Sheil 509; Jaques v. Wilson (7, Times L. Rep., 119); Carlton Steamship Co. v. Castle Steamship Co. (App. C., 1898, 496); Agden v. Graham (31, L.J. N.S., 24). Defendants could have got lighters if they had made timely application for them. McAloney v. Spilhaus (judgment of Buchanan, A.C.J.). See also judgment of Tenterden, C.J., in Samuel v. Royal Exchange Co. (8, B. and C., 119). In that case there was so much ice at the Dock gates that the vessel could not get in, and yet the consignee was held responsible.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for defendant): Counsel for the plaintiff has argued as if the words "as ordered" had been struck out of the Charter Party. He assumes that as soon as the ship arrives the consignees are bound to see into the future condition of the Docks, and at once to arrange to take delivery from the ship by lighter, or otherwise. These words, "as ordered," must mean something; and in this case the order was to go into the Docks. The conditions were every whit as hard on the one party as on the other. In McAloney v. Spilhaus, Spilhaus had no power to order the ship to go anywhere. He asked to have discharge by lighters, and then changed his mind, and wanted to have the vessel docked. The Court said he could not do that. If the Dock had been destroyed either by a natural convulsion or by artificial means, of course, we could not have been ordered to go into it.

[De Villiers, C.J.: What is the difference between the cases you put and a case in which the vessel will have to wait three months for her turn?]

The whole question would be whether there was a bona fide exercise of the option or not. If a consignee orders a ship to go into docks, which had been already destroyed, such an exercise of option would be mala fide. The consignee is not bound to find a berth for a vessel for lex non cogit ad impossibilia. In McAloney's case the consignee was not protected by the Charter Party, as he was in this case. Carver on Carriage by Sea (sec. 623 to 627; also 460). In parag. 615 to 618 he discusses Wright v. New Zealand Shipping Co. and Postlewaite v. Freeland (5, Ap. C., 562). Carver gives a fair summary of these cases, and is supported by the Tharsis case. Ashcroft v. Crow-Orchard Co. (9, Q.B., 549), is in effect overruled by the Tharsis case, Fryman v. Dreffus (24, Q.B.D., 152 and 56, L.T.; Rep. N.S., 724), which, in view of the judgment of Huddleston, B., is as strong a case as counsel, for the plaintiff could have referred to. But in this case there was an implied right in the charterer to direct as to whether the discharge should take place at an inner or the outer berth; but, having elected the outer berth, they could not thereafter choose the inner berth. If the Charter Party gives express power to select a place of discharge; that place, once selected, becomes as much a part of the Charter Party as if it were written therein.

[Maasdorp, J.: Suppose the consignee orders discharge at a dock already full?]

Whose interests are to be considered, those of the shipowner or of the consignee? No consignee would stand in his own light. It is for the consignee to exercise his option (if the Charter Party allows him an option), when he gets notice that the ship is ready to be discharged. Counsel for plaintiff has relied upon Dahl v. Nelson, but see Carver's remarks on that case (Sec. 625). In Dahl v. Nelson the decision of the House of Lords was based on the words of the Charter Party, "so near as she can safely get," but our charter has no such words. See also Scrutton's remarks on the words, "so near thereto as she can safely get." Our whole contention is that under this Charter Party we had authority to direct where the ship should be discharged. A consignee may order a ship to go into dock, if the charter party gives him the right to direct the place of discharge; but as soon as he has exercised his option he cannot charge his mind and order her to discharge somewhere else. Murphy v. Coffin and Co. (12, Q.B.D., 87.) In that case Davies v. McVeagh (4 Ex. D., 265) was fully discussed. See Scrutton (p. 83, 3rd Edit.).

[Maasdorp, J.: What if a ship is ordered to go to a certain berth, and consents to go, could it afterwards complain of the length of time taken to discharge?]

The consent to go to such berth would only show the bona fides of the order. See Harris v. Jacobs (15, Q.B.D., 247). The "Felix" (2, Adm. and Eccles, 273). In this case there were two docks, and it was held that after going into the one dock the captain could be ordered to remove to the other dock on the consignee paying the expenses. Carver (p. 51) is said by counsel for plaintiff to strongly disapprove of this decision, but he is so far on my side that he says that if the words "as ordered" had been inserted into the Charter Party, the case would have been different. All I contend for is that the option must be expressed in the charter. The case of the Tharsis proves that, and I do not say with Scrutton (Sec. 39) that an implied option is sufficient to justify the charterer in selecting the place of discharge.

[De Villiers, C.J., cited Carrer, 511 and 512.]

I would like to see Scrutton on these cases. He seems to deal with the question at p. 230. See Sec. 623, and Carver's remarks on Kell v. Anderson (10 M. and W. 498). So here the ship could not say as soon as she arrived in Table Bay that she was ready to discharge. She had to go to the usual place of discharge, and lay days could not commence when she was lying in the open Bay. It has been argued as if the charterer undertook a part of the risk between the arrival of the vessel at the port, and at the ordinary place of discharge, but this is not so. The ship was bound to go into docks and at the date of the charter everybody knew of the crowded condition of the docks. When the ship arrived on December 5, how was the consignee to know whether it would pay him to lighter or not. We were not bound to lighter. This case cannot be argued as if it were on all fours with McAloney v. Spilhaus. It would be absurd to say that the consignee was bound to find lighters and discharge at the rate of 100 tons a day. Where the "har-ter makes use of the terms "craft or doc-pot ship," certainly lighters and discharge thereby were not contemplated. How again is the consignee to judge as to what is a reasonable time?

[Maasdorp, J.: Let us suppose the consignee had to act reasonably. How is the Court to find out whether he acted reasonably?]

It could never be unreasonable to ask a ship to take her proper turn in going into docks. Bowen, L.J., was not contemplating the case of a port being blocked by traffic, but of one blocked by natural causes. See McLachlan on Shipping (55, 4th edition), where several cases are cited. If the Sterling had got into dock she might have begun to count her lay days; but she could not do so while laying out in the Bay. The case of the Carisbrook (15, Prob. 98) was the high water mark in favour of the argument for the plaintiff, but that judgment was very unfavourably criticised by Bowen, L.J., in a subsequent case. The Sterling came in in her turn, and there is no suggestion on the pleadings that she did not then discharge within a reasonable time. If it be contended that the ship was bound to go into dock and discharge 100 tons per diem, the consignee was not bound to provide appliances, etc. Postlewaite v. Freeland (5 Ap., 599). We fully discharged our duty as charterers, and had a right to order the vessel to go into dock. The question is not what would now be a reasonable time for discharge, but what was a reasonable time a year ago. In Rick v. Tweedie (63, L.T., 765) the clause "as ordered" does not occur. In McAloney's case the Court was influenced by the fact that Spilhaus had lighters, though he pleaded unavoidable hindrance in the use of them. That case is not on all fours with this. Discharge by lighter, is by craft hulk, magazine, etc. In McAloney's case Buchanan, A.C.J., said that as to coal cargoes, the customary mode of discharge was by lighter in the Bay, as much as in dock. We were not bound to mention literature in the declaration. According to Scrutton (p. 87, 4th edit.), citing Sandars v. Jenkins (2 Com. cases, p. 12), "ready to unload must be looked at from the point of view of the ship."

[De Villiers, C.J.: If you had been bound to discharge in the docks, you could not have urged that the docks were full.]

Yes, see Scrutton, p. 96, citing Pineham v. Dreyfus (24, Q.B.D., 152, and Carver, sec. 624 (a). As to the wording of the Charter Party, "when the ship is ready to discharge, and is reported to the Customs House abroad." See Carrer, sec. 628. As to the charterer's right to select a berth. See Scrutton, Art 40, as to the readiness to load, that is always referred to the ship. A short delay is an advantage to the consignee, but a long delay would be to our advantage. They do not mind paying £19 a day for a few days rather than pay for litarage, etc., but it is not to their interest to pay at this rate for any length of time.

[De Villiers, C.J.: No question as to reasonable time is raised on the declaration.]

I submit that it was for them to raise that question, and for us to reply in our replication. We say that under this charter party there was an absolute obligation, as in McAloney v. Spilhaus. The bulk of the cases cited do not apply to a charter party such as this. No date from which demurrage is to run is mentioned in such cases. Postea, June 4.

De Villiers, C.J.: This was an action for demurrage under a charter party entered into between the owners of the ship Sterling and the defendant. The cargo consisted of coal, and the shipowner undertook that the vessel should "proceed to Cape Town, and there discharge the cargo alongside any craft, store, wharf, pier, arsenal, steamer, or depot ship, or elsewhere, as ordered, where the vessel can always discharge afloat." It was further provided that the cargo was to be discharged, weather permitting, at the rate of not less than 100 tons of coal per working day from the time of her being ready to unload and reported at Customs House, and that if the vessel was not discharged within the time stipulated, the charterers should be at liberty to detain her any days on demurrage over and above the lay days at 4d. per register ton per day. The vessel arrived in Table Bay on the 4th of December, 1901, and on that day the plaintiff, who is the master, gave written notice to the defendant that he was ready to unload the cargo, and that the lay days would commence from that day, and he reported the vessel at the Customs House. On the 5th of December the defendant, in answer to the notice which he had received, ordered the plaintiff, by notice in writing, to proceed to the Alfred Dock, Cape Town, to a suitable berth, where the defendant would receive the cargo. Owing to the congested condition of shipping in the port of Cape Town, and to circumstances over which the defendant had no control, and despite all efforts on his part to secure for the vessel earlier admission to a berth, she was not admitted to a berth until the 22nd of February, 1902. The plaintiff claims that the lay days began on 4th of December, when he gave the notice to the defendant, and that demurrage commenced to run from the 31st of December, 1901. The defendant, on the other hand, contends that the lay days only commenced on the 22nd of February, 1902, being the day on which the vessel was admitted to a berth, and that, as the cargo was unloaded within the prescribed time, no demurrage is payable. On behalf of the plaintiff reliance is mainly placed on the words, "from the time of her being ready to unload" in the charter party, but these words must be read in connection with the previous clause, which gives the charterers the option of selecting the place of discharge. In the case of Hick v. Trededy (63 L.T.R., 765), a vessel was held to be "ready to receive cargo" when she had arrived in the port of loading, and had given notice of her being so ready, although not moved alongside the quay, but there was no condition in the charter party giving the charterers the right to order her to any particular place of loading, nor was a place specified in the charter party. The English cases seem clearly to establish the proposition that when a particular wharf is named as the place of loading or discharging, the lay days do not begin to run until the ship is ready alongside that wharf. When the place named is a port, the lay days begin when the ship is ready and at the freighter's disposal, within the port, though she may not be at the wharf or dock to which the charterer may have properly required her to go. If, however, the place named is a port, but the charter party expressly authorises the charterer to order the ship to a particular wharf or dock, the wharf or dock so ordered becomes the place of loading or discharge, as though it had been named in the charter party. In the case of Tharsis Sulphur and Copper Company v. Morel (2 Q.B., 647), the vessel was to proceed to the Mersey, and deliver her cargo at any safe berth, as ordered in the dock at Garston. On arrival a berth was ordered, but, owing to the crowded state of the dock, delay occurred, which prevented the vessel being berthed for some time after arrival. On a claim by the shipowners for demurrage arising from the delay, it was held by the Court of Appeal that the obligation of the charterers to unload did not commence till the vessel was berthed. Bowen, L. J., in his judgment, adopted the view that "where the place at which the carrying voyage is to end is not stated in the charter party, but is to be named by the charterer, the selection of a dock has precisely the same effect as if that dock had been originally named in the charter party." He further remarks that the case of the Carisbrook (15 P.D., 98), so far as he could see, was wrongly decided. On reference to that case, it will be seen that it bore a strong resemblance to the present case. By the terms of the charter party the ship was to load a cargo of coals at Glasgow, and therewith proceed to Odessa, or so near thereto as she might safely get, and deliver the same alongside any safe wharf, craft, steamer, depot ship, or arsenal, as ordered by receiver. Then followed the words: "Time for loading and unloading to commence from the time the steamer is ready, and intimation has been given in writing." It was held that the time for discharging commenced from the time when intimation of the ship's readiness to discharge in the port was given, and not from the time of arrival alongside the quay. "The charterers chose," said Butt, J., "to exercise the option given to them by the charter party, and ordered her to a quay which was crowded with vessels, and to which she could not get at the time. The charterers had a perfect right to take this course, but they are liable in consequence to pay demurrage." It is this decision which Bowen, J., considered to be wrong, and if it was wrong, it could not be right in the present case to hold that the defendants are liable because of the words "from the time of her being ready to unload." In the case of Pyman Bros. v. Dreyfus Bros. (24 Q. B.D. 152) the charter party did not expressly entitle the charterer to order the ship to a particular wharf or dock, but he had an implied right to order the vessel from the outer to the inner harbour, where the cargo was. The place of loading chosen by the charterers was a place where she could not load, as it was a part of the port then crowded by other ships, and she had to wait for a considerable time. It was held by a Divisional Court that the lay days were to be computed from the time of the arrival of the vessel in the outer harbour. As it was the case of an implied and not express right of exercising an option, the case is not on all fours with the present case, but if it is consistent with the subsequent case of the Tharsis Company in the Appeal Court, it must be considered as having been overruled by that case. Mr. Searle has cited certain expressions of Bowen, L.J., in the latter case in support of the view that the defendant, in exercising his option, was bound to choose a berth that was free or was likely to be so in a reasonable time. The learned judge could not, however, have meant to say that the mere fact that there has been a delay proves that the choice was an improper one, for in that very case there appears to have been considerable delay. The present action is founded upon the mere fact that there had been a long delay. The defendant then pleads that the delay was caused by the congested state of the Docks, and the plaintiff, by his replication, admits that the delay was occasioned by the congested state of the Docks and by circumstances over which the defendant had no control, but it was not alleged that the condition of the Docks was such as to make his choice unreasonable. The question does not, therefore, really arise on the pleadings whether the defendant has exercised his option in an unreasonable manner. He exercised his option as soon as he was told that the ship was ready, and if it was intended to prove that the choice of a place of unloading was unreasonable, an allegation to that effect ought to have been made. Without now deciding whether proof of such an allegation would have altered the defendant's legal position, I am of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed in the present action, and there will therefore be absolution from the instance with costs.

S.A. BREWERIES V. MAR-
TIENSSEN. { 1902.
 June 4th.

Purchase and Sale—Re-opening settlement.

The defendant sold his brewery premises, goodwill and all property connected therewith, to the plaintiffs, stipulating that the amounts to be paid for stock-in-trade and for outstanding debts were to be reckoned according to the actual value of the stock and to the debts taken over as good by the purchasers. Part of the property sold consisted of two hotels. The defendant had previously disposed of the goodwills of the businesses carried on in these hotels to the tenants, but had not received the whole of the purchase price. The balances due were brought up at the adjustment of accounts between plaintiffs and defendant, but were not taken over as good outstanding debts. A final settlement then took place between the parties. Defendant afterwards recovered from the debtors, and the plaintiffs now claimed the amounts so recovered on the grounds that the goodwills were included in the property sold. The Court, however, refused to re-open the settlement, there not being any fraud or concealment or mistake of fact.

This was an action brought by the South African Breweries (Limited) against Ernst Heinrich Martienssen for declaration of rights and account.

The plaintiff's declaration was as follows:

1. The plaintiff is a company duly registered with limited liability, and carrying on business in this colony, at Cape Town and elsewhere in South Africa, and in manner hereinafter more fully set forth. The plaintiff took over the business theretofore carried on by the defendant as brewer in and in the neighbourhood of Cape Town.

2. On the 1st March, 1899, the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement of sale and purchase in terms of a broker's note, copy whereof is annexed.

3. On the 4th April, 1899, and in completion of the said agreement, the parties entered into a deed of sale, which was executed by the plaintiff.

4. Among the licensed premises and buildings sold by the defendant and purchased by the plaintiff, with all interests, leases, goodwills, etc., as aforesaid, was included the Roma Hotel, situated in Waterkant-street, Cape Town, which was on the 19th May, 1897, let by the defendant by written lease upon terms and conditions not necessary to set forth, but amongst which was the condition that the tenant should pay to the defendant, as landlord, the sum of £700 sterling for the goodwill of the business carried on in the said licensed house.

5. On the 1st March, 1899, and thereafter the said lease was still in force, and there remained then outstanding and unpaid by the tenant the sum of £500, being part of the said sum of £700. Some portion of the said sum of £500 is said to have been paid by the said tenant to the defendant, and the balance remains still unpaid.

6. In terms of the said broker's note and deed of sale, the plaintiff purchased all rights of the defendant under the said lease, and became entitled to receive, inter alia, the said sum of £500 outstanding and unpaid in respect of the goodwill of the Roma Hotel, but the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully disputes the right of the plaintiff to the said sum, and refuses to account for and pay, together with interest at 6 per cent., such portion as has been paid to the defendant by the tenant as aforesaid.

7. The plaintiff further says that, among the licensed premises mentioned and referred to in the aforesaid broker's note and deed of sale, was the Princess Royal Hotel, in Riebeeck-street, which, with four cottages and two stores, formed, on the 4th April, 1899, a block of buildings under contract of purchase, together with the liquor licence, for £9,500, from one Flannagan to the defendant, by within agreement, dated the 15th February, 1899.

8. Pursuant to clause 9 of the aforesaid deed of sale, dated 4th April, 1899, the plaintiff paid over the sum of £10,000, and the defendant by the said clause ceded to the plaintiff all his rights in respect of the agreement with the said Flannagan.

9. The said block of buildings, together with the liquor licence, were purchased from the said Flannagan under the said contract, but on the 8th April, 1899, after the cession by the defendant of his rights as aforesaid to the plaintiff, he, or others purporting to act on his behalf, entered with one Corlett into a lease of the said Princess Royal Hotel, upon terms and conditions not necessary to set forth in full, but amongst which was the condition that the said Corlett should pay to the defendant the sum of £1,250 for the goodwill of the hotel business carried on at the said hotel.

10. To the said hotel and goodwill thereof the defendant on the 8th April, 1899, had no right by reason of the premises, but the plaintiff subsequently recognised the lessee, the said Corlett, and his successor, by assignment to one Gourlay, as tenants under the said lease.

11. By reason of the aforesaid broker's note and deed of sale, and of the matters set forth in the four last preceding paragraphs hereof, the defendant became and is bound to account for and pay over to the plaintiff all sums of money by him received from the said Corlett in payment or part payment of the said sum of £1,250, being the price of the goodwill of the said hotel, and also interest on such sums from the dates upon which the same have been received.

12. The defendant has received from the said Corlett sums amounting to £450 at different times, and has wrongfully and unlawfully failed and refused to account for and pay over the same to the plaintiff, and the defendant, moreover, wrongfully and unlawfully claims to be entitled to a sum of £750, paid by the said Gourlay in satisfaction of a judgment of this Honourable Court in an action by the said Corlett against the said Gourlay, which sum represents a portion of the aforesaid sum of £1,250, to which the plaintiff is entitled as aforesaid.

Wherefore the plaintiff prays for: (a) An order declaring the South African Breweries (Limited) to be entitled, as against the defendant, to an account of all sums by him or any person on his behalf received in payment or part payment of (1) the sum of £500, being the balance outstanding and unpaid of the sum of £700 agreed to be paid as aforesaid for the goodwill of the Roma Hotel; (2) the sum of £1,250 agreed to be paid as aforesaid for the goodwill of the Princess Royal Hotel. (b) An order compelling the defendant to render and debate with the plaintiff such an account, and to include therein interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date upon which any sum to be accounted for shall have been received, and judgment for the amount found due at foot of such account when duly debated. (c) An order declaring the plaintiff entitled to the sum of £750 mentioned in paragraph 12. (d) An order granting plaintiff such further or other relief in the premises as to this Honourable Court may seem meet, together with costs of Court.

The defendant's plea was as follows:

1. The defendant admits paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 5, and 7 of the declaration, subject to what is hereinafter set forth.

2. The defendant says that at the date of the execution of the broker's note and deed of sale, he had already sold certain goodwill rights in connection with the Roma Hotel and the Princess Royal Hotel, as well as in connection with the Oriental Hotel and the bottle-store in Buitenkant-street, all being his property, and numbered respectively 4, 7, 3, and 2 in the deed of sale, for the sums respectively of £700, £1,250, £800, and £100.

3. At the date of the execution of the broker's note and deed of sale the plaintiff was fully aware of the above, and it was expressly agreed upon between the parties to the broker's note and deed of sale that the right to the amounts set forth in paragraph 2 hereof should form no part of the transaction between the parties, and the said amounts were not included in any of the assets or rights purchased by the plaintiff as aforesaid.

4. The goodwill rights sold in terms of the said deed of sale in connection with the said Roma Hotel and Princess Royal Hotel were such as were vested in the defendant at the date above mentioned, namely, the rights remaining after the expiration of the leases held by the then licensees of the premises above mentioned, the said licensees having purchased the goodwill rights of their respective premises for the currency of their respective leases.

5. Thereafter, in or about the month of June, 1899, a further written agreement with regard to purchase and sale of defendant's assets was entered into between plaintiff and defendant, and at the said time the agreement referred to in paragraph 3 hereof was ratified and confirmed by the plaintiff company, through its manager and secretary, at a meeting with defendant's representative, Mr. Hodgson.

6. The plaintiff's said representative at the said meeting apportioned and appropriated, as is shown on the copy of schedule hereto annexed, such of the outstanding loans as were taken over by the plaintiff, and such as were reserved to the defendant as aforesaid, including inter alia in the latter the amounts due by the lessees of the Roma Hotel and Princess Royal Hotel. The defendant craves leave that the copy of the said schedule which was drawn up at the date of the agreement last mentioned may be considered as inserted herein. The italicized portions in the said schedule marked D indicate the portions of the original schedule which are in the handwriting of the plaintiff company's representative.

7. The defendant craves leave specially to refer this Hon. Court to paragraph 4 of the deed of sale, wherein an estimate of £8,000 is given as the sum at which the good outstanding debts were to be put in, subject to adjustment or to the purchase price to be paid, and the defendant says that in the month of June, 1899, the adjustment was made between the parties, and the sum of £7,179 was agreed upon as the correct amount. In the said adjustment the amounts due to defendant, as set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, were not taken into account, by reason of the premises.

8. Subject to the foregoing, the defendant admits paragraphs 4, 8, and 9 of the declaration, save that he specially says as to paragraph 9 that, although the lease to Corlett was dated the 8th April, 1899, the contract to let the premises and to sell the goodwill of the hotel had been verbally completed prior to the date of the broker's note above referred to, to the knowledge of the plaintiff as aforesaid.

9. As to paragraphs 6 and 12, the defendant admits that he has disputed plaintiff's right to, and has refused to pay to plaintiff or to account to him for, the sums of £500 and £1,250 mentioned in the said paragraphs, or any portion of the said sums, or any interest thereon, but he denies that he acted wrongfully or unlawfully in this regard, being justified in his action by reason of the premises, and the defendant otherwise admits the allegations in the said paragraphs, subject to what is set forth above in this plea.

10. The defendant denies paragraph 10 of the declaration, save that he admits that the plaintiff company recognised the lease of the Princess Royal Hotel to Corlett and the assignment thereof to Gourlay, as the said company was bound to do.

11. The defendant denies paragraph 11. Wherefore the defendant prays that the plaintiff's claim may be dismissed, with costs.

In his replication, plaintiff denied knowledge of the sale of the goodwill rights of the Roma and Princess Royal Hotels before the date of the execution of the broker's note and deed of sale, and denied the ratification and confirmation of the further written agreement alleged in paragraph 5 of the plea.

The following is a copy of the broker's note referred to in the pleadings: Broker's Note, Cape Town, 1st March, 1899.—Bought from E. H. Martiensson, sold to the South African Breweries (limited).—The buildings as they now stand, with all interests, leases, goodwill, etc., viz.: (1) Brewery buildings, stables, two cottages in Long, Keerom, and Queen Victoria streets; (2) bottle-store, store, and house in Buitenkant-street, now occupied by Joseph Schuinman; (3) Oriental Hotel, in Leeuwen-street; (4) Roma Hotel, in Waterkant-street; (5) eight years' lease (or thereabouts) of the Alabama Hotel, Bloem-street; (6) four years' lease (or thereabouts) of the Altona Hotel, Woodstock; (7) block of buildings in Riebeeck-street, containing the Princess Royal Hotel and four cottages and two stores; (8) plant, stock, and outstanding debts. For a total sum of £75,000. The stock being now put in at £7,500 will be taken over at its proper value as it stands on the day when the property is taken over. And this also refers to the outstanding book debts, now standing at £8,000, which are guaranteed to be good. Sellers' books to be examined by an accountant to be appointed by the buyers, the buyers to pay £10,000 on 4th April to sellers as first instalment and part payment of purchase amount. Sellers to pay interest on this amount at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum to the buyers until date of final payment in cash on 1st August, 1899, as is hereby agreed upon. The business to be carried on by and for account of vendor until the date the business is taken over by the buyers. The vendor further undertakes not to engage in similar business, either directly or indirectly, in the country, and promises to use his goodwill in favour of the buyers to further promotion of the business.

The deed of sale referred to in the pleadings set forth in detail the agreement contained in the above broker's note.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (with him Mr. Gardiner), for plaintiff; Mr. Searle, K.C. (with him Mr. Close), for defendant.

Mr. Schreiner called

Charles B. Chidell, who said that he was the general manager in South Africa of the plaintiff company, and had held that position in 1899. Before any business was done by the company in Cape Town, business was carried on by them in Johannesburg, East London, and Natal. Witness knew about Mr. Hackblock coming out to South Africa in February, 1899, and negotiating this contract with Mr. Martienssen. Witness was in Johannesburg at the time, and he did not come to Cape Town until May 28, 1899. He had nothing to do with any negotiations anterior to that time. He knew about the purchase being made. He had access to most of Martienssen's books. Hodgson was manager here at the time. Hodgson was Martienssen's manager, and he had been appointed manager for the plaintiff company by Mr. Hackblock before he went back to England, with a view to there being no break in the continuity of the management. On the 16th June witness signed a certain contract. Between May and that date witness was investigating business matters. Witness had not seen the lease. He might have seen the cover. The agreement referred to in reference to the Princess Royal and Roma was never ratified by witness, as alleged in the plea. If witness had been informed of such a thing, he would have written to London to know whether it was correct. Witness recognised the document produced. He made notes on the document. Witness put down notes in connection with loans from information given him by Hodgson. Witness was perfectly certain that Hodgson did not tell him when the Princess Royal lease began. Witness understood that the amounts were loans by Martienssen to enable the tenant to purchase the goodwill, etc. Witness refused to take over certain loans, as they had been made to the tenants of witness's firm. The object of a loan was to tie the trade. If witness had taken over the loan, the firm would have to pay Martienssen. Witness's information was that the security for a loan was the goodwill. In regard to the Oriental, that was on a different footing to the Roma. The tenant of the Oriental bought out his predecessor, the man who had the lease. The tenants of the Princess Royal and the Roma took possession from Martienssen. The houses were tied to Martienssen by the loans. Mr. Hodgson produced the document in the Gourlay case, and gave evidence as to the figures. Until then witness had not seen the document after it was made. Witness returned to Johannesburg on the 17th June, and Hodgson remained as manager. Afterwards Mr. Hackblock jun., came, and he was succeeded by the present manager, Mr. Gerald Orpen.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Under the agreement the Breweries could not take over until August. Witness came down in order to effect the taking over earlier. The Breweries had a lease with Louw. Witness claimed in respect of the Roma as soon as he knew Martienssen had sold the goodwill. The money in regard to the Roma witness regarded as coming under the lease, and as part of the rights appertaining to the taking over by the Breweries. Witness did not tell Hodgson that Martienssen could recover from Corlett, and Barrett would be protected, and that, if necessary, witness would go so far as to give a written guarantee to that effect. Witness made the charge that Hodgson removed the lease from the papers without witness's knowledge or consent. Witness alleged that Hodgson deliberately concealed the fact that Corlett had paid Martienssen £1,250 for the goodwill.

[Buchanan, J.: And yet you say you had the document in your possession, from which you could have ascertained the fact. If you had looked at the document you would have seen it. Yet you charge him with deliberately concealing from you a fact which you could easily have ascertained by looking at the papers. It is a very rash charge to make without any foundation.]

Witness: I trusted him, my lord.

[Buchanan, J.: He assumed that you had access to all the books and documents. You have no right to make a charge of that sort without having any foundation for it. What right have you to say he deliberately concealed a fact which you could have ascertained from papers in your possession?]

The witness said he could not swear that he (witness) had the lease.

In re-examination witness said that all he meant to convey was that Hodgson did not bring this fact to his notice. He did not make any charge against Hodgson.

Mr. Searle: But you have already charged him.

Mr. Schreiner handed in a copy of a certain contract referred to as the Flanagan contract.

The witness said he did not have this contract before him at the time.

Gerald E. D. Orpen, present Cape Town manager of the S.A. Breweries, said he succeeded Mr. Hackblock, jun., in March, 1901. Witness had gone into the books of Martienssen. He first inspected the books ten days ago. Witness copied entries in the ledger, marked as Corlett's account and Princess Royal account. (The ledger was put in.) Louw was a tenant of the S.A. Breweries. There were considerable differences between Louw's case and the case of the Roma.

Cross-examined by Mr. Searle: Witness had only got the lease at present in existence. He knew there was another lease, the original one, but he could not find it. Witness also put in the Roma Hotel lease. An order of ejectment had been obtained against Barrett, the lessee.

Re-examined: Witness had no entry in his book regarding either the £500 or the £1,250.

By the Court: They had now leased the Roma Hotel for ten years, at a rental of £30 per month, £2,000 being given for goodwill.

Johan Jansen said he was a broker, carrying on business in Cape Town, and his firm passed the broker's note in this suit. Before that note was drawn up there were negotiations in February, witness being present at several interviews between Martienssen and Hackblock, in the former's office. Before March 1 witness had heard nothing of any agreement to the effect that the goodwill of the Princess Royal Hotel was to be excluded, and that Martienssen was to have that. If there had been any such agreement, it would have been in the broker's note. He had heard nothing about balances of goodwill to be drawn by Martienssen. At first £85,000 was asked by Martienssen for all his interests, but eventually £75,000 was accepted. As far as witness was aware, everything agreed upon was put in the broker's note.

Cross-examined: Witness did not know under what circumstances the reduction of price from £85,000 to £75,000 was agreed upon. He was present at some of the conversations, but not at them all. Mr. Hackblock and Mr. Martienssen agreed upon that reduction between themselves.

Evidence taken on commission was then read. In this, W. H. Hackblock stated that he was chairman of the plaintiff company, and arrived in this country on February 23 or 24, 1899. A few days after his arrival he had an interview with Mr. Martienssen with regard to purchasing the latter's business. Mr. Martienssen showed him a list of the leases attached to the Brewery. With regard to the Roma Hotel, witness was led to believe that the money for the goodwill was paid down. With regard to the Princess Royal Hotel, Mr. Martienssen had told witness that he had recently purchased it, and paid a portion of the money, but had not got transfer at that time. He did not tell witness anything about the terms on which Corlett held the house, and said nothing about repairs to the house. That was all the information witness had as to the Princess Royal Hotel before the contract was passed. At one interview before the contract was entered into, witness called Martienssen's attention to the state of the hotel, and defendant said that no doubt a large amount of money would have to be spent before they would get a good tenant at a reasonable goodwill. When witness left for England on April 26 or 27, no question was left over for settlement, except the removal of stock and the adjustment of prices if the stock did not amount in value to the figure fixed in the contract. He was not aware before the signing of the contract that Mr. Martienssen had sold the goodwill of the Princess Royal Hotel. Witness knew Mr. Hodgson, who was Mr. Martienssen's manager. Witness afterwards arranged that Mr. Hodgson should continue his post of manager under the company, the same as he had done for Mr. Martienssen. The document put in, which was said to be a portion of the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, witness knew nothing about. The plaintiff knew nothing about the sale of the Princess Royal Hotel until November, 1899. In cross-examination, witness said that nothing was said about the reduction in price from £85,000 to £75,000 being on account of the Princess Royal Hotel and other goodwills being sold. Nothing was said about the goodwill of some four houses being sold.

Mr. Schreiner, having put in the lease and licence of the Princess Royal Hotel, closed the case for the plaintiff.

Mr. Close then read the evidence, taken on commission, of Mr. Martienssen, the defendant. The witness said that the goodwills were mentioned at the time of the negotiations, and that the goodwill of the four houses in dispute belonged to the tenants.

Mr. Schreiner, K.C. (for plaintiffs): We claim the Roma Hotel under the contract. It was excluded by Chidell. Defendant says he lent money on it. But there was no loan. The money was the outstanding balance of £100, due for goodwill. No doubt Chidell was negligent in not looking at documents, but his neglect cannot prejudice us. Chidell considered that £500 had been lent to Barritt, and naturally objected to take over this debt with the Roma. Hackblock says Martienssen told him that the goodwill of the Roma Hotel had been sold, but that he was not told that a part of the purchase money was outstanding, and he now contends that he has bought all rights on the books, including the debt of £500. "Outstanding book debts" surely do not cover the outstanding balance of a bill. Suppose there was a part of the February rent outstanding, and that we purchased on March 1 we should have purchased that balance, because that would have been an outstanding book debt. The contract of June 16 clearly distinguishes outstanding book debts from loans. Hackblock had never thought of including anything under this term save trade debts. Chidell agreed to take over the loans advanced to the tenants of some of the houses, but only of those tenants who were tied down to the Breweries; but, of course, that distinction made by him cannot affect the legal position of the parties. The small schedule also distinguishes between outstanding book debts and loans. The only accounts open to adjustment when we purchased these properties were those in respect of (1) stock in trade and (2) book debts. It is true that we did not appraise every item of the business we bought. It was a big transaction, and we bought in block, leaving the apportioning to various accounts of the sum paid for further discussion.

[Hopley, J.: Let us suppose that Barritt had gone out of the hotel business altogether, would he not have been liable to Martienssen?]

Yes.

[Hopley, J.: Then if Martienssen says to him, "Instead of paying me cash you may give me a bill," would that change the nature of the transaction?]

I submit it would entirely. It is one thing to support a man in business by granting credit, and quite a different thing to make a loan.

[Hopley J.: Suppose Barritt had sold off and gone away?]

He could not do that without the landlord's consent, and if the landlord granted that it would have been equivalent to ceding certain of his rights to Barritt. The defendants must admit that this £500 was included under either the £15,500 or the £8,000. The fact is that the matter of the Princess Royal Hotel is at the root of all this litigation. That hotel we bought out and out from Flannigan for £9,500, and yet Mr. Martienssen claimed from Hackblock that he (Martienssen) having bought the goodwill of the Princess Royal for £1,250, was entitled to put that sum into his own pocket. The case, however, of the Princess Royal was very different from that of the Roma. That lease was granted on 8th of April, that is before the deed of sale was passed. The actual purchase took place in March, and it is contended that the lease formed no part of the purchase. Clearly, in the absence of an express clause in the deed of sale, defendant has no case. Clause 3 of the plea sets up an impossible defence. There was a lease here at the date of purchase as in the case of the Roma, and it is quite incredible that what is said to have taken place between February 26 and March 1 should really have happened. Jansen, the broker, and Corlett were present at many of the alleged interviews, and if the understanding pleaded by the defendant was arrived at, it is surprising that the broker should not remember anything about it. Hodgson saw the lease, but neither Hackblock nor Chidell saw it. From March 15 to early in April the S.A. Breweries had no representative here, save their attorneys. The deed of sale was not executed by the Breweries. Messrs. Van Zyl and Buissonne knew nothing of the lease, and we are not bound by Hodgson's knowledge. He was not our agent, he was really acting for both parties. The lease was an improper lease. In May Chidell (our general manager) came down, and met Hodgson (who was then acting as our local manager here). Chidell trusted to Hodgson's statements. His attention was not drawn to the terms of the lease, and he knew nothing of the rights of the lessee until the case of Corlett v. Gourlay (10, Sheil, 612) came before the Court in November, 1900. If Chidell did not know the terms of the lease, he clearly could not ratify it. All he did was to adjust certain accounts. The conclusion of arrangements with Corlett was long after March 1. The defendant says that in April he sold the goodwill of the "Princess Royal" for £1,250, £100 of which was paid in cash, and £300 by a post-dated cheque, and says that he told Hackblock of this. The latter admits that he knew that the goodwill of the Roma and of the Oriental had been sold, but he denies having had any knowledge as to the sale of the goodwill of the Princess Royal. It is significant that a witness like Mr. Martienssen should be contradicted by so many witnesses. Hackblock, jun., never knew the date of the lease (as his letter of January, 1900, showed). He did not know of it till the case of Corlett v. Gourlay (10 Sheil, 612) was heard in November, 1900. He simply went on the statements of Martienssen and of Hodgson, and had no idea of the length of the lease, or of giving up the rights of his firm for the £1,250 (paid in part) in respect of it. A written agreement cannot be varied by any mere understanding such as defendant alleges in his plea. As to the "Princess Royal," there are no outstanding book debts to adjust; and yet the defendant says that this £1,250 is to be adjusted out of the lump sum of £8,000. We claim, therefore, £500, the unpaid balance of £700 for the goodwill of the Roma, £450, which Martienssen admits having received for the goodwill of the Princess Alice, together with the outstanding balance of £750.

Mr. Searle, K.C. (for defendant): Though the plaintiffs have had every opportunity of ascertaining the true state of affairs, they have delayed making their claim for two years. They now say that leases (of which they have had the fullest benefit) have been entered into under concealment, which amounts almost to misrepresentation on our part. As to the Roma, Hackblock says that when he bought it, he understood that Barritt had paid the whole of the purchase money for the goodwill to Martienssen, and yet he now claims an outstanding balance for which he gave no consideration whatever. Counsel for the plaintiff argued, as if in this transaction between plaintiff and defendant, a definite price had been agreed upon for each thing bought; but both the broker's note and the deed of sale show that both parties contemplated an adjustment. The broker's note is, no doubt, a very rough document, but it quite agrees with the deed of sale, and represents the respective views and intentions of the parties. It has been assumed on behalf of the plaintiff that the £500 owing by Barritt was not a trade debt, but a loan. But it is quite immaterial whether this debt was a part of the purchase price of the goodwill or money owing for beer. The point is, that this money was a debt to be recovered from Barritt, and all such outstanding claims were subject to adjustment. Then how came it that Hackblock junior refused to be answerable for Pearson's loan of £600, and others which were treated merely as outstanding debts? This loan was taken over in June, and then repudiated; and yet we are told that this is a debt due to the Roma Hotel, and is a right appertaining to the lease. As to the Roma, plaintiff's case is quite inexplicable. They were in touch with Barritt. The lease dated as far back as 1897, and yet it is only now that they have moved in the matter, though Chidell knew all the circumstances in June, 1898.

As to the Princess Royal, they say that in that case the lease was made after the deed of sale. We say on Hodgson's evidence that the lease was in existence when they took over the premises. Corlett intended to take them over from Flannigan in February. The S.A. Breweries bought on February 15, and the manager's letter of February 23, and the action of Chidell, show that the Breweries had adopted the lessee. The whole raison d'être of Corlett v. Gourlay was that Gourlay was acting in concert with the S.A. Breweries. Corlett sued for £750, and the Court agreed that the breweries should be responsible for that sum to Corlett. Mr. Chidell says that he did not understand the deed of sale. It is simply incredible that the general manager of a company like plaintiff's should not understand it, or should sign it without understanding it. He understood it, and so did Hackblock, as his evidence in Corlett v. Gourlay shows. He did not then say that he thought these matters had been settled in account. Plaintiff's counsel sees this difficulty, and now attacks the lease; but plaintiffs fully recognised the lease in Corlett v. Gourlay. Now they say that we improperly concealed facts from Chidell. We acted in the most open way possible, even to the extent of leaving all our books and papers at the offices of the S.A. Breweries. We have no wish to go against the documents, for the whole gist of these is that there was to be a subsequent settlement of the various items.

Mr. Schreiner was heard in reply.

Cur. Adv. Vult.

Postea, June 10th.

Buchanan, J.: The plaintiffs bought from the defendant the brewery business which he was carrying on in Cape Town, together with all the buildings, interests, leases, goodwills, etc., connected therewith, for the sum of £75,000. The parties were introduced by Mr. Jansen, the broker, and the negotiations were conducted by Mr. Hackblock, the chairman of the plaintiff company, on the one side, and the defendant, assisted by his manager, Mr. Hodgson, on the other. The broker, though present at some of the interviews, did not himself arrange the details of the contract, but took from the parties the terms of their agreement, which he embodied in a broker's note, dated March 1, 1899. Included in the landed property specified in the broker's note were, inter alia, the Roma Hotel, in Waterkant-street, and a block of buildings in Riebeeck-street, containing the Princess Royal Hotel and four cottages and two stores. The broker's note also included the plant, stock, and outstanding debts of the business, and for the purposes of the sale, the stock was put in at £7,500, and the debts, which were guaranteed as good, at £8,000. On the 4th April a deed of sale was drawn up between the parties, amplifying the broker's note, and providing that the seller was to remain in possession, and to carry on the business for his own account until the 31st July. This deed, which was prepared by a law agent, stated the Riebeeck-street property as being "at present under option to the seller." This was not correct, as this property had, on the 15th February previously, by agreement in writing, been purchased by the defendant from one Flannigan for £9,500, though possession was only to be taken on the 15th March, and transfer to be passed by the 1st July. To make the transaction between plaintiffs and defendant clear, an addendum was made to the deed of sale, explaining that the price payable to Flannagan was payable by the defendant, and that, on his receiving transfer, he was simultaneously to retransfer to plaintiffs. The deed also specified as having been sold "the plant, stock-in-trade, and goodwill, including all outstanding debts, assets, and rights appertaining to the business at present carried on by the seller, of every nature and description." Referring to the price of £7,500, at which the plant and stock-in-trade had been put in, and the £8,000 for good outstanding debts, the deed stipulated that, if it should be found that these figures were not correct when the property and business was taken over, the purchase price should be amended accordingly. The Roma Hotel had, by written agreement, been let by defendant in 1897 to one Barritt, one of the conditions of the lease being that the tenant should pay £700 for the goodwill of the business. An account was opened in defendant's books, in which Barritt was debited with £700 for the goodwill, and credited with a payment of £200. Numerous entries appear in the books subsequently, but the balance of £500 remained due when the adjustment of accounts between plaintiffs and defendant, which will presently be referred to, took place. As to the Princess Royal Hotel, in the month of February, after the defendant had purchased the Riebeeck-street property, and before negotiations were commenced with plaintiffs, the defendant had agreed with one Corlett to lease the hotel to him, Corlett to give £1,250 for the goodwill, and the tenancy to commence on the 1st April. The written lease was not executed until the 8th April, 1899, in which month Corlett paid £400 off the price of the goodwill. As in the case of Barritt, an account with Corlett was opened in defendant's books, the £1,250 being debited on one side and the £400 credited on the other. The balance of £850 was still outstanding in the books when the adjustment of accounts between plaintiffs and defendant took place. The first disputed issue of fact in this case is whether or not these transactions were disclosed to Hackblock.
